TO THE

READER.

THIS long ſince promiſed, and greatly expected Volume of the Reverend Author upon the Divine Attributes, being Tranſcribed out of his own Manuſcripts, by the unwearied Diligence of thoſe worthy Perſons that undertook it, is now at laſt come to thy Hands: Doubt not but thy Reading will pay for thy Waiting, and thy Satisfaction make full compenſation for thy Patience. In the Epiſtle before his Treatiſe of Providence, it was intimated, that his following Diſcourſes would not be inferior to that; and we are perſwaded, that ere thou haſt peruſed one half of this, thou wilt acknowledge that it was modeſtly ſpoken. Enough, aſſure thy ſelf, thou wilt find here for thy Entertainment and Delight, as well as Profit: The Sublimeneſs, Variety and Rareneſs of the Truths here handled, together with the Elegancy of the Compoſure, Neatneſs of the Stile, and whatever is wont to make any Book deſirable, will all concur in the recommendation of this. What ſo high and noble a Subject, what ſo fit for his Meditations or thine, as the higheſt and nobleſt Being, and thoſe tranſcendently Glorious Perfections wherewith he is clothed? A meet Contemplation of the Divine Excellencies may afford much Pleaſure to any Man that loves to Exerciſe his Reaſon, and is addicted to Speculation: But what incomparable Sweetneſs then will Holy Souls find, in viewing and conſidering thoſe Perfections now, which they are more fully to behold hereafter; and ſeeing what manner of God, how Wiſe and Powerful, how Great, and Good, and Holy is he, in whom the Covenant intereſts them, and in the Enjoyment of whom their Happineſs conſiſts? If rich Men delight to ſum up their vaſt Revenues, to read over their Rentals, look upon their Hoords; if they bleſs themſelves in their great Wealth, or, to uſe the Prophets words, Jer. 9. 23. Glory in their Riches; well may Believers rejoyce and glory in their knowing the Lord, verſe 24. and pleaſe themſelves in ſeeing how rich they are in having an immenſely full, and All-ſufficient God for their Inheritance. Alas, how little do moſt Men know of that Deity they profeſs to ſerve, and own, not as their Sovereign only, but their Portion? To ſuch this Author might ſay, as Paul to the Athenians, Whom you ignorantly Worſhip, him declare I unto you. Theſe Treatiſes, Reader, will inform thee who is he, whom thou calleſt Thine, preſent thee with a view of thy chief Good, and make thee value thy ſelf a thouſand times more upon thy intereſt in God, than upon all external Accompliſhments, and worldly Poſſeſſions. Who but Delights to hear well of one whom he loves? God is thy Love if thou be a Believer, and then it cannot but fill thee with Delight and Raviſhment to hear ſo much ſpoken in his Praiſe. David deſired to dwell in the Houſe of the Lord, that he might there behold his Beauty; How much of that Beauty (if thou art but capable of ſeeing it) mayſt thou behold in this Volume, which was our Author's main Buſineſs, for about three Years before he died, to diſplay before his Hearers? True indeed, the Lord's Glory, as ſhining forth before his heavenly Courtiers above, is unapproachable by mortal Men; but what of it is viſible in his Works, Creation, Providence, Redemption, falls under the Cognizance of his Inferior Subjects here; and this is in a great meaſure preſented to view in theſe Diſcourſes, and ſo much we may well ſay, as may (by the help of Grace) be effectual to raiſe thy Admiration, attract thy Love, provoke thy Deſires, and enable thee to make ſome gueſs at what is yet unſeen; and why not likewiſe to clear thy Eyes, and prepare them for future ſight, as well as turn them away from the contemptible Vanities of this preſent Life? Whatever is 2Cor.3.10. glorious in this World, yet (as the Apoſtle in another caſe) hath no Glory by reaſon of the Glory that excels: This excellent Glory is the Subject of this Book, to which all created Beauty is but meer ſhadow and duskyneſs. If thy Eyes be well fixed on this, they will not be eaſily drawn to wander after other Objects: If thy Heart be taken with God, it will be mortified to every thing that is not God.

But thou haſt in this Book, not only an excellent Subject in the general, but great variety of Matter, for the Imployment of thy Underſtanding, as well as enlivening thy Affections, and that too ſuch as thou wilt not readily find elſewhere; many excellent things which are out of the Rode of ordinary Preachers and Writers, and which may be grateful to the Curious, no leſs than ſatisfactory to the Wiſe and Judicious. It is not therefore a Book to be played with, or ſlept over, but read with the moſt intent and ſerious Mind; for though it afford much pleaſure for the Phancy, yet much more work for the Heart, and hath indeed enough in it to buſie all the Faculties. The Dreſs is compleat and decent, yet not Gariſh or Theatrical; the Rhetorick Maſculine and Vigorous, ſuch as became a Pulpit, and was never borrowed from the Stage; the Expreſſions Full, Clear, Apt, and ſuch as are beſt ſuited to the Weightineſs and Spirituality of the Truths here delivered. 'Tis plain, he was no empty Preacher, but was more for Senſe than Sound, filled up his Words with Matter, and choſe rather to inform his Hearers Minds, than to claw any itching Ears. Yet we will not ſay but ſome little things, a Word or a Phraſe now and then he may have, which no doubt had he lived to tranſcribe his own Sermons, he would have altered. If in ſome leſſer Matters he differ from thee, it is but in ſuch as Godly and Learned Men do frequently, and may without breach of Charity differ in among themſelves; in ſome things he may differ from us too, and it may be we from each other; and where are there any two Perſons, who have in all, eſpecially the more diſputable Points of Religion, exactly the ſame Sentiments, at leaſt expreſs themſelves altogether in the ſame Terms? But this we muſt ſay, That though he treat of many of the moſt Abſtruſe and Myſterious Doctrines of Chriſtianity, which are the Subjects of great Debates and Controverſies in the World, yet we find no one material thing in which he may juſtly be called Heterodox (unleſs old Hereſies be of late grown Orthodox, and his differing from them muſt make him faulty) but generally delivers (as in his * former Pieces) what is moſt conſonant to the Faith of This, and other the beſt Reformed Churches. He was not indeed for that Modern Divinity, which is ſo much in vogue with ſome, who would be counted the only ſound Divines; having taſted the old, he did not deſire the new, but ſaid the old is better. Some Errours, eſpecially the Socinian, he ſets himſelf induſtriouſly againſt, and cuts the very ſinnews of them, yet, ſometimes, almoſt without naming them.

Treatiſe of Providence and of Thoughts.

In the Doctrinal Part of ſeveral of his Diſcourſes, thou wilt find the Depth of Polemical Divinity, and in his Inferences from thence, the Sweetneſs of Practical; ſome things which may exerciſe the profoundeſt Scholar, and others which may inſtruct and edifie the weakeſt Chriſtian; nothing is more nervous than his Reaſonings, and nothing more affecting than his Applications. Though he make great uſe of Schoolmen, yet they are certainly more beholden to him, than he to them; he adopts their Notions, but he refines them too, and improves them, and reforms them from the Barbarouſneſs in which they were expreſſed, and dreſſeth them up in his own Language (ſo far as the Nature of the Matter will permit, and more clear Terms are to be found) and ſo makes them intelligible to Vulgar Capacities, which in their Original Rudeneſs were Obſcure and Strange, even to Learned Heads.

In a word; He handles the Great Truths of the Goſpel, with that Perſpicuity, Gravity and Majeſty, which beſt becomes the Oracles of God; and we have reaſon to believe, That no Judicious and Unbiaſſed Reader, but will acknowledge this to be the beſt Practical Treatiſe the World ever ſaw in Engliſh upon this Subject. What Doctor John Jackſon did (to whom our Author gave all due reſpect) was more more brief, and in another way. Doctor Preſton did worthily upon the Attributes in his day, but his Diſcourſes likewiſe are more ſuccinct, when this Authors are more full and large. But whatever were the Mind of God in it, it was not his Will, that either of theſe two ſhould live to finiſh what he had begun, both being taken away when Preaching upon this Subject. Happy Souls! whoſe laſt breath was ſpent in ſo noble a Work, * praiſing God while they had any Being. * *Pſ.*145.2.

His Method is much the ſame in moſt of theſe Diſcourſes, both in the Doctrinal and Practical Part, which will make the whole more plain, and facile to ordinary Readers. He rarely makes Objections, and yet frequently anſwers them, by implying them in thoſe Propoſitions he lays down for the clearing up the Truths he aſſerts. His Dexterity is admirable in the Applicatory Work, where he not only brings down the higheſt Doctrines to the loweſt Capacities, but collects great Variety of Proper, Pertinent, Uſeful, and yet (many times) unthought of Inferences; and that from thoſe Truths, which however they afford much Matter for Inquiſition and Speculation, yet might ſeem (unleſs to the moſt Intelligent and Judicious Chriſtians) to have a more remote influence upon Practices. He is not like ſome School Writers, who attenuate and rarifie the Matter they Diſcourſe of to a degree bordering upon Annihilation; at leaſt beat it ſo thin, that a puff of Breath may blow it away; ſpin their Thread ſo fine, that the Cloth, when made up, proves uſeleſs; Solidity dwindles into Niceties, and what we thought we had got by their Aſſertions, we loſe by their Diſtinctions. But if our Author has ſome Subtilties and Superfine Notions in his Argumentations, yet he condenſeth them again, and Conſolidates them into Subſtantial and Profitable Corolaries in his Applications: And in them his main buſineſs is, as to diſcipline a prophane World for its neglect of God and contempt of him in his moſt adorable and ſhining Perfections; ſo likewiſe to ſhew how the Divine Attributes are not only infinitely excellent in themſelves, but a grand Foundation for all true Divine Worſhip, and ſhould be the great Motives to provoke Men to the Exerciſe of Faith, and Love, and Fear, and Humility, and all that Holy Obedience they are called to by the Goſpel: And this without peradventure is the great end of all thoſe rich Diſcoveries God hath in his Word made of himſelf to us. And Reader, if theſe elaborate Diſcourſes of this Holy Man, through the Lord's Bleſſing, become a means of promoting Holineſs in thee, and ſtir thee up to love, and live to the God of his praiſe, we are well aſſured that his end in Preaching them is anſwered, and ſo is ours in publiſhing them.

Thine in the Lord,

A

DISCOURSE
Upon the Exiſtence of God.

Pſalm 14. 1. The Fool hath ſaid in his Heart, There is no God; they are corrupt, they have done abominable Works: there is none that doth good.

THIS Pſalm is a deſcription of the deplorable corruption by Nature of every Son of Adam, ſince the withering of that Common Root. Some reſtrain it to the Gentiles, as a Wilderneſs full of Bryars and Thorns, as not concerning the Jews, the Garden of God, planted by his Grace, and watered by the Dew of Heaven. But the Apoſtle, the beſt Interpreter, rectifies this in extending it by name to Jews, as well as Gentiles, Rom. 3. 9. [We have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under ſin.] And v. 10. 11, 12. Cites part of this Pſalm, and other Paſſages of Scripture, for the further evidence of it; concluding by Jews and Gentiles, every perſon in the World naturally in this ſtate of Corruption.

The Pſalmiſt firſt declares the Corruption of the Faculties of the Soul; The Fool hath ſaid in his heart. Secondly, The ſtreams iſſuing from thence; They are corrupt, &c. The firſt in Atheiſtical Principles, the other in Unworthy Practices; and lays all the Evil, Tyranny, Luſt and Perſecutions by Men, (as if the World were only for their ſake) upon the Neglects of God, and the Atheiſm cheriſhed in their Hearts.

The Fool, A Term in Scripture ſignifying a wicked Man, uſed alſo by the Heathen Philoſophers to ſignifie a vicious Perſon, נבל as coming from נבל ſignifies the extinction of Life in Men, Animals and Plants, ſo the word נבל is taken *, a Plant that hath loſt all that juyce that made it lovely and uſeful. So a Fool is one that hath loſt his Wiſdom, and right Notion of God and Divine things, which were communicated to Man by Creation; one dead in ſin, yet one not ſo much void of rational Faculties, as of Grace in thoſe Faculties; not one that wants reaſon, but abuſes his Reaſon: In Scripture the word ſignifies fooliſh. ‖

* Iſa. 40. 7. נבל ציץ the flower fadeth, Iſa. 28. 1.

‖ Muis נבל לא חכם put together Deu. 32. 6. Oh fooliſh people and unwiſe.

Said in his heart, that is, he thinks, or he doubts, or he wiſhes. The thoughts of the heart are in the Nature of Words to God, tho' not to Men. 'Tis uſed in the like caſe of the Atheiſtical Perſon, Pſ. 10. 11, 13. He hath ſaid in his heart, God hath forgotten, he hath ſaid in his heart, Thou wilt not require it. He doth not form a Syllogiſm, (as Calvin ſpeaks) that there is no God: He dares not openly publiſh it, tho' he dares ſecretly think it. He cannot raſe out the thoughts of a Deity, tho' he endeavours to blot thoſe Characters of God in his Soul. He hath ſome doubts whether there be a God or no: He wiſhes there were not any, and ſometimes hopes there is none at all. He could not ſo aſcertain himſelf by convincing Arguments to produce to the World, but he tampered with his own heart to bring it to that Perſwaſion, and ſmothered in himſelf thoſe Notices of a Deity; which is ſo plain againſt the Light of Nature, that ſuch a Man may well be called a Fool for it.

* אין אלהים No God. Muis.*

There is no God *:] לית שולטנא non poteſtas Domini, Chalde. 'Tis not Jehova, which Name ſignifies the Eſſence of God, as the Prime and Supream Being; but Elohim, which Name ſignifies the Providence of God, God as a Rector and Judge. Not that he denyes the Exiſtence of a Supream Being that Created the World, but his regarding the Creatures, his government of the World, and conſequently his reward of the Righteous or puniſhments of the Wicked.

* There is a threefold denial of God, 1. Quoad Exiſtentiam; this is abſolute Atheiſm. 2. Quoad Providentiam, or his inſpection into, or care of the things of the World, bounding him in the Heavens. 3. Quoad Naturam, in regard of one or other of the Perfections due to his Nature. * Coccius.

Of the denial of the Providence of God moſt underſtand this, * not excluding the abſolute Atheiſt, as Diogaras is reported to be, nor the Sceptical Atheiſt, as Protagoras, who doubted whether there were a God. Thoſe that deny the Providence of God, do in effect deny the Being of a God; for they ſtrip him of that Wiſdom, Goodneſs, Tenderneſs, Mercy, Juſtice, Righteouſneſs, which are the Glory of the Deity. And that Principle, of a greedy deſire to be uncontroul'd in their Luſts, which induceth Men to a denial of Providence, that thereby they might ſtifle thoſe ſeeds of Fear which infect and embitter their ſinful Pleaſures, may as well lead them to deny that there is any ſuch Being as a God. * Not owning him as the Egyptians called, θεὸν ἐπόπτων. * Fugubin in loc.

That at one blow, their fears may be daſh'd all in pieces and diſſolv'd by the removal of the Foundation: As Men who deſire Liberty to commit Works of Darkneſs, would not have the Lights in the Houſe dimm'd, but extinguiſhed. What Men ſay againſt Providence, becauſe they would have no check in their Luſts, they may ſay in their hearts againſt the the Exiſtence of God upon the ſame account; little difference between the diſſenting from the one, and diſowning the other.

They are corrupt, they have done abominable works, there is none that doth good.

He ſpeaks of the Atheiſt in the ſingular, The Fool, of the corruption iſſuing in the Life in the plural; Intimating that tho' ſome few may choak in their hearts the Sentiments of God and his Providence, and poſitively deny them, yet there is ſomething of a ſecret Atheiſm in all, which is the Fountain of the evil Practices in their Lives, not an utter diſowning of the Being of a God, but a denial or doubting of ſome of the Rights of his Nature: * When Men deny the God of Purity, they muſt needs be polluted in Soul and Body, and grow brutiſh in their Actions: When the Senſe of Religion is ſhaken off, all kind of Wickedneſs is eagerly ruſh'd into, whereby they become as loathſom to God as putrified Carcaſes are to Men *: Not one or two evil Actions is the product of ſuch a Principle, but the whole ſcene of a Man's Life is corrupted and become execrable. * Atheiſm abſolute is not in all mens judgments, but practical is in all mens actions. * The Apoſtle in the Romans applying the latter part of it to all Mankind, but not the former. As the word tranſlated corrupt ſignifies.

No

No Man is exempted from ſome ſpice of Atheiſm by the depravation of his Nature, which the Pſalmiſt intimates, There is none that doth good: Tho' there are indelible Convictions of the Being of a God, that they cannot abſolutely deny it; yet there are ſome Atheiſtical Bubling in the hearts of Men, which evidence themſelves in their Actions: As the Apoſtle, Tit. 1. 16. They profeſs that they know God, but in works they deny him. Evil works are a duſt ſtirred up by an Atheiſtical breath. He that habituates himſelf in ſome ſordid luſt, can ſcarcely be ſaid ſeriouſly and firmly to believe that there is a God in being; and the Apoſtle doth not ſay that they know God, but they profeſs to know him: True knowledge and profeſſion of knowledge are diſtinct. It intimates alſo to us, the unreaſonableneſs of Atheiſm in the conſequence; when men ſhut their eyes againſt the beams of ſo clear a Sun, God revengeth himſelf upon them for their impiety, by leaving them to their own wills, lets them fall into the deepeſt ſink and dregs of iniquity; and ſince they doubt of him in their hearts, ſuffers them above others to deny him in their works; this the Apoſtle diſcourſeth at large.

The Text then is a deſcription of man's Corruption.

1. Of his Mind. The fool hath ſaid in his heart. No better title than that of a fool is afforded to the Atheiſt.

2. Of the other faculties, 1. In ſins of Commiſſion, expreſt by the loathſomneſs [corrupt, abominable.] 2. In ſins of Omiſſion [there is none that doth good] he lays down the corruption of the Mind as the cauſe, the corruption of the other faculties as the Effect.

I. 'Tis a great Folly to deny or doubt of the Exiſtence or Being of God: Or, An Atheiſt is a great Fool.

II. Practical Atheiſm is natural to Man in his corrupt State. 'Tis againſt Nature as conſtituted by God; but natural, as Nature is depraved by Man. The abſolute diſowning of the Being of a God is not natural to men, but the contrary is natural; but an inconſideration of God, or miſ-repreſentation of his Nature, is natural to Man as corrupt.

III. A ſecret Atheiſm, or a partial Atheiſm, is the Spring of all the wicked Practices in the World. The diſorders of the Life ſpring from the ill diſpoſitions of the Heart.

For the firſt, Every Atheiſt is a Grand Fool. If he were not a Fool, he would not imagine a thing ſo contrary to the ſtream of the Univerſal Reaſon in the World, contrary to the rational Dictates of his own Soul, and contrary to the Teſtimony of every Creature, and Link in the Chain of Creation: If he were not a Fool, he would not ſtrip himſelf of Humanity, and degrade himſelf lower than the moſt deſpicable Brute.

'Tis a Folly; for tho' God be ſo inacceſſible, that we cannot know him perfectly, yet he is ſo much in the light, that we cannot be totally ignorant of him. As he cannot be comprehended in his Eſſence, he cannot be unknown in his Exiſtence; 'tis as eaſie by Reaſon to underſtand that he is, as it is difficult to know what he is.

The demonſtrations Reaſon furniſheth us with for the Exiſtence of God, will be Evidences of the Atheiſt's Folly. One would think there were little need of ſpending time in evidencing this Truth, ſince in the Principle of it, it ſeems to be ſo univerſally own'd, and at the firſt propoſal and demand, gains the aſſent of moſt men.

But 1. Doth not the growth of Atheiſm among us render this neceſſary? May it not juſtly be ſuſpected, that the ſwarms of Atheiſts are more numerous in our times, than Hiſtory Records to have been in any Age; when men will not only ſay it in their hearts, but publiſh it with their lips, and boaſt that they have ſhaken off thoſe Shackles which bind other mens Conſciences? Doth not the bare-fac'd Debauchery of men evidence ſuch a ſettled Sentiment, or at leaſt a careleſs Belief of the Truth, which lies at the root, and ſprouts up in ſuch venemous branches in the World? Can mens hearts be free from that Principle wherewith their Practices are ſo openly depraved? 'Tis true, the light of Nature ſhines too vigorouſly for the Power of Man totally to put it out; yet loathſome Actions impair and weaken the actual thoughts and conſiderations of a Deity, and are like Miſts, that darken the light of the Sun, though they cannot extinguiſh it: their Conſciences as a Candleſtick, muſt hold it, though their unrighteouſneſs obſcure it, Rom. 1. 18. [Who hold the Truth in Unrighteouſneſs.] The ingraved Characters of the Law of Nature remain, though they daub them with their muddy Luſts to make them eligible: So that ſince the inconſideration of a Deity is the cauſe of all the wickedneſs and extravagances of men; and, as Auſtin ſaith, the Propoſition is always true, The Fool hath ſaid in his heart, &c. And more evidently true in this Age than any; it will not be unneceſſary to diſcourſe of the Demonſtrations of this firſt Principle.

The Apoſtles ſpent little time in urging this Truth, it was taken for granted all over the World, and they were generally devout in the Worſhip of thoſe Idols, they thought to be Gods. That Age run from one God to many, and our Age is running from one God to none at all.

2. The Exiſtence of God is the Foundation of all Religion. The whole Building totters if the Foundation be out of courſe: If we have not deliberate and right Notions of it, we ſhall perform no Worſhip, no Service, yield no affection to him. If there be not a God, 'tis impoſſible there can be one; for Eternity is Eſſential to the notion of a God; ſo all Religion would be vain, and unreaſonable to pay Homage to that which is not in being, nor can ever be. We muſt firſt believe that he is, and that he is what he declares himſelf to be, before we can ſeek him, adore him, and devote our Affections to him*: We cannot pay God a due and regular Homage, unleſs we underſtand him in his Perfections, what he is; and we can pay him no Homage at all, unleſs we believe that he is. Heb. 11. 6.

3. 'Tis fit we ſhould know why we believe, that our Belief of a God, may appear to be upon undeniable Evidence, and that we may give a better reaſon for his Exiſtence, than that we have heard our Parents and Teachers tell us ſo, and our acquaintance think ſo. 'Tis as much as to ſay there is no God, when we know not why we believe there is, and would not conſider the Arguments for his Exiſtence.

4. It is neceſſary to depreſs that ſecret Atheiſm which is in the heart of every man by nature. Though every viſible object, which offers it ſelf to our ſenſe, preſents a Deity to our minds, and exhorts us to ſubſcribe to the truth of it, yet there is a Root of Atheiſm ſpringing up ſometimes in wavering thoughts, and fooliſh imaginations, inordinate actions, and ſecret wiſhes. Certain it is, that every man, that doth not love God, denies God; now can he, that diſaffects him, and hath a ſlaviſh fear of him, wiſh his Exiſtence, and ſay to his own heart with any chearfulneſs, there is a God, and make it his chief care to perſwade himſelf of it? He would perſwade himſelf there is no God, and ſtifle the ſeeds of it in his Reaſon and Conſcience, that he might have the greateſt liberty to entertain the allurements of the Fleſh.

'Tis neceſſary to Excite men to daily and actual conſiderations of God and his Nature, which would be be a bar to much of that wickedneſs which overflows in the lives of men.

* Coccei Sum. Theol. c. 8. § 1.

5. Nor is it unuſeful to thoſe that effectually believe and love him; * for thoſe who have had a converſe with God, and felt his powerful influences in the ſecrets of their hearts, to take a proſpect of thoſe ſatisfactory accounts which reaſon gives of that God they adore and love; to ſee every Creature juſtifie them in their owning of him, and affections to him: Indeed the Evidences of a God, ſtriking upon the Conſcience of thoſe who reſolve to cleave to ſin as their chiefeſt darling, will daſh their pleaſures with unwelcome mixtures.

I ſhall further premiſe this;

That the folly of Atheiſm is evidenced by the light of Reaſon. Men that will not liſten to Scripture, as having no counterpart of it in their Souls, cannot eaſily deny natural Reaſon, which riſeth up on all ſides for the juſtification of this Truth: There is a natural as well as a revealed Knowledge, and the Book of the Creatures is legible in declaring the Being of a God, as well as the Scriptures are in declaring the Nature of a God; there are outward objects in the World, and common Principles in the Conſcience, whence it may be inferr'd:

For, 1. God in regard of his Exiſtence is not only the diſcovery of Faith, but of Reaſon. God hath revealed not only his Being, but ſome ſparks of his eternal Power and Godhead in his Works, as well as in his Word. Rom. 1. 19, 20. God hath ſhewed it unto them. How? * in his works; by the things that are made, 'tis a diſcovery to our Reaſon, as ſhining in the Creatures; and an object of our Faith, as breaking out upon us in the Scriptures: 'tis an Article of our Faith, and an Article of our Reaſon. Faith ſuppoſeth natural Knowledge, as Grace ſuppoſeth Nature. Faith indeed is properly of things above Reaſon, purely depending upon Revelation: What can be demonſtrated by natural Light, is not ſo properly the object of Faith; though in regard of the addition of a certainty by Revelation, it is ſo.

* Aquin.

The belief that God is, which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, * is not ſo much of the bare Exiſtence of God, as what God is. in Relation to them that ſeek to him, viz. a Rewarder. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of the Faith of Abel, the Faith of Enoch, ſuch a Faith that pleaſes God: But the Faith of Abel teſtified in his ſacrifice, and the Faith of Enoch teſtified in his walking with God, was not ſimply a Faith of the Exiſtence of God. Cain in the time of Abel, other men in the World in the time of Enoch, believed this as well as they: But it was a Faith joyned with the Worſhip of God, and deſirous to pleaſe him in the way of his own appointment; ſo that they believed that God was ſuch as he had declared himſelf to be in his promiſe to Adam, ſuch an one as would be as good as his word, and bruiſe the Serpents head: He that ſeeks to God according to the mind of God, muſt believe that he is ſuch a God that will pardon ſin, and juſtifie a ſeeker of him; that he is a God of that ability and will, to Juſtifie a ſinner in that way he hath appointed for the clearing the Holineſs of his Nature, and vindicating the Honour of his Law violated by Man.

* Heb. 11. 6.

No Man can ſeek God, or love God, unleſs he believe him to be thus; and he cannot ſeek God without a diſcovery of his own mind how he would be ſought. For it is not a ſeeking God in any way of mans Invention, that renders him capable of this deſired fruit of a Reward: He that believes God as a Rewarder, muſt believe the promiſe of God concerning the Meſſiah. Men, under the Conſcience of ſin, cannot tell, without a divine diſcovery, whether God will reward, or how he will reward the Seekers of him; and therefore cannot act towards him as an object of Faith. Would any Man ſeek God meerly becauſe he is, or love him becauſe he is, if he did not know that he ſhould be acceptable to him? The bare Exiſtence of a thing is not the ground of affection to it, but thoſe qualities of it, and our intereſt in it, which render it amiable and delightful. How can Men, whoſe Conſciences fly in their faces, ſeek God, or love him, without this knowledge, that he is a Rewarder? Nature doth not ſhew any way to a Sinner, how to reconcile Gods provoked Juſtice with his Tenderneſs. The Faith the Apoſtles ſpeaks of here, is a Faith that eyes the reward as an encouragement, and the Will of God as the Rule of its acting, he doth not ſpeak ſimply of the Exiſtence of God.

I have ſpoken the more of this place, becauſe the Socinians * uſe this to decry any natural knowledge of God, and that the Exiſtence of God is only to be known by Revelation; ſo that by that reaſon, any one that lived without the Scripture hath no ground to believe the being of a God.

* Voet. Theol. natural. cap. 3. § 1. p. 22.

[The Scripture aſcribes a knowledge of God to all Nations in the World, Rom. 1. 19. not only a faculty of knowing, if they had arguments and demonſtrations; as an ignorant man in any Art hath a faculty to know; but it aſcribes an actual knowledge, ver. 19. manifeſt in them, ver. 21. They knew God, not they might know him, they knew him when they did not care for knowing him: The notices of God are as intelligible to us by reaſon, as any object in the World is viſible, he is written in every Letter.

2. We are often in the Scripture ſent to take a proſpect of the Creatures for a diſcovery of God. The Apoſtles drew arguments from the Topicks of Nature, when they diſcourſed with thoſe that owned the Scripture, Rom. 1. 19. as well as when they treated with thoſe that were ignorant of it, as Acts 14. 15, 16. And among the Philoſophers of Athens, Acts 17. 27, 29. Such arguments the Holy Ghoſt in the Apoſtles, thought ſufficient to convince men of the Exiſtence, Unity, Spirituality, and Patience of God. * Such arguments had not been uſed by them and the Prophets, from the viſible things in the World, to ſilence the Gentiles with whom they dealt, had not this Truth, and much more about God, been demonſtrable by natural Reaſon: They knew well enough that probable arguments would not ſatisfie piercing and inquiſitive minds.

* Voet. Theol. natural. cap. 3. § 1. p. 22.

In Paul's account the Teſtimony of the Creatures was without contradiction; God himſelf juſtifies this way of proceeding by his own example, and remits Job to the conſideration of the Creatures, to ſpell out ſomething of his Divine Perfections. * And this is ſo convincing an argument of the Exiſtence of God, that God never vouchſafed any Miracle, or put forth any act of Omnipotency, beſides what was evident in the Creatures for ſatisfaction of the Curioſity of any Atheiſt, or the evincing of his Being, as he hath done for the Evidencing thoſe Truths which were not written in the Book of Nature, or for the reſtoring a decayed worſhip, or the protection or deliverance of his people: Thoſe Miracles in publiſhing the Goſpel, indeed did demonſtrate the Exiſtence of ſome Supream Power; but they were not Seals deſignedly affixt for that, but for the confirmation of that truth, which was above the ken of purblind Reaſon, and purely the birth of Divine Revelation: Yet what proves the Truth of any Spiritual Doctrine, proves alſo in that act the Exiſtence of the Divine Author of it: The Revelation always implies a Revealer, and that which manifeſts it to be a Revelation, manifeſts alſo the ſupream Revealer of it. By the ſame light the Sun manifeſts other things to us, it alſo manifeſts it ſelf. But what Miracles could rationally be ſuppoſed to work upon an Atheiſt, who is not drawn to a ſence of the Truth proclaimed aloud by ſo many wonders of the Creation?

Let us now proceed to the demonſtration of the Atheiſts Folly..

'Tis a Folly to deny or doubt of a Soveraign being, incomprehenſible in his Nature, infinite in his Eſſence and Perfections, independant in his Operations, who hath given Being to the whole frame of ſenſible and intelligible Creatures, and governs them according to their ſeveral natures, by an unconceiveable Wiſdom; who fills the Heavens with the Glory of his Majeſty, and the Earth with the influences of his Goodneſs.

'Tis a Folly inexcuſeable, to renounce in this caſe all appeal to univerſal Conſent, and the joynt aſſurances of the Creatures.

Reaſon 1. 'Tis a Folly to deny or doubt of that which hath been the acknowledged Sentiment of all Nations, in all Places and Ages. There is no Nation but hath owned ſome kind of Religion, and therefore no Nation but hath conſented in the Notion of a Supream Creator and Governour.

1. This hath been univerſal.
2. It hath been conſtant and uninterrupted.
3. Natural and innate.

Firſt, I. It hath been univerſally aſſented to by the Judgments and Practices of all Nations in the World.

1. No Nation hath been exempt from it. All Hiſtories of former and later Ages, have not produced any one Nation but fell under the force of this Truth. Though they have differed in their Religions, they have agreed in this Truth; here both Heathen, Turk, Jew, and Chriſtian, centre without any Contention. No quarrel was ever commenced on this Score; though about other opinions Wars have been ſharp, and Enmities irreconcilable; The Notion of the Exiſtence of a Deity was the ſame in All, Indians as well as Britains; Americans as well as Jews.

It hath not been an opinion peculiar to this or that people, to this or that Sect of Philoſophers; but hath been as univerſal as the Reaſon whereby men are differenc'd from other Creatures, ſo that ſome have rather defin'd man by animal religioſum, than animal rationale. 'Tis ſo twiſted with Reaſon, that a man cannot be accounted rational, unleſs he own an object of Religion: Therefore he that underſtands not this renounces his Humanity, when he renounceth a Divinity.

No inſtance can be given of any one People in the World that diſclaimed it. It hath been owned by the wiſe and ignorant, by the learned and ſtupid, by thoſe who had no other guide but the dimmeſt Light of Nature, as well as by thoſe whoſe Candles were ſnuft by a more polite Education, and that without any ſolemn debate and contention: Though ſome Philoſophers have been known to change their opinions in the concerns of Nature, yet none can be proved to have abſolutely changed their opinion concerning the being of a God: One died for aſſerting one God, none in the former Ages upon Record hath died for aſſerting no God. Go to the utmoſt bounds of America, you may find People without ſome broken pieces of the Law of Nature, but not without this ſignature: and ſtamp upon them, though they wanted commerce with other Nations, except as ſavage as themſelves; in whom the Light of Nature was as it were ſunk into the Socket, who are but one remove from Brutes, who cloath not their bodies, cover not their ſhame, yet were they as ſoon known to own a God, as they were known to be a people: They were poſſeſſed with the Notion of a Supream Being, the Author of the World, had an object of Religious adoration, put up Prayers to the Deity, they owned for the good things they wanted, and the diverting the evils they feared: No people ſo untamed, where abſolute perfect Atheiſm hath gained a footing.

Not one Nation of the World, known in the time of the Romans, that were without their Ceremonies, whereby they ſignified their devotion to a Deity. They had their places of Worſhip, where they made their Vows, preſented their Prayers, offered their Sacrifices, and implored the Aſſiſtance of what they thought to be a God, and in their diſtreſſes run immediately, without any deliberation, to their Gods; ſo that the notion of a Deity was as inward and ſettled in them as their own Souls, and indeed runs in the blood of Mankind: The diſtempers of the Underſtanding cannot utterly deface it; you ſhall ſcarce find the moſt diſtracted Bedlam, in his raving fits, to deny a God, though he may blaſpheme and fancy himſelf one.

2. Nor doth the Idolatry and multiplicity of Gods in the World weaken, but confirm this univerſal conſent. Whatſoever unworthy conceits Men have had of God in all Nations, or whatſoever degrading repreſentations they have made of him, yet they all concur in this, that there is a Supream Power to be ador'd. Tho' one People worſhipped the Sun, others the Fire; and the Egyptians, Gods out of their Rivers, Gardens, and Fields; yet the Notion of a Deity exiſtent, who created and governed the World, and conferred daily benefits upon them, was maintained by all, tho' applied to the Stars, and in part to thoſe ſordid Creatures. All the Dagons of the World eſtabliſh this truth, and fall down before it. Had not the Nations owned the Being of a God, they had never offered Incenſe to an Idol: Had there not been a deep impreſſion of the Exiſtence of a Deity, they had never exalted Creatures below themſelves to the honour of Altars: Men could not ſo eaſily have been deceived by forged Deities, if they had not had a Notion of a real one. Their fondneſs to ſet up others in the place of God, evidenced a natural knowledge that there was One, who had a right to be Worſhipped. If there were not this ſentiment of a Deity, no Man would ever have made an Image of a piece of Wood, worſhipp'd it, pray'd to it, and ſaid, deliver me for thou art my God *. They applied a general Notion to a particular Image. The difference is in the manner, and immediate object of worſhip, not in the formal ground of worſhip. The worſhip ſprung from a true Principle, though it was not applied to a right object: While they were rational Creatures, they could not deface the Notion; yet while they were corrupt Creatures, it was not difficult to apply themſelves to a wrong object from a true principle. A blind man knows he hath a way to go as well as one of the cleareſt ſight, but becauſe of his blindneſs he may miſs the way and ſtumble into a Ditch. No man would be impos'd upon to take a Briſtol ſtone inſtead of a Diamond, if he did not know that there were ſuch things as Diamonds in the World; nor any man ſpread forth his hands to an Idol, if he were altogether without the ſenſe of a Deity. Whether it be a falſe or a true God men apply to, yet in both, the natural ſentiment of a God is evidenc'd; all their miſtakes were grafts inſerted in this Stock, ſince they would multiply Gods rather than deny a Deity.

* Iſa. 44. 17.

* How ſhould ſuch a general ſubmiſſion be entred into by all the world, ſo as to adore things of a baſe alloy, if the force of Religion were not ſuch, that in any faſhion a man would ſeek the ſatisfaction of his natural inſtinct to ſome object of worſhip? This great diverſity confirms this conſent to be a good argument, for it evidenceth it not to be a Cheat, Combination, or Conſpiracy, to deceive, or a mutual intelligence, but every one finds it in his climate, yea in in himself. People would never have given the Title of a God to Men or Brutes, had there not been a pre-existing, and unquestioned perswasion, that there was such a Being, how else should the Notion of a God come into their minds, the Notion that there is a God must be more ancient.

3. Whatsoever disputes there have been in the World, this of the existence of God was never the subject of contention. All other things have been questioned. What Jarrings were there among Philosophers about natural things, into how many parties were they split, with what animosities did they maintain their several judgments? But we hear of no solemn Controversies about the Existence of a Supream Being: This never met with any considerable contradiction: No Nation, that hath put other things to question, would ever suffer this to be disparaged, so much as by a publick doubt. * We find among the Heathen contentions about the Nature of God, and the number of Gods; some asserted an innumerable multitude of Gods, some affirmed him to be subject to Birth and Death, some affirmed the intire World was God; others fancied him to be a circle of a bright Fire; others that he was a Spirit diffused through the whole World: Yet they unanimously concurr'd in this, as the Judgment of Universal Reason, that there was such a Sovereign Being: And those that were sceptical in every thing else, and asserted that the greatest certainty was that there was nothing certain, profest a certainty in this. The question was not whether there was a First Cause, but what it was. * 'Tis much the same thing, as the disputes about the Nature and Matter of the Heavens, the Sun and Planets, tho' there be great diversity of Judgments, yet all agree that there are Heavens, Sun, Planets: so all the Contentions among Men about the Nature of God, weaken not, but rather confirm, that there is a God, since there was never a publick formal debate about his Existence. Those that have been ready to pull out one anothers eyes for their dissent from their Judgments, sharply censured one anothers sentiments, envied the births of one anothers wits, always shook hands with an unanimous consent in this; never censured one another for being of this perswasion, never called it into question; as what was never controverted among Men professing Christianity, but acknowledged by all, though contending about other things, has reason to be judged a certain truth belonging to the Christian Religion; so what was never subjected to any Controversie, but acknowledged by the whole World, hath reason to be imbraced as a truth without any doubt.

4. This Universal Consent is not prejudiced by some few Dissenters. History doth not reckon twenty profest Atheists in all Ages in the compass of the whole World: And we have not the name of any one absolute Atheist upon Record in Scripture: Yet it is questioned, whether any of them, noted in History with that infamous name, were downright deniers of the Existence of God, but rather because they disparaged the Deities commonly worshipped by the Nations where they lived, as being of a clearer reason to discern, that those qualities, vulgarly attributed to their Gods, as Lust and Luxury, Wantonness and Quarrels, were unworthy of the nature of a God. But suppose they were really what they are termed to be, what are they to the multitude of Men, that have sprung out of the loyns of Adam? not so much as one grain of ashes is to all that were ever turned into that form by any fires in your Chimnies. And many more were not sufficient to weigh down the contrary consent of the whole World, and bear down an universal impression. Should the Laws of a Country, agreed universally to by the whole Body of the People, be accounted vain, because a hundred Men of those millions disapprove of them, when not their reason, but their folly and base interest, perswades them to dislike them, and dispute against them? What if some Men be blind, shall any conclude from thence that eyes are not natural to Men? Shall we say that the Notion of the Existence of God is not natural to Men, because a very small number have been of a contrary opinion? Shall a Man in a Dungeon, that never saw the Sun, deny that there is a Sun, because one or two blind Men tell him there is none, when thousands assure him there is? Why should then the exceptions of a few, not one to Millions, discredit that which is voted certainly true by the joynt consent of the World? Add this too, that if those that are reported to be Atheists, had had any considerable reason to step aside from the common perswasion of the whole World, 'tis a wonder it met not with entertainment by great numbers of those, who, by reason of their notorious wickedness, and inward disquiets, might reasonably be thought to wish in their hearts that there were no God. 'Tis strange if there were any reason on their side, that in so long a space of time, as hath run out from the Creation of the World, there could not be engaged a considerable number to frame a Society for the profession of it. It hath died with the Person that started it, and vanish'd as soon as it appeared.

Gassend. ibid. p. 290.

To conclude this, is it not folly for any Man to deny or doubt of the Being of a God, to dissent from all Mankind, and stand in contradiction to humane Nature? What is the general dictate of Nature is a certain Truth. 'Tis impossible, that Nature can naturally and universally lye. And therefore those that ascribe all to Nature, and set it in the Place of God, contradict themselves, if they give not credit to it in that which it universally affirms. ‖ A general consent of all Nations is to be esteemed as a Law of Nature. Nature cannot plant in the minds of all Men an assent to a falsity, for then the Laws of Nature would be destructive to the reason and minds of Men. How is it possible, that a falsity should be a perswasion spread through all Nations, engraven upon the minds of all Men, Men of the most towring, and Men of the most creeping understanding; that they should consent to it in all places, and in those places, where the Nations have not had any known Commerce with the rest of the known World? A Consent not settled by any Law of Man to constrain People to a belief of it: And indeed 'tis impossible, that any Law of Man can constrain the belief of the Mind. Would not he deservedly be accounted a fool, that should deny that to be gold, which hath been tryed and examined by a great number of knowing Goldsmiths, and hath past the test of all their Touch-stones? What excess of folly would it be for him to deny it to be true gold, if it had been tryed by all that had skill in that metal in all Nations in the World?

‖ Cicero.

Secondly, 2. It hath been a constant and uninterrupted consent. It hath been as Ancient as the first Age of the World; no Man is able to mention any time, from the beginning of the World, wherein this Notion hath not been universally owned; 'tis as old as Mankind, and hath run along with the course of the Sun, nor can the date be fixed lower than that.

1. First, In all the changes of the World, this hath been maintained. In the overturnings of the Government of States, the alteration of Modes of Worship, this hath stood unshaken. The reasons upon which it was founded, were in all Revolutions of time accounted satisfactory and convincing; nor could absolute Atheism, in the changes of any Laws, ever gain the favour of any one Body of people to be established by a Law. When the Honour of the Heathen Idols was laid in the duſt, this ſuffered no impair. The being of one God was more vigorouſly owned, when the unreaſonableneſs of multiplicity of Gods was manifeſt; and grew taller by the detection of counterfeits. When other parts of the Law of Nature have been violated by ſome Nations, this hath maintained its ſtanding. The long ſeries of Ages hath been ſo far from blotting it out, that it hath more ſtrongly confirmed it, and maketh further progreſs in the confirmation of it. Time which hath eaten out the ſtrength of other things, and blaſted meer inventions, hath not been able to conſume this. The diſcovery of all other Impoſtures, never made this by any Society of Men to be ſuſpected as one. It will not be eaſie to name any Impoſture that hath walked perpetually in the World without being diſcovered, and whipped out by ſome Nation or other. Falſities have never been ſo univerſally and conſtantly owned without publick controul and queſtion. And ſince the world hath detected many errors of the former Age, and Learning being increaſed, this hath been ſo far from being dimm'd, that it hath ſhone out clearer with the increaſe of Natural Knowledge, and received freſh and more vigorous confirmations.

2. The fears and anxieties in the Conſciences of Men, have given Men ſufficient occaſion to root it out, had it been poſſible for them to do it. If the Notion of the Exiſtence of God, had been poſſible to have been daſht out of the minds of Men, they would have done it rather than have ſuffered ſo many troubles in their Souls upon the Commiſſion of ſin; ſince there did want wickedneſs and wit in ſo many corrupt Ages, to have attempted it and proſpered in it, had it been poſſible. How comes it therefore to paſs, that ſuch a multitude of proffligate perſons, that have been in the World ſince the Fall of Man, ſhould not have rooted out this principle, and diſpoſſeſt the minds of Men of that which gave birth to their tormenting fears? How is it poſſible that all ſhould agree together in a thing which created fear, and an obligation againſt the Intereſt of the Fleſh, if it had been free for Men to diſcharge themſelves of it? No Man, as far as corrupt Nature bears ſway in him, is willing to live controul'd.

The firſt Man would rather be a God himſelf than under one: * Why ſhould Men continue this Notion in them, which ſhackled them in their vile inclinations, if it had been in their power utterly to deface it? If it were an Impoſture, how comes it to paſs that all the wicked Ages of the world could never diſcover that to be a Cheat, which kept them in continual alarms? Men wanted not will to ſhake off ſuch apprehenſions; As Adam, ſo all his Poſterity are deſirous to hide themſelves from God upon the Commiſſion of ſin, * and by the ſame reaſon they would hide God from their Souls. What is the reaſon they could never attain their will, and their wiſh, by all their endeavours? Could they poſſibly have ſatisfied themſelves that there were no God, they had diſcarded their fears, the diſturbers of the repoſe of their Lives, and been unbridled in their pleaſures. The wickedneſs of the World would never have preſerved that which was a perpetual moleſtation to it, had it been poſſible to be raſed out.

* Gen. 3. 5.

* Gen. 3. 9.

But ſince Men, under the turmoils and laſhes of their own Conſciences, could never bring their hearts to a ſettled diſſent from this Truth; it evidenceth, that as it took its birth at the beginning of the World, it cannot expire, no not in the aſhes of it, nor in any thing, but the reduction of the Soul to that Nothing from whence it ſprung. This conception is ſo perpetual, that the nature of the Soul muſt be diſſolved before it be rooted out, nor can it be extinct whilſt the Soul endures.

3. Let it be conſidered alſo by us that own the Scripture, that the Devil deems it impoſſible to root out this ſentiment. It ſeems to be ſo perpetually fixed, that the Devil did not think fit to tempt Man to the denial of the Exiſtence of a Deity, but perſwaded him to believe, he might aſcend to that dignity, and become a God himſelf, Gen. 3 1. Hath God ſaid? and he there owns him, ver. 5. Ye ſhall become as Gods. He owns God in the queſtion he asks the Woman, and perſwades our firſt Parents to be Gods themſelves. And in all Stories both Ancient and Modern, the Devil was never able to tincture Mens minds with a profeſſed denial of the Deity, which would have opened a door to a world of more wickedneſs than hath been acted, and took away the bar, to the breaking out of that evil, which is naturally in the hearts of men, to the greater prejudice of humane Societies. He wanted not malice to raſe out all the Notions of God, but power: He knew it was impoſſible to effect it, and therefore in vain to attempt it. He ſet up himſelf in ſeveral places of the ignorant world as a God, but never was able to overthrow the opinion of the being of a God: The impreſſions of a Deity were ſo ſtrong, as not to be ſtruck out by the malice and power of Hell.

What a folly is it then in any to contradict or doubt of this Truth, which all the periods of Time have not been able to wear out; which all the Wars and Quarrels of Men with their own Conſciences, have not been able to deſtroy; which Ignorance and Debauchery, its two greateſt Enemies, cannot weaken; which all the falſhoods and errors, which have reigned in one or other part of the World, have not been able to baniſh; which lives in the conſents of Men in ſpight of all their wiſhes to the contrary, and hath grown ſtronger and ſhone clearer by the improvements of Natural Reaſon?

3. Natural and innate; which pleads ſtrongly for the perpetuity of it. 'Tis natural, tho' ſome think it not a Principle writ in the heart of Man; * 'tis ſo natural that every Man is born with a reſtleſs inſtinct to be of ſome kind of Religion or other, which implies ſome object of Religion. The impreſſion of a Deity is as common as Reaſon, and of the ſame age with Reaſon. * 'Tis a Relique of Knowledge after the Fall of Adam, like fire under aſhes, which ſparkles as ſoon as ever the heap of aſhes is opened. A Notion ſealed up in the Soul of every Man; * elſe how could thoſe People, who were unknown to one another, ſeparate by Seas and Mounts, differing in various Cuſtoms and manner of Living, had no mutual intelligence one with another, light upon this as a common Sentiment, if they had not been guided by one uniform Reaſon in all their minds, by one Nature common to them all; tho' their Climates be different, their tempers and conſtitutions various, their imaginations in ſome things as diſtant from one another as Heaven is from Earth, the Ceremonies of their Religion not all of the ſame kind; Yet where ever you find Humane Nature, you find this ſettled perſwaſion. So that the Notion of a God ſeems to be twiſted with the Nature of Man, and is the firſt natural branch of Common Reaſon, or upon either the firſt inſpection of a Man into himſelf, and his own ſtate and conſtitution, or upon the firſt ſight of any external viſible Object. Nature within Man, and Nature without Man, agree upon the firſt meeting together to form this Sentiment, that there is a God. 'Tis as natural as any thing we call a common Principle. One thing which is called a Common Principle and Natural, is, that the whole is greater than the parts. If this be not born with us, yet the Exerciſe of Reaſon, eſſential to Man, ſettles it as a certain Maxim; upon the dividing any thing into ſeveral parts, he finds every part leſs than when they were alto-altogether. By the same exercise of Reason, we cannot cast our eyes upon any thing in the World, or exercise our Understandings upon our selves, but we must presently imagine, there was some cause of those things, some cause of my self and my own being; so that this Truth is as natural to Man, as any thing he can call most Natural, or a Common Principle.

It must be confess'd by all, that there is a Law of Nature writ upon the hearts of Men, which will direct them to commendable actions, if they will attend to the writing in their own Consciences. This Law cannot be considered without the notice of a Lawgiver. For 'tis but a natural and obvious conclusion, that some superior hand engrafted those Principles in Man, since he finds something in him twitching him upon the pursuit of uncomely actions, tho' his heart be mightily inclined to them; Man knows he never planted this Principle of Reluctancy in his own Soul; he can never be the cause of that, which he cannot be friends with. If he were the cause of it, why doth he not rid himself of it? No Man would endure a thing that doth frequently molest and disquiet him, if he could cashier it. 'Tis therefore sown in Man by some hand more powerful than Man, which riseth so high, and is rooted so strong, that all the force that Man can use cannot pull it up. If therefore this Principle be natural in Man, and the Law of Nature be natural, the Notion of a Law-giver must be as natural as the Notion of a Printer, or that there is a Printer is obvious upon the sight of a stampt impress: After this the multitude of effects in the World step in to strengthen this beam of natural light, and the direct conclusion from thence is, that that power, which made those outward objects, implanted this inward Principle: This is sown in us, born with us, and sprouts up with our growth; or as one saith, *'tis like Letters carved upon the bark of a young plant, which grows up together with us, and the longer it grows the Letters are more legible.

*Charleton.

This is the ground of this universal consent, and why it may well be termed natural.

This will more evidently appear to be natural, because,

1. This consent could not be by meer Tradition.

2. Nor by any mutual intelligence of Governors to keep People in awe, which are two things the Atheist pleads: The first hath no strong foundation, and that other is as absurd and foolish, as it is wicked and abominable.

3. Nor was it Fear first introduced it.

1. It could not be by meer Tradition. Many things indeed are entertained by Posterity, which their Ancestors delivered to them, and that out of a common reverence to their Forefathers, and an opinion, that they had a better prospect of things than the increase of the corruption of succeeding Ages would permit them to have.

But if this be a Tradition handled from our Ancestors, they also must receive it from theirs; we must then ascend to the first Man, we cannot else escape a confounding our selves with running into infinite; was it then the only Tradition he left to them, is it not probable he acquainted them with other things in conjunction with this, the Nature of God, the way to worship him, the manner of the Worlds existence, his own state? We may reasonably suppose him to have a good stock of knowledge, what is become of it? It cannot be supposed, that the first Man should acquaint his Posterity with an object of worship, and leave them ignorant of a mode of worship, and of the end of worship; we find in Scripture his immediate Posterity did the first in Sacrifices, and without doubt they were not ignorant of the other: How come Men to be so uncertain in all other things, and so confident of this, if it were only a Tradition? How did debates and irreconcilable questions, start up concerning other things, and this remain untouch'd, but by a small number? Whatsoever Tradition the first Man left besides this is lost, and no way recoverable, but by the Revelation God hath made in his Word.

How comes it to pass, this of a God is longer liv'd than all the rest, which we may suppose Man left to his immediate descendents? How come Men to retain the one, and forget the other? What was the reason this surviv'd the ruin of the rest, and surmounted the uncertainties into which the other sunk? Was it likely it should be handed down alone without other attendants on it at first? Why did it not expire among the Americans, who have lost the account of their own descent, and the Stock from whence they sprung, and cannot reckon above eight hundred or a thousand years at most? Why was not the manner of the worship of a God transmitted as well as that of his Existence? How came Men to dissent in their Opinions concerning his Nature, whether he was corporeal or incorporeal, finite or infinite, omnipresent or limited? Why were not Men as negligent to transmit this of his Existence as that of his Nature? No reason can be rendred for the security of this above the other, but that there is so clear a tincture of a Deity upon the minds of Men, such traces and shadows of him in the creatures, such indelible instincts within, and invincible arguments without, to keep up this universal consent. The Characters are so deep, that they cannot possibly be rased out, which would have been one time or other, in one Nation or other, had it depended only upon Tradition, since one Age shakes off frequently the Sentiments of the former.

I cannot think of above one which may be called a Tradition, which indeed was kept up among all Nations, viz. Sacrifices, which could not be natural but instituted: What ground could they have in Nature, to imagine that the blood of Beasts could expiate and wash off the guilt and stains of a rational Creature? Yet they had in all places (but among the Jews, and some of them only) lost the knowledge of the reason and end of the Institution, which the Scripture acquaints us was to typifie and signifie the Redemption by the Promised Seed. This Tradition hath been superannuated and laid aside in most parts of the World, while this Notion of the Existence of a God hath stood firm.

But suppose it were a Tradition, was it likely to be a meer intention and figment of the first Man? Had there been no reason for it, his Posterity would soon have found out the weakness of its Foundation: What advantage had it been to him to transmit so great a falshood to kindle the fears, or raise the hopes of his Posterity, if there were no God? It cannot be supposed he should be so void of that natural affection, Men in all Ages bear to their Descendents, as so grosly to deceive them, and be so contrary to the simplicity and plainness which appears in all things nearest their Original.

2. Neither was it by any mutual Intelligence of Governors among themselves, to keep people in subjection to them. If it were a Political design at first, it seems it met with the general nature of Mankind very ready to give it entertainment.

I. It is unaccountable how this should come to pass. It must be either by a joint Assembly of them, or a mutual Correspondence. If by any Assembly, who were the Persons? Let the Name of any one be mentioned; when was the time? Where was the place of this appearance? By what Authority did they meet together? Who made the first motion, and first started this great Principle of Policy? By what means could they assemble from such distant Parts of the World? Humane Histories are utterly silent in it, and the Scripture, the ancientest History, gives an account of of the attempt of Babel, but not a word of any deſign of this nature.

What mutual Correſpondence could ſuch have, whoſe Intereſts are for the moſt part different, and their deſigns contrary to one another? How could they, who were divided by ſuch vaſt Seas, have this mutual Converſe? How could thoſe, who were different in their Cuſtoms and Manners, agree ſo unanimouſly together in one thing to gull the People? If there had been ſuch a Correſpondence between the Governors of all Nations, what is the reaſon ſome Nations ſhould be unknown to the World till of late times? How could the buſineſs be ſo ſecretly managed, as not to take Vent, and iſſue in a diſcovery to the World? Can reaſon ſuppoſe ſo many in a joynt Conſpiracy, and no Mans Conſcience in this life, under ſharp afflictions, or on his death-bed, when Conſcience is moſt awakened, conſtrain him to reveal openly the Cheat that beguil'd the World? How came they to be ſo unanimous in this Notion, and to differ in their Rites almoſt in every Country? Why could they not agree in one Mode of Worſhip throughout all the World, as well as in this univerſal Notion? If there were not a mutual Intelligence, it cannot be conceived how in every Nation ſuch a State-Engineer ſhould riſe up with the ſame Trick to keep People in awe. What is the reaſon we cannot find any Law in any one Nation, to conſtrain Men to the belief of the Exiſtence of a God, ſince politick Stratagems have been often fortified by Laws? Beſides, ſuch Men make uſe of Principles received to effect their Contrivances, and are not ſo impolitick as to build deſigns upon Principles that have no Foundation in nature: Some Heathen Law-givers have pretended a converſe with their Gods, to make their Laws be received by the People with a greater veneration, and fix with ſtronger obligation the obſervance and perpetuity of them; but this was not the introducing of a new Principle, but the ſuppoſition of an old receiv'd Notion, that there was a God, and an application of that Principle to their preſent deſign. The pretence had been vain, had not the notion of a God been ingrafted. Politicians are ſo little poſſeſſed with a Reverence of God, that the firſt mighty one in the Scripture, (which may reaſonably gain with the Atheiſt the credit of the Ancienteſt Hiſtory in the Word) is repreſented without any fear of God. * An Invader and Oppreſſor of his Neighbours, and reputed the Introducer of a new Worſhip, and being the firſt that built Cities after the Flood, (as Cain was the firſt Builder of them before the Flood) built alſo Idolatry with them. And erected a new Worſhip, and was ſo far from ſtrengthning that Notion the People had of God, that he endeavoured to corrupt it; The firſt Idolatry in common Hiſtories being noted to proceed from that part of the World; the Ancienteſt Idol being at Babylon, and ſuppoſed to be firſt invented by this Perſon: Whence by the way perhaps Rome is in the Revelations called Babylon, with reſpect to that ſimilitude of their Saint-Worſhip, to the Idolatry firſt ſet up in that place *. 'Tis evident Politicians have often changed the Worſhip of a Nation, but it is not upon record, that the firſt thoughts of an object of Worſhip ever entred into the minds of People by any Trick of theirs.

*Gen. 10. 9. Nimrod was a mighty hunter before the Lord.

* Or if we underſtand it, as ſome think, that he defended his invaſions under a pretext of the preſerving Religion, it aſſures us that there was a notion of an object of Religion before, ſince no Religion can be without an object of Worſhip.

But to return to the preſent Argument, the Being of a God is owned by ſome Nations, that have ſcarce any form of Policy among them. 'Tis as wonderful how any Wit ſhould hit upon ſuch an Invention, as it is abſurd to aſcribe it to any humane device, if there were not prevailing Arguments to conſtrain the conſent. Beſides, how is it poſſible they ſhould deceive themſelves? What is the reaſon the greateſt Politicians have their fears of a Deity upon their unjuſt Practices, as well as other Men, they intended to befool? How many of them have had forlorn Conſciences upon a Death-Bed, upon the conſideration of a God to anſwer an Account to in another World? Is it credible they ſhould be frighted by that wherewith they knew they beguiled others? No Man ſatisfying his Pleaſures, would impoſe ſuch a deceit upon himſelf, or render and make himſelf more miſerable than the Creatures he hath dominion over.

2. It is unaccountable how it ſhould indure ſo long a time. That this Policy ſhould be ſo fortunate as to gain ground in the Conſciences of Men, and exerciſe an Empire over them, and meet with ſuch an univerſal ſucceſs. If the Notion of a God were a State-Engine, and introduced by ſome Politick Grandees for the eaſe of Government, and preſerving People with more felicity in order, how comes it to paſs the firſt broachers of it were never upon record? There is ſcarce a falſe opinion vented in the World, but may, as a ſtream, be traced to the firſt head and fountain. The Inventors of particular forms of Worſhip are known, and the reaſons why they preſcribed them known; but what Grandee was the Author of this? Who can pitch a time and perſon that ſprung up this Notion? If any be ſo inſolent as to impoſe a Cheat, he can hardly be ſuppoſed to be ſo ſucceſsful as to deceive the whole World for many Ages: Impoſtures paſs not free through the whole World without Examination and Diſcovery; Falſities have not been univerſally and conſtantly owned without controul and queſtion. If a Cheat impoſeth upon ſome Towns and Countries, he will be found out by the more piercing enquiries of other places; and it is not eaſie to name any Impoſture that hath walked ſo long in its diſguiſe in the World, without being unmasked and whipped out by ſome Nation or other: If this had been a meer Trick, there would have been as much craft in ſome to diſcern it, as there was in others to contrive it. No Man can be imagined ſo wiſe in a Kingdom, but others may be found as wiſe as himſelf: And it is not conceivable, that ſo many clear-ſighted Men in all Ages, ſhould be ignorant of it, and not endeavour to free the World from ſo great a falſity. * It cannot be found that a Trick of State ſhould always beguile Men of the moſt piercing inſights, as well as the moſt credulous: That a few crafty Men ſhould befool all the wiſe Men in the World; and the World lie in a belief of it, and never like to be freed from it. What is the reaſon the ſucceeding Politicians never knew this Stratagem, ſince their Maxims are uſually handed to their Succeſſors?

* Fotherby A Theomaſtix, p. 64.

And there is not a Richlieu, but leaves his Axioms to a Mazerine.

This perſwaſion of the Exiſtence of God, owes not it ſelf to any Impoſture or ſubtilty of Men: If it had not been agreeable to common Nature and Reaſon, it could not ſo long have born ſway. The impoſed yoke would have been caſt off by Multitudes; Men would not have charged themſelves with that which was attended with conſequences diſpleaſing to the Fleſh, and hindred them from a full ſwing of their rebellious Paſſions; ſuch a ſhackle would have mouldred of it ſelf, or been broke by the extravagances Humane Nature is inclin'd unto: The wickedneſs of Men, without queſtion, hath prompted them to endeavour to unmask it, if it were a Coſenage, but could never yet be ſo ſucceſsful as to free the World from a perſwaſion, or their own Conſciences from the tincture of the Exiſtence of a Deity. It muſt be therefore of an ancienter Date than the Craft of States-men, and deſcend into the World with the firſt appearance of Humane Nature. Time, which hath rectified many Errors, improves this Notion, makes it ſhock down its roots deeper, and ſpread its branches larger.

It muſt be a natural Truth that ſhines clear by the detection of thoſe Errors that have befooled the World, and the wit of Man is never able to name any Humane Author that firſt inſinuated it into the beliefs of Men.

3. Nor was it Fear firſt introduced it. Fear is the Conſequent

Consequent of wickedness. As Man was not created with any inherent sin, so he was not created with any terrifying fears, the one had been against the Holiness of the Creator, the other against his goodness: Fear did not make this Opinion, but the Opinion of the Being of a Deity was the cause of this Fear, after his sense of angring the Deity by his wickedness. The Object of Fear is before the Act of Fear; there could not be an Act of Fear exercised about the Deity, till it was believed to be existent, and not only so, but Offended: For God, as existent only, is not the Object of Fear or Love; 'tis not the existence of a thing that excites any of those Affections, but the Relation a thing bears to us in particular. God is Good, and so the object of Love, as well as Just, and thereby the object of Fear. He was as much called Love, * and Mens, or Mind, in regard of his Goodness and Understanding, by the Heathens, as much as by any other Name. Neither of those names were proper to insinuate Fear; neither was Fear the first Principle that made the Heathens worship a God; they offered Sacrifices out of Gratitude to some, as well as to others out of Fear: the fear of Evils in the World, and the hopes of Relief and Assistance from their Gods, and not a terrifying Fear of God, was the principal Spring of their worship: When Calamities from the hands of Men, or Judgments by the influences of Heaven, were upon them, they implored that which they thought a Deity; It was not their Fear of him, but a hope in his Goodness, and Perswasion of Remedy from him, for the averting those Evils that rendred them Adorers of a God: If they had not had pre-existent Notions of his Being and Goodness, they would never have made addresses to him, or so frequently sought to that they only apprehended as a terrifying Object: * When you hear Men calling upon God in a time of affrighting Thunder, you cannot imagine that the fear of Thunder did first introduce the Notion of a God, but implies, that it was before apprehended by them, or stampt upon them, though their fear doth at present actuate that Belief, and engage them in a present Exercise of Piety: and whereas the Scripture saith, The fear of God is the beginning of Wisdom, or of all Religion; *'tis not understood of a distracted and terrifying Fear, but a reverential Fear of him, because of his Holiness, or a worship of him, a submission to him, and sincere seeking of him.

* Pro. 9. 10. Ps. 111. 10.

Well then, is it not a folly for an Atheist to deny that which is the reason and common Sentiment of the whole World, to strip himself of Humanity, run counter to his own Conscience, prefer a private before an universal Judgment, give the Lye to his own Nature and Reason, assert things impossible to be proved, nay impossible to be acted, Forge irrationalities for the support of his fancy against the common perswasion of the World, and against himself, and so much of God as is manifest in him and every Man *?

* Rom. 1. 19

II. It is a folly to deny that which all Creatures, or all things in the World manifest. Let us view this in Scripture since we acknowledge it, and after consider the arguments from Natural Reason.

Jupiter est quodcunque vides, &c.

The Apostle resolves it, Rom. 1. 19, 20. The invisible things of him from the Creation of the World are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his Eternal Power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse: They know, or might know, by the things that were made, the Eternity and Power of God; their sense might take Circuit about every object, and their minds collect the Being, and something of the Perfections of the Deity: The first discourse of the mind upon the sight of a delicate piece of Workmanship, is the conclusion of the being of an Artificer, and the admiration of his skill and industry. The Apostle doth not say, the invisible things of God are believed, or they have an opinion of them, but they are seen and clearly seen: They are like Chrystal-glasses which give a clear representation of the Existence of a Deity, like that Mirrour reported to be in a Temple in Arcadia, which represented to the Spectator, not his own face, but the Image of that Deity which he worshipped.

The whole World is like a Looking-glass, which whole and entire represents the Image of God, and every broken piece of it, every little shred of a Creature doth the like, not only the great ones, Elephants and the Leviathan, but Ants, Flies, Worms, whose bodies rather than names we know: The greater Cattle and the Creeping things, Gen. 1. 24. Not naming there any intermediate Creature, to direct us to view him in the smaller Letters, as well as the greater Characters of the World. His name is Glorious, and his Attributes are excellent in all the Earth, * in every Creature, as the glory of the Sun is in every beam and smaller flash; he is seen in every Insect, in every Spire of grass: The voice of the Creator is in the most contemptible Creature: * The Apostle adds, that they are so clearly seen, that Men are inexcusable if they have not some knowledge of God by them; if they might not certainly know them, they might have some excuse: So that his Existence is not only probably, but demonstratively proved, from the things of the World.

* Psal. 8. 1.

* Banes in Aquin. Par. 2. Qu. 2 Artic. 2. p. 78. Col. 2.

Especially the Heavens declare him, which God stretches out like a Curtain, * or as some render the word, a Skin; whereby is signified, that Heaven is an open Book, which was anciently made of the skins of Beasts, that by the knowledge of them we may be taught the knowledge of God. Where Scripture was not revealed, the World served for a witness of a God; whatever arguments the Scripture uses to prove it, are drawn from Nature, (though indeed it doth not so much prove as suppose the Existence of a God) but what Arguments it uses are from the Creatures, and particularly the Heavens, which are the publick Preachers of this Doctrine: The breath of God sounds to all the World through those Organ-pipes. His Being is visible in their Existence, his Wisdom in their frame, his Power in their motion, his Goodness in their usefulness: * They have a voice, and their voice is as intelligible as any common Language. And those are so plain Heralds of a Deity, that the Heathen mistook them for Deities, and gave them a particular adoration which was due to that God they declared. The first Idolatry seems to be of those Heavenly bodies, which began probably in the time of Nimrod. In Jobs time it is certain they admired the Glory of the Sun, and the brightness of the Moon, not without kissing their hands, a sign of Adoration *. 'Tis evident a Man may as well doubt whether there be a Sun, when he sees his beams guilding the Earth, as doubt whether there be a God when he sees his Works spread in the World.

The things in the World declare the Existence of a God.

1. In their Production, 2. Harmony, 3. Preservation, 4. Answering their several ends.

First, 1. In their Production. The declaration of the Existence of God was the chief end for which they were Created, that the Notion of a Supream and Independent Eternal Being, might easier incur into the active Understanding of Man from the objects of sense dispersed in every corner of the World, that he might pay a homage and devotion to the Lord of all, Isa. 40. 12, 13, 18, 19, &c. Have you not understood from the foundation of the Earth, 'tis he that sits upon the Circle of the Heaven? &c. How could this great heap be brought into being, unless a God had framed it? Every Plant, every Atome, as well as every Star, at the first meeting whispers this in our Ears, I have a Creator, I am witness to a Deity: Who ever saw Statues or Pictures, but presently thinks of a Statuary and Limner? Who beholds Garments, Ships or Houses, but underſtands there was a Weaver, a Carpenter, an Architect? * Who can caſt his eyes about the World, but muſt think of that power that formed it, and that the goodneſs which appears in the formation of it hath a perfect Reſidence in ſome Being? [thoſe things that are good muſt flow from ſomething perfectly good: that which is chief in any kind is the cauſe of all of that kind. Fire which is moſt hot, is the cauſe of all things which are hot. There is ſome Being therefore which is the cauſe of all that Perfection, which is in the Creature; and this is God. Aquin. 1. qu. 2. Artic. 3.] All things that are, demonſtrate ſomething from whence they are. All things have a contracted perfection, and what they have is communicated to them. Perfections are parcell'd out among ſeveral Creatures. Any thing that is imperfect cannot exiſt of it ſelf. We are led therefore by them to conſider a Fountain which bubbles up in all perfection; a Hand which diſtributes thoſe ſeveral degrees of Being and Perfection to what we ſee; we ſee that which is imperfect, our minds conclude ſomething perfect to exiſt before it; our eye ſees the ſtreams, but our underſtanding riſeth to the head: as the eye ſees the ſhadow, but the underſtanding informs us whether it be the ſhadow of a Man, or of a Beaſt.

* Philo. ex Petav. Theol. Dog. Tom. 1. l. 1. cap. 1. p. 4. ſomewhat changed.

God hath given us Senſe to behold the objects in the World, and Underſtanding to reaſon his Exiſtence from them; the Underſtanding cannot conceive a thing to have made it ſelf; that is againſt all reaſon. * As they are made they ſpeak out a Maker; and cannot be a trick of chance, ſince they are made with ſuch an immenſe Wiſdom, that is too big for the graſp of all Humane Underſtanding. Thoſe that doubt whether the Exiſtence of God be an implanted Principle, yet agree that the effects in the World lead to a ſupream and univerſal cauſe: And that if we have not the knowledge of it rooted in our Natures, yet we have it by diſcourſe, ſince by all Maſters of reaſon, a Proceſſus in Infinitum muſt be accounted impoſſible in ſubordinate cauſes.

*Rom. 1. 20.

This will appear in ſeveral things.

First, 1. The World and every Creature had a beginning. The Scripture Aſcertains this to us *; David, who was not the firſt Man, gives the praiſe to God of his being curiouſly wrought, &c. Pſal. 139. 14, 15. God gave Being to Men, and Plants, and Beaſts, before they gave being to one another. He gives Being to them now as the Fountain of all Being, though the ſeveral Modes of Being are from the ſeveral natures of ſecond Cauſes.

*Gen. 1.

'Tis true indeed, we are aſcertained that they were made by the true God, that they were made by his Word *, that they were made of Nothing, and not only this lower World wherein we live, but according to the Jewiſh diviſion, the World of Men, the World of Stars, and the World of Spirits, and Souls: We do not waver in it, or doubt of it, as the Heathen did in their diſputes; we know they are the workmanſhip of the true God, of that God we adore, not of falſe Gods: By his Word, without any Inſtrument or Engine, as in earthly Structures; of things which do not appear, without any pre-exiſtent Matter, as all Artificial works of Men are framed.

* By Faith we underſtand that the Worlds were framed by the Word of God, &c.
* Heb. 11. 3.

Yet the proof of the beginning of the World is affirmed with good reaſon; and if it had a beginning, it had alſo ſome higher cauſe than it ſelf: Every effect hath a cauſe.

* The World was not Eternal or from Eternity. The Matter of the World cannot be Eternal: Matter cannot ſubſiſt without form, nor put on any form without the action of ſome cauſe, this cauſe muſt be in Being before it acted; that which is not cannot act. The cauſe of the World muſt neceſſarily exiſt before any Matter was endued with any form; that therefore cannot be Eternal before which another did ſubſiſt; if it were from Eternity it would not be ſubject to mutation: If the whole was from Eternity, why not alſo the parts, what makes the changes ſo viſible then, if Eternity would exempt it from mutability?

* Daile 20. Serm. Pſal. 102. 26. p. 13, 14.

1. Time cannot be infinite, and therefore the World not Eternal; * All motion hath its beginning, if it were otherwiſe, we muſt ſay the number of heavenly revolutions of Days and Nights, which are paſt to this inſtant, is actually infinite, which cannot be in nature: If it were ſo, it muſt needs be granted, that a part is equal to the whole; becauſe infinite being equal to infinite, the number of days paſt in all Ages to the beginning of one year being Infinite (as they would be, ſuppoſing the World had no beginning) would by conſequence be equal to the number of days, which ſhall paſs to the end of the next; whereas that number of days paſt is indeed but a part, and ſo a part would be equal to the whole.

* Daile ut Supra.

2. Generations of Men, Animals and Plants, could not be from Eternity. * If any Man ſay the World was from Eternity, then there muſt be propagations of living Creatures in the ſame manner as are at this day: For without this the World could not conſiſt; what we ſee now done muſt have been perpetually done, if it be done by a neceſſity of nature: But we ſee nothing now that doth ariſe but by a mutual propagation from another: If the World were Eternal therefore, it muſt be ſo in all Eternity: Take any particular ſpecies, ſuppoſe a Man, if Men were from Eternity, then there were perpetual Generations, ſome were born into the World and ſome died: Now the natural condition of Generation is, that a Man doth not generate a Man, nor a Sheep a Lamb, as ſoon as ever it ſelf is brought into the World, but gets ſtrength and vigour by degrees, and muſt arrive to a certain ſtated age before they can produce the like; for whilſt any thing is little and below the due age, it cannot increaſe its kind; Men therefore, and other Creatures, did propagate their kind by the ſame Law, not as ſoon as ever they were born, but in the interval of ſome time, and Children grew up by degrees in the Mothers Womb till they were fit to be brought forth: If this be ſo, then there could not be an Eternal ſucceſſion of propagating: For there is no Eternal continuation of time: Time is always to be conceived as having one part before another: But that perpetuity of Nativities is always after ſome time, wherein it could not be for the weakneſs of age: If no Man then can conceive a propagation from Eternity, there muſt be then a beginning of Generation in time, and conſequently the Creatures were made in time.

* Petav. Theo. Dogmat. Tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 2. pag. 15.

* [If the World were Eternal, it muſt have been in the ſame poſture as it is now, in a ſtate of Generation and Corruption; and ſo Corruption muſt have been as Eternal as Generation, and then things that do generate and corrupt muſt have Eternally been, and Eternally not have been: There muſt be ſome firſt way to ſet Generation on work.] We muſt loſe our ſelves in our conceptions; we cannot conceive a Father before a Child, as well as we cannot conceive a Child before a Father: And reaſon is quite bewildred, and cannot return into a right way of Conception till it conceive one firſt of every kind: One firſt Man, one firſt Animal, one firſt Plant, from whence others do proceed. The Argument is unanſwerable, and the wiſeſt Atheiſt (if any Atheiſt can be called wiſe) cannot unloſe the knot. We muſt come to ſomething that is firſt in every kind, and this firſt muſt have a Cauſe, not of the ſame kind, but Infinite and Independent; otherwiſe Men run into unconceivable Labyrinths and Contradictions.

* To expreſs it in the words of one of our own. Wolſeley of Atheiſm, pag. 47.

Man, the nobleſt Creature upon Earth, hath a beginning. No Man in the World but was ſome years ago no Man. If every Man we ſee had a beginning, then the firſt Man had alſo a beginning, then the World had a beginning: For the Earth which was made for the the use of Man, had wanted that end for which it was made. We must pitch upon some one Man that was unborn, that first Man must either be Eternal, that cannot be, for he that hath no beginning hath no end; or must spring out of the Earth, as Plants and Trees do, that cannot be; why should not the Earth produce Men to this day, as it doth Plants and Trees? He was therefore made; and whatsoever is made hath some cause that made it, which is God.

Petav. ut supr. p. 10.

* Damason. * If the World were uncreated it were then immutable, but every Creature upon the Earth is in a continual flux, always changing: If things be mutable, they were created; if created, they were made by some Author; whatsoever hath a beginning must have a Maker; if the World hath a beginning, there was then a time when it was not; it must have some cause to produce it. That which makes is before that which is made, and this is God.

Secondly, II. Which will appear further in this proposition, No Creature can make it self: The World could not make it self.

If every Man had a beginning, every Man then was once nothing; he could not then make himself, because nothing cannot be the cause of something, Psal. 100. 3. The Lord he is God, he hath made us, and not we our selves, [whatsoever begun in time, was not; and when it was nothing, it had nothing, and could do nothing: And therefore could never give to it self nor to any other to be, or to be able to do: For then it gave what it had not, and did what it could not.

* Petav. Theol. Dog. Tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 2. p. 14. * Since Reason must acknowledge a first of every kind, a first Man, &c. it must acknowledge him created and made, not by himself: Why have not other Men since rise up by themselves? not by Chance; Why hath not Chance produced the like in that long time the World hath stood? If we never knew any thing give Being to it self, how can we imagine any thing ever could? If the chiefest part of this lower World cannot, nor any part of it hath been known to give Being to it self, then the whole cannot be supposed to give any Being to it self: Man did not form himself: His body is not from himself, it would then have the power of moving it self, but that is not able to live or act without the presence of the Soul: Whilst the Soul is present the Body moves, when that is absent the Body lies as a senceless Log, not having the least action or motion. His Soul could not form it self; can that which cannot form the least mote, the least grain of dust, form it self, a nobler substance than any upon the earth?

This will be evident to every Man's reason, if we consider,

1. Nothing can act before it be. The first Man was not, and therefore could not make himself to be: For any thing to produce it self is to act; if it acted before it was, it was then something and nothing at the same time; it had then a Being before it had a Being; it acted when it brought it self into Being. How could it act without a Being, without it was? So that if it were the cause of it self, it must be before it self as well as after it self; it was before it was; it was as a cause before it was as an effect. Action always supposes a principle from whence it flows; as nothing hath no Existence, so it hath no operation; there must be therefore something of real Existence to give a Being to those things that are, and every second cause must be an effect of some other before it be a cause: To be and not be at the same time, is a manifest contradiction, which would be, if any thing made it self: That which makes is always before that which is made: Who will say the House is before the Carpenter, or the Picture before the Limner? The World as a Creator, must be before it self as a Creature.

2. That which doth not understand it self, and order it self, could not make it self. If the first Man fully understood his own Nature, the excellency of his own Soul, the manner of its operations, why was not that understanding conveyed to his Posterity? Are not many of them found, who understand their own nature, almost as little as a Beast understands it self, or a Rose understands its own sweetness, or a Tulip its own Colours? The Scripture indeed gives us an account how this came about, viz. by the deplorable Rebellion of Man, whereby Death was brought upon them (a Spiritual Death, which includes ignorance as well as an inability to Spiritual action *). Thus he fell from his Honour, and became like the Beasts that perish, and not retaining God in his knowledge, retained not himself in his own knowledge.

* Gen. 2. 17. Psal. 49. 8.

But what reply can an Atheist make to it, who acknowledges no higher cause than Nature? If the Soul made it self, how comes it to be so muddy, so wanting in its knowledge of it self, and of other things? If the Soul made its own Understanding, whence did the defect arise? If some first principle was settled by the first Man in himself, where was the stop that he did not implant all in his own mind, and consequently in the minds of all his descendants? Our Souls know little of themselves, little of the World, are every day upon new enquiries, have little satisfaction in themselves, meet with many an invincible rub in their way; and when they seem to come to some resolution in some cases, stagger again, and like a stone roll'd up to the top of the Hill, quickly find themselves again at the foot. How come they to be so purblind in Truth? So short of that which they judge true goodness? How comes it to pass they cannot order their own rebellious affections, and suffer the reins they have to hold over their affections, to be taken out of their hands by the unruly fancy and flesh?

This no Man that denies the Being of a God, and the Revelation in Scripture, can give an account of. Blessed be God that we have the Scripture, which gives us an account of those things, that all the wit of Men could never inform us of; and that when they are discovered and known by Revelation, they appear not contrary to reason.

3. If the first Man made himself, how came he to limit himself? If he gave himself Being, why did he not give himself all the perfections and ornaments of Being? Nothing that made it self, could sit down contented with a little, but would have had as much power to give it self that which is less, as to give it self Being, when it was nothing. The excellencies it wanted had not been more difficult to gain than the other which it possessed, as belonging to its nature. If the first Man had been independent upon another, and had his perfection from himself, he might have acquired that perfection he wanted, as well as have bestowed upon himself that perfection he had; and then there would have been no bounds set to him. He would have been Omniscient and Immutable. He might have given himself what he would; if he had had the setting his own bounds, he would have set none at all; For what should restrain him? No Man now wants Ambition to be what he is not; and if the first Man had not been determined by another, but had given himself Being, he would not have remained in that determinate Being, no more than a Toad would remain a Toad, if it had power to make it self a Man, and that power it would have had, if it had given it self a Being. Whatsoever gives it self Being, would give it self all degrees of Being, and so would have no imperfection, because every imperfection is a want of some degree of Being. * He that could give himself Matter and Life, might give himself every thing. The giving of Life is an act of Omnipotence, and what is Omnipotent in one thing, may be in all. Besides, if the first Man had made himself, he would have conveyed himself to all his Posterity in the same manner, every every Man would have had all the perfections of the firſt Man, as every Creature hath the perfections of the ſame kind, from whence it naturally iſſues, are all deſirous to communicate what they can to their poſterity. Communicative goodneſs belongs to every nature. Every Plant propagates its kind in the ſame perfection it hath it ſelf; and the nearer any thing comes to a rational nature, the greater affection it hath to that which deſcends from it; therefore this affection belongs to a rational nature much more. The firſt Man therefore, if he had had power to give himſelf Being, and conſequently all perfection, he would have had as much power to convey it down to his Poſterity; no impediment could have ſtopt his way; then all Souls proceeding from that firſt Man would have been equally intellectual. What ſhould hinder them from inheriting the ſame perfections? whence ſhould they have divers qualifications and differences in their Underſtandings? No Man then would have been ſubject to thoſe weakneſſes, doubtings, and unſatisfied deſires of knowledge and perfection. But being all Souls are not alike, 'tis certain they depend upon ſome other cauſe for the communication of that excellency they have. If the perfections of Man be ſo contracted and kept within certain bounds, 'tis certain that they were not in his own power, and ſo were not from himſelf. Whatſoever hath a determinate Being, muſt be limited by ſome Superior Cauſe. There is therefore ſome Superior Power, that hath thus determined the Creature by ſet bounds and diſtinct meaſures, and hath aſſigned to every one its proper nature, that it ſhould not be greater or leſs than it is; who hath ſaid of every one as

* Therefore the Heathens called God τὸ ὄν, the only Being: Other things were not Beings, because they had not all degrees of Being.

*Job 38.11 of the waves of the Sea, * Hitherto ſhalt thou come, but no further; and this is God. Man could not have reſerved any perfection from his Poſterity. For ſince he doth propagate not by choice but nature, he could no more have kept back any perfection from them, than he could, as he pleaſed, have given any perfection belonging to his nature to them.

4. That which hath power to give it ſelf Being, cannot want power to preſerve that Being. Preſervation is not more difficult than Creation. If the firſt Man made himſelf, why did he not preſerve himſelf? He is not now among the Living in the World. How came he to be ſo feeble as to ſink into the Grave? Why did he not inſpire himſelf with new heat and moiſture, and fill his languiſhing Limbs and declining Body with new ſtrength? Why did he not chaſe away Diſeaſes and Death at the firſt approach? What creature can find the duſt of the firſt Man? All his poſterity traverſe the Stage and retire again; in a ſhort ſpace their Age departs, and is removed from them as a Shepherds Tent,
*Iſa.38.12. and is cut off with pining Sickneſs. * The Life of Man is as a wind, and like a cloud that is conſumed and
Job 7.6, 7, 8, 9. vaniſhes away. The eye that ſees him ſhall ſee him no more, he returns not to his houſe, neither doth his place know him any more. The Scripture gives us the reaſon of this, and lays it upon the ſcore of ſin againſt his Creator; which no Man without revelation can give any ſatisfactory account of.

Had the firſt Man made himſelf, he had been ſufficient for himſelf, able to ſupport himſelf without the aſſiſtance of any creature. He would not have needed Animals and Plants, and other helps, to nouriſh and refreſh him, nor Medicines to cure him. He could not be beholding to other things for his ſupport, which he is certain he never made for himſelf. His own nature would have continued that vigour, which once he had conferred upon himſelf. He would not have needed the heat and light of the Sun; he would have wanted nothing ſufficient for himſelf in himſelf; he needed not have ſought without himſelf for his own preſervation and comfort. What depends upon another is not of it ſelf, and what depends upon things inferior to it ſelf is leſs of it ſelf. Since nothing can ſubſiſt of it ſelf, ſince we ſee thoſe things upon which Man depends for his nouriſhment and ſubſiſtence, growing and decaying, ſtarting into the World and retiring from it, as well as Man himſelf, ſome preſerving Cauſe muſt be concluded upon which all depends.

5. If the firſt Man did produce himſelf, why did he not produce himſelf before?

It hath been already proved, that he had a beginning, and could not be from Eternity. Why then did he not make himſelf before? Not becauſe he would not. For having no Being, he could have no Will; he could neither be willing nor not willing. If he could not then, how could he afterwards? If it were in his own power he could have done it, he would have done it; if it were not in his own power, then it was in the power of ſome other cauſe, and that is God. How came he by that power to produce himſelf? If the power of producing himſelf were communicated by another, then Man could not be the cauſe of himſelf. That is the cauſe of it which communicated that power to it. But if the power of Being was in and from himſelf, and in no other, nor communicated to him, Man would always have been in act, and always have exiſted; no hindrance can be conceived. For that which had the power of Being in it ſelf was invincible, by any thing that ſhould ſtand in the way of its own Being.

We may conclude from hence, the excellency of the Scripture; that it is a Word not to be refuſed credit. It gives us the moſt rational account of things in the 1. and 2. of Geneſis, which nothing in the World elſe is able to do.

Thirdly, III. Propoſition, No Creature could make the World. No Creature can create another. If it creates of nothing, 'tis then Omnipotent, and ſo not a Creature. If it makes ſomething of Matter unfit for that which is produced out of it, then the inquiry will be, who was the cauſe of the Matter; and ſo we muſt arrive to ſome uncreated Being, the cauſe of all. Whatſoever gives Being to any other muſt be the higheſt Being, and muſt poſſeſs all the perfections of that which it gives Being to. What viſible Creature is there which poſſeſſes the perfections of the whole World? If therefore an inviſible Creature made the World, the ſame enquiries will return whence that Creature had its Being; for he could not make himſelf. If any Creature did create the World, he muſt do it by the ſtrength and vertue of another, which firſt gave him Being; and this is God. For whatſoever hath its exiſtence and vertue of acting from another, is not God. If it hath its vertue from another, 'tis then a ſecond cauſe, and ſo ſuppoſeth a firſt cauſe. It muſt have ſome cauſe of it ſelf, or be eternally Exiſtent. If eternally Exiſtent, 'tis not a ſecond cauſe, but God; if not eternally Exiſtent, we muſt come to ſomething at length which was the cauſe of it, or elſe be bewildred without being able to give an account of any thing. We muſt come at laſt to an Infinite Eternal Independent Being, that was the firſt cauſe of this Structure and Fabrick wherein we and all Creatures dwell.
The Scripture proclaims this aloud, * I am the Lord, *Iſa.45.6,7 Deut.4.35. and there is none elſe: I form the light, and I create darkneſs. Man, the Nobleſt Creature, cannot of himſelf make a Man, the chiefeſt part of the World. If our Parents only, without a Superior power, made our Bodies or Souls, they would know the frame of them; as he that makes a Lock knows the Wards of it; he that makes any curious piece of Arras, knows how he ſets the various colours together, and how many threads went to each diviſion in the Web; he that makes a Watch, having the Idea of the whole work in his mind, knows the motions of it, and the reaſon of thoſe motions. But both Parents and Children are equally ignorant of the Nature of their Souls and Bodies, and of the reaſon of their motions.

God

God only that had the Supream Hand in informing us, in whoſe Book all our Members are written, which in continuance were faſhioned, knows what we all are ignorant of. If Man hath in an ordinary Courſe of Generation his being chiefly from an higher Cauſe than his Parents, the World then certainly had its Being from ſome infinitely wiſe intelligent Being, which is God. If it were, as ſome fancy, made by an Aſſembly of Atomes, there muſt be ſome infinite intelligent Cauſe that made them, ſome Cauſe that ſeparated them, ſome Cauſe that mingled them together for the piling up ſo comely a Structure as the World. 'Tis the moſt abſurd thing to think they ſhould meet together by hazard, and rank themſelves in that order we ſee without a higher and a wiſe Agent. So that no Creature could make the World. For ſuppoſing any Creature was formed before this viſible World, and might have a hand in diſpoſing Things, yet he muſt have a Cauſe of himſelf, and muſt Act by the Virtue and Strength of another; and this is God.

Pſ. 139. 16.

Fourthly, IV. Propoſition. From hence it follows, That there is a firſt Cauſe of Things, which we call [God.] There muſt be ſomething Supream in the order of Nature, ſomething which is Greater than all, which hath nothing beyond it or above it; otherwiſe we muſt run in Infinitum. We ſee not a River but we conclude a Fountain; a Watch but we conclude an Artificer. As all Number begins from Unity, ſo all the multitude of Things in the World begins from ſome Unity, Oneneſs, as the principle of it. 'Tis natural to ariſe from a view of thoſe Things, to the conception of a Nature more perfect than any. As from Heat mixed with Cold, and Light mixed with Darkneſs, Men conceive and ariſe in their Underſtanding to an intenſe Heat and a pure Light: And from a corporeal or bodily Subſtance joyned with an incorporeal, (as Man is an earthly Body, and a ſpiritual Soul,) we aſcend to a conception of a Subſtance purely incorporeal and Spiritual. So from a multitude of Things in the World, Reaſon leads us to one choice Being above all. And ſince in all Natures in the World, we ſtill find a ſuperiour Nature; the Nature of one Beaſt, above the Nature of another; the Nature of Man above the Nature of Beaſts; and ſome inviſible Nature, the Worker of ſtrange Effects in the Air and Earth, which cannot be aſcribed to any viſible Cauſe, we muſt ſuppoſe ſome Nature above all thoſe of unconceivable Perfection.

* Every Sceptick, one that doubts whether there be any thing real or no in the World, that counts every thing an Appearance, muſt neceſſarily own a firſt Cauſe. They cannot reaſonably doubt, but that there is ſome firſt Cauſe, which makes the Things appear ſo to them. They cannot be the Cauſe of their own Appearance. For as nothing can have a Being from it ſelf, ſo nothing can appear by it ſelf and its own force. Nothing can be and not be, at the ſame time. But that which is not, and yet ſeems to be; if it be the Cauſe why it ſeems to be what it is not, it may be ſaid to be and not be. But certainly ſuch Perſons muſt think themſelves to Exiſt. If they do not, they cannot think; and if they do exiſt, they muſt have ſome Cauſe of that Exiſtence. So that which way ſoever we turn our ſelves, we muſt in reaſon own a firſt Cauſe of the World.

* Cocceii ſum. Theol. c. 8. § 33, &c.

Well then might the Pſalmſt term an Atheiſt, a Fool, that diſowns a God, againſt his own Reaſon. Without owning a God as the firſt Cauſe of the World, no Man can give any tolerable or ſatisfactory account of the World to his own Reaſon.

And this firſt Cauſe,

1. Muſt neceſſarily Exiſt. * 'Tis neceſſary that he by whom all things are, ſhould be before all things, and nothing before him. And if nothing be before him, he comes not from any other; and then he always was, and without beginning. He is from himſelf; not that he once was not, but becauſe he hath not his Exiſtence from another, and therefore of neceſſity he did exiſt from all Eternity. Nothing can make it ſelf, or bring it ſelf into Being; therefore there muſt be ſome Being which hath no Cauſe, that depends upon no other, never was produced by any other, but was what he is from Eternity, and cannot be otherwiſe; and is not what he is by will, but nature, neceſſarily exiſting, and always exiſting without any capacity or poſſibility ever not to be.

* Petav. Theol. Dog. Tom. 1. l. 1. c. 2. p. 10, 11

2. Muſt be infinitely perfect. Since Man knows he is an imperfect Being, he muſt ſuppoſe the perfections he wants, are ſeated in ſome other Being, which hath limited him, and upon which he depends. Whatſoever we conceive of Excellency or Perfection muſt be in God. For we can conceive no Perfection but what God hath given us a power to conceive. And he that gave us a power to conceive a tranſcendent Perfection above whatſoever we ſaw or heard of, hath much more in himſelf; or elſe he could not give to us ſuch a Conception.

Secondly, II. As the Production of the World, ſo the harmony of all the parts of it declare the Being and Wiſdom of a God. Without the acknowledging God the Atheiſt can give no account of thoſe things. The multitude, elegancy, variety and beauty of all things are ſteps whereby to aſcend to one fountain and original of them.

Is it not a folly to deny the Being of a wiſe Agent, who ſparkles in the beauty and motions of the Heavens; rides upon the wings of the Wind, and is writ upon the flowers and fruits of Plants? As the Cauſe is known by the Effects, ſo the Wiſdom of the Cauſe is known by the Elegancy of the Work, the proportion of the parts to one another. Who can imagine the World could be raſhly made, and without conſultation, which in every part of it is ſo artificially fram'd? * No work of Art ſprings up of its own accord. The World is fram'd by an excellent Art, and therefore made by ſome skilful Artiſt. As we hear not a melodious Inſtrument, but we conclude there is a Muſician that touches it, as well as ſome skilful hand that framed and diſpoſed it for thoſe Leſſons. And no Man that hears the pleaſant ſound of a Lute, but will fix his Thoughts not upon the Inſtrument it ſelf, but upon the skill of the Artiſt that made it, and the art of the Muſician that ſtrikes it, tho' he ſhould not ſee the firſt, when he ſaw the Lute, nor ſees the other, when he hears the Harmony. So a rational Creature confines not his Thoughts to his Senſe, when he ſees the Sun in its Glory, and the Moon walking in its Brightneſs; but riſeth up in a Contemplation and Admiration of that infinite Spirit that compoſed, and filled them with ſuch ſweetneſs.

* Philo Judæ. Petav. Theol. Dog. Tom. 1. lib. 1. c. 1. p. 9.

This appears,

1. In the linking contrary Qualities together. All things are compounded of the Elements. Thoſe are indued with contrary Qualities, Dryneſs and Moiſture, Heat and Cold. Theſe would always be contending with an infeſting one another's Rights, till the Conteſt ended in the deſtruction of one or both. Where Fire is predominant, it would ſuck up the Water; where Water is prevalent, it would quench the Fire. The Heat would wholly expel the Cold, or the Cold over-power the Heat. Yet we ſee them chained and link'd one within another in every Body upon the Earth, and rendring mutual Offices for the benefit of that Body wherein they are ſeated, and all conſpiring together in their particular Quarrels for the publick Intereſt of the Body. How could thoſe Contraries, that of themſelves obſerve no order, that are always preying upon one another, joyntly joyntly accord together of themſelves, for one common End, if they were not link'd in a common Band, and reduced to that order by ſome incomprehenſible Wiſdom and Power, which keeps a hand upon them orders their Motions, and directs their Events, and makes them friendly paſs into one anothers Natures? Confuſion had been the reſult of the diſcord and diverſity of their Natures. No Compoſition could have been of thoſe conflicting Qualities for the frame of any Body, nor any Harmony aroſe from ſo many jarring Strings, if they had not been reduced into concord, by one that is Supream Lord over them, and knows how to diſpoſe their Varieties and Enmities for the publick good. * If a Man ſhould ſee a large City or Country, conſiſting of great multitudes of Men of different Tempers, full of Frauds and Factions and Animoſities in their Natures againſt one another, yet living together in good order and peace, without oppreſſing and invading one another, and joyning together for the publick good; he would preſently conclude, there were ſome excellent Governor, who temper'd them by his Wiſdom, and preſerv'd the publick Peace, tho' he had never yet beheld him with his Eye. 'Tis as neceſſary to conclude a God, who moderates the Contrarieties in the World; as to conclude a wiſe Prince, who over-rules the contrary Diſpoſitions in a State, making every one to keep his own Bounds and Confines. Things that are contrary to one another, ſubſiſt in an admirable order.

* Athanaſ. Peta. Theo. Dog. Tom. 1. l. 1. c. 1. p. 4, 5

2. In the ſubſerviency of one thing to another. * All the Members of living Creatures are curiouſly fitted for the Service of one another, deſtin'd to a particular End, and endued with a Vertue to attain that End, and ſo diſtinctly placed, that one is no hindrance to the other in its Operations. Is not this more admirable than to be the Work of Chance, which is uncapable to ſettle ſuch an order and fix particular and general ends, cauſing an exact Correſpondency of all the parts with one another, and every part to conſpire together for one common end? One thing is fitted for another. The Eye is fitted for the Sun, and the Sun fitted for the Eye. Several ſorts of Food are fitted for ſeveral Creatures, and thoſe Creatures fitted with Organs for the partaking of that Food.

1. Subſerviency of heavenly Bodies. * The Sun, the Heart of the World, is not for it ſelf, but for the good of the World, as the Heart of Man is for the good of the Body. How conveniently is the Sun placed, at a diſtance from the Earth, and the upper Heavens to enlighten the Stars above and enliven the Earth below? If it were either higher or lower, one part would want its influences. 'Tis not in the higher parts of the Heavens; the Earth then which lives and fructifies by its influence would have been expoſed to a perpetual Winter and Chilneſs, unable to have produced any thing for the Suſtenance of Man or Beaſt. If ſeated lower, the Earth had been parched up, the World made uninhabitable and long ſince had been conſumed to Aſhes by the ſtrength of its heat. Conſider the Motion as well as the Scituation of the Sun. Had it ſtood ſtill, one part of the World had been cheriſhed by its Beams, and the other left in a deſolate Widow-hood, in a diſconſolate Darkneſs. Beſides, the Earth would have had no ſhelter from its perpendicular Beams ſtriking perpetually, and without any remiſſion upon it. The ſame Incommodities would have followed upon its fixedneſs as upon its too great nearneſs. By a conſtant Day, the Beauty of the Stars had been obſcur'd, the Knowledge of their Motions had been prevented, and a conſiderable part of the Glorious Wiſdom of the Creator in thoſe choice Works of his Fingers, Pſal. 8. 3. had been vail'd from our Eyes. It moves in a fixed Line, viſits all parts of the Earth, ſcatters in the Day its refreſhing Bleſſings in every creek of the Earth, and removes the mask from the other Beauties of Heaven in the Night, which ſparkle out to the glory of the Creator. It ſpreads its Light, warms the Earth, cheriſheth the Seeds, excites the Spirit in the Earth, and brings Fruit to maturity. View alſo the Air, the vaſt extent between Heaven and Earth, which ſerves for a Water-courſe, a Ciſtern for Water, to bedew the Face of the Sun-burnt Earth, to ſatisfie the deſolate Ground, and to cauſe the Bud of the tender Herb to ſpring forth †: Could Chance appoint the Clouds of the Air to interpoſe as Fans before the ſcorching heat of the Sun, and the faint Bodies of the Creatures? Can that be the Father of the Rain, or beget the drops of Dew †? Could any thing ſo blind ſettle thoſe Ordinances of Heaven for the preſervation of Creatures on the Earth? Can this either bring or ſtay the Bottles of Heaven, when the Duſt grows into hardneſs, and the Clods cleave faſt together †?

2. Subſerviency of the lower World, the Earth and Sea, which was Created to be inhabited, Iſa. 45. 18. The Sea affords Water to the Rivers, the Rivers like ſo many Veins are ſpread thro' the whole Body of the Earth to refreſh and enable it to bring forth Fruit for the Suſtenance of Man and Beaſt, Pſal. 104. 10, 11. He ſends the Springs into the Vallies, which run among the Hills, they give Drink to every Beaſt of the Field, the wild Aſſes quench their Thirſt. He cauſes the Graſs to grow for the Cattle, and the Herb for the Service of Man, that he may bring forth Food out of the Earth, ver. 14. The Trees are provided for ſhades againſt the Extremity of Heat, a Refuge for the panting Beaſts, an Habitation for Birds wherein to make their Neſts, ver. 17. and a Basket for their Proviſion. How are the Vallies and Mountains of the Earth diſpoſed for the pleaſure and profit of Man? Every Year are the Fields covered with Harveſts, for the nouriſhing the Creatures, no part is barren but beneficial to Man. The Mountains that are not cloathed with Graſs for his Food, are ſet with Stones to make him an Habitation; they have their peculiar ſervices of Metals and Minerals, for the conveniency, and comfort, and benefit of Man. Things which are not fit for his Food, are Medicines for his Cure under ſome painful Sickneſs. Where the Earth brings not forth Corn, it brings forth Roots for the Service of other Creatures. Wood abounds more in thoſe Countries where the Cold is ſtronger, than in others. Can this be the reſult of Chance, or not rather of an infinite Wiſdom?

Conſider the Uſefulneſs of the Sea, for the ſupply of Rivers to refreſh the Earth, Which go up by the Mountains, and down by the Vallies, into the place God hath founded for them, Pſal. 104. 8. A Storehouſe for Fiſh for the nouriſhment of other Creatures, a Shop of Medicines for Cure, and Pearls for Ornament. The Band that ties remote Nations together, by giving opportunity of Paſſage to, and Commerce with one another. How ſhould that natural inclination of the Sea to cover the Earth, ſubmit to this ſubſerviency to the Creatures? Who hath bounded in this fluid Maſs of Water into certain Limits, and confined it to its own Channel, for the accommodation of ſuch Creatures, who by its common Law can only be upon the Earth? Naturally the Earth was covered with the Deep, as with a Garment, the Waters ſtood above the Mountains, Who ſet a bound that they might not paſs over, that they return not again to cover the Earth? * Was it blind Chance, or an infinite Power, that ſhut up the Sea with Doors, and made thick Darkneſs a ſwadling band for it, and ſaid, Hitherto ſhalt thou come and no further, and here ſhall thy proud Waves be ſtaid *?

All

All things are so ordered, that they are not propter se, but propter aliud. What advantage accrues to the Sun by its unwearied rolling about the World? Doth it increase the perfection of its nature by all its Circuits? No, but it serves the inferior World, it impregnates things by its heat. Not the most abject thing, but hath its end and use. There is a strait connexion, the Earth could not bring forth fruit without the Heavens, the Heavens could not water the Earth without vapours from it.

3. All this subserviency of Creatures centers in Man. Other Creatures are served by those things as well as our selves, and they are provided for their nourishment and refreshment as well as ours; *yet both they and all Creatures meet in Man as lines in their Centers: Things that have no life or sense, are made for those that have both life and sense; and those that have life and sense, are made for those that are endued with reason. When the Psalmist admiringly considers the Heavens, Moon, and Stars, he intimates Man to be the end for which they were created, Psal. 8. 3, 4. What is Man that thou art mindful of him? He expresseth more particularly the Dominion that Man hath over the beasts of the fields, the fowl of the air, and whatsoever passes through the paths of the Sea, ver. 6, 7, 8. and concludes from thence the excellency of Gods Name in all the Earth. All things in the World, one way or other, center in an usefulness for Man, some to feed him, some to cloath him, some to delight him, others to instruct him, some to exercise his wit, and others his strength. Since Man did not make them, he did not also order them for his own use. If they conspire to serve him who never made them, they direct Man to acknowledge another, who is the joynt Creator both of the Lord, and the Servants under his Dominion.* And therefore as the inferior Natures are ordered by an invisible hand for the good of Man, so the nature of Man is by the same hand ordered to acknowledge the Existence and the Glory of the Creator of him. This visible order Man knows he did not constitute, he did not settle those Creatures in subserviency to himself; they were placed in that order before he had any acquaintance with them, or existence of himself, which is a question God puts to Job, to consider of, Job 38. 4. Where wast thou when I laid the foundation of the Earth, declare if thou hast understanding? All is ordered for Mans use, the Heavens answer to the Earth as a roof to a floor, both composing a delightful habitation for Man; vapours ascend from the Earth, and the Heavens concocts them, and returns them back in welcome showers for the supplying of the Earth.* The light of the Sun descends to beautifie the Earth, and imploys its heat to midwife its fruits, and this for the good of the community, whereof Man is the head; and though all Creatures have distinct natures, and must act for particular ends, according to the Law of their Creation, yet there is a joynt combination for the good of the whole, as the common end; just as all the Rivers in the World, from what part soever they come, whether North or South, fall into the Sea, for the supply of that mass of Waters; which loudly proclaims some infinitely wise nature, who made those things in so exact an harmony.* [As in a Clock, the hammer which strikes the Bell, leads us to the next Wheel, that to another, the little Wheel to a greater, whence it derives its motion, this at last to the spring, which acquaints us that there was some Artist that framed them in this subordination to one another for this orderly motion.]

4. This order or subserviency is regular and uniform. Every thing is determined to its peculiar nature.* The Sun and Moon make day and night, months and years, determine the Seasons, never are defective in coming back to their station and place; they wander not from their Roads, shock not against one another, nor hinder one another in the functions assigned them. From a small grain or seed a Tree springs, with body, root, bark, leaves, fruit of the same shape, figure, smell, taste; that there should be as many parts in one as in all of the same kind, and no more; and that in the Womb of a Sensitive Creature, should be formed one of the same kind, with all the due members and no more, and the Creature that produceth it knows not how it is formed, or how 'tis perfected. If we say this is Nature, this Nature is an intelligent Being; if not, how can it direct all causes to such uniform ends? If it be intelligent, this Nature must be the same we call God: Who ordered every herb to yield seed, and every fruit Tree to yield fruit after its kind, and also every beast, and every creeping thing, after its kind, Gen. 11. 12, 24.

And every thing is determined to its particular Season. The sap riseth from the Root at its appointed time, enlivening and cloathing the branches with a new Garment at such a time of the Suns returning, not wholly hindered by any accidental coldness of the weather, it being often colder at its return, than it was at the Suns departure. All things have their seasons of flourishing, budding, blossoming, bringing forth fruit; they ripen in their seasons, cast their leaves at the same time, throw off their old cloaths, and in the Spring appear with new Garments, but still in the same fashion.

* The Winds and the Rain have their Seasons, and seem to be administred by Laws for the profit of Man: No satisfactory cause of those things can be ascribed to the Earth, the Sea, to the Air or Stars. Can any understand the spreading of his clouds, or the noise of his Tabernacle? Job 38. 29. The natural reason of those things cannot de demonstrated without recourse to an infinite and intelligent Being: Nothing can be rendred capable of the direction of those things but a God.

This regularity in Plants and Animals is in all Nations. The Heavens have the same motion in all parts of the World; all Men have the same Law of Nature in their mind; all Creatures are stampt with the same Law of Creation: In all parts the same Creatures serve for the same use; and though there be different Creatures in India and Europe, yet they have the same subordination, the same subserviency to one another, and ultimately to Man; which shews that there is a God, and but one God, who tunes all those different strings to the same notes in all places. Is it Nature meerly conducts these Natural Causes in due measures to their proper effects, without interfering with one another? Can meer Nature be the cause of those musical proportions of Time? You may as well conceive a Lute to sound its own strings without the hand of an Artist; a City well Governed without a Governor; an Army keep its Stations without a General, as imagine so exact an order, without an Orderer. Would any Man, when he hears a Clock strike, by fit intervals, the hour of the day, imagine this regularity in it, without the direction of one that had understanding to manage it? He would not only regard the motion of the Clock, but commend the diligence of the Clock-keeper.

5. This order and subserviency is constant. Children change the Customs and Manners of their Fathers: Magistrates change the Laws they have receiv'd from their Ancestors, and enact new ones in their room; But in the World all things consist as they were created at the beginning; the Law of Nature in the Creatures hath met with no change.* Who can behold the Sun rising in the morning, the Moon shining in the night, increasing and decreasing in its due spaces, the Stars in their regular motions night after night, for all Ages, and yet deny a President over them? And this motion of the heavenly bodies, being contrary trary to the nature of other Creatures, who move in order to rest, must be from some higher cause. But those, ever since the settling in their places, have been perpetually rounding the World; * What Nature, but one powerful and intelligent, could give that perpetual motion to the Sun, which being bigger than the Earth a hundred sixty six times, runs many thousand miles with a mighty swiftness in the space of an hour, with an unwearied diligence, performing its daily task, and as a strong Man, rejoycing to run its race, for above five thousand years together, without intermission, but in the time of Joshuah? * Tis not Nature's Sun, but God's Sun, which he makes to rise upon the just and unjust *.

* (Whether it be the Sun or the Earth that moves, it is all one: Whence have either of 'em this constant and uniform motion?)

* Josh. 10. 13.

*Mat. 5. 45.

So a Plant receives its nourishment from the Earth, sends forth its juyce to every branch, forms a bud which spreads it into a blossom and flower, the leaves of this drop off, and leave a fruit of the same colour and taste, every year; which being ripened by the Sun, leaves seeds behind it for the propagation of its like, which contains in the nature of it, the same kind of buds, blossoms, fruit which were before, and being nourished in the Womb of the Earth, and quickened by the power of the Sun, discovers it self at length, in all the progresses, and motions which its predecessor did. Thus in all Ages, in all Places, every year it performs the same task, spins out fruit of the same colour, taste, vertue, to refresh the several Creatures for which they are provided.

This settled state of things comes from that God who laid the foundations of the Earth, that it should not be removed for ever; * and set Ordinances for them to act by a stated Law; * according to which they move as if they understood themselves to have made a Covenant with their Creator *.

* Psal. 104. 5.

* Job 38. 33.

* Jer. 33.

3. Add to this union of contrary qualities, and the subserviency of one thing to another, the admirable variety and diversity of things in the World. What variety of Metals, living Creatures, Plants; what variety and distinction in the shape of their leaves, flowers, smell, resulting from them? Who can number up the several sorts of Beasts on the Earth, Birds in the Air, Fish in the Sea? How various are their motions? Some Creep, some Go, some Fly, some Swim; and in all this variety each Creature hath Organs or Members, fitted for their peculiar motion. If you consider the multitude of Stars, which shine like Jewels in the Heavens, their different magnitudes, or the variety of colours in the Flowers and Tapestry of the Earth, you could no more conclude they made themselves, or were made by chance, than you can imagine a piece of Arras, with a diversity of figures and colours, either wove it self, or were knit together by hazard.

How delicious is the sap of the Vine, when turned into Wine, above that of a Crab? Both have the same Womb of Earth to conceive them, both agree in the nature of Wood and Twigs, as Channels to convey it into fruit; What is that which makes the one so sweet, the other so sowre, or makes that sweet, which was a few Weeks before unpleasantly sharp? Is it the Earth? No: They both have the same soil; the branches may touch each other; the strings of their Roots may under ground entwine about one another. Is it the Sun? Both have the same beams: Why is not the taste and colour of the one as gratifying as the other? Is it the Root? The taste of that is far different from that of the fruit it bears. Why do they not, when they have the same Soil, the same Sun, and stand near one another, borrow something from one anothers natures? No reason can be rendred, but that there is a God of infinite Wisdom hath determin'd this variety, and bound up the nature of each Creature within it self. * [Every thing follows the Law of its Creation, and it is worthy observation, that the Creator of them hath not given that power to Animals, which arise from different species, to propagate the like to themselves; as Mules that arise from different species. No reason can be rendred of this, but the fixt determination of the Creator, that those species which were created by him should not be lost in those mixtures, which are contrary to the Law of the Creation.] This cannot possibly be ascribed to that which is commonly called Nature, but unto the God of Nature, who will not have his Creatures exceed their bounds or come short of them.

* Admald. de Trinitate, p. 21.

Now since among those varieties, there are some things better than other, yet all are good in their kind, and partake of Goodness, * there must be something better, and more excellent than all those, from whom they derive that goodness, which inheres in their nature, and is communicated by them to others: And this excellent Being must inherit in an eminent way in his own nature, the goodness of all those varieties, since they made not themselves, but were made by another. All that Goodness which is scattered in those varieties, must be infinitely concentred in that nature, which distributed those various perfections to them, Psal. 94. 9. He that planted the Ear, shall not he hear; he that formed the Eye, shall not he see; he that teacheth Man knowledge, shall not he know? The Creator is greater than the Creature, and whatsoever is in his effects, is but an impression of some excellency in himself; there is therefore some chief Fountain of Goodness, whence all those various goodnesses in the World do flow.

*Gen. 1. 31.

From all this it follows, if there be an Order and Harmony, there must be an Orderer, one that made the Earth by his Power, established the World by his Wisdom, and stretched out the Heavens by his discretion, Jer. 10. 12. Order being the effect, cannot be the cause of it self: Order is the disposition of things to an end, and is not intelligent, but implies an intelligent Orderer; and therefore it is as certain that there is a God, as it is certain there is order in the World. Order is an effect of Reason and Counsel; this Reason and Counsel must have its residence in some Being, before this Order was fixed. The things ordered are always distinct from that Reason and Counsel whereby they are ordered, and also after it, as the effect is after the Cause. No Man begins a piece of Work, but he hath the Model of it in his own mind. No Man builds an House, or makes a Watch, but he hath the Idea or Copy of it in his own head. This beautiful World bespeaks an Idea of it, or a Model; since there is such a magnificent Wisdom in the Make of each Creature, and the proportion of one Creature to another, this Model must be before the World, as the Pattern is always before the thing that is wrought by it. This therefore must be in some intelligent and wise Agent, and this is God. Since the reason of those things exceed the Reason and all the Art of Man, who can ascribe them to any inferior Cause? Chance it could not be; the motions of Chance are not constant, and at seasons, as the motions of Creatures are. That which is by Chance is contingent, this is necessary; Uniformity can never be the birth of Chance. Who can imagine that all the parts of a Watch can meet together, and put themselves in order and motion by Chance? [* Nor can it be Nature only, which indeed is a disposition of second Causes: If Nature hath not an Understanding, it cannot work such effects: If Nature therefore uses Counsel to begin a thing, Reason to dispose it, Art to effect it, Vertue to compleat it, and Power to govern it, why should it be called Nature rather than God?] Nothing so sure as that; that which hath an end to which it tends, hath a cause by which it is ordered to that end: Since therefore all things are ordered in subserviency to the good of Man, they are so ordered by him that made both Man and them; And Man must acknowledge the wisdom and goodness of his Creator, and act in subserviency to his Glory, as other Creatures act in subserviency to his Good: Sensible objects were not made only to gratifie the sense of Man, but to hand something to his mind as he is a rational Creature; to discover God to him as an object of love and desire to be enjoyed: * If this be not the effect of it, the order of the Creature, as to such an one, is in vain, and falls short of its true end.

* Coccei. sum. Theol. cap. 8. § 63, 64.

To conclude this; As when a Man comes into a Palace, built according to the exactest Rule of Art, and with an unexceptionable conveniency for the Inhabitants, he would acknowledge both the Being and Skill of the Builder: So whosoever shall observe the disposition of all the parts of the World, their connexion, comelineſs, the variety of seasons, the swarms of different Creatures, and the mutual offices they render to one onother, cannot conclude less, than that it was contrived by an Infinite Skill, effected by Infinite Power, and governed by Infinite Wisdom. None can imagine a Ship to be orderly conducted without a Pilot; nor the parts of the World to perform their several functions without a wise guide, considering the Members of the Body cannot perform theirs, without the active presence of the Soul. The Atheist then is a fool, to deny that which every Creature in his constitution asserts, and thereby renders himself unable to give a satisfactory account of that constant uniformity in the motions of the Creatures.

Thirdly, III. As the production and harmony, so particular Creatures, pursuing and attaining their ends, manifest that there is a God. All particular Creatures have natural instincts, which move them for some end. The intending of an end, is a property of a rational Creature; since the lower Creatures cannot challenge that title, they must act by the understanding and direction of another: And since Man cannot challenge the honour of inspiring the Creatures with such instincts, it must be ascribed to some nature infinitely above any Creature in understanding. No Creature doth determine it self. Why do the fruits and grain of the Earth nourish us, when the Earth, which instrumentally gives them that fitness, cannot nourish us, but because their several ends are determined by one higher than the World?

1. Several Creatures have several Natures. How soon will all Creatures, as soon as they see the light, move to that whereby they must live, and make use of the natural arms God hath given their kind, for their defence, before they are grown to any maturity to afford them that defence? The Scripture makes the appetite of Infants to their Milk, a foundation of the divine Glory, Psal. 8. 2. Out of the Mouths of Babes and Sucklings, hast thou ordained strength; that is, matter of praise and acknowledgment of God, in the natural appetite they have to their Milk, and their relish of it. All Creatures have a natural affection to their young ones; all young ones, by a natural instinct, move to, and receive the nourishment that is proper for them: Some are their own Physicians, as well as their own Caterers, and naturally discern what preserves them in life, and what restores them when sick. The Swallow flies to its Celendine, and the Toad hastens to its Plantain.

Can we behold the Spiders Nets, or Silkworms Web, the Bees Closets, or the Ants Granaries, without acknowledging a higher Being than a Creature, who hath planted that Genius in them? The consideration of the nature of several Creatures God commended to Job, (Chap. 39. where he discourseth to Job of the natural instincts, of the Goat, the Ostrich, Horse and Eagle, &c) to perswade him to the acknowledgment and admiration of God, and humiliation of himself.

The Spider, as if it understood the Art of weaving, fits its web both for its own Habitation, and a Net to catch its prey. The Bee builds a Cell which serves for Chambers to reside in, and a Repository for its Provision. Birds are observed to build their Nests with a clammy matter without, for the firmer duration of it, and with a soft moss and down within, for the conveniency and warmth of their young: The Stork knows his appointed time, Jer. 8. 7. And the Swallows observe the time of their coming; they go and return according to the Seasons of the year. This they gain not by consideration, it descends to them with their nature; they neither gain nor increase it by rational deductions. 'Tis not in vain to speak of these. How little do we improve by Meditation those objects, which daily offer themselves to our view, full of Instruction for us? And our Saviour sends his Disciples to spell God in the Lillies. * 'Tis observed also, that the Creatures offensive to Man go single: If they went by troops, they would bring destruction upon Man and Beast. This is the nature of them, for the preservation of others.

* Mat. 6. 28.

2. They know not their end. They have a Law in their natures, but have no rational understanding, either of the end to which they are appointed, or the means fit to attain it. They naturally do what they do, and move by no Counsel of their own, but by a Law impreſt by some higher hand upon their Natures.

What Plant knows why it strikes its root into the earth? Doth it understand what storms it is to contest with, or why it shoots up its branches towards Heaven? Doth it know it needs the droppings of the clouds to preserve it self, and make it fruitful? These are acts of understanding: The root is downward to preserve its own standing, the branches upwards to preserve other Creatures: This understanding is not in the Creature it self, but originally in another. Thunders and Tempests know not why they are sent, yet by the direction of a mighty hand they are instruments of Justice upon a wicked World.

* Rational Creatures that act for some end, and know the end they aim at, yet know not the manner of the natural motion of the Members to it. When we intend to look upon a thing, we take no counsel about the natural motion of our eyes, we know not all the principles of their operations; or how that dull matter, whereof our bodies are composed, is subject to the order of our minds. * We are not of Counsel with our stomachs about the concoction of our meat, or the distribution of the nourishing juyce to the several parts of the body. Neither the Mother nor the Fœtus sit in Council, how the formation should be made in the Womb. We know no more than a Plant knows what stature it is of, and what medicinal vertue its fruit hath for the good of Man; yet all those natural operations are perfectly directed to the proper end, by an higher wisdom than any human understanding is able to conceive, since they exceed the ability of an inanimate or fleshly nature, yea and the wisdom of a Man. Do we not often see reasonable Creatures acting for one end, and perfecting a higher than what they aimed at, or could suspect? When Josephs Brethren sold him for a Slave, their end was to be rid of an Informer: * But the action issued in preparing him to be the preserver of them and their Families. Cyrus his end was to be a Conqueror, but the action ended in being the Jews Deliverer, Prov. 16. 9. A mans heart deviseth his way, but the Lord directs his steps.

* Coccei. sum Theol. cap. 8. § 67. &c.

* Pearson, on the Creed, p. 35.

* Gen. 37. 12.

3. Therefore there is some Superior understanding and nature which so acts them. That which acts for an end unknown to its self, depends upon some overruling wisdom that knows that end. Who should direct them in all thoſe ends, but he that beſtowed a Being upon them for thoſe ends, * who knows what is convenient for their Life, ſecurity and propagation of their Natures? An exact knowledge is neceſſary, both of what is agreeable to them, and the means whereby they muſt attain it; which ſince it is not inherent in them, is in that wiſe God, who puts thoſe inſtincts into them, and governs them in the Exerciſe of them to ſuch ends. Any Man that ſees a Dart flung, knows it cannot hit the Mark, without the Skill and Strength of an Archer. Or he that ſees the hand of a Dial pointing to the Hours ſucceſſively, knows that the Dial is ignorant of its own end, and is diſpoſed and directed in that Motion by another. All Creatures ignorant of their own Natures, could not univerſally in the whole kind, and in every Climate and Country, without any difference in the whole World, tend to a certain end, if ſome over-ruling Wiſdom did not preſide over the World and guide them: And if the Creatures have a Conductor, they have a Creator: All things are turned round about by his Council, that they may do whatſoever he commands them upon the Face of the World upon the Earth *.

* Leſſius. de proviđen. l. 1. p. 652.

* Job 37. v. 12.

So that in this reſpect the folly of Atheiſm appears. Without the owning a God no account can be given of thoſe Actions of Creatures, that are an imitation of Reaſon: To ſay the Bees, &c. are rational, is to equal them to Man; nay, make them his Superiors, ſince they do more by Nature than the wiſeſt Man can do by Art: 'Tis their own Counſel whereby they act, or anothers; If it be their own, they are reaſonable Creatures; If by anothers, 'tis not meer Nature that is neceſſary; Then other Creatures would not be without the ſame skill: There would be no difference among them: If Nature be reſtrained by another, it hath a Superior; if not 'tis a free Agent: 'Tis an underſtanding Being that directs them: And then it is ſomething Superior to all Creatures in the World; and by this therefore we may aſcend to the acknowledgment of the neceſſity of a God.

Fourthly, IV. Add to the Production & Order of the World, and the Creatures acting for their end, the Preſervation of them. Nothing can depend upon it ſelf in its Preſervation, no more than it could in its Being. If the order of the VVorld was not fixed by it ſelf, the Preſervation of that order cannot be continued by it ſelf.

Tho' the matter of the VVorld after Creation, cannot return to that Nothing whence it was fetched, without the power of God that made it, (becauſe the ſame power is as requiſite to reduce a thing to nothing, as to raiſe a thing from nothing) yet without the actual exerting of a power that made the Creatures, they would fall into Confuſion. Thoſe conteſting Qualities, which are in every part of it, could not have preſerved, but would have conſumed, and extinguiſhed one another, and reduced the VVorld to that confuſed Chaos, wherein it was before the Spirit moved upon the VVaters: As contrary parts could not have met together in one Form, unleſs there had been one that had conjoyned them: So they could not have kept together after their Conjunction, unleſs the ſame hand had preſerved them. Natural Contrarieties cannot be reconciled. 'Tis as great power to keep diſcords knit, as at firſt to link them. VVho would doubt, but that an Army made up of ſeveral Nations and Humours, would fall into a Civil VVar, and ſheath their Swords in one anothers Bowels, if they were not under the Management of ſome wiſe General, or a Ship daſh againſt the Rocks without the Skill of a Pilot? * As the Body hath neither Life nor Motion, without the active preſence of the Soul, which diſtributes to every part the vertue of acting; ſets every one in the exerciſe of its proper Function, and reſides in every part: So there is ſome powerful Cauſe which doth the like in the VVorld, that rules and tempers it. There is need of the ſame Power and Action, to preſerve a thing, as there was at firſt to make it. VVhen we conſider that we are preſerved, and know that we could not preſerve our ſelves; we muſt neceſſarily run to ſome firſt cauſe which doth preſerve us. All VVorks of Art depend upon Nature, and are preſerved while they are kept by the force of Nature: As a Statue depends upon the Matter whereof it is made, whether Stone or Braſs; This Nature therefore muſt have ſome Superiour by whoſe influx it is preſerved. Since therefore we ſee a ſtable order in the things of the VVorld, that they conſpire together for the good and beauty of the Univerſe; that they depend upon one another: There muſt be ſome principle upon which they do depend; ſomething to which the firſt Link of the Chain is faſtned, which himſelf depends upon no ſuperior, but wholly reſts in his own Eſſence and Being: 'Tis the Title of God to be the Preſerver of Man and Beaſt. * The Pſalmiſt elegantly deſcribeth it, Pſal. 104. 24, &c. The Earth is full of his Riches, all wait upon him, that he may give them their Meat in due ſeaſon; when he opens his hand, he fills them with good; when he hides his face they are troubled, if he take away their breath, they die and return to duſt; he ſends forth his Spirit, and they are Created, and renews the face of the Earth, the glory of the Lord ſhall endure for ever, and the Lord ſhall rejoyce in his Works: Upon the conſideration of all which, the Pſalmiſt (v. 34.) takes a pleaſure in the Meditation of God, as the Cauſe and Manager of all thoſe things, which iſſues into a joy in God and a praiſing of him. And why ſhould not the conſideration of the Power and Wiſdom of God, in the Creatures, produce the ſame effect in the Hearts of us, if he be our God? Or as ſome render it, My Meditation ſhall be ſweet, or acceptable to him; whereby I find matter of praiſe in the things of the VVorld, and offer it to the Creator of it.

* Gaſſend. Phy. § 6. l. 4. c. 2. p. 101.

* Pſal. 36. 6.

Thirdly, III. Reaſon, 'Tis a folly to deny that which a Man's own Nature witneſſeth to him. The whole frame of Bodies and Souls bears the impreſs of the infinite Power and VViſdom of the Creator. A Body fram'd with an admirable Architecture, a Soul endowed with Underſtanding, VVill, Judgment, Memory, Imagination. Man is the Epitome of the VVorld, contains in himſelf the Subſtance of all Natures, and the fulneſs of the whole Univerſe; not only in regard of the Univerſalneſs of his knowledge, whereby he comprehends the Reaſons of many things; but as all the Perfections of the ſeveral Natures of the VVorld are gathered and united in Man, for the Perfection of his own, in a ſmaller Volume. In his Soul he partakes of Heaven, in his Body of the Earth. There is the Life of Plants, the ſenſe of Beaſts, and the intellectual Nature of Angels. * The Lord breathed into his Noſtril the breath of Life, and Man, &c. Hebr. of Lifes. Not one ſort of lifes, but ſeveral; not only an Animal, but a Rational Life; a Soul of a Nobler extract and nature, than what was given to other Creatures.

Third Reaſ.

* Gen. 2. 7.

So that we need not ſtep out of Doors, or caſt our Eyes any further than our ſelves, to behold a God. He ſhines in the Capacity of our Souls, and the Vigour of our Members. VVe muſt flie from our ſelves and be ſtrip'd of our own Humanity, before we can put off the Notion of a Deity: He that is ignorant of the Exiſtence of God, muſt be poſſeſſed with ſo much folly, as to be ignorant of his own make and frame.

1. In the parts whereof he doth consist, Body and Soul.

First, I. Take a Prospect of the Body. The Psalmist counts it a matter of Praise and Admiration, Psalm 139. 15, 16. I will praise thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made; when I was made in secret and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the Earth, in thy Book all my Members were written. The Scheme of Man and every Member was drawn in his Book: All the Sinews, Veins, Arteries, Bones, like a piece of Embroidery or Tapestry, were wrought by God, as it were with Deliberation; like an Artificer that draws out the Model of what he is to do in Writing, and sets it before him when he begins his Work.

And indeed the Fabrick of Man's Body, as well as his Soul, is an Argument for Divinity. The Artificial Structure of it, the elegancy of every part, the proper Situation of them, their proportion one to another, the fitness for their several Functions, drew from Galen, * (a Heathen and one that had no raised Sentiments of a Deity,) a confession of the admirable Wisdom and power of the Creator, and that none but God could frame it.

* Lib. 3. de usu partium. Peta. Theol. Dog. Tom. 1. l. 1. c. 1. p. 6.

1. In the order, fitness and usefulness of every part. The whole model of the Body is grounded upon Reason. Every Member hath its exact Proportion, distinct Office, regular Motion. Every part hath a particular Comliness, and convenient Temperament bestowed upon it, according to its place in the Body. The Heart is hot to enliven the whole. The Eye clear to take in Objects to present them to the Soul; Every Member is fitted for its peculiar Service and Action: Some are for Sense, some for Motion, some for preparing, and others for dispensing Nourishment to the several parts: They mutually depend upon, and serve one another. What small Strings fasten the particular Members together, as the Earth that hangs upon nothing? * Take but one part away, and you either destroy the whole, or stamp upon it some mark of Deformity. All are knit together by an admirable Symmetry; all orderly perform their Functions, as Acting by a settled Law; none swerving from their Rule, but in case of some predominant Humour: And none of those in so great a multitude of parts, stifled in so little a Room, or justling against one another to hinder their mutual Actions; none can be better disposed. And the greatest Wisdom of Man could not imagine it, till his Eyes present them with the sight and connexion of one part and Member with another.

* Job. 26. 7.

1. The Heart. * How strongly it is guarded with Ribs like a Wall, that it might not be easily hurt! It draws Blood from the Liver, thro'a Channel made for that purpose: Ratifies it and makes it fit to pass thro' the Arteries and Veins, and to carry Heat and Life to every part of the Body: And by a perpetual Motion, it sucks in the Blood and spouts it out again; which Motion depends not upon the Command of the Soul, but is pure Natural.

* Theod. de providentiâ Orat. 3.

2. The Mouth, takes in the Meat, the Teeth grind it for the Stomach, the Stomach prepares it, Nature strains it thro' the milky Veins, the Liver refines it and mints it into Blood, separates the pure from the drossy parts, which go to the Heart, circuites thro' the whole Body, running thro' the Veins like Rivers thro' so many Channels of the World, for the watering of several parts: Which are framed of a thin Skin for the straining the Blood through, for the supply of the members of the Body, and framed with several valves or doors, for the thrusting the Blood forwards to perform its circular Motion.

3. The Brain, fortified by a strong Skull to hinder outward Accidents, a tough Membrane (or Skin) to hinder any oppression by the Skull; the seat of Sense; that which coins the Animal Spirits by purifying and refining those which are sent to it, and seems like a curious piece of Needle-work.

4. The Ear, framed with Windings and Turnings, to keep any thing from entring to offend the Brain; so disposed as to admit Sounds with the greatest safety and delight; * fill'd with an Air within, by the Motion whereof the Sound is transmitted to the Brain: As Sounds are made in the Air by diffusing themselves, as you see Circles made in the Water by the flinging in a Stone. This is the Gate of Knowledge, whereby we hear the Oracles of God, and the instruction of Men for Arts: 'Tis by this they are exposed to the Mind, and the Mind of another Man fram'd in our Understandings.

* Eccl. 12. 4

5. What a curious Workmanship is that of the Eye, which is in the Body, as the Sun in the World; set in the Head, as in a Watch-Tower, having the softest Nerves for the receiving the greater multitude of Spirits necessary for the act of Vision? How is it provided with defence, by the variety of Coats to secure and accommodate the little Humour, and part whereby the Vision is made? Made of a round Figure and Convex, as most commodious to receive the Species of Objects; shaded by the Eye-brows and Eye-lids, secured by the Eye-lids which are its Ornament and Safety which refresh it when it is too much dryed by Heat, hinder too much light from insinuating it self into it to offend it, cleanse it from Impurities, by their quick Motion preserve it from any Invasion, and by Contraction confer to the more evident discerning of Things: Both the Eyes seated in the hollow of the bone for Security; yet standing out that things may be perceived more easily on both sides: And this little Member can behold the Earth: and in a Moment view things as high as Heaven.

6. * The Tongue, for Speech framed like a Musical Instrument; the Teeth serving for variety of Sounds; the Lungs serving for Bellows to blow the Organs as it were, to cool the Heart; by a continual Motion transmitting a pure Air to the Heart, expelling that which was smoaky and superfluous. 'Tis by the Tongue that Communication of Truth hath a passage among Men; it opens the sense of the Mind; there would be no Converse and Commerce without it: Speech among all Nations hath an elegancy and attractive force, mastering the Affections of Men.

* Coccei Sum. Theol. c. 8. § 49.

Not to speak of other parts, or of the multitude of Spirits that act every part; the quick flight of them, where there is a necessity of their presence. Solomon (Eccles. 12.) makes an elegant Description of them, in his Speech of old Age: And Job speaks of this Formation of the Body, Job 10. 9, 10, 11, &c. Not the least part of the body is made in vain. The Hairs of the Head have their use, as well as are an Ornament. The whole Symmetry of the Body is a ravishing Object. Every Member hath a signature and mark of God and his Wisdom: He is visible in the formation of the Members, the beauty of the Parts, and the Vigor of the Body: This Structure could not be from the Body, that only hath a passive Power, and cannot act in the absence of the Soul: Nor can it be from the Soul. How comes it then to be so ignorant of the manner of its Formation? The Soul knows not the internal parts of its own Body, but by information from others, or inspection into other Bodies: It knows less of the inward frame of the Body than it doth of it self: But he that makes the Clock can tell the number and Motions of the Wheels within, as well as what Figures are without.

This short Discourse is useful to raise our Admirations of the VVisdom of God, as well as to demonstrate, that there is an infinite wise Creator: And the consideration of our selves every day, and the VVisdom dom of God in our Frame would maintain Religion much in the VVorld; since all are so framed that no Man can tell any error in the Constitution of him. If thus the Body of Man is fitted for the Service of his Soul by an infinite God, the Body ought to be ordered for the Service of this God, and in Obedience to him.

2. In the admirable difference of the Features of Men. Which is a great Argument that the World was made by a wise Being: This could not be wrought by Chance, or be the work of meer Nature, since we find never, or very rarely two Persons exactly alike. This Distinction is a part of infinite Wisdom; otherwise what Confusion would be introduced into the World? Without this, Parents could not know their Children, nor Children their Parents, nor a Brother his Sister, nor a Subject his Magistrate: VVithout it there had been no comfort of Relations, no Government, no Commerce: Debtors would not have been known from Strangers, nor good Men from bad: Propriety could not have been preserved, nor justice executed; the Innocent might have been apprehended for the Nocent; VVickedness could not have been stopt by any Law.

The Faces of Men are the same for Parts, not for Features: A dissimilitude in a likeness. Man, like to all the rest in the VVorld, yet unlike to any, and differenced by some mark from all, which is not to be observed in any other Species of Creatures. This speaks some wise Agent which framed Man; since for the Preservation of Humane Society and Order in the VVorld, this Distinction was necessary.

Secondly, II. As Man's own Nature witnesseth God to him in the Structure of his Body, so also in the Nature of his Soul. * VVe know that we have an understanding in us; a Substance we cannot see, but we know it by its Operations; as thinking, reasoning, willing, remembring; and as operating about things that are invisible and remote from sense. This must needs be distinct from the Body, for that being but Dust and Earth in its Original, hath not the power of Reasoning and thinking; for then it would have that Power, when the Soul were absent, as well as when it is present. Besides, if it had that power of Thinking, it could think only of those things which are sensible and made up of Matter, as it self is. This Soul hath a greater Excellency; it can know it self; rejoyce in it self, which other Creatures in this VVorld are not capable of: The Soul is the greatest Glory of this lower VVorld, and as one saith, * There seems to be no more difference between the Soul and an Angel, than between a Sword in the Scabbard, and when it is out of the Scabbard.

* Coccei. Sum. Theol. c. 8. §50, 51

* More.

First, I. Consider the vastness of its Capacity. The Understanding can conceive the whole VVorld, and paint in it self the invisible Pictures of all things. 'Tis capable of apprehending and discoursing of things Superior to its own Nature. [* 'Tis suited to all Objects, as the Eye to all Colours, or the Ear to all Sounds.] How great is the Memory to retain such Varieties, such Diversities? The VVill also can accommodate other things to it self. It invents Arts for the use of Man; prescribes Rules for the Government of States, ransacks the Bowels of Nature; makes endless Conclusions, and Steps in reasoning from one thing to another, for the Knowledge of Truth; it can contemplate and form Notions of things higher than the VVorld.

* Calverwel

2. The Quickness of its Motions. [* Nothing is more quick in the whole Course of Nature; the Sun runs thro' the whole VVorld in a day, this can do it in a moment. It can with one flight of Fancy ascend to the Battlements of Heaven.] The mists of the Air that hinder the sight of the Eye, cannot hinder the flights of the Soul; it can pass in a moment from one end of the VVorld to the other, and think of things a thousand Miles distant. It can think of some mean thing in the VVorld, and presently by one cast, in the twinkling of an Eye, mount up as high as Heaven. As its desires are not bounded by sensual objects, so neither are the Motions of it restrained by them. It will break forth with the greatest vigour, and conceive things infinitely above it; though it be in the Body, it acts as if it were ashamed to be Cloystered in it. This could not be the result of any material Cause: VVho ever knew meer matter understand, think, will? And what it hath not, it cannot give. That which is destitute of Reason and VVill, could never confer Reason and VVill. * 'Tis not the effect of the Body, for the Body is fitted with Members to be subject to it: 'Tis in part ruled by the Activity of the Soul, and in part by the Counsel of the Soul; 'Tis used by the Soul, and knows not how it is used. Nor could it be from the Parents, since the Souls of the Children often transcend those of the Parents in Vivacity, Acuteness and Comprehensiveness: One Man is stupid and begets a Son with a capacious Understanding; one is debauched and beastly in Morals, and begets a Son who from his Infancy testifies some vertuous Inclinations, which sprout forth in delightful Fruit with the ripeness of his Age. Whence should this difference arise, a Fool begat the wise Man, and a Debauched the vertuous Man? the Wisdom of the one could not descend from the foolish Soul of the other; nor the vertues of the Son, from the deformed and polluted Soul of the Parent; it lies not in the Organs of the Body; For if the folly of the Parent proceeded not from their Souls, but the ill Disposition of the Organs of their Bodies, how comes it to pass that the Bodies of the Children, are better Organized beyond the goodness of their immediate Cause? We must recur to some invisible hand, that makes the difference, who bestows upon one at his pleasure richer Qualities, than upon another: You can see nothing in the World endowed with some excellent Quality, but you must imagine some bountiful Hand did enrich it with that Dowry: None can be so foolish as to think that a Vessel ever enrich'd it self with that spritely Liquor, wherewith it is filled; or that any thing worse than the Soul should endow it with that Knowledge and Activity which sparkles in it. Nature could not produce it: That Nature is intelligent, or not; if it be not, then it produceth an effect more excellent than it self, in as much as an understanding Being surmounts a Being that hath no Understanding; If the supream Cause of the Soul be Intelligent, why do we not call it God as well as Nature? We must arise from hence to the Notion of a God; a Spiritual Nature cannot proceed but from a Spirit higher than it self, and of a transcendent Perfection above it self: If we believe we have Souls, and understand the State of our own Faculties, we must be assur'd that there was some invisible Hand which bestowed those Faculties and the riches of them upon us: A Man must be ignorant of himself, before he can be ignorant of the Existence of God. By considering the Nature of our Souls we may as well be assur'd that there is a God, as that there is a Sun by the shining of the Beams in at our Windows: And indeed the Soul is a Statue and Representation of God, as the Land-Skip of a Country or Map represents all the parts of it, but in a far less proportion than the Country it self is. The Soul fills the Body, and God the World; the Soul sustains the Body, and God the World; the Soul sees, but is not seen; God sees all things, but is himself invisible. How base are they then that prostitute their Souls, an Image of God, to base things unexpressibly below their own Nature?

* Coccei. Theo. c. 8. § 51, 52.

I do not dispute whether the Soul were generated or no; Suppose the Substance of it was generated by the Parents, yet those more excellent Qualities were not the result of em.

3. I

3. I might add the Union of Soul and Body. Man is a kind of compound of Angel and Beast, of Soul and Body; If he were only a Soul, he were a kind of Angel; if only a Body, he were another kind of Brute: Now that a Body as vile and dull as Earth, and a Soul that can mount up to Heaven, and rove about the World with so quick a Motion, should be link'd in so strait an Acquaintance, that so noble a Being as the Soul should be an Inhabitant in such a Tabernacle of Clay, must be owned to some infinite power that hath so chained it.

3. Man witnesseth to a God in the Operations and Reflections of Conscience, Rom. 2. 15. Their Thoughts are accusing or excusing. An inward Comfort attends good Actions, and an inward torment follows bad ones; for there is in every Man's Conscience fear of Punishment, and hope of Reward: There is therefore a sense of some Superior Judge, which hath the power both of Rewarding and Punishing: If Man were his Supream Rule, what need he fear Punishment, since no Man would inflict any Evil or Torment on himself; nor can any Man be said to reward himself, for all Rewards refer to another, to whom the Action is pleasing, and is a conferring some good a Man had not before: If an Action be done by a Subject or Servant, with hopes of Reward, it cannot be imagined, that he expects a Reward from himself, but from the Prince or Person whom he Eyes in that Action, and for whose sake he doth it.

1. There is a Law in the Minds of Men, which is a Rule of Good and Evil. There is a Notion of Good and Evil in the Consciences of Men, which is evident by those Laws which are common in all Countries, for the preserving humane Societies, the Encouragement of Vertue, and Discouragement of Vice; What Standard should they have for those Laws, but a Common Reason? The design of those Laws was to keep Men within the Bounds of Goodness, for mutual Commerce; whence the Apostle calls the Heathen Magistrate a Minister of God for Good, Rom. 13. 4. and the Gentiles do by Nature the things contained in the Law, Rom. 2. 14.

Man in the first instant of the use of Reason, finds Natural Principles within himself, directing and choosing them; he finds a Distinction between Good and Evil; how could this be, if there were not some Rule in him to try and distinguish Good and Evil? If there were not such a Law and Rule in Man, he could not sin; for where there is no Law, there is no Transgression. If Man were a Law to himself, and his own Will his Law, there could be no such thing as Evil; whatsoever he willed would be good and agreeable to the Law; and no Action could be accounted Sinful: The worst Act would be as commendable as the best. Every thing at Mans Appointment would be Good or Evil. If there were no such Law, how should Men that are naturally inclin'd to Evil, disapprove of that which is unlovely, and approve of that Good which they practise not. No Man but inwardly thinks well of that which is good, while he neglects it; and thinks ill of that which is evil, while he commits it. Those that are vitious, do praise those that practise the contrary Vertues. Those that are evil would seem to be good, and those that are blame-worthy, yet will rebuke Evil in others. This is really to distinguish between good and evil; whence doth this arise, by what rule do we measure this, but by some innate Principle?

And this is universal, the same in one Man as in another, the same in one Nation as in another; they are born with every Man, and inseparable from his Nature, Prov. 27. 19. As in Water face answers to face, so the heart of Man to Man. Common reason supposeth, that there is some hand which hath fixed this Distinction in Man: How could it else be universally impress? No Law can be without a Law-giver; no sparks but must be kindled by some other: Whence should this Law then derive its original? Not from Man; he would fain blot it out, and cannot alter it when he pleases: Natural Generation never intended it: 'Tis settled therefore by some higher Hand, which as it imprinted it, so it maintains it against the violences of Men; who, were it not for this Law, would make the World more than it is, an Aceldama and Field of Blood: For had there not been some supream good, the measure of all other goodness in the World, we could not have had such a thing as Good. The Scripture gives us an account that this Good was distinguished from Evil before Man fell, they were, objecta scibilia; Good was commanded and Evil prohibited, and did not depend upon Man: From this a Man may rationally be instructed that there is a God: for he may thus argue, I find my self naturally obliged to do this thing and avoid that, I have therefore a Superior that doth oblige me; I find something within me that directs me to such Actions, contrary to my sensitive Appetite, there must be something above me therefore that put this principle into Man's nature: If there were no Superior, I should be the Supream Judge of Good and Evil: Were I the Lord of that Law which doth oblige me, I should find no Contradiction within my self, between reason & appetite.

2. From the Transgression of this Law of Nature, fears do arise in the Consciences of Men. Have we not known or heard of Men struck by so deep a Dart, that could not be drawn out by the strength of Men, or appeased by the pleasure of the World, and Men crying out with horror upon a Death-bed of their past Life, when their fear hath come as a desolation, and destruction as a whirlwind, Prov. 1. 27. And often in some sharp affliction, the dust hath been blown off from Mens Consciences, which for a while hath obscured the Writing of the Law. If Men stand in awe of Punishment, there is then some Superior to whom they are accountable: If there were no God, there were no Punishment to fear. What reason of any fear, upon the dissolution of the Knot, between the Soul and Body, if there were not a God to punish, and the Soul remained not in being to be punished?

How suddenly will Conscience work upon the appearance of an Affliction, rouze it self from sleep like an armed Man, and fly in a Man's Face before he is aware of it? It will surprize the Hypocrites, Isa. 38. 14. It will bring to mind Actions committed long ago, and set them in order before the Face, as God's Deputy Acting by his Authority and Omniscience. As God hath not left himself without a witness among the Creatures, Acts 14. 17. so he hath not left himself without a witness in a Man's own Breast.

1. This Operation of Conscience hath been universal. No Nation hath been any more exempt from it, than from Reason: Not a Man but hath one time or other, more or less smarted under the sting of it. All over the World Conscience hath shot its Darts. It hath torn the hearts of Princes in the midst of their Pleasures: It hath not flattered them whom most Men flatter, nor feared to disturb their rest, whom no Man dares to provoke. Judges have trembled on a Tribunal, when Innocents have rejoyced in their Condemnation: The Iron-bars upon Pharaohs Conscience, were at last broke up, and he acknowledged the Justice of God in all that he did, Exod. 9. 27. I have sinned, the Lord is righteous, and I and my People are wicked. Had they been like Childish Frights at the Apprehension of Bug-bears, why hath not reason shaken them off? but on the contrary, the stronger Reason grows the smarter those Lashes are: Groundless fears had been short liv'd:

Age and Judgment would have worn them off, but they grow ſharper with the growth of Perſons. The Scripture informs us they have been of as ancient a date as the revolt of the firſt Man, Gen. 3. 10. I was afraid, ſaith Adam, becauſe I was naked; which was an expectation of the Judgment of God. All his Poſterity inherit his fears, when God expreſſeth himſelf in any tokens of his Majeſty and Providence in the World. Every Mans Conſcience teſtifies that he is unlike what he ought to be according to that Law engraven upon his heart. In ſome indeed, Conſcience may be ſeared, or dimmer; or ſuppoſe ſome Men may be devoid of Conſcience, ſhall it be denied to be a thing belonging to the nature of Man? Some Men have not their eyes, yet the power of ſeeing the light is natural to Man, and belongs to the integrity of the Body: Who would argue, that becauſe ſome Men are mad, and have loſt their Reaſon by a diſtemper of the brain, that therefore Reaſon hath no reality, but is an imaginary thing? But I think it is a ſtanding truth, that every Man hath been under the ſcourge of it, one time or other, in a leſs or greater degree. For ſince every Man is an offender, it cannot be imagined, Conſcience, which is natural to Man, and an active faculty, ſhould always lie idle, without doing this part of its office. The Apoſtle tells us of the thoughts, accuſing or excuſing one another, (or by turns) according as the actions were. Nor is this truth weakned by the corruptions in the World, whereby many have thought themſelves bound in Conſcience to adhere to a falſe and ſuperſtitious Worſhip and Idolatry, as much as any have thought themſelves bound to adhere to a Worſhip commanded by God. This very thing infers, that all men have a reflecting principle in them; it is no argument againſt the Being of Conſcience, but only infers that it may Err in the application of what it naturally owns. We can no more ſay, that becauſe ſome Men walk by a falſe Rule, there is no ſuch thing as Conſcience, than we can ſay, that becauſe Men have errors in their minds, therefore they have no ſuch faculty as an Underſtanding; or becauſe Men will that which is evil, they have no ſuch faculty as a Will in them.

2. Theſe operations of Conſcience, are when the wickedneſs is moſt ſecret. Theſe tormenting fears of Vengeance, have been frequent in Men, who have had no reaſon to fear Man, ſince their wickedneſs being unknown to any but themſelves, they could have no accuſer but themſelves. They have been in many acts which their Companions have juſtified them in: Perſons above the ſtroak of Humane Laws, yea ſuch as the People have honoured as Gods, have been haunted by them. Conſcience hath not been frighted by the power of Princes, or brib'd by the pleaſures of Courts: David was purſued by his horrors, when he was by reaſon of his dignity above the puniſhment by the Law, or at leaſt was not reach'd by the Law; ſince though the Murder of Uriah was intended by him, it was not acted by him. Such examples are frequent in humane Records: When the crime hath been above any puniſhment by Man, they have had an Accuſer, Judge and Executioner, in their own breaſts. Can this be originally from a Mans ſelf? He who loves and cheriſhes himſelf, would fly from any thing that diſturbs him: 'Tis a greater Power and Majeſty from whom Man cannot hide himſelf, that holds him in thoſe fetters. What ſhould affect their minds for that which can never bring them ſhame or puniſhment in this World, if there were not ſome Supream Judge, to whom they were to give an account, whoſe inſtrument Conſcience is? Doth it do this of it ſelf? Hath it received an Authority from the Man himſelf to ſting him? It is ſome Supream Power, that doth direct and commiſſion it againſt our Wills.

3. Theſe operations of Conſcience cannot be totally ſhaken off by Man. If there be no God, why do not Men ſilence the clamors of their Conſciences, and ſcatter thoſe fears that diſturb their reſt and pleaſures? How inquiſitive are Men after ſome remedy againſt thoſe Convulſions? Sometimes they would render the charge inſignificant, and ſing a reſt to themſelves, tho' they walk in the wickedneſs of their own hearts: * How often do Men attempt to drown it by ſenſual pleaſures, and perhaps over-power it for a time; but it revives, reinforceth it ſelf, and acts a revenge for its former ſtop. It holds ſin to a Mans view, and fixes his eyes upon it, whether he will or no: The wicked are like a troubled Sea, and cannot reſt, Iſa. 57. v. 20. They would wallow in ſin without controul, but this inward principle will not ſuffer it; nothing can ſhelter Men from thoſe blows. What is the reaſon it could never be cried down? Man is an enemy to his own diſquiet; what Man would continue upon the rack, if it were in his power to deliver himſelf? Why have all humane remedies been without ſucceſs, and not able to extinguiſh thoſe operations, tho' all the wickedneſs of the heart hath been ready to aſſiſt and ſecond the attempt? It hath purſued Men, notwithſtanding all the violence uſed againſt it, and renewed its ſcourges with more ſeverity, as men deal with their reſiſting Slaves. Man can as little ſilence thoſe Thunders in his Soul, as he can the Thunders in the Heavens: He muſt ſtrip himſelf of his humanity, before he can be ſtript of an accuſing and affrightning Conſcience; it ſticks as cloſe to him as his nature: Since man cannot throw out the Proceſs it makes againſt him, 'tis an evidence that ſome higher Power ſecures its Throne and ſtanding. Who ſhould put this ſcourge into the hand of Conſcience, which no Man in the World is able to wreſt out?

* Deut. 29. 19.

4. We may add, the comfortable reflections of Conſcience. There are excuſing as well as accuſing reflections of Conſcience, when things are done as works of the Law of Nature, Rom. 2. 15. As it doth not forbear to accuſe and torture, when a wickedneſs, tho' unknown to others, is committed; ſo when a man hath done well, tho' he be attackt with all the calumnies the wit of man can forge, yet his Conſcience juſtifies the action, and fills him with a ſingular contentment. As there is torture in ſinning, ſo there is peace and joy in well doing: Neither of thoſe it could do, if it did not underſtand a Soveraign Judge, who puniſhes the rebels, and rewards the well-doer. Conſcience is the foundation of all Religion; and the two Pillars upon which it is built, are the Being of God, and the Bounty of God to thoſe that diligently ſeek him *.

* Heb. 11. 6.

This proves the Exiſtence of God: If there were no God, Conſcience were uſeleſs; the operations of it would have no foundation, if there were not an eye to take notice, and a hand to puniſh or reward the action. The accuſations of Conſcience evidence the Omniſcience and the Holineſs of God; The terrors of Conſcience, the juſtice of God; The approbations of Conſcience, the goodneſs of God: All the Order in the World owes it ſelf, next to the Providence of God, to Conſcience; without it the World would be a Golgotha. As the Creatures witneſs, there was a firſt cauſe that produced them, ſo this principle in Man evidenceth it ſelf to be ſet by the ſame hand, for the good of that which it had ſo framed: There could be no Conſcience if there were no God, and Man could not be a rational Creature, if there were no Conſcience. As there is a Rule in us, there muſt be a Judge whether our actions be according to the Rule. And ſince Conſcience in our corrupted ſtate is in ſome particular miſled, there muſt be a power ſuperior to Conſcience, to judge how it hath behaved it ſelf in its deputed office: We muſt come to ſome ſupream Judge, who can Judge Conſcience it ſelf. As a man can have no ſurer evidence, that he is a Being, than becauſe he thinks; he is a thinking Being. So there is no ſurer evidence in nature, that there is a God, than that every man hath a natural principle in him, which continually cites him before God, and puts him in mind of him, and makes him one way or other fear him, and reflects upon him whether he will or no: A man hath leſs power over his Conſcience than over any other faculty: He may chooſe whether he will exerciſe his underſtanding about, or move his will to ſuch an object, but he hath no ſuch Authority over his Conſcience; he cannot limit it, or cauſe it to ceaſe from acting and reflecting; and therefore both that, and the Law about which it acts, are ſettled by ſome Supream Authority in the mind of Man, and this is God.

Fourthly, IV. The evidence of a God reſults from the vaſtneſs of deſires in Man, and the real diſſatisfaction he hath in every thing below himſelf. Man hath a boundleſs appetite after ſome Soveraign Good: As his underſtanding is more capacious than any thing below, ſo is his appetite larger. This affection of deſire exceeds all other affections. Love is determined to ſomething known. Fear to ſomething apprehended; but deſires approach nearer to Infiniteneſs, and purſue not only what we know, or what we have a glimps of, but what we find wanting in what we already enjoy. That which the deſire of man is moſt naturally carried after, is Bonum; ſome fully ſatiſfying Good. We deſire knowledge by the ſole impulſe of reaſon; but we deſire Good before the excitement of reaſon, and the deſire is always after Good, but not always after Knowledge.

Now the Soul of Man finds an imperfection in every thing here, and cannot ſcrape up a perfect ſatisfaction and felicity. In the higheſt fruitions of worldly things, 'tis ſtill purſuing ſomething elſe, which ſpeaks a defect in what it already hath. The World may afford a felicity for our duſt, the body, but not for the inhabitant in it; 'tis too mean for that. Is there any one Soul among the Sons of Men, that can, upon a due enquiry ſay, it was at reſt and wanted no more, that hath not ſometimes had deſires after an immaterial Good? The Soul follows hard after ſuch a thing, and hath frequent looks after it, *Pſal.*63.8. Man deſires a ſtable Good, but no ſublunary thing is ſo: And he that doth not deſire ſuch a Good, wants the rational nature of a Man. This is as natural as Underſtanding, Will and Conſcience. Whence ſhould the Soul of Man have thoſe deſires? How came it to underſtand that ſomething is ſtill wanting to make its nature more perfect; if there were not in it ſome notion of a more perfect Being, which can give it reſt?

Can ſuch a capacity be ſuppoſed to be in it, without ſomething in being able to ſatisfie it? If ſo, the nobleſt Creature in the World is miſerableſt, and in a worſe condition than any other. Other Creatures obtain their ultimate deſires, they are filled with good, Pſal.104.28. And ſhall Man only have a vaſt deſire without any poſſibility of enjoyment? Nothing in Man is in vain: He hath objects for his affections, as well as affections for objects. Every Member of his body hath its end, and doth attain it. Every affection of his Soul hath an object, and that in this World, and ſhall there be none for his deſire, which comes neareſt to infinite of any affection planted in him? This boundleſs deſire had not its original from Man himſelf: Nothing would render it ſelf reſtleſs; ſomething above the bounds of this World, implanted thoſe deſires after a higher Good, and made him reſtleſs in every thing elſe. And ſince the Soul can only reſt in that which is infinite, there is ſomething infinite for it to reſt in: Since nothing in the World, tho' a Man had the whole, can give it a ſatisfaction, there is ſomething above the World only capable to do it, otherwiſe the Soul would be always without it, and be more in vain than any other Creature.

There is therefore ſome infinite Being that can only give a contentment to the Soul, and this is God, And that goodneſs which implanted ſuch deſires in the Soul, would not do it to no purpoſe, and mock it in giving it an infinite deſire of ſatisfaction, without intending it the pleaſure of enjoyment, if it doth not by its own folly deprive it ſelf of it. The felicity of Humane Nature muſt needs exceed that which is allotted to other Creatures.

4. And laſt Reaſon. As 'tis a folly to deny that which all Nations in the World have conſented to, which the frame of the World evidenceth, which Man in his Body, Soul, Operations of Conſcience, witneſſeth to: So 'tis a folly to deny the Being of God, which is witneſſed unto by extraordinary occurrences in the World. Fourth Reaſon.

1. In extraordinary Judgments. When a juſt revenge follows abominable crimes, eſpecially when the Judgment is ſuited to the ſin, by a ſtrange Concatenation and ſucceſſion of Providences, methodized to bring ſuch a particular puniſhment; when the ſin of a Nation or Perſon is made legible in the inflicted Judgment, which teſtifies that it cannot be a caſual thing. The Scripture gives us an account of the neceſſity of ſuch Judgments, to keep up the reverential thoughts of God in the World. Pſal.9.16. The Lord is known by the judgment which he executes, the wicked is ſnared in the work of his own hand. And Jealouſie is the name of God, *Exod.*34.14. Whoſe name is Jealous: He is diſtinguiſh'd from falſe Gods by the Judgments which he ſends, as men are by their names.

Extraordinary Prodigies, in many Nations, have been the Heralds of extraordinary Judgments, and preſages of the particular Judgments which afterwards they have left, of which the Roman Hiſtories, and others, are full. That there are ſuch things is undeniable, and that the events have been anſwerable to the threatning, unleſs we will throw away all Humane Teſtimonies, and count all the Hiſtories of the World forgeries. Such things are evidences of ſome inviſible Power which orders thoſe affairs: And if there be inviſible Powers, there is alſo an efficacious cauſe which moves them. A Government certainly there is among them, as well as in the World, and then we muſt come to ſome Supream Governor which preſides over them.

Judgments upon notorious Offenders, have been evident in all Ages; the Scripture gives many inſtances. I ſhall only mention that of Herod Agrippa, which Joſephus mentions. * He receives the flattering applauſe of the People, and thought himſelf a God; but by the ſudden ſtroak upon him, was forced by his torture to confeſs another. I am God, ſaith he, in your account, but a higher calls me away: The Will of the heavenly Deity is to be endured. The Angel of the Lord ſmote him. The Judgment here was ſuited to the ſin; he that would be a God is eaten up of Worms, the vileſt Creatures. Tully Hoſtilius, a Roman King, who counted it the moſt unroyal thing to be Religious, or own any other God but his Sword, was conſumed himſelf, and his whole Houſe, by Lightning from Heaven. * Lib 19. Antiq. Act. 12.21,22, 23.

Many things are unaccountable, unleſs we have recourſe to God: The ſtrange Revelations of Murderers, that have moſt ſecretly committed their crimes: The making good ſome dreadful imprecations, which ſome wretches have uſed to confirm a Lye, and immediately have been ſtruck with that Judgment they wiſhed: The raiſing often unexpected perſons to be inſtruments of Vengeance on a ſinful and perfidious Nation: The overturning the deepeſt and ſureſt Counſels of Men, when they have had a ſucceſsful progreſs, and came to the very point of Execution:

The whole design of Mens preservation hath been beaten in pieces by some unforeseen circumstance, so that Judgments have broken in upon them without controul, and all their subtilties been outwitted. The strange crossing of some in their Estates, tho' the most wise, industrious, and frugal persons, and that by strange and unexpected ways: And it is observable, how often every thing contributes to carry on a Judgment intended, as if they rationally designed it. All those loudly proclaim a God in the World: If there were no God, there would be no sin; if no sin, there would be no punishment.

2. In Miracles. The course of Nature is uniform; and when it is put out of its course, it must be by some Superior Power invisible to the World; and by whatsoever invisible Instruments they are wrought, the efficacy of them must depend upon some first Cause above Nature. Psal. 72. 18. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who only doth wondrous things, by himself and his sole Power.

That which cannot be the result of a Natural Cause, must be the result of something Supernatural: What is beyond the reach of Nature, is the effect of a power superior to Nature: For it is quite against the order of Nature, and is the elevation of something to such a pitch, which all Nature could not advance it to. Nature cannot go beyond its own limits: If it be determined by another, as hath been formerly proved, it cannot lift it self above it self, without that power, that so determined it. Natural Agents act necessarily: The Sun doth necessarily shine, Fire doth necessarily burn. That cannot be the result of Nature, which is above the ability of Nature. That cannot be the work of Nature, which is against the order of Nature: Nature cannot do any thing against it self, or invert its own course.

We must own that such things have been, or we must accuse all the Records of former Ages to be a pack of Lies; which whosoever doth, destroys the greatest and best part of Humane Knowledge. The Miracles mentioned in the Scripture, wrought by our Saviour, are acknowledged by the Heathen, by the Jews at this day, tho' his greatest enemies. There is no dispute whether such things were wrought, the dead raised, the blind restored to sight. The Heathens have acknowledged the Miraculous Eclipse of the Sun, at the Passion of Christ, quite against the rule of Nature, the Moon being then in opposition to the Sun. The propagation of Christianity, contrary to the Methods whereby other Religions have been propagated, that in a few years the Nations of the World should be sprinkled with this Doctrine, and give in a greater Catalogue of Martyrs, courting the devouring flames, than all the Religions of the World.

To this might be added, the strange hand that was over the Jews, the only people in the World professing the true God, that should so often be befriended by their Conquerors, so as to rebuild their Temple, tho' they were looked upon as a people apt to rebel. Dion and Seneca observe, that wherever they were transplanted, they prospered, and gave Laws to the Victors. So that this proves also the Authority of the Scripture, the Truth of Christian Religion, as well as the Being of a God, and a Superior Power over the World.

To this might be added, the bridling the tumultuous passions of Men for the preservation of Humane Societies, which else would run the World into unconceivable confusions, Psal. 65. 7. Which stilleth the noise of the Sea, and the tumults of the People. As also the Miraculous deliverance of a Person or Nation, when upon the very brink of ruin; the sudden answer of Prayer, when God hath been sought to, and the turning away a Judgment, which in reason could not be expected to be averted, and the raising a sunk People from a ruin which seemed inevitable, by unexpected ways.

3. Accomplishments of Prophecies. Those things which are purely contingent, and cannot be known by Natural signs, and in their causes, as Eclipses and Changes in Nations, which may be discerned by an observation of the Signs of the Times; such things that fall not within this compass, if they be foretold and come to pass, are solely from some higher hand, and above the cause of Nature. This in Scripture is asserted to be a notice of the true God, Isa. 41. 23. Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that you are God; and Isa. 46. 10. I am God, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times, the things that are not yet done, saying, my Counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure. And Prophecy was consented to by all the Philosophers to be from Divine Illumination: That power which discovers things future, which all the foresight of men cannot ken and conjecture, is above Nature. And to foretel them so certainly as if they did already exist, or had existed long ago, must be the result of a mind infinitely intelligent, because it is the highest way of knowing, and a higher cannot be imagined. And he that knows things future in such a manner, must needs know things present and past. Cyrus was Prophesied of by Esay, ch. 44. 28. & 45. 1. long before he was born: His Victories, Spoils, all that should happen in Babylon, his bounty to the Jews came to pass, according to that Prophecy; and the sight of that Prophecy which the Jews shewed him, as other Historians report, was that which moved him to be favourable to the Jews.

Alexanders sight of Daniels Prophecy, concerning his Victories, moved him to spare Jerusalem. And are not the four Monarchies plainly deciphered in that Book, before the fourth rose up in the World? That power which foretels things beyond the reach of the Wit of Man, and orders all causes to bring about those predictions, must be an infinite power, the same that made the World, sustains it and governs all things in it according to his pleasure, and to bring about his own ends: And this Being is God.

1. If Atheism be a folly; 'Tis then pernicious to the World, and to the Atheist himself. Wisdom is the band of Humane Societies, the glory of Man. Folly is the disturber of Families, Cities, Nations: The disgrace of Humane Nature. Use 1.

First, I. 'Tis pernicious to the World.

1. It would root out the foundations of Government. It demolisheth all order in Nations. The Being of a God is the guard of the World: The Sense of a God is the foundation of Civil order; without this there is no tye upon the Consciences of Men. What force would there be in Oaths for the decisions of Controversies, what right could there be in Appeals made to one that had no Being? A City of Atheists would be a heap of confusion; there could be no ground of any Commerce, when all the Sacred Bands of it in the Consciences of Men were snapt asunder, which are torn to pieces, and utterly destroyed, by denying the Existence of God: What Magistrate could be secure in his standing, what private person could be secure in his right? * Can that then be a truth, that is destructive of all publick Good? If the Atheists sentiment, that there were no God, were a truth; and the contrary, that there were a God, were a falsity; it would then follow, that falsity made Men good and serviceable to one another: that error were the foundation of all the beauty and order, and outward felicity of the World; the Fountain of all good to Man. If there were no God, to believe there is one would be an error; and to believe there is none would be the greatest Wisdom, because it would be the greatest Truth. And then as it is the greatest wisdom to fear God, upon the apprehension of his Existence; * So it would be the greatest error to fear him, if there were none. It would unquestionably follow, that Error is the support of the World, the spring of all Humane Advantages; and that every part of the World were obliged to a falsity for being a quiet Habitation, which is the most absurd thing to imagine. 'Tis a thing impossible to be tolerated by any Prince, without laying an Axe to the Root of the Government.

* Lessius de Provid. p. 665.

Wisdom

* Psal. 111. v. 19.

2. It would introduce all evil into the World. If you take away God, you take away Conscience, and thereby all measures and rules of Good and Evil. And how could any Laws be made when the measure and standard of them were removed? All good Laws are founded upon the Dictates of Conscience and Reason, upon common Sentiments in humane Nature, which spring from a sense of God: So that if the Foundation be demolish'd, the whole Superstructure must tumble down: A Man might be a Thief, a Murderer, an Adulterer, and could not in a strict sense be an Offender. The worst of Actions could not be Evil, if a Man were a God to himself, a Law to himself. Nothing but Evil deserves a Censure, and nothing would be Evil, if there were no God, the Rector of the World against whom Evil is properly committed: No Man can make that morally Evil, that is not so in it self. As where there is a faint sense of God, the Heart is more strongly inclin'd to Wickedness; so where there is no sense of God, the Bars are remov'd, the flood-gates set open for all Wickedness to rush in upon Mankind. Religion pinions Men from abominable Practices, and restrains them from being Slaves to their own Passions: An Atheist's Arms would be loose to do any thing. * Nothing so villanous and unjust but would be acted, if the natural fear of a Deity were extinguish'd. The first consequence issuing from the apprehension of the Existence of God, is his Government of the World. If there be no God, then the natural Consequence is, that there is no supream Government of the World: Such a Notion would cashier all Sentiments of Good, and be like a Trojan Horse, whence all Impurity, Tyranny and all sorts of Mischiefs would break out upon Mankind: Corruption and abominable Works in the Text, are the fruit of the Fools perswasion, that there is no God. The perverting the ways of Men, oppression and extortion owe their rise to a forgetfulness of God, Jer. 3. 21. They have perverted their way, and they have forgotten the Lord their God, Ezek. 22. 12. Thou hast greedily gained by extortion, and hast forgotten me, saith the Lord. The whole Earth would be filled with violence, all flesh would corrupt their way, as it was before the deluge, when probably Atheism did abound more than Idolatry; and if not a disowning the Being, yet denying the Providence of God by the Posterity of Cain: Those of the Family of Seth only calling upon the Name of the Lord, Gen. 6. 11, 12. compar'd with Gen. 4. 26.

* Lessius de Provid. p. 664.

The greatest Sense of a Deity in any, hath been attended with the greatest innocence of Life and Usefulness to others: And a weaker Sense hath been attended with a baser Impurity. * If there were no God, Blasphemy would be praise-worthy; as the reproach of Idols is praise-worthy, because we testifie that there is no Divinity in them. What can be more contemptible than that which hath no Being? Sin would be only a false Opinion of a violated Law, and an offended Deity. If such Apprehensions prevail, what a wide door is opened to the worst of Villanies? If there be no God, no respect is due to him; all the Religion in the World is a Trifle, and Error, and thus the Pillars of all humane Society, and that which hath made Common-wealths to flourish, are blown away.

* Less. de Prov. p. 665

Secondly, 2. 'Tis pernicious to the Atheist himself. If he fear no future Punishment, he can never expect any future Reward: All his hopes must be confined to a Swinish and despicable manner of Life, without any imaginations of so much as a dram of reserv'd Happiness. He is in a worse Condition than the silliest Animal, which hath something to please it in its Life: Whereas an Atheist can have nothing here to give him a full content, no more than any other Man in the World, and can have less satisfaction hereafter. He deposeth the noble end of his own Being, which was to serve a God and have a satisfaction in him, to seek a God and be Rewarded by him: And he that departs from his end, recedes from his own Nature. All the content any Creature finds, is in performing its end, moving according to its Natural Instinct: As it is a joy to the Son to run its Race: * In the same manner it is a satisfaction to every other Creature, and its delight to observe the Law of its Creation. What content can any Man have that runs from his end, opposeth his own Nature, denies a God by whom and for whom he was Created, whose Image he bears, which is the Glory of his Nature; and sinks into the very dregs of brutishness? How elegantly is it described by Bildad, * His own Counsel shall cast him down, terrors shall make him afraid on every side, destruction shall be ready at his side, the first-born of Death shall devour his strength, his Confidence shall be rooted out, and it shall bring him to the King of Terrors: Brimstone shall be scattered upon his Habitation, he shall be driven from light into darkness, and chased out of the World; they that come after him shall be astonished at his Day, as they that went before were affrighted: and this is the place of him that knows not God. * If there be a future reckoning, (as his own Conscience can't but sometimes inform him of) his condition is desperate, & his misery dreadful and unavoidable: 'Tis not righteous a Hell should entertain any else, if it refuse him.

* Ps. 19. 5

* Job 18. 7, 8, &c.

* Ver. 21.

2. How lamentable is it, that in our times this folly of Atheism should be so rise? That there should be found such Monsters in Humane Nature, in the midst of the improvements of Reason, and shinings of the Gospel, who not only make the Scripture the matter of their Jeers, but scoff at the Judgments and Providences of God in the World, and envy their Creator a Being, without whose goodness they had had none themselves; who contradict in their carriage what they assert to be their Sentiment, when they dreadfully imprecate damnation to themselves? Whence should that damnation they so rashly wish, be poured forth upon them, if there were not a revenging God? Formerly Atheism was as rare as prodigious, scarce two or three known in an Age. And those that are reported to be so in former Ages, are rather thought to be counted so, for mocking at the senseless Deities, the common People ador'd, and laying open their Impurities. A meer natural strength would easily discover that those they ador'd for Gods could not deserve that Title, since their Original was known, their Uncleanness manifest and acknowledged by their Worshippers. And probably it was so, * since the Christians were termed Ἄθεοι, because they acknowledged not their vain Idols.

Use 2.

* Justin.

I question whether there ever was, or can be in the World, an uninterrupted and internal denyal of the Being of God, or that Men (unless we can suppose Conscience utterly dead) can arrive to such a degree of Impiety: For before they can stifle such Sentiments in them, (whatsoever they may assert) they must be utter Strangers to the Common Conceptions of reason, and despoil themselves of their own Humanity. He that dares to deny a God with his lips, yet sets up something or other as a God in his Heart. Is it not lamentable that this sacred Truth, consented to by all Nations, which is the band of Civil Societies, the ſource of all order in the World, ſhould be denyed with a bare face, and diſputed againſt in Companies; And the glory of a wiſe Creator aſcribed to an unintelligent Nature, to blind Chance? Are not ſuch worſe than Heathens? They worſhipped many Gods, theſe none: They preſerved a Notion of God in the World under a diſguiſe of Images; theſe would baniſh him both from Earth and Heaven, and demoliſh the Statues of him in their own Conſciences: They degraded him, theſe would deſtroy him: They coupled Creatures with him, Rom. 1. 25. Who worſhipped the Creature with the Creator, as it may moſt properly be rendred: And theſe would make him worſe than the Creature, a meer nothing. Earth is hereby become worſe than Hell. Atheiſm is a perſwaſion, which finds no footing any where elſe. Hell that receives ſuch Perſons, in this point reforms them: They can never deny or doubt of his Being, while they feel his ſtroaks. The Devil rejoyces at their Wickedneſs, knows them to be in an Error; for he

*Jam. 2. 19. believes and trembles at the belief. * This is a forerunner of Judgment: Boldneſs in ſin is a preſage of Vengeance, eſpecially when the honour of God is more particularly concern'd therein. It tends to the overturning humane Society, taking off the Bridle from the wicked Inclinations of Men. And God appears not in ſuch viſible Judgments againſt ſin immediately committed againſt himſelf, as in the caſe of thoſe ſins that are deſtructive to humane Society. Beſides, God as Governour of the World will uphold that, without which all his Ordinances in the World would be uſeleſs. Atheiſm is point blank againſt all the Glory of God in Creation, and againſt all the Glory of God in Redemption, and pronounceth at one Breath, both the Creator, and all Acts of Religion and Divine Inſtitutions uſeleſs and inſignificant.

Since moſt have had one time or other, ſome riſings of doubt, whether there be a God, tho' few do in expreſſions deny his Being, it may not be unneceſſary to propoſe ſome things for the further impreſſing this truth, and guarding themſelves againſt ſuch temptations.

1. 'Tis utterly impoſſible to demonſtrate there is no God. He can chooſe no Medium, but will fall in as a proof for his Exiſtence, and a manifeſtation of his Excellency, rather than againſt it. The Pretences of the Atheiſt are ſo ridiculous, that they are not worth the mentioning.

They never ſaw God, and therefore know not how to believe ſuch a Being; they cannot comprehend him. He would not be God, if he could fall within the narrow Model of an humane Underſtanding: He would not be infinite, if he were comprehenſible, or to be terminated by our ſight. How ſmall a thing muſt that be which is ſeen by a bodily Eye or graſp'd by a weak Mind? If God were viſible or comprehenſible, he would be limited: Shall it be a ſufficient Demonſtration from a blind Man, that there is no fire in the Room, becauſe he ſees it not, tho' he feel the warmth of it? The knowledge of the effect is ſufficient to conclude the Exiſtence of the Cauſe. Who ever ſaw his own Life? Is it ſufficient to deny a Man Lives, becauſe he beholds not his Life, and only knows it by his Motion? He never ſaw his own Soul, but knows he hath one by his thinking power: The Air renders it ſelf ſenſible to Men in its operations, yet was never ſeen by the eye.

If God ſhould render himſelf viſible, they might queſtion as well as know, whether that which was ſo viſible, were God or ſome deluſion. If he ſhould appear glorious, we can as little behold him in his Majeſtick Glory, as an Owl can behold the Sun in its Brightneſs; we ſhould ſtill but ſee him in his Effects, as we do the Sun by his Beams. If he ſhould ſhew a new Miracle, we ſhould ſtill ſee him but by his Works; ſo we ſee him in his Creatures, every one of which would be as great a Miracle as any can be wrought, to one that had the firſt proſpect of them. To require to ſee God, is to require that which is impoſſible, 1 Tim. 6. 16. He dwells in the light which no Man can approach unto, whom no Man hath ſeen nor can ſee. 'Tis viſible that he is, for he covers himſelf with Light as with a Garment, Pſal. 104. 2. 'Tis inviſible what he is, for he makes Darkneſs his ſecret place, Pſal. 18. 11. Nothing more clear to the Eye than Light, and nothing more difficult to the underſtanding than the nature of it: as Light is the firſt Object obvious to the Eye, ſo is God the firſt Object obvious to the Underſtanding. The Arguments from Nature do with greater ſtrength evince his Exiſtence, than any pretences can manifeſt there is no God. No Man can aſſure himſelf by any good reaſon there is none. For as for the likeneſs of Events to him that is righteous and him that is wicked, to him that ſacrificeth and to him that ſacrificeth not, Eccleſ. 9. 2. It is an Argument for a reſerve of Judgment in another State, which every Mans Conſcience dictates to him; when the Juſtice of God ſhall be glorified in another world, as much as his patience is in this.

2. Whoſoever doubts of it, makes himſelf a mark, againſt which all the Creatures fight.

All the Stars fought againſt Siſera for Iſrael: All the Stars in Heaven, and the Duſt on Earth fight for God againſt the Atheiſt. He hath as many Arguments againſt him, as there are Creatures in the whole compaſs of Heaven and Earth: He is moſt unreaſonable that denies or doubts of that whoſe Image and ſhadow he ſees round about him; he may ſooner deny the Sun that warms him, the Moon that in the Night walks in her Brightneſs, deny the Fruits he enjoys from the Earth, yea and deny that he doth exiſt. He muſt tear his own Conſcience, fly from his own thoughts, be changed into the Nature of a Stone which hath neither Reaſon nor Senſe, before he can diſingage himſelf from thoſe Arguments which evince the Being of a God. He that would make the natural Religion profeſſed in the World a meer Romance, muſt give the lye to the common ſenſe of Mankind; he muſt be at an irreconcileable enmity with his own Reaſon, reſolve to hear nothing that it ſpeaks, if he will not hear what it ſpeaks in this caſe, with a greater evidence than it can aſcertain any thing elſe. God hath ſo ſettled himſelf in the reaſon of Man, that he muſt vilifie the nobleſt Faculty God hath given him, and put off Nature it ſelf before he can blot out the Notion of a God.

3. No queſtion but thoſe that have been ſo bold as to deny that there was a God, have ſometimes been much afraid they have been in an Error, and have at leaſt ſuſpected there was a God, when ſome ſuddain Prodigy hath preſented it ſelf to them and rouſed their fears. And whatſoever Sentiments they might have in their blinding Proſperity, they have had other kind of Motions in them in their ſtormy Affections: and like Jonah's Mariners have been ready to cry to him for help, whom they diſdained to own ſo much as in Being, while they ſwam in their pleaſures. The Thoughts of a Deity cannot be ſo extinguiſh'd, but they will revive and ruſh upon a Man, at leaſt under ſome ſharp Affliction. Amazing Judgments will make them queſtion their own apprehenſions. God ſends ſome Meſſengers to keep alive the Apprehenſion of him as a Judge, while Men reſolve not to own or reverence him as a Governour. A Man cannot but keep a ſcent of what was born with him: As a Veſſel that hath been ſeaſoned firſt with a ſtrong juice will preſerve the ſcent of it, whatſoever Liquors are afterwards put into it.

4. What

4. What is it for which such Men rack their Wits, to form Notions, that there is no God? Is it not that they would indulge some vicious habit, which hath gained the possession of their Soul, which they know cannot be favoured by that holy God, whose Notion * Psal. 94. 6, 7. they would raze out *? Is it not for some brutish affection, as degenerative of Humane Nature, as derogatory to the Glory of God? A Lust as unmanly as sinful?

The terrors of God are the effects of guilt; and therefore Men would wear out the apprehension of a Deity, that they might be brutish without controul. They would fain believe there were no God, that they might not be Men, but Beasts. How great a folly is it to take so much pains in vain, for a slavery and torment? To cast off that which they call a yoke, for that which really is one? There is more pains and toughness of Soul requisite to shake off the apprehensions of God, than to believe that he is, and cleave constantly to him. What a madness is it in any to take so much pains to be less than a Man, by razing out the apprehensions of God, when with less pains, he may be more than an earthly Man, by cherishing the Notions of God, and walking answerably thereunto?

5. How unreasonable is it for any Man to hazard himself at this rate in the denial of a God? The Atheist, saith he, knows not that there is a God; but may he not reasonably think, there may be one for ought he knows? And if there be, what a desperate confusion will he be in, when all his bravado's shall prove false? What can they gain by such an Opinion? A freedom, say they, from the burdensome yoke of Conscience, a liberty to do what they list: That doth not subject them to Divine Laws. 'Tis an hard matter to perswade any that they can gain this. They can gain but a sordid pleasure, unworthy the Nature of Man. But it were well, that such would argue thus with themselves: If there be a God, and I fear and obey him, I gain a happy Eternity; but if there be no God, I lose nothing but my sordid Lusts, by firmly believing there is one. If I be deceived at last, and find a God, can I think to be rewarded by him, for disowning him? Do not I run a desperate hazard to lose his Favour, his Kingdom, and endless Felicity, for an endless Torment? By confessing a God I venture no loss; but by denying him, I run the most desperate hazard, if there be one.

He is not a reasonable Creature, that will not put himself upon such a reasonable arguing.

What a doleful meeting will there be between the God who is denied, and the Atheist that denies him, who shall meet with reproaches on Gods part, and terrors on his own? All that he gains is a liberty to defile himself here, and a certainty to be despised hereafter, if he be in an error, as undoubtedly he is.

6. Can any such person say he hath done all that he can to inform himself of the Being of God, or of other things which he denies? Or rather, they would fain imagine there is none, that they may sleep securely in their Lusts, and be free (if they could) from the Thunder-claps of Conscience? Can such say they have used their utmost endeavours to instruct themselves in this, and can meet with no satisfaction? Were it an abstruse Truth it might not be wondred at: But not to meet with satisfaction in this, which every thing minds us of, and helpeth, is the fruit of an extream negligence, stupidity, and a willingness to be unsatisfied, and a judicial process of God against them. 'Tis strange any Man should be so dark in that, upon which depends the conduct of his life, and the expectation of happiness hereafter.

I do not know what some of you may think, but I believe these things are not useless to be proposed for our selves to answer temptations: We know not what wicked temptation, in a debauched and sceptick Age, meeting with a corrupt heart, may prompt Men to: And tho' there may not be any Atheist here present, yet I know there is more than one, who have accidentally met with such, who openly denied a Deity. And if the like occasion happen, these considerations may not be unuseful to apply to their Consciences. But I must confess, that since those that live in this sentiment, do not judge themselves worthy of their own care, they are not worthy of the care of others; and a Man must have all the Charity of the Christian Religion, which they despise, not to contemn them, and leave them to their own folly. As we are to pity Mad-men, who sink under an unavoidable distemper, we are as much to abominate them, who wilfully hug this prodigious frenzy.

If it be the Atheists folly to deny or doubt of the Being of God, 'tis our Wisdom to be firmly settled in this Truth, That God is. We should never be without our Arms, in an Age wherein Atheism appears bare-fac'd without a disguise. Use 3.

You may meet with suggestions to it; tho' the Devil formerly never attempted to demolish this Notion in the World, but was willing to keep it up, so the worship due to God might run in his own Channel; and was necessitated to preserve it, without which he could not have erected that Idolatry, which was his great design in opposition to God: Yet since the Foundations of that are torn up, and never like to be rebuilt, he may endeavour, as his last refuge, to banish the Notion of God out of the World, that he may reign as absolutely without it, as he did before by the mistakes about the Divine Nature. But we must not lay all upon Satan; the corruption of our own hearts ministers matter to such Sparks. 'Tis not said, Satan hath suggested to the Fool, but the Fool hath said in his heart there is no God. But let them come from what principle soever, silence them quickly, give them their dismiss; oppose the whole Scheme of Nature to fight against them, as the Stars did against Sisera. Stir up Sentiments of Conscience to oppose Sentiments of Corruption. Resolve sooner to believe, that your selves are not, than that God is not: And if you suppose they at any time come from Satan, object to him that you know he believes the contrary, to what he suggests. Settle this principle firmly in you, let us behold Him that is invisible, as Moses did: * Let us have the sentiments following upon the Notion of a God; to be restrained by a fear of him, excited by a love to him, not to violate his Laws and offend his Goodness. He is not a God careless of our actions, negligent to inflict punishment, and bestow rewards, he forgets not the labour of our love, * nor the integrity of our ways: He were not a God, if he were not a Governor: And punishments and rewards are as essential to Government, as a foundation to a building: His Being, and his Government in rewarding, [which] implies punishment, (for the neglects of him are linkt together) * and are not to be separated in our thoughts of him. * Heb. 11. 27. * Heb. 6. 10. * Heb. 11. 6.

1. Without this truth fixed in us, we can never give him the worship due to his Name. When the knowledge of any thing is fluctuating and uncertain, our actions about it are careless. We regard not that which we think doth not much concern us. If we do not firmly believe there is a God, we shall pay him no steady worship; and if we believe not the excellency of his Nature, we shall offer him but a slight service. * The Jews * call the knowledge of the Being of God, The Foundation and Pillar of Wisdom. The whole frame of Religion is dissolved without this apprehension, and totters if this apprehension be wavering. Religion in the Heart is as Water in a Weather-glass, which riseth or falls according * Mal. 1. 13, 14. * Main funda. Legis cap.

cording to the ſtrength or weakneſs of this belief. How can any Man worſhip that which he believes not to be, or doubts of? Could any Man omit the paying an homage to one, whom he did believe to be an Omnipotent, Wiſe Being, poſſeſſing (infinitely above our conceptions) the perfections of all Creatures? He muſt either think there is no ſuch Being, or that he is an eaſie, drowſie, inobſervant God, and not ſuch a one as our natural Notions of him, if liſtened to, as well as the Scripture, repreſent him to be.

2. Without being rooted in this, we cannot order our lives. All our baſeneſs, ſtupidity, dulneſs, wandrings, vanity, ſpring from a wavering and unſettledneſs in this principle. This gives ground to brutiſh pleaſures, not only to ſollicite, but conquer us. Abraham expected violence in any place where God was not owned, Gen. 20. 11. Surely the fear of God is not in this place, and they will ſlay me for my Wifes ſake. The natural knowledge of God firmly impreſt, would choak that which would ſtifle our Reaſon and deface our Souls. The belief that God is, and what he is, would have a mighty influence to perſwade us to a real Religion, and ſerious Conſideration, and caſting about how to be like to him, and united with him.

3. Without it we cannot have any comfort of our lives. Who would willingly live in a ſtormy World, void of a God? If we waver in this Principle, to whom ſhould we make our complaints in our afflictions? Where ſhould we meet with ſupports? How could we ſatisfie our ſelves with the hopes of a future Happineſs? There is a ſweetneſs in the Meditation of his Exiſtence, and that he is a Creator.

* Pſal. 104. 24. * Thoughts of other things have a bitterneſs mixed with them: Houſes, Lands, Children now are, ſhortly they will not be; but God is, that made the World: His Faithfulneſs, as he is a Creator, is a Ground to depoſite our Souls and Concerns in our innocent Sufferings.

* 1 Pet. 4. 19. * So far as we are weak in the acknowledgment of God, we deprive our ſelves of our content in the view of his infinite perfections.

4. Without the rooting of this Principle, we cannot have a firm belief of Scripture. The Scripture will be a ſlight thing to one that hath weak ſentiments of God. The Belief of a God muſt neceſſarily precede the belief of any Revelation: The latter cannot take place without the former as the foundation. We muſt firmly believe the Being of a God, wherein our happineſs doth conſiſt, before we can believe any means which conduct us to him: Moſes begins with the Author of Creation, before he treats of the Promiſe of Redemption. Paul preached God as a Creator to an Univerſity, before he preached Chriſt as Mediator.

* Acts 17. 24. * What influence can the Teſtimony of God have in his Revelation upon one that doth not firmly aſſent to the Truth of his Being? All would be in vain that is ſo often repeated [thus ſaith the Lord] if we do not believe there is a Lord that ſpeaks it. There could be no awe from his Soveraignty in his commands, nor any comfortable taſte of his Goodneſs in his Promiſes. The more we are ſtrengthened in this Principle, the more credit we ſhall be able to give to Divine Revelation, to reſt in his Promiſe, and to reverence his Precept; the Authority of all depends upon the Being of the Revealer.

To this purpoſe, ſince we have handled this diſcourſe by natural Arguments,

1. Study God in the Creatures as well as in the Scriptures. The primary uſe of the Creatures, is to acknowledge God in them; they were made to be witneſſes of himſelf and his Goodneſs, and Heralds of his Glory, which Glory of God as Creator, ſhall endure for ever, Pſal. 104. 31. that whole Pſalm is a Lecture of Creation and Providence. The World is a ſacred Temple; Man is introduced to contemplate it, and behold with Praiſe the Glory of God in the pieces of his Art. As Grace doth not deſtroy Nature, ſo the Book of Redemption blots not out that of Creation: Had he not ſhewn himſelf in his Creatures, he could never have ſhewn himſelf in his Chriſt: The order of things required it. God muſt be read where ever he is legible; the Creatures are one Book, wherein he hath writ a part of the excellency of his name, * as many Artiſts do in their Works and Watches. * Pſal. 8. 9. Gods Glory, like the Filings of Gold, is too precious to be loſt where ever it drops: nothing ſo vile and baſe in the World, but carries in it an inſtruction for Man, and drives in further the Notion of a God. As he ſaid of his Cottage; Enter here, Sunt hic etiam Dii, God diſdains not this place: So the leaſt Creature ſpeaks to Man, every Shrub in the Field, every Fly in the Air, every Limb in a Body; conſider me, God diſdains not to appear in me; he hath diſcover'd in me his Being, and a part of his Skill, as well as in the higheſt. The Creatures manifeſt the Being of God and part of his Perfections. We have indeed a more excellent way, a Revelation ſetting him forth in a more excellent manner, a firmer object of dependence, a brighter object of Love, raiſing our hearts from ſelf-confidence to a confidence in him. Tho' the appearance of God in the one be clearer than in the other, yet neither is to be neglected: The Scripture directs us to Nature to view God; it had been in vain elſe for the Apoſtle to make uſe of natural arguments: Nature is not contrary to Scripture, nor Scripture to Nature, unleſs we ſhould think God contrary to himſelf, who is the Author of both.

2. View God in your own experiences of him. There is a taſte and ſight of his Goodneſs, tho' no ſight of his Eſſence. * By the taſte of his Goodneſs you may know the reality of the Fountain, whence it ſprings, and from whence it flows: This ſurpaſſeth the greateſt Capacity of a meer natural Underſtanding. Experience of the ſweetneſs of the ways of Chriſtianity, is a mighty preſervative againſt Atheiſm. Many a Man knows not how to prove Honey to be ſweet by his Reaſon but by his Senſe; and if all the Reaſon in the World be brought againſt it, he will not be reaſoned out of what he taſtes. * Pſal. 34. 38.

Have not many found the delightful illapſes of God into their Souls, often ſprinkled with his inward Bleſſings upon their ſeeking of him? had ſecret warnings in their approaches to him? and gentle rebukes in their Conſciences upon their ſwervings from him? Have not many found ſometimes an inviſible hand raiſing them up when they were dejected? ſome unexpected Providence ſtepping in for their relief? and eaſily perceived that it could not be a Work of Chance, nor many times the intention of the Inſtruments he hath uſed in it? You have often found that he is, by finding that he is a Rewarder, and can ſet to your Seals that he is what he hath declared himſelf to be in his Word, Iſa. 43. 12. I have declared, and have ſaved, therefore you are my witneſſes ſaith the Lord, that I am God. The ſecret touches of God upon the heart and inward converſes with him, are a greater evidence of the Exiſtence of a ſupream and infinitely good Being, than all Nature.

4. Is it a folly to deny or doubt of the Being of God? 'Tis a folly alſo not to worſhip God, when we acknowledge his Exiſtence: 'Tis our Wiſdom then to Worſhip him. As it is not indifferent whether we believe there is a God or no, ſo it is not indifferent whether we will give Honour to that God or no. A Worſhip is his Right as he is the Author of our Being, and Fountain of our Happineſs. By this only we acknowledge his Deity: Tho' we profeſs his Being, yet we deny that profeſſion in neglects of Worſhip. To deny him a Worſhip is as great a folly as to deny his Being. He that renounceth all homage to his Creator, envies him the Being which he cannot deprive Uſe 4.

him of. The natural Inclination to Worship is as universal as the Notion of a God; Idolatry else had never gained footing in the World. The Existence of God was never owned in any Nation, but a Worship of him was appointed. And many People who have turned their backs upon some other parts of the Law of Nature, have paid a continual homage to some Superior and invisible Being. The Jews give a reason why Man was created in the Evening of the Sabbath, because he should begin his Being with the Worship of his Maker. As soon as ever he found himself to be a Creature, his first solemn act should be a particular respect to his Creator. * To fear God and keep his Commandments, is the whole of Man, Hebr. whole Man; He is not a Man but a Beast, without observance of God. Religion is as requisite as Reason to compleat a Man: He were not Reasonable if he were not Religious; because by neglecting Religion, he neglects the chiefest Dictate of Reason. Either God framed the World with so much Order, Elegancy and Variety to no purpose, or this was his end at least, that reasonable Creatures should admire him in it, and honour him for it. The Notion of God was not stamp'd upon Men, the Shadows of God did not appear in the Creatures, to be the Subject of an idle Contemplation, but the Motive of a due Homage to God: He created the World for his Glory, a People for himself, that he might have the Honour of his Works: That since we live and move in him and by him, we should live and move to him and for him. It was the Condemnation of the Heathen World, that when they knew there was a God, they did not give him the Glory due to him. * He that denys his Being is an Atheist to his Essence: He that denies his Worship is an Atheist to his Honour.

* Eccl. 12.

* Rom. 1. 21

5. If it be a folly to deny the Being of God, it will be our Wisdom then, since we acknowledge his Being, often to think of him. Thoughts are the first issue of a Creature as reasonable: * He that hath given us the faculty whereby we are able to think, should be the principal object about which the power of it should be exercised. 'Tis a Justice to God the Author of our Understandings, a Justice to the Nature of our Understandings, that the noblest Faculty should be imployed about the most excellent Object. Our minds are a beam from God; and therefore, as the beams of the Sun, when they touch the Earth, should reflect back upon God: As we seem to deny the Being of God, not to think of him; we seem also to unsoul our Souls, in misimploying the Activity of them any other way: like Flies to be oftner on Dunghils than Flowers.

* Pro. 4. 23.

'Tis made the black mark of an ungodly Man or an Atheist, that God is not in all his Thoughts, Ps. 10. 4. What comfort can be had in the Being of God without thinking of him with Reverence and Delight? A God forgotten is as good as no God to us.

A DISCOURSE UPON Practical Atheism.

Psalm XIV. 1.

Doct. 2. Practical Atheism is natural to Man in his depraved state, and very frequent in the Hearts and Lives of Men.

The Fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. He regards him as little as if he had no Being: He said in his Heart, not with his Tongue, nor in his Head: He never firmly thought it, nor openly asserted it: Shame put a bar to the first, and natural Reason to the second. Yet perhaps he had sometimes some doubts whether there were a God or no: He wisht there were not any, and oft hoped there were none at all: He could not raze out the Notion of a Deity in his mind, but he neglected the fixing the sense of God in his Heart, and made it too much his Business to deface, and blot out those Characters of God in his Soul, which had been left under the ruines of original nature.

Men may have atheistical Hearts without atheistical Heads. Their Reasons may defend the Notion of a Deity, while their Hearts are empty of affection to the Deity: Job's Children may curse God in their Hearts, tho' not with their Lips *.

* Job 1. 5.

There is no God. Most understand it of a denial of the Providence of God; as I have said in opening the former Doctrine.

He denies some Essential Attribute of God, or the Exercise of that Attribute in the World *.

* So the Chaldee reads, לית שולטנא Non potestas, denying the Authority of God in the World.

He that denies any essential Attribute, may be said to deny the Being of God. Whosoever denies Angels or Men to have Reason and Will, denies the humane and angelical Nature, because Understanding and Will are essential to both those Natures; there could neither be Angel nor Man without them. No Nature can subsist without the Perfections essential to that Nature, nor God be conceived of without his: The Apostle tells us, Eph. 2. 12. that the Gentiles were without God in the World: So in some sense all Unbelievers may be termed Atheists; for rejecting the Mediator appointed by God, they reject that God who appointed him.

But this is beyond the intended scope, natural Atheism being the only subject: Yet this is deducible from it. That the Title of ἄθεοι, doth not only belong to those who denyed the Existence of God: or to those who contemn all sense of a Deity, and would root the Conscience and Reverence of God out of their Souls: But it belongs also to these who give not that Worship to God which is due to him: Who Worship many Gods, or who Worship one God in a false and superstitious manner; when they have not right Conceptions of God, nor intend an adoration of him according to the excellency of his Nature: All those that are unconcerned for any particular Religion, fall under this Character. Tho' they own a God in general, yet are willing to acknowledge any God that shall be coined by the powers under whom they live. The Gentiles were without God in the World; without the true Notion of God, not without a God of their own framing.

This general or practical Atheism is natural to Men.

1. Not

1. Not natural by Created, but by corrupted Nature: 'Tis againſt Nature, as Nature came out of the hand of God: But univerſally Natural, as Nature hath been ſophiſticated and infected by the Serpents breath. Inconſideration of God, or miſrepreſentations of his Nature, are as agreeable to corrupt Nature, as the diſowning the Being of a God is contrary to common reaſon. God is not denied natura ſed vitiis *.

* Auguſtin de Civit. Dei.

2. 'Tis univerſally natural: The wicked are eſtranged from the Womb, Pſal. 58. 3. They go aſtray as ſoon as they be born, their poyſon is like the poyſon of a Serpent. The wicked: And who by his birth hath a better Title? They go aſtray from the dictates of God, and the Rule of their Creation, as ſoon as ever they be born; their poyſon is like the poyſon of a Serpent, which is radically the ſame in all of the ſame ſpecies. 'Tis ſeminally and fundamentally in all Men, tho' there may be a ſtronger reſtraint by a Divine hand upon ſome Men, than upon others. This principle runs through the whole ſtream of Nature. The natural bent of every Mans heart is diſtant from God: When we attempt any thing pleaſing to God, 'tis like the climbing up a Hill, againſt Nature; when any thing is diſpleaſing to him, 'tis like a Current running down the Channel in its natural courſe. 'When we attempt any thing that is an acknowledgment of the Holineſs of God, we are fain to ruſh with Arms in our hands through a multitude of natural Paſſions, and fight the way through the oppoſitions of our own ſenſitive Appetite. How ſoftly do we naturally ſink down into that which ſets us at a greater diſtance from God? There is no active, potent, efficacious ſenſe of a God by Nature. The heart of the Sons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil, Eccl. 8. 11. The heart in the ſingular number; as if there were but one common heart beat in all Mankind, and bent as with one pulſe, with a joynt conſent and force to wickedneſs, without a ſenſe of the Authority of God in the Earth, as if one heart acted every Man in the World.

* Rom. 3. 9, 10, 11, 12.

The great Apoſtle cites the Text, to verifie the Charge he brought againſt all Mankind. * In his Interpretation, the Jews, who owned one God, and were dignified with ſpecial privileges, as well as the Gentiles that maintained many Gods, are within the compaſs of this Character: The Apoſtle leaves out the firſt part of the Text, the Fool hath ſaid in his heart, but takes in the latter part, and the verſes following: He charges all, becauſe all, every Man of them was under ſin: There is none that ſeeks God. And v. 19. he adds, what the law ſaith, he ſpeaks to thoſe that are under the Law, that none ſhould imagine he included only the Gentiles, and exempted the Jews from this deſcription. The Leproſie of Atheiſm had infected the whole Maſs of Humane Nature: No Man among Jews or Gentiles did naturally ſeek God, and therefore all were void of any ſpark of the practical ſence of the Deity. The effects of this Atheiſm are not in all externally of an equal ſize; yet in the fundamentals and radicals of it, there is not a hairs difference between the beſt and the worſt Men that ever traverſed the World. The diſtinction is laid either in common Grace, bounding and ſuppreſſing it, or in ſpecial Grace, killing and crucifying it. 'Tis in every one either Triumphant or Militant, reigning or depoſed. No Man is any more born with ſenſible acknowledgments of God, than he is born with a clear knowledge of the nature of all the Stars in the Heavens, or Plants upon the Earth. None ſeeks after God.

* Coccei.

* None ſeeks God as his Rule, as his End, as his Happineſs, which is a debt the Creature naturally owes to God; he deſires no communion with God: He places his happineſs in any thing inferior to God: He prefers every thing before him, glorifies every thing above him; he hath no delight to know him; he regards not thoſe paths which lead to him; he loves his own filth better than Gods holineſs; his actions are tinctured, and died with Self, and are void of that reſpect which is due from him to God.

The Nobleſt Faculty of Man, his Underſtanding, wherein the remaining Lineaments of the Image of God are viſible; the higheſt operation of that Faculty, which is Wiſdom, is in the Judgment of the Spirit of God Deviliſh, whiles it is Earthly and Senſual *: And the Wiſdom of the beſt Man is no better by Nature, a Legion of impure Spirits poſſeſs it. Deviliſh, as the Devil, who tho' he believe there is a God, yet acts as if there were none, and wiſhes he had no Superior to preſcribe him a Law, and inflict that puniſhment upon him which his Crimes have merited. Hence the Poyſon of Man by Nature is ſaid to be like the Poyſon of a Serpent, alluding to that Serpentine temptation which firſt infected Mankind, and changed the Nature of Man into the likeneſs of that of the Devil. * So that notwithſtanding the harmony of the World that preſents Men not only with the Notice of the Being of a God, but darts into their Minds ſome remarks of his Power and Eternity; yet the thoughts and reaſonings of Man are ſo corrupt, as may well be called Diabolical, and as contrary to the perfection of God, and the original Law of their Nature, as the actings of the Devil are; For ſince every natural Man is a Child of the Devil, and is acted by the Diabolical Spirit, he muſt needs have that nature which his Father hath, and the Infuſion of that Venom which the Spirit that acts him is poſſeſſed with, tho' the full diſcovery of it may be reſtrained by various circumſtances, Eph. 2. 2. To conclude, tho' no Man, or at leaſt very few arrive to a round and poſitive concluſion in their hearts that there is no God, yet there is no Man that naturally hath in his heart any reverence of God.

* Jam. 3. 15.

* Pſal. 58. 4.

In general, before I come to a particular proof, take ſome Propoſitions.

Propoſition 1. Actions are a greater diſcovery of a Principle than Words. The Teſtimony of Works is louder and clearer than that of Words, and the frame of Mens hearts muſt be meaſured, rather by what they do, than by what they ſay. There may be a mighty diſtance between the Tongue and the Heart, but a courſe of Actions is as little guilty of lying as Intereſt is, according to our common ſaying: All outward Impieties are the branches of an Atheiſm at the root of our Nature, as all peſtilential ſores are expreſſions of the Contagion in the Blood. Sin is therefore frequently called Ungodlineſs in our Engliſh Dialect. Mens Practices are the beſt Indexes of their Principles: The Current of a Mans Life is the counter-part of the frame of his Heart: Who can deny an Error in the Spring or Wheels, when he perceives an Error in the Hand of the Dial? Who can deny an Atheiſm in the Heart, when ſo much is viſible in the Life? The taſte of the Water diſcovers what Mineral 'tis ſtrained through. A practical denial of God is worſe than a verbal, becauſe Deeds have uſually more of deliberation than Words; Words may be the fruit of a Paſſion, but a Sett of evil Actions are the fruit and evidence of a predominant evil Principle in the Heart: All ſlighting words of a Prince do not argue an habitual Treaſon, but a ſucceſſion of overt Treaſonable Attempts ſignifie a ſetled Treaſonable diſpoſition in the Mind: Thoſe therefore are more deſervedly termed Atheiſts, who acknowledge a God, and walk as if there were none, than thoſe (if there can be any ſuch) that deny a God, and walk as if there were one.

A ſenſe of God in the Heart, would burſt out in the Life: Where there is no reverence of God in the Life, 'tis eaſily concluded there is leſs in the Heart.

What doth not influence a Man when it hath the addition of the Eyes, and cenſures of outward Spectators, tors, and the care of a Reputation (ſo much the God of the World) to ſtrengthen it and reſtrain the action, muſt certainly have leſs power over the heart when it is ſingle without any other concurrence, the flames breaking out of a Houſe, diſcover the Fire to be much ſtronger and fiercer within. The Apoſtle judgeth thoſe of the Circumciſion, who gave heed to Jewiſh Fables, to be deniers of God, tho' he doth not tax them with any notorious Prophaneſs, Tit. 1. 16. They profeſs that they know God, but in works they deny him; he gives them Epithites contrary to what they arrogated to themſelves: * They boaſted themſelves to be holy, the Apoſtle calls them abominable. They bragged that they fulfilled the Law, and obſerved the Traditions of their Fathers; the Apoſtle calls them diſobedient, or unperſwadable. They boaſted that they only had the Rule of Righteouſneſs, and a ſound Judgment concerning it; the Apoſtle ſaid they had a Reprobate Senſe, and unfit for any good Work; and judges againſt all their vain-glorious braggs, that they had not a Reverence of God in their Hearts. There was more of the denial of God in their Works, than there was acknowledgment of God in their Words. Thoſe that have neither God in their Thoughts, nor in their Tongues, nor in their Works, cannot properly be ſaid to acknowledge him. Where the Honour of God is not practically owned in the Lives of Men, the Being of God is not ſenſibly acknowledged in the Hearts of Men: The Principle muſt be of the ſame kind with the Actions; if the Actions be Atheiſtical, the Principle of them can be no better.

* Illyric.

Prop. 2. All ſin is founded in a ſecret Atheiſm. Atheiſm is the Spirit of every Sin; all the Floods of Impieties in the World, break in at the Gate of a ſecret Atheiſm: And though ſeveral ſins may diſagree with one another, yet like Herod and Pilate againſt Chriſt, they joyn hand in hand againſt the intereſt of God. Though Luſts and Pleaſures be divers, yet they are all united in Diſobedience to him. * All the wicked inclinations in the heart, and ſtruggling motions, ſecret repinings, ſelf-applauding confidences in our own wiſdom, ſtrength, &c. envy, ambition, revenge, are ſparks from this latent fire; the language of every one of theſe is, I would be a Lord to my ſelf, and would not have a God Superior to me.

* Tit. 3. 3.

The variety of ſins againſt the firſt and ſecond Table, the neglects of God, and violences againſt Man, are derived from this in the Text, firſt the fool hath ſaid in his heart, and then follows a Legion of Devils. As all vertuous actions ſpring from an acknowledgment of God, ſo all vicious actions riſe from a lurking denial of him. All licentiouſneſs goes glib down where there is no ſenſe of God. Abraham judged himſelf not ſecure from Murder, nor his Wife from Defilement in Gerar, if there were no fear of God there. * He that makes no Conſcience of Sin, has no regard to the Honour, and conſequently none to the Being of God. By the fear of God men depart from Evil, Prov. 16. 6. By the non-regarding of God men ruſh into Evil: Pharaoh oppreſt Iſrael becauſe he knew not the Lord. If he did not deny the Being of a Deity, yet he had ſuch an unworthy Notion of God as was inconſiſtent with the Nature of a Deity; he, a poor Creature, thought himſelf a Mate for the Creator.

* Gen. 20. 11.

In ſins of Omiſſion we own not God, in neglecting to perform what he enjoyns: In ſins of Commiſſion, we ſet up ſome Luſt in the place of God, and pay to that the Homage which is due to our Maker. In both we diſown him; in the one by not doing what he commands, in the other by doing what he forbids.

We deny his Sovereignty when we violate his Laws; we diſgrace his Holineſs when we caſt our filth before his Face; we diſparage his Wiſdom when we ſet up another Rule as the Guide of our Actions than that Law he hath fixed; we ſlight his Sufficiency, when we prefer a ſatisfaction in ſin before a happineſs in him alone, and his Goodneſs, when we judge it not ſtrong enough to attract us to him. Every ſin invades the Rights of God, and ſtrips him of one or other of his Perfections: 'Tis ſuch a vilifying of God, as if he were not God, as if he were not the Supream Creator and Benefactor of the World, as if we had not our Being from him, as if the Air we breathed in, the Food we lived by, were our own by right of Supremacy, not of Donation. For a Subject to ſlight his Soveraign, is to ſlight his Royalty; or a Servant a Maſter, is to deny his Superiority.

Prop. 3. Sin implies that God is unworthy of a Being. Every ſin is a kind of curſing God in the heart *, an aim at the deſtruction of the Being of God, not actually but vertually; not in the intention of every Sinner, but in the nature of every ſin. That affection which excites a Man to break his Law, would excite him to annihilate his Being if it were in his power. A Man in every ſin aims to ſet up his own Will as his Rule, and his own Glory as the end of his Actions againſt the Will and Glory of God; and could a Sinner attain his end, God would be deſtroyed. God cannot out-live his Will and his Glory: God cannot have another Rule but his own Will, nor another End but his own Honour. Sin is called a turning the back upon God, * a kicking againſt him *, as if he were a ſlighter perſon than the meaneſt Beggar. What greater contempt can be ſhew'd to the meaneſt, vileſt perſon, than to turn the back, lift up the heel, and thruſt away with indignation? All which actions, though they ſignifie that ſuch a one hath a Being, yet they teſtifie alſo that he is unworthy of a Being, that he is an unuſeful Being in the World, and that it were well the World were rid of him.

* Job 1. 5.

* Jer. 32. 33.
* Deut. 32. 15.

All ſin againſt Knowledge is called a Reproach of God. * Reproach is a vilifying a Man as unworthy to be admitted into Company. We naturally judge God unfit to be converſed with. God is the term turned from by a ſinner: Sin is the term turned to; which implies a greater excellency in the nature of ſin, than in the nature of God. And as we naturally judge it more worthy to have a Being in our affections, ſo conſequently more worthy to have a Being in the World, than that infinite nature from whom we derive our Beings, and our All; and upon whom with a kind of diſdain we turn our backs. Whoſoever thinks the Notion of a Deity unfit to be cheriſhed in his mind by warm Meditation, implies that he cares not whether he hath a Being in the World or no. Now tho' the light of a Deity ſhines ſo clearly in Man, and the ſtings of Conſcience are ſo ſmart, that he cannot abſolutely deny the Being of a God, yet moſt Men endeavour to ſmother this knowledge, and make the Notion of a God a fapleſs and uſeleſs thing, Rom. 1. 28. They like not to retain God in their knowledge.

* Numb. 15. 20. Ezek. 20. 27.

It is ſaid, Cain went out from the preſence of the Lord, Gen. 4. 16. That is, from the Worſhip of God. Our refuſing or abhorring the preſence of a Man, implies a careleſſneſs whether he continue in the World or no: 'Tis a uſing him, as if he had no Being, or as if we were not concerned in it. Hence all Men in Adam, under the Emblem of the Prodigal, are ſaid to go into a far Country. Not in reſpect of place, becauſe of Gods Omnipreſence; but in reſpect of acknowledgment and affection; they mind and love any thing but God. And the deſcriptions of the Nations of the World, lying in the Ruines of Adams Fall, and the dregs of that Revolt, is that they know not God: They forget God, as if there were no ſuch Being above them; and indeed, he that doth the Works of the Devil, owns the Devil to be more more worthy of observance, and consequently of a Being, than God, whose Nature he forgets and whose Presence he abhors.

Prop. 4. Every sin in its own Nature would render God a foolish and impure Being. Many Transgressors esteem their Acts, which are contrary to the Law of God, both Wise and Good: If so, the Law against which they are committed, must be both foolish and impure: What a reflection is there then upon the Law-giver? The Moral Law is not properly a meer act of God's Will considered in it self, or a Tyrannical Edict, like those of whom it may well be said, stat pro ratione voluntas: But it commands those things, which are good in their own Nature, and prohibits those things, which are in their own Nature evil, and therefore is an act of his Wisdom and Righteousness; the result of his wise Counsel, and an extract of his pure Nature; as all the Laws of just Law-givers, are not only the acts of their Will, but of a Will governed by Reason and Justice, and for the good of the Publick, whereof they are Conservators. If the Moral commands of God were only acts of his Will, and had not an intrinsick necessity, reason and goodness, God might have commanded the quite contrary, and made a contrary Law, whereby that which we now call Vice, might have been canonized for Vertue: He might then have forbid any Worship of him, Love to him, fear of his Name: He might then have commanded Murders, Thefts, Adulteries. In the first he would have untied the Link of Duty from the Creature, and dissolved the Obligations of Creatures to him, which is impossible to be conceived; for from the Relation of a Creature to God, obligations to God, and Duties upon those Obligations, do necessarily result. It had been against the Rule of Goodness and Justice, to have commanded the Creature not to love him, and fear and obey him: This had been a Command against Righteousness, Goodness, and intrinsick Obligations to Gratitude: And should Murder, Adulteries, Rapines have been commanded instead of the contrary, God would have destroyed his own Creation; he would have acted against the Rule of Goodness and Order; he had been an unjust Tyrannical Governor of the World: Publick Society would have been crack'd in Pieces, and the World become a Shambles, a Brothel-House, a place below the common Sentiments of a meer Man. All sin therefore being against the Law of God, the Wisdom and holy Rectitude of God's Nature is denyed in every act of Disobedience: And what is the consequence of this, but that God is both Foolish and Unrighteous, in commanding that which was neither an Act of Wisdom, as a Governour, nor an Act of Goodness, as a Benefactor to his Creature?

As was said before, presumptuous Sins are called Reproaches of God, Numb. 15. 30. The Soul that doth ought presumptuously, reproacheth the Lord. Reproaches of Men are either for Natural, Moral or Intellectual Defects. All Reproaches of God must imply a Charge either of Unrighteousness or Ignorance: If of Unrighteousness, 'tis a denial of his Holiness: If of Ignorance, 'tis a blemishing his Wisdom. If God's Laws were not wise and holy, God would not enjoyn them: And if they are so, we deny infinite Wisdom and Holiness in God by not complying with them. As when a Man believes not God when he promises, he makes him a Liar, 1 Joh. 5. 10. So he that obeys not a wise and Holy God commanding, makes him guilty either of Folly or Unrighteousness.

Now suppose you knew an absolute Atheist, who denied the Being of a God, yet had a life free from any notorious Spot or Deflement; would you in reason count him so bad as the other, that owns a God in Being, yet lays by his course of Action such a black Imputation of Folly and Impurity upon the God he professeth to own; an Imputation which renders any Man a most despicable Creature?

Proposition 5. Sin in its own Nature endeavours to render God the most miserable Being. It is nothing but an opposition to the Will of God: The Will of no Creature is so much contradicted, as the Will of God is by Devils and Men; And there is nothing under the Heavens that the Affections of Humane Nature stand more point blank against, than against God. There is a slight of him in all the faculties of Man; our Souls are as unwilling to know him, as our Wills are averse to follow him, Rom. 8. 7. The carnal Mind is enmity against God, 'tis not subject to the Law of God, nor can be subject. 'Tis true, God's Will cannot be hindred of its effect, for then God would not be supreamly blessed, but unhappy and miserable: All Misery ariseth from a want of that which a Nature would have, and ought to have: Besides, if any thing could frustrate God's Will, it would be Superior to him: God would not be Omnipotent, and so would lose the Perfection of the Deity, and consequently the Deity it self; for that which did wholly defeat God's Will, would be more powerful than he. But sin as a Contradiction to the Will of God's Revelation; to the Will of his Precept, and therein doth naturally tend to a Superiority over God, and would usurp his Omnipotence, and deprive him of his blessedness. For if God had not an infinite power to turn the Designs of of it to his own Glory, but the will of Sin could prevail, God would be totally deprived of his Blessedness. Doth not sin endeavour to subject God to the Extravagant and contrary Wills of Men, and make him more a slave than any Creature can be? For the Will of no Creature, not the meanest and most despicable Creature, is so much crost, as the Will of God is by sin, Isa. 43. 24. Thou hast made me to serve with thy sins: Thou hast endeavoured to make a meer slave of me by sin: Sin endeavours to subject the blessed God to the Humour and Lust of every Person in the World.

Proposition 6. Men sometimes in some Circumstances do wish the not Being of God. This some think to be the meaning of the Text, The Fool hath said in his Heart, There is no God; that is, he wishes there was no God. Many tamper with their own Hearts to bring them to a perswasion, That there is no God. And when they cannot do that, they conjure up wishes that there were none. Men naturally have some Conscience of Sin, and some Notices of Justice, Rom. 1. 32. They know the Judgment of God, and they know the demerit of Sin; they know the Judgment of God, and that they which do such things are worthy of Death. What is the consequent of this but fear of Punishment? and what is the issue of that fear, but a wishing the Judge either unwilling or unable to vindicate the Honour of his violated Law? When God is the object of such a wish, 'tis a vertual undeifying of him: Not to be able to punish, is to be impotent; not to be willing to punish, is to be unjust; Imperfections inconsistent with the Deity: God cannot be supposed without an infinite Power to act, and an infinite Righteousness as the Rule of Acting. Fear of God is natural to all Men; not a fear of offending him, but a fear of being punished by him: The wishing the Extinction of God has its degree in Men, according to the degree of their fears of his just Vengeance: And tho' such a wish be not in its Meridian but in the Damned in Hell, yet it hath its starts and motions in affrighted and awakened Consciences on the Earth.

Under this Rank of Wishers that there were no God,

God, or that God were deſtroyed, do fall,

1. Terrified Conſciences, that are Magor Miſſabib, ſee nothing but matter of fear round about. As they have lived without the bounds of the Law, they are afraid to fall under the ſtroak of his Juſtice: Fear wiſhes the Deſtruction of that which it apprehends hurtful: It conſiders him as a God to whom Vengeance belongs, as the Judge of all the *Pſ.94.12. Earth *. The leſs hopes ſuch a one hath of his Pardon, the more joy he would have to hear that his Judge ſhould be ſtript of his Life: He would entertain with delight any Reaſons, that might ſupport him in the conceit that there were no God: In his preſent State ſuch a Doctrine would be his ſecurity from an Account: He would as much rejoyce, if there were no God to enflame an Hell for him, as any guilty Malefactor would if there were no Judge to order a Gibbet for him. Shame may bridle Mens Words, but the Heart will be caſting about for ſome Arguments this way, to ſecure it ſelf: Such as are at any time in Spira's Caſe, would be willing to ceaſe to be Creatures, that God might ceaſe to be Judge. The Fool hath ſaid in his Heart, there is no Elohim [no Judge] fancying God without any Exerciſe of his judicial Authority. And there is not any wicked Man under anguiſh of Spirit, but were it within the reach of his power, would take away the Life of God, and rid himſelf of his Fears, by deſtroying his Avenger.

2. Debauch'd Perſons are not without ſuch wiſhes ſometimes: An obſtinate Servant wiſhes his Maſters death, from whom he expects Correction for his Debaucheries. As Man ſtands in his Corrupt Nature, 'tis impoſſible but one time or other moſt debauch'd Perſons, at leaſt have ſuch kind of Velleities, or imperfect wiſhes. 'Tis as natural to Men to abhor thoſe things which are unſuitable and troubleſome, as it is to pleaſe themſelves in things agreeable to their Minds and Humours: And ſince Man is ſo deeply in love with Sin, as to count it the moſt eſtimable good, he cannot but wiſh the Abolition of that Law which checks it, and conſequently the change of the Law Giver which Enacted it; and in wiſhing a change in the holy Nature of God he wiſhes a Deſtruction of God, who could not be God, if he ceaſed to be immutably holy. They do as certainly wiſh, that God had not a holy Will to command them, as deſpairing Souls wiſh, that God had not a righteous Will to puniſh them; and to wiſh Conſcience extinct for the Moleſtations they receive from it, is to wiſh the power Conſcience repreſents out of the World alſo.

Since the State of Sinners is a State of diſtance from God, and the Language of Sinners to God is *Job 21.14 depart from us *: They deſire as little the continuance of his Being as they deſire the knowledge of his Ways: The ſame reaſon which moves them to deſire God's diſtance from them, would move 'em to deſire God's not Being: Since the greateſt diſtance would be moſt agreeable to them, the Deſtruction of God muſt be ſo too: Becauſe there is no greater diſtance from us, than in not Being. Men would rather have God not be, than themſelves under controul, that ſenſuality might range at pleaſure: He is like a Heifer ſliding from the Yoke, Hoſ. 4.16. The Curſing of God in the Heart feared by Job of his Children, intimates a wiſhing God deſpoiled of his Authority, that their Pleaſure might not be damp'd by his Law. Beſides, is there any natural Man that ſins againſt actuated Knowledge, but either thinks or wiſhes that God might not ſee him, that God might not know his Actions? And is not this to wiſh the Deſtruction of God, who could not be God unleſs he were Immenſe and Omniſcient?

3. Under this rank fall thoſe who perform external Duties only out of a Principle of ſlaviſh Fear. Many Men perform thoſe Duties that the Law enjoyns with the ſame Sentiments that Slaves perform their Drudgery, and are conſtrained in their Duties by no other Conſiderations but thoſe of the Whip and the Cudgel. Since therefore they do it with Reluctancy, and ſecretly murmur while they ſeem to obey, they would be willing that both the command were recall'd, and the Maſter that commands them were in another World. The Spirit of Adoption makes Men act towards God as a Father, a Spirit of Bondage only eyes him as a Judge. Thoſe that look upon their Superiors as tyrannical, will not be much concerned in their welfare; and would be more glad to have their Nails pared, than be under perpetual fear of them.

Many Men regard not the infinite goodneſs in their Service of him, but conſider him as Cruel, Tyrannical, injurious to their Liberty. Adam's Poſterity are not free from the Sentiments of their common Father, till they are regenerate. You know what Conceit was the Hammer, whereby the helliſh Jael ſtruck the Nail into our firſt Parents, which conveyed Death, together with the ſame Imagination to all their Poſterity, Gen. 3. 5. God knows that in the day you eat thereof, your Eyes ſhall be opened, and you ſhall be as Gods knowing Good and Evil. Alas poor Souls! God knew what he did when he forbad you that Fruit: He was jealous you ſhould be too happy; It was a cruelty in him to deprive you of a Food ſo pleaſant and delicious. The Apprehenſion of the ſeverity of God's Commands riſeth up no leſs in deſires that there were no God over us, than Adam's Apprehenſion of Envy in God for the reſtraint of one Tree mov'd him to attempt to be equal with God: Fear is as powerful to produce the one in his Poſterity, as Pride was to produce the other in the Common-Root. When we apprehend a thing hurtful to us, we deſire ſo much evil to it, as may render it uncapable of doing us the hurt we fear. As we wiſh the preſervation of what we love or hope for; ſo we are naturally apt to wiſh the not Being of that whence we fear ſome hurt or trouble. We muſt not underſtand this as if any Man did formally wiſh the deſtruction of God, as God. God in himſelf is an infinite Mirror of Goodneſs and raviſhing Lovelineſs: He is infinitely good, and ſo univerſally good, and nothing but good; and is therefore ſo agreeable to a Creature, as a Creature, that it is impoſſible that the Creature, while it bears it ſelf to God as a Creature, ſhould be guilty of this, but thirſt after him and cheriſh every Motion to him. As no Man wiſhes the Deſtruction of any Creature, as a Creature, but as it may conduce to ſomething which he counts may be beneficial to himſelf; ſo no Man doth, nor perhaps can wiſh the Ceſſation of the Being of God, as God, for then he muſt wiſh his own Being to ceaſe alſo: But as he conſiders him Cloathed with ſome Perfections, which he apprehends as injurious to him; as his Holineſs in forbidding Sin, his Juſtice in puniſhing Sin: And God being judged in thoſe Perfections contrary to what the revolted Creature thinks convenient and good for himſelf, he may wiſh God ſtrip'd of thoſe Perfections, that thereby he may be free from all fear of trouble and grief from him in his fallen State. In wiſhing God deprived of thoſe, he wiſhes God deprived of his Being; becauſe God cannot retain his Deity without a love of Righteouſneſs and Hatred of Iniquity; and he could not teſtifie his Love to the one, or his loathing of the other, without encouraging Goodneſs, and witneſſing his Anger againſt Iniquity.

Let us now appeal to our ſelves, and examine our own Conſciences: Did we never pleaſe our ſelves ſometimes in the Thoughts, how happy we ſhould be, how free in our vain Pleaſures, if there were no

God? Have we not deſired to be our own Lords without controul, ſubject to no Law but our own, and be guided by no Will but that of the Fleſh? Did we never rage againſt God under his Afflicting Hand? Did we never wiſh God ſtrip'd of his Holy Will to Command, and his Righteous Will to Puniſh, &c?

Thus much for the general.

For the proof of this many Conſiderations will bring in Evidence: Moſt may be reduced to theſe two Generals.

Man would ſet himſelf up, Firſt as his own Rule. Secondly, as his own End and Happineſs.

1. Man would ſet himſelf up as his own Rule inſtead of God. This will be evidenced in this Method.

1. Man naturally diſowns the Rule which God ſets him.

2. He owns any other Rule rather than that of God's preſcribing.

3. Theſe he doth in order to the ſetting himſelf up as his own Rule.

4. He makes himſelf not only his own Rule, but would make himſelf the Rule of God, & give Laws to his Creator.

1. Man naturally diſowns the Rule which God ſets him. 'Tis all one to deny his Royalty and to deny Being: When we diſown his Authority, we diſown his God-head: 'Tis the Right of God to be the Sovereign of his Creatures; and it muſt be a very looſe and trivial Aſſent that ſuch Men have to God's Superiority over them, (and conſequently to the Excellency of his Being, upon which that Authority is founded) who are ſcarce at eaſe in themſelves, but when they are invading his Rights, breaking his Bands, caſting away his Cords, and contradicting his Will.

Every Man naturally is a Son of Belial, would be without a Yoke, and leap over God's Incloſures; and in breaking out againſt his Soveraignty, we diſown his Being as God: For to be God and Sovereign are inſeparable: He could not be God, if he were not Supream; nor could he be a Creator without being a Law-giver. To be God and yet inferior to another, is a contradiction. To make Rational Creatures without preſcribing them a Law, is to make them without Holineſs, Wiſdom and Goodneſs.

1. There is in Man naturally an unwillingneſs to have any acquaintance with the Rule God ſets him, Pſal. 14. 2. None that did underſtand and ſeek God. The refuſing Inſtruction and caſting his Word behind the back is a part of Atheiſm *. We are heavy in hearing the Inſtructions either of Law or Goſpel, and ſlow in the Apprehenſion of what we hear. The People that God had hedged in from the Wilderneſs of the World for his own Garden, were fooliſh and did not know God; were ſottiſh and had no underſtanding of him. * The Law of God is accounted a ſtrange thing; * a thing of a different Climate, and a far Country from the heart of Man; wherewith the Mind of Man had no natural Acquaintance, and had no deſire to have any; or they regarded it as a ſordid thing: What God accounts great and valuable, they account mean and deſpicable. Men may ſhew a Civility to a Stranger, but ſcarce contract an Intimacy: There can be no amicable Agreement between the holy Will of God, and the Heart of a depraved Creature: One is holy, the other unholy; one is univerſally good, the other ſtark naught. The purity of the Divine Rule renders it nauſeous to the impurity of a Carnal Heart. Water and Fire may as well friendly kiſs each other and live together without quarrelling and hiſſing, as the holy Will of God and the unregenerate heart of a fallen Creature.

* Pſ. 50. 17.

* Heb. 5. 11, 12.

* Jer. 4. 22.

* Hoſ. 8. 12

The nauſeating a Holy Rule is an Evidence of Atheiſm in the Heart, as the nauſeating wholeſom Food is of putrified Flegm in the Stomach. 'Tis found more or leſs in every Chriſtian, in the Remainders, tho' not a full Empire. As there is a Law in his Mind, whereby he delights in the Law of God, ſo there is a Law in his Members whereby he wars againſt the Law of God, Rom. 7. 22, 23, 25. Now predominant is this loathing of the Law of God, when corrupt Nature is in its full ſtrength, without any principle to controul it? There is in the Mind of ſuch a one a Darkneſs whereby it is ignorant of it, and in the Will a Depravedneſs whereby it is repugnant to it. If Man were naturally willing and able to have an intimate acquaintance with, and delight in the Law of God, it had not been ſuch a ſignal favour for God to promiſe to write the Law in the Heart. A Man may ſooner engrave the Chronicle of a whole Nation, or all the Records of God in the Scripture upon the hardeſt Marble with his bare Finger, than write one Syllable of the Law of God in a Spiritual manner upon his heart. For,

1. Men are negligent in uſing the means for the knowledge of God's Will. All natural Men are Fools, who know not how to uſe the price God puts in their Hands; * They put not a due eſtimate upon Opportunies and means of Grace, and account that Law folly which is the Birth of an infinite and holy Wiſdom. The Knowledge of God which they may glean from Creatures, and is more pleaſant to the natural Guſt of Men, is not improved to the Glory of God, if we will believe the Indictment the Apoſtle brings againſt the Gentiles. * And moſt of thoſe that have dived into the depths of Nature, have been more ſtudious of the Qualities of the Creatures, than of the excellency of the Nature, or the diſcovery of the mind of God in them; who regard only the riſing and motions of the Star, but follow not with the wiſe Men, its conduct to the King of the Jews. How often do we ſee Men fill'd with an eager thirſt for all other kind of Knowledge, that cannot acquieſce in a twilight Diſcovery, but are inquiſitive into the Cauſes and Reaſons of Effects, yet are contented with a weak and languiſhing Knowledge of God and his Law, and are eaſily tired with the Propoſals of them?

He now that nauſeates the means whereby he may come to know and obey God, has no intention to make the Law of God his Rule: There is no Man that intends ſeriouſly an end, but he intends means in order to that end. As when a Man intends the preſervation or recovery of his health, he will intend means in order to thoſe ends, otherwiſe he cannot be ſaid to intend his health: So he that is not diligent in uſing means to know the mind of God, has no ſound intention to make the Will and Law of God his Rule. Is not the inquiry after the Will of God made a work by the by, and fain to lacquy after other concerns of an inferior Nature, if it hath any place at all in the Soul? which is a deſpiſing the Being of God: The Notion of the Soveraignty of God, bears the ſame date with the Notion of his Godhead; and by the ſame way that he reveals himſelf, he reveals his Authority over us, whether it be by Creatures without, or Conſcience within. All Authority over Rational Creatures conſiſts in commanding and directing; the duty of Rational Creatures, in compliance with that Authority, conſiſts in obeying. Where there is therefore a careleſs neglect of thoſe means, which convey the knowledge of Gods Will and our Duty, there is an utter diſowning of God as our Soveraign and our Rule.

2. When any part of the Mind and Will of God breaks in upon Men, they endeavour to ſhake it off: As a Man would a Sergeant that comes to Arreſt him; they like not to retain God in their Knowledge, Rom. 1. v. 28. A natural Man receives not the things of the Spirit of God; that is, into his Affection; he puſheth them back as Men do troubleſome and importunate Beggers: They have no kindneſs to beſtow upon it: They thruſt with both ſhoulders againſt the Truth of God, when it preſſeth in upon them, and daſh as much contempt upon it as the Phariſees did upon the Doctrine our Saviour directed against their Covetousness. As Men naturally delight to be without God in the World, so they delight to be without any Offspring of God in their thoughts. Since the Spiritual Palate of Man is depraved, Divine Truth is unsavory and ungrateful to us, till our taste and relish is restor'd by Grace. Hence Men damp and quench the motions of the Spirit to Obedience and Compliance with the Dictates of God; strip them of their Life and Vigor, and kill them in the Womb. How unable are our Memories to retain the substance of Spiritual Truth, but like Sand in a Glass, put in at one part and runs out at the other? Have not many a secret wish, that the Scripture had never mentioned some Truths, or that they were blotted out of the Bible, because they face their Consciences, and discourage those boiling Lusts they would with eagerness and delight pursue? Methinks that interruption John gives our Saviour, when he was upon the reproof of their Pride, looks little better, * than a design to divert him from a discourse so much against the grain, by telling him a story of their prohibiting one to cast out Devils, because he followed not them. How glad are Men when they can raise a Battery against a Command of God, and raise some smart Objection whereby they may shelter themselves from the strictness of it?

Doctrine

* Mark 9. 33, 38.

3. When Men cannot shake off the Notices of the Will and Mind of God, they have no pleasure in the consideration of them. Which could not possibly be, if there were a real and fixed design to own the Mind and Law of God as our Rule: Subjects or Servants that love to obey their Prince and Master, will delight to read and execute their Orders. The Devils understand the Law of God in their Minds, but they loath the impressions of it upon their Wills: Those miserable Spirits are bound in Chains of Darkness, evil Habits in their Wills, that they have not a thought of obeying that Law they know. It was an unclean Beast under the Law, that did not chew the Cud: 'Tis a corrupt Heart, that doth not chew Truth by Meditation. A natural Man is said not to know God, or the things of God; he may know them notionally, but he knows them not affectionately. A Sensual Soul can have no delight in a Spiritual Law. To be sensual and not to have the Spirit are inseparable, Jude 19.

Natural Men may indeed meditate upon the Law and Truth of God, but without delight in it: if they take any pleasure in it, 'tis only as 'tis knowledge, not as it is a Rule; for we delight in nothing that we desire, but upon the same account that we desire it. Natural Men desire to know God, and some part of his Will and Law, not out of a sense of their practical excellency, but a natural thirst after knowledge: And if they have a delight, 'tis in the Act of knowing, not in the Object known, not in the Duties that stream from that knowledge; they design the furnishing their Understandings, not the quickning their Affections; like idle Boys that strike Fire, not to warm themselves by the heat, but sport themselves with the sparks: Whereas a gracious Soul accounts not only his Meditation, or the Operations of his Soul about God and his Will to be sweet, but he hath a joy in the object of that Meditation. * Many have the knowledge of God, who have no delight in him or his Will. Owls have Eyes to perceive that there is a Sun, but by reason of the weakness of their sight have no pleasure to look upon a beam of it: So neither can a Man by Nature love, or delight in the Will of God, because of his Natural Corruption. That Law that riseth up in Men for Conviction and Instruction, they keep down under the power of Corruption, making their Souls not the Sanctuary, but Prison of Truth, Rom. 1. 18. They will keep it down in their Hearts, if they cannot keep it out of their Heads, and will not endeavour to know and taste the Spirit of it.

* Psal. 104. 34.

4. There is further, a rising and swelling of the Heart against the Will of God. (1.) Internal. Gods Law cast against a hard Heart, is like a Ball thrown against a stone Wall, by reason of the resistance rebounding the further from it: The meeting of a Divine Truth and the Heart of Man, is like the meeting of two Tides, the weaker swells and foams: We have a natural Antipathy against a Divine Rule, and therefore when it is clapt close to our Consciences, there is a snuffing at it, high reasonings against it, Corruption breaks out more strongly: As Water poured on Lime sets it on fire by an Antiperistasis, and the more Water is cast upon it, the more furiously it burns: Or as the Sun Beams shining upon a Dunghill, makes the steams the thicker and the stench the noysomer, neither being the positive cause of the smoke in the Lime, or the stench in the Dunghill; but by accident the causes of the eruption, Rom. 7. 8. But Sin taking occasion by the Commandment, wrought in me all manner of Concupiscence, for without the Law Sin was dead. Sin was in a languishing posture, as if it were dead, like a lazy Garison in a City, till upon an Alarm from the Adversary it takes Arms and revives its Courage; all the sin in the heart gathers together its force, to maintain its standing; like the vapours of the Night, which unite themselves more closely to resist the Beams of the Rising Sun. Deep Conviction often provokes fierce Opposition; sometimes disputes against a Divine Rule, and end in Blasphemies, Acts 13, 45. Contradicting and Blaspheming are coupled together. Men naturally desire things that are forbidden, and reject things commanded, from the corruption of Nature, which affects an unbounded Liberty, and is impatient of returning under that Yoke it hath shaken off, and therefore rageth against the bars of the Law, as the waves roar against the restraint of a Bank: When the Understanding is dark, and the Mind ignorant, sin lies as dead; * [a Man scarce knows he hath such motions of Concupiscence in him, he finds not the least breath of wind, but a full calm in his Soul; but when he is awakened by the Law, then the vitiousness of Nature being sensible of an Invasion of its Empire, arms it self against the Divine Law, and the more the Command is urged, the more vigorously it bends its strength, and more insolently lifts up it self against it] he perceives more and more Atheistical Lusts than before; all manner of Concupiscence, more leprous and contagious than before. When there are any motions to turn to God, a reluctancy is presently perceived; Atheistical thoughts bluster in the Mind like the Wind, they know not whence they come, nor whither they go: So unapt is the heart to any acknowledgment of God as his Ruler, and any re-union with him. Hence Men are said to resist the Holy Ghost, Acts 7. 51. to fall against it, as the word signifies, as a stone, or any ponderous body falls against that which lies in its way: They would dash to pieces, or grind to powder, that very motion which is made for their Instruction, and the Spirit too which makes it, and that not from a fit of passion, but an habitual repugnance. Ye always resist, &c. (2.) External; 'tis a fruit of Atheism, in the fourth Verse of this Psalm; Who eat up my people as they eat bread. How do the Revelations of the Mind of God meet with opposition? And the Carnal World like Dogs bark against the shining of the Moon? So much Men hate the Light, that they spurn at the Lanthorns that bear it: And because they cannot endure the Treasure, often fling the Earthen Vessels against the ground wherein it is held. If the entrance of Truth render the Market worse for Diana's Shrines, the

* Thes. Salmur. De Spiritu Servitutis, Thes. 19.

* Acts 19. 24,28,29. whole City will be in an uproar. * When Socrates upon natural Principles confuted the Heathen Idolatry, and asserted the Unity of God, the whole city of Athens, a Learned University, is against him; and because he opposed the publick received Religion, though with an undoubted Truth, he must end his Life by Violence. How hath every corner of the World steam'd with the blood of those, that would maintain the Authority of God in the World? The Devils Children will follow the steps of their Father, and endeavour to bruise the Heel of Divine Truth, that would endeavour to break the Head of corrupt Lust.

5. Men often seem desirous to be acquainted with the Will of God, not out of any respect to his Will, and to make it their Rule, but upon some other Consideration. Truth is scarce received as Truth. There is more of Hypocrisie than Sincerity in the Pale of the Church, and attendance on the Mind of God. The outward dowry of a Religious Profession, makes it often more desirable than the Beauty. Judas was a Follower of Christ for the Bag, not out of any affection to the Divine Revelation: Men sometime pretend a desire to be acquainted with the Will of God, to satisfie their own passions, rather than to conform to Gods Will: The Religion of such is not the judgment of the Man, but the passion of the Brute. Many entertain a Doctrine for the Persons sake, rather than a Person for the Doctrine's sake; and believe a thing because it comes from a Man they esteem, as if his Lips were more Canonical than Scripture.

* 1 Thes. 2. 13. The Apostle implies, in the Commendation he gives the Thessalonians, * that some receive the Word for Humane Interest, not as it is in truth the Word and Will of God, to command and govern their Consciences by its Soveraign Authority: Or else they have the Truth of God (as St. James speaks of the Faith of Christ) with respect of persons: * and receive it not for the sake of the Fountain, but of the Channel: So that many times the same Truth delivered by another is disregarded, which when dropping from the fancy and mouth of a Mans own Idol, is cried up as an Oracle. This is to make not God, but Man the Rule: For tho' we entertain that which materially is the Truth of God, yet not formally as his Truth, but as conveyed by one we affect: And that we receive a Truth and not an Errot, we owe the obligation to the honesty of the Instrument, and not to the strength and clearness of our own Judgment. VVrong considerations may give admittance to an unclean, as well as a clean Beast, into the Ark of the Soul: That which is contrary to the Mind of God, may be entertained, as well as that which is agreeable. 'Tis all one to such that have no respect to God, what they have; as it is all one to a Spunge to suck up the foulest VVater or the sweetest VVine, when either is applied to it.

* Jam. 2. 2.

6. Many that entertain the Notions of the Will and Mind of God, admit them with unsettled and wavering Affections. There is a great Levity in the heart of Man. The Jews that one day applaud our Saviour with Hosannahs as their King, vote his Crucifixion the next, and use him as a Murderer. VVe begin in the Spirit and end in the Flesh. Our hearts like Lute-strings are changed with every change of VVeather, with every appearance of a Temptation; scarce one motion of God in a thousand prevails with us for a setled Abode. 'Tis a hard task to make a Signature of those Truths upon our Affections, which will with ease pass currant with our Understandings; Our Affections will as soon loose them, as our Understandings embrace them. The Heart of Man is unstable as Water *. Some were willing to rejoyce in Johns light, which reflected a lustre on their Minds; but not in his Heat, which would have conveyed a warmth to their hearts: and the light was pleasing to them but for a season, * while their corruptions lay as if they were dead, not when they were awakened. Truth may be admitted one day, and the next day rejected. As Austin saith of a wicked Man, he loves the Truth shining, but he hates the Truth reproving. This is not to make God, but our own humours our Rule and Measure.

* Gen. 49. 4. Jam. 1. 8.

* Joh. 5. 35.

7. Many desire an acquaintance with the Laws and Truth of God, with a design to improve some lust by it. To turn the VVord of God to be a Pander to the Breach of his Law. This is so far from making Gods VVill our Rule, that we make our own vile Affections the Rule of his Law. How many forced Interpretations of Scripture have been coyned to give content to the lusts of Men; and the Divine Rule forced to bend and be squared to Mens loose and carnal apprehensions! 'Tis a part of the inftability or falseness of the heart, to wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction *, which they could not do, if they did not first wring them to countenance some detestable Error or filthy Crime. In Paradise the first Interpretation made of the first Law of God was point blank against the mind of the Law-giver, and venemous to the whole Race of Mankind. Paul himself feared that some might put his Doctrine of Grace to so ill a use, as to be an Altar and Sanctuary to shelter their presumption, Rom. 6. 1, 15 Shall we then continue in sin, that grace may abound? Poysonous consequences are often drawn from the sweetest Truths: As when Gods Patience is made a Topick, whence to argue against his Providence, * or an encouragement to commit Evil more greedily; as tho' because he had not presently a revenging Hand, he had not an All-seeing Eye: Or when the Doctrine of Justification by Faith, is made use of to depress a Holy Life; or Gods readiness to receive returning Sinners, an encouragement to defer repentance till a Death-Bed. A Lyar will hunt for shelter in the reward God gave the Midwives that lyed to Pharaoh for the preservation of the Males of Israel, and Rahabs saving the Spies by false Intelligence. God knows how to distinguish between grace and corruption, that may lie close together; or between something of moral goodness and moral evil, which may be mixed: VVe find their fidelity rewarded, which was a moral good; but not their lye approved, which was a moral evil. Nor will Christs conversing with Sinners, be a Plea for any to thrust themselves into evil Company. Christ conversed with Sinners, as a Physician with diseased Persons, to cure them, not approve them; others with profligate Persons to receive infection from them, not to communicate holiness to them. Satans Children have studied their Fathers Art, who wanted not perverted Scripture to second his Temptations against our Saviour. * How often do carnal hearts turn Divine Revelation to carnal ends, as the Sea fresh VVater into salt? As Men subject the Precepts of God to carnal Interests, so they subject the Truths of God to carnal Fancies. VVhen Men will allegorize the VVord, and make a humorous and crazy fancy the Interpreter of Divine Oracles, and not the Spirit speaking in the VVord, this is to enthrone our own imaginations as the Rule of Gods Law, and depose his Law from being the Rule of our Reason: This is to rifle Truth of its true mind and intent. 'Tis more to rob a Man of his Reason, the essential constitutive part of Man, than of his Estate. This is to refuse an intimate acquaintance with his VVill. VVe shall never tell what is the matter of a Precept, or the matter of a Promise, if we impose a sense upon it contrary to the plain meaning of it; thereby we shall make the Law of God to have a distinct sense, according to the variety of Mens imaginations, and so make every Mans fancy a Law to himself.

Now

Now that this unwillingneſs to have Spiritual acquaintance with Divine Truth, is a diſowning God as our Rule, and a ſetting up Self in his ſtead, is evident; becauſe this unwillingneſs reſpects Truth,

1. As it is moſt Spiritual and Holy. A fleſhly mind is moſt contrary to a Spiritual Law, and particularly as it is a ſearching and diſcovering Law, that would dethrone all other Rules in the Soul. As Men love to be without a Holy God in the World, ſo they love to be without a holy Law, the tranſcript and image of God's Holineſs in their Hearts; and without holy Men, the lights kindled by the Father of Lights. As the holineſs of God, ſo the holineſs of the Law moſt offends a carnal Heart, Iſa. 30. 11. Cauſe the Holy one of Iſrael to ceaſe from before us, prophecy to us right things: They could not endure God as the holy One. Herein God places their Rebellion, rejecting him as their Rule, ver. 9. Rebellious Children that will not hear the Law of the Lord. The more pure and precious any Diſcovery of God is, the more it is diſreliſh'd by the World: As Spiritual ſins are ſweeteſt to a carnal heart, ſo Spiritual truths are moſt diſtaſtful. The more of the brightneſs of the Sun any Beam conveys, the more offenſive it is to a diſtempered Eye.

2. As it doth moſt relate to, or lead to God. The Devil directs his fierceſt Batteries againſt thoſe Doctrines in the Word, and thoſe Graces in the Heart, which moſt exalt God, debaſe Man, and bring Men to the loweſt ſubjection to their Creator; Such is the Doctrine and Grace of juſtifying Faith. That Men hate not knowledge as knowledge, but as it directs them to chooſe the fear of the Lord, was the Determination of the Holy Ghoſt long ago, Pro. 1. 29. For that they hated knowledge, and did not chooſe the fear of the Lord. Whatſoever reſpects God, clears up guilt, witneſſes Man's revolt to him, rouzeth up Conſcience, and moves to a return to God, a Man naturally runs from, as Adam did from God, and ſeeks a ſhelter in ſome weak buſhes of Error, rather than appear before it. Not that Men are unwilling to inquire into, and contemplate ſome Divine Truths, which lie furtheſt from the heart, and concern not themſelves immediately with the rectifying the Soul: They may view them with ſuch a pleaſure, as ſome might take in beholding the Miracles of our Saviour, who could not endure his ſearching Doctrine. The light of Speculation may be pleaſant, but the light of Conviction is grievous; that which galls their Conſciences, and would affect them with a ſenſe of their duty to God.

Is it not eaſie to perceive, that when a Man begins to be ſerious in the concerns of the Honour of God, and the Duty of his Soul, he feels a reluctancy within him, even againſt the Pleas of Conſcience? which evidenceth that ſome unworthy principle has got footing in the hearts of Men, which fights againſt the declarations of God without, and the impreſſions of the Law of God within, at the ſame time when a Mans own Conſcience takes part with it, which is the ſubſtance of the Apoſtles diſcourſe, *Rom.*7.15,16, &c.

Cloſe diſcourſes of the Honour of God, and our Duty to him, are irkſome, when Men are upon a merry pin: They are like a damp in a Mine that takes away their breath; they ſhuffle them out as ſoon as they can, and are as unwilling to retain the ſpeech of them in their mouths, as the knowledge of them in their hearts. Gracious ſpeeches, inſtead of bettering many Men, diſtemper them, as ſometimes ſweet Perfumes affect a weak head with Aches.

3. As 'tis moſt contrary to ſelf. Men are unwilling to acquaint themſelves with any Truth that leads to God, becauſe it leads from ſelf. Every part of the Will of God, is more or leſs diſpleaſing, as it ſounds harſh againſt ſome carnal intereſt Men would ſet above God, or as a Mate with him. Man cannot deſire any intimacy with that Law which he regards as a Bird of prey, to pick out his Right-eye, or gnaw off his Right-hand, his Luſt dearer than himſelf. The reaſon we have ſuch hard thoughts of Gods Will, is becauſe we have ſuch high thoughts of our ſelves. 'Tis a hard matter to Believe or Will that, which hath no affinity with ſome principle in the Underſtanding, and no intereſt in our Will and Paſſions: Our unwillingneſs to be acquainted with the Will of God, ariſeth from the diſproportion between that and our corrupt hearts, We are alienated from the life of God in our minds, Eph.4.18,19. As we live not like God, ſo we neither think, or will as God: There is an antipathy in the heart of Man againſt that Doctrine, which teaches us to deny our ſelves, and be under the Rule of another: But whatſoever favours the ambition, luſts, and profits of Men, is eaſily entertainable. Many are fond of thoſe Sciences, which may enrich their Underſtandings, and grate not upon their ſenſual delights. Many have an admirable dexterity in finding out Philoſophical Reaſons, Mathematical Demonſtrations, or raiſing Obſervations upon the Records of Hiſtory, and ſpend much time, and many ſerious and affectionate thoughts, in the ſtudy of them; in thoſe they have not immediately to do with God, their beloved pleaſures are not impaired; 'tis a ſatisfaction to Self, without the exerciſe of any hoſtility againſt it. But had thoſe Sciences been againſt Self, as much as the Law and Will of God, they had long ſince been rooted out of the World. Why did the Young-man turn his back upon the Law of Chriſt? Becauſe of his worldly Self: Why did the Phariſees mock at the Doctrine of our Saviour, and not at their own Traditions? Becauſe of Covetous Self. Why did the Jews ſlight the perſon of our Saviour and put him to death, after the reading ſo many Credentials of his being ſent from Heaven? Becauſe of ambitious Self, that the Romans might not come and take away their Kingdom. If the Law of God were fitted to the humours of Self, it would be readily and cordially obſerved by all Men: Self is the meaſure of a world of ſeeming Religious actions; while God ſeems to be the object, and his Law the motive, Self is the rule and end, *Zach.*7.5. Did you faſt unto me, &c.

2. As men diſcover their diſowning the Will of God, as a rule by unwillingneſs to be acquainted with it, ſo they diſcover it by the contempt of it, after they cannot avoid the Notions and ſome impreſſions of it. The rule of God is burthenſome to a Sinner, he flies from it as from a frightful bug-bear, and unpleaſant yoke: Sin againſt the knowledge of the Law is therefore called, a going back from the Commandment of Gods lips, Job 23.12. A caſting Gods word behind them *, as a contemptible thing, fitter to be trodden in the dirt, than lodged in the heart: Nay, it is as a caſting it off as an abominable thing, for ſo the word Heb. ſignifies, *Hoſ.*8.3. Iſrael hath caſt off the thing that is good; an utter refuſal of God, Jer. 44. 16. As for the word which thou haſt ſpoken to us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken. In the ſlight of his Precepts his eſſential perfections are ſlighted. In diſowning his Will as a Rule, we diſown all thoſe Attributes which flow from his Will, as Goodneſs, Righteouſneſs and Truth. As an Act of the Divine Underſtanding is ſuppoſed to precede the Act of the Divine Will, ſo we ſlight the infinite Reaſon of God. Every Law, tho' it proceeds from the Will of the Law-giver, and doth formally conſiſt in an Act of the Will, yet it doth preſuppoſe an Act of the Underſtanding. If the Commandment be holy, juſt and good, as it is, *Rom.*7. *v.*12. If it be the Image of Gods Holineſs, a Tranſcript of his Righteouſneſs, and the Efflux of his Goodneſs, then in every breach of it dirt is caſt upon upon those Attributes which shine in it, and a slight of all the regards he hath to his own Honour, and all the Provisions he makes for his Creature. This Atheism or contempt of God, is more taken notice of by God than the matter of the sin it self. As a respect to God in a weak and imperfect Obedience is more than the matter of the Obedience it self; because it is an acknowledgment of God: So a contempt of God in an act of Disobedience, is more than the matter of Disobedience. The Creature stands in such an Act not only in a posture of distance from God, but defiance of him: It was not the bare act of Murder and Adultery which Nathan charged upon David, but the Atheistical principle which Spirited those evil acts. The despising the Commandment of the Lord, was the venom of them *. 'Tis possible to break a Law without Contempt; But when Men pretend to believe there is a God, and that this is the Law of God, it shews a Contempt of His Majesty: Men naturally account God's Laws too strict, his Yoak too heavy, and his limits too strait: And he that liveth in a contempt of this Law, curseth God in his Life: How can they believe there is a God, who despise him as a Ruler? How can they believe him to be a Guide, that disdain to follow him? To think we firmly believe a God without living conformable to his Law, is an idle and vain imagination. The true and sensible Motion of a God cannot subsist with disorder and an affected unrighteousness.

* Pſal. 50. 17.

* 2Sam. 12. 9, 10.

This Contempt is seen,

1. In any presumptuous breach of any part of his Law. Such sins are frequently called in Scripture Rebellions, which are a denial of the Allegiance we owe to him. By a wilful Refusal of his Right in one part, we root up the Foundation of that Rule he doth justly challenge over us: His Right is as extensive to command us in one thing, as in another: And if it be disown'd in one thing, 'tis vertually disowned in all, and the whole Statute-Book of God is contemned, Jam. 2. 10, 11. Whosoever shall keep the whole Law, and yet offend in one point, is guilty of all. A willing breaking one part, tho' there be a willing observance of all the other points of it, is a breach of the whole, because the Authority of God, which gives Sanction to the whole, is slighted: The Obedience to the rest is dissembled: For the Love which is the root of all Obedience, is wanting; For love is the fulfilling the whole law *. The rest are obeyed because they cross not Carnal desire so much as the other, and so 'tis an Observance of himself, not of God. Besides, the Authority of God, which is not prevalent to restrain us from the Breach of one Point, would be of as little force with us to restrain us from the breach of all the rest, did the Allurements of the flesh give us as strong a diversion from the one, as from the other: And though the command that is transgrest be the least in the whole Law, yet the Authority which enjoyns it is the same with that which enacts the greatest. And it is not so much the matter of the command, as the Authority commanding which lays the Obligation.

*Ro. 13. 10.

2. In the natural averseness to the declarations of God's Will and Mind, which way so ever they tend. Since Man affected to be as God, he desires to be boundless; he would not have Fetters, tho' they be golden ones, and conduce to his happiness; tho' the Law of God be a strength to them, yet they will not, Isa. 30. 15. In returning shall be your strength, and you would not. They would not have a bridle to restrain them from running into the pit, nor be hedged in by the Law, tho' for their security: As if they thought it too slavish and low spirited a thing to be guided by the Will of another: Hence Man is compared to a Wild-Ass, that loves to snuff up the Wind in the Wilderness at her pleasure, rather than come under the guidance of God; From whatsoever quarter of the Heavens you pursue her, she will run to the other. * Jer. 2. 24.

The Israelites could not endure what was Commanded, * tho' in regard of the Moral part, agreeable to what they found written in their own Nature; And to the observance whereof, they had the highest Obligations of any People under Heaven, since God had by many Prodigies delivered them from a Cruel slavery: The memory of which preface the Decalogue, Exod. 20. 2. I am the Lord thy God which have brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, out of the House of Bondage: They could not think of the Rule of their Duty, but they must reflect upon the grand Incentive of it in their Redemption from Ægyptian Thraldom; Yet his people were cross to God, which way soever he moved: When they were in the Brick-kilns they cryed for deliverance; when they had heavenly Manna, they longed for their Onions and Garlick. In Numb. 14. 3. they repent of their deliverance from Ægypt, and talk of returning again to seek the Remedy of their Evils in the hands of their cruelest Enemies; and would rather put themselves into the Irons, whence God had deliver'd them, than believe one word of the promise of God for giving them a fruitful Land. But when Moses tells them God's order, that they should turn back by the way of the Red-Sea, ver. 25. and that God had confirmed it by an Oath, that they should not see the Land of Canaan, ver. 28. they then run cross to this Command of God, and instead of marching towards the Red-Sea, which they had wished for before, they will go up to Canaan, as in spight of God and his Threatning. We will go to the Place which the Lord hath promised, ver. 40. which Moses calls a Transgressing the Commandment of the Lord, ver. 41. They would presume to go up, notwithstanding Moses's Prohibition, and are smitten by the Amalekites. When God gives them a Precept, with a Promise to go up to Canaan, they long for Ægypt; when God commands them to return to the Red-Sea, which was nearer to the place they longed for; they will shift sides and go up to Canaan *. And when they found they were to traverse the Solitudes of the Desart, they took Pett against God, and instead of thanking him for the late Victory against the Canaanites, they reproach him for his Conduct from Ægypt, and the Manna wherewith he nourished them in the Wilderness: They would not go to Canaan, the way God had chosen, nor preserve themselves by the means God had ordained: They would not be at God's disposal, but complain of the badness of the way, and the lightness of Manna, empty of any necessary juyce to sustain their Nature. They murmuringly sollicite the Will and Power of God to change all that order which he had resolved in his Council, and take another conformable to their vain foolish desires: And they signified thereby that they would invade his Conduct, and that he should act according to their fancy; which the Psalmist calls a tempting of God, and limiting the holy One of Israel, Psalm 78. 41.

* Num. 21. 4, 5. & Daillé Ser. 1 Cor. 10. Ser. 9. page 234, 235, 240.

To what point soever the Declarations of God stand, the Will of Man turns the quite contrary way. Is not the carriage of this Nation (the best then in the World) a discovery of the depth of our natural Corruption, how cross Man is to God? And that charge God brings against them, may be brought against all Men by Nature, that they despised his Judgments, and have a rooted Abhorrency of his Statutes in their Soul, Lev. 26. 43. No sooner had they recovered from one Rebellion, but they revolted to another: So difficult a thing it is for Man's Nature to be rendred capable of conforming to the Will of God: The carriage of his People is but a Copy of the Nature of Mankind, and is written for our admonition, 1 Cor. 10. 11. From this temper Men * Pſal. 119. v. 126. are ſaid to make *void the Law of God: To make it of no Obligation, an antiquated and moth-eaten Record. And the Phariſees by ſetting up their Traditions againſt the Will of God, are ſaid to make his Law of none effect, to ſtrip it of all its Authority, as the Greek word ſignifies, Mat. 15. 6.

3. We have the greateſt ſlight of that Will of God which is moſt for his Honour and his greateſt Pleaſure. 'Tis the Nature of Man ever ſince Adam to do ſo, Hoſ. 6. 6, 7. God deſired mercy and not ſacrifice, the knowledge of himſelf more than burnt offering; but they like men, as Adam, have tranſgreſſed the Covenant, invade God's Rights, and not let him be Lord of one Tree.

We are more curious Obſervers of the Fringes of the Law, than of the greater concerns of it. The Jews were diligent in Sacrifices and Offerings, which God did not urge upon them as Principals, but as Types of other things; but negligent of the Faith which was to be eſtabliſhed by him: Holineſs, Mercy, Pity, which concerned the Honour of God, as Governour of the World, and were imitations of the Holineſs and Goodneſs of God, they were Strangers to. This is God's Complaint, Iſa. 1. 11, 12. and 16, 17.

We ſhall find our Hearts moſt averſe to the Obſervation of thoſe Laws which are Eternal and Eſſential to Righteouſneſs; ſuch that he could not but command, as he is a Righteous Governour; in the obſervation of which, we come neareſt to him and expreſs his Image more clearly: As thoſe Laws for an inward and ſpiritual Worſhip, a ſupream Affection to him. God in regard of his Righteouſneſs and Holineſs of his Nature, and the Excellency of his Being, could not command the contrary to theſe: But this part of his Will our Hearts moſt ſwell againſt, our corruption doth moſt ſnarl at; whereas thoſe Laws which are only poſitive and have no intrinſick Righteouſneſs in them, but depend purely upon the Will of the Law-giver, and may be changed at his pleaſure (which the other, that have an intrinſick Righteouſneſs in them, cannot) we better comply with, than that part of his Will that doth * Pſ. 50. 6, 17, 19. expreſs more the Righteouſneſs of his Nature; * ſuch as the Ceremonial part of Worſhip, and the Ceremonial Law among the Jews: We are more willing to obſerve Order in ſome outward Attendances and glavering Devotions, than diſcard ſecret Affections to Evil, Crucifie inward Luſts and delightful Thoughts: A hanging down the head like a Bulruſh is not difficult, but the breaking the Heart like a Potter's Veſſel to ſhreds and duſt, (a Sacrifice God delights in, whereby the excellency of God and the vileneſs of the Creature is owned) goes againſt the Grain: To cut off an outward branch is not ſo hard, as to hack at the Root. What God moſt loaths, as moſt contrary to his Will, we moſt love: No ſin did God ſo ſeverely hate, and no ſin were the Jews more enclined unto, than that of Idolatry. The Heathen had not changed their God, as the Jews had changed their Glory, Jer. 2. 11. And all Men are naturally tainted with this ſin, which is ſo contrary to the Holy and excellent Nature of God: By how much the more defect there is of purity in our reſpects to God, by ſo much the more reſpect there is to ſome Idol within or without us, to Humour, Cuſtom and Intereſt, &c.

Never did any Law of God meet with ſo much Oppoſition as Chriſtianity, which was the deſign of God from the firſt promiſe to the exhibiting the Redeemer, and from thence to the end of the World: All People drew Swords at firſt againſt it: The Romans prepared Yokes for their Neighbours, but provided Temples for the Idols thoſe People Worſhipped. But Chriſtianity, the choiceſt deſign and moſt delightful part of the will of God, never met with a kind entertainment at firſt in any place: Rome that entertained all others, perſecuted this with Fire and Sword, tho' ſealed by greater Teſtimonies from Heaven, than their own Records could report in favour of their Idols.

4. In running the greateſt hazards, and expoſing our ſelves to more trouble to croſs the Will of God, than is neceſſary to the obſervance of it. 'Tis a vain charge Men bring againſt the Divine Precepts, that they are rigorous, ſevere, difficult: When, beſides the Contradiction to our Saviour, who tells us his Yoke is eaſie, and his Burthen light, they thwart their own calm Reaſon and Judgment. Is there not more difficulty to be Vicious, Covetous, Violent, Cruel, than to be Vertuous, Charitable, Kind? Doth the Will of God enjoyn that, that is not conformable to right Reaſon, and ſecretly delightful in the exerciſe and iſſue? And on the contrary what doth Satan and the World engage us in, that is not full of Moleſtation and Hazard? Is it a ſweet and comely thing to combate continually againſt our own Conſciences, and reſiſt our own Light, and commence a perpetual Quarrel againſt our ſelves, as we ordinarily do when we ſin? They in the Prophet, Mich. 6. 6, 7, 8. would be at the expence of thouſands of Rams, and ten thouſand Rivers of Oyl, if they could compaſs them, yea, would ſtrip themſelves of their Natural Affection to their firſt-born to expiate the ſin of their Soul, rather than to do Juſtice, love Mercy and walk humbly with God; things more conducible to the Honour of God, the welfare of the World, the ſecurity of their Souls, and of a more eaſie practice than the Offerings they wiſhed for.

Do not Men then diſown God when they will walk in ways hedged with Thorns, wherein they meet with the Arrows of Conſcience at every turn in their ſides, and ſlide down to an everlaſting Puniſhment, ſink under an intolerable ſlavery to contradict the Will of God? When they will prefer a ſenſual ſatisfaction, with a Combuſtion in their Conſciences, Violation of their Reaſons, gnawing Cares and weary Travels, before the Honour of God, the Dignity of their Natures, the happineſs of Peace and Health, which might be preſerved at a cheaper rate, than they are at to deſtroy them?

5. In the unwillingneſs and awkardneſs of the heart, when it is to pay God a Service. Men do evil with both hands earneſtly, * but do good with one hand * Mic. 7. 3. faintly; no Life in the Heart, nor any diligence in the hand. What ſlight and looſe Thoughts of God doth this unwillingneſs imply? 'Tis a wrong to his Providence, as tho' we were not under his Government, and had no need of his Aſſiſtance. A wrong to his excellency, as though there were no amiableneſs in him to make his ſervice deſirable. An injury to his Goodneſs and Power, as if he were not able or willing to reward the Creature's Obedience, or careleſs not to take notice of it. 'Tis a ſign we receive little ſatisfaction in him, and that there is a great unſuitableneſs between him and us.

1. There is a kind of conſtraint in the firſt engagement. We are rather preſt to it than enter our ſelves Volunteers. What we call ſervice to God, is done naturally, much againſt our Wills; 'tis not a delightful Food, but a bitter Potion; we are rather haled than run to it. There is a contradiction of ſin within us againſt our Service, as there was a Contradiction of Sinners without our Saviour againſt his doing the Will of God. Our Hearts are unweildy to any Spiritual Service of God; we are fain to uſe a violence with them ſometimes. Hezekiah, it is ſaid, walked before the Lord with a perfect Heart, 2 Kings 20. 9. he walked, he made himſelf to walk: Man naturally cares not for a walk with God: If he hath any Communion with him, 'tis with ſuch a dulneſs and heavineſs of Spirit, as if he wiſhed himſelf out of his Company. Man's Nature being contrary to Holineſs, hath an averſion to any act of Homage to God; becauſe Holineſs muſt at leaſt be pretended: In every Duty wherein we have a Communion with God, Holineſs is requiſite. Now as Men are againſt the truth of Holineſs, becauſe it is unſuitable to them, ſo they are not Friends to thoſe Duties which require it, and for ſome ſpace divert them from the Thoughts of their beloved Luſts. The Word of the Lord is a Yoke, Prayer a Drudgery, Obedience a ſtrange Element. We are like Fiſh, * Job 15. 16. that drink up Iniquity like Water *, and come not to the Bank without the force of an Angle: No more willing to do ſervice for God, than a Fiſh is of it ſelf to do ſervice for Man. 'Tis a conſtrained act to ſatisfie Conſcience, and ſuch are Servile, not Son-like Performances, and ſpring from bondage more than Affection: If Conſcience, like a Task-maſter, did not ſcourge them to Duty, they would never perform it.

Let us appeal to our ſelves, whether we are not more unwilling to Secret, Cloſet, Hearty Duty to God, than to joyn with others in ſome external Service; as if thoſe inward Services, were a going to the Rack, and rather our Pennance than Priviledge. How much ſervice hath God in the World from the ſame Principle that Vagrants perform their Task in Bridewel? How glad are many of Evaſions to back them in the neglect of the Commands of God, of corrupt Reaſonings from the Fleſh to way-lay an act of Obedience, and a multitude of Excuſes to blunt the edge of the Precept? The very Service of God ſhall be a pretence to deprive him of the Obedience due to him. Saul will not be ruled by God's Will in the deſtroying the Cattle of the Amalekites, but by his own; and will impoſe upon the Will and Wiſdom of God, judging God miſtaken in his Command, and that the Cattle God thought fitteſt to be meat to the Fouls, were fitter to be Sacrifices on the Altar *. * 1 Sam. 15. 3, 9, 15, 21.

If we do perform any part of his Will, is it not for our own ends to have ſome deliverance from trouble? Iſa. 26. 16. In trouble have they viſited thee, they poured out a Prayer when thy Chaſtning was upon them. In Affliction he ſhall find them kneeling in Homage and Devotion. In proſperity, he ſhall feel them picking with Contempt; they can pour out a Prayer in Diſtreſs, and ſcarce drop one when they are delivered.

2. There is a ſlightneſs in our Service of God. We are loth to come into his Preſence, and when we do come, we are loth to continue with him. We pay not an Homage to him heartily, as to our Lord and Governour; we regard him not as our Maſter, whoſe Work we ought to do, and whoſe Honour we ought to aim at.

1. In regard of the matter of Service. When the Torn, the Lame and the Sick is offered to God; * ſo thin and lean a Sacrifice, that you might have thrown it to the ground with a puff; ſo ſome underſtand the meaning of [You have ſnuff'd at it.] Men have naturally ſuch ſlight Thoughts of the Majeſty and Law of God, that they think any Service is good enough for him, and conformable to his Law. The dulleſt and deadeſt times we think fitteſt to pay God a Service in; When ſleep is ready to cloſe our Eyes, and we are unfit to ſerve our ſelves, we think it a fit time to open our Hearts to God. How few Morning Sacrifices hath God from any Perſons and Families? Men leap out of their Beds to their carnal Pleaſures or worldly Employments, without any thought of their Creator and Preſerver, or any reflection upon his Will as the Rule of our daily Obedience. And as many reſerve the Dregs of their Lives, their Old-age, to offer up their Souls to God: So they reſerve the Dreggs of the Day, their ſleeping time for the offering up their Service to him: How many grudge to ſpend their beſt time in the ſerving the Will of God, and reſerve for him the ſickly and rheumatick part of their Lives; the remainder of that which the Devil and their own Luſts have fed upon? * Mal. 1. 13, 14.

Would not any Prince or Governour judge a Preſent half eaten up by wild Beaſts, or that which died in a Ditch, a contempt of his Royalty? A Corrupt Thing is too baſe and vile for ſo great a King as God is, whoſe Name is Dreadful. When by Age Men are weary of their own Bodies, they would preſent them to God; yet grudgingly, as if a tired Body were too good for him, ſnuffing at the Command for Service. God calls for our beſt, and we give him the worſt.

2. In reſpect of Frame. We think any Frame will ſerve God's turn, which ſpeaks our ſlight of God as a Ruler. Man naturally performs Duty with an unholy Heart, whereby it becomes an Abomination to God, Pro. 28. 9. He that turns away his Ear from hearing the Law, even his Prayers ſhall be an abomination to God. The Services which he commands, he hates for their evil Frames or corrupt ends, Am. 5. 21. I hate, I deſpiſe your Feaſt-days, I will not ſmell in your ſolemn Aſſemblies: God requires gracious Services, and we give him corrupt ones: We do not rouze up our Hearts, as David called upon his Lute and Harp to awake, Pſ. 57. 8. Our Hearts are not given to him, we put him off with bodily exerciſe: The Heart is but Ice to what it doth not affect.

1. There is not that natural vigor in the obſervance of God, which we have in worldly Buſineſs: When we ſee a livelineſs in Men in other things, change the Scene into a Motion towards God, how ſuddenly doth their vigor ſhrink and their Hearts freeze into ſluggiſhneſs? Many times we ſerve God as languiſhingly as if we were afraid he ſhould accept us, and pray as coldly as if we were unwilling he ſhould hear us, and take away that Luſt by which we are Governed, and which Conſcience forces us to pray againſt; as if we were afraid God ſhould ſet up his own Throne and Government in our Hearts. How fleeting are we in Divine Meditation, how ſleepy in Spiritual Exerciſes? but in other Exerciſes active: The Soul doth not awaken it ſelf, and excite thoſe Animal and Vital Spirits, which it will in bodily Recreations and Sports; much leſs the Powers of the Soul; whereby 'tis evident we prefer the latter before any Service to God: Since there is a fulneſs of Animal Spirits, why might they not be excited in holy Duties as well as in other Operations, but that there is a Reluctancy in the Soul to exerciſe its Supremacy in this Caſe, and perform any thing becoming a Creature in Subjection to God as a Ruler?

2. 'Tis evident alſo in the Diſtractions we have in his Service: How loth are we to ſerve God fixedly one Hour, nay, a part of an Hour, notwithſtanding all the Thoughts of His Majeſty, and the Eternity of Glory ſet before our Eye? What Man is there ſince the fall of Adam, that ſerved God one Hour without many Wandrings and unſuitable Thoughts unfit for that Service? How ready are our Hearts to ſtart out and unite themſelves with any worldly Objects that pleaſe us?

3. Wearineſs in it evidenceth it. To be weary of our Dulneſs ſignifies a Deſire; to be weary of Service ſignifies a Diſcontent to be ruled by God: ——— How tired are we in the Performance of Spiritual Duties, when in the Vain Triflings of Time we have a perpetual Motion. How will

How will many willingly revel whole Nights, when their hearts will flag at the Threshold of a Religious Service? Like Dagon, * lose, both our heads to think, and hands to act, when the Ark of God is present: Some in the Prophet wished the new Moon and the Sabbath over, that they might sell their Corn, and be busied again in their worldly Affairs: * A slight and weariness of the Sabbath, was a slight of the Lord of the Sabbath, and of that freedom from the yoke and rule of sin, which was signified by it. The design of the Sacrifices in the New Moon, was to signifie a rest from the tyranny of sin, and a consecration to the Spiritual Service of God. Servants that are quickly weary of their work, are weary of the Authority of their Master that enjoyns it: If our hearts had a value for God, it would be with us as with the Needle to the Loadstone; there would be upon his beck a speedy motion to him, and a fixed union with him. When the Judgments and Affections of the Saints shall be fully refined in glory, they shall be willing to behold the face of God, and be under his Government to Eternity, without any weariness. As the holy Angels have owned God as their Soveraign near these six thousand years, without being weary of running on his Errands: But alas! while the flesh clogs us, there will be some relicks of unwillingness to hear his Injunctions, and weariness in performing them; tho' Men may excuse those things by extrinsick causes, yet Gods unerring Judgment calls it a weariness of himself, Isa. 43.22. Thou hast not called upon me, oh Jacob, but thou hast been weary of me, oh Israel. Of this he taxeth his own people, when he tells them he would have the Beasts of the Field; The Dragons and the Owls; the Gentiles, that the Jews counted no better than such, to honour him and acknowledge him their Rule in a way of duty, v. 20. 21.

6. This contempt is seen in a deserting the Rule of God, when our expectations are not answered upon our Service. When Services are performed from carnal Principles, they are soon cast off when carnal ends meet not with desired satisfaction. But when we own our selves Gods Servants, and God our Master, our eyes will wait upon him till he have mercy on us *. 'Tis one part of the duty we owe to God as our Master in Heaven, to continue in Prayer, Col. 4.1,2. and by the same reason in all other service, and to watch in the same with Thanksgiving: To watch for occasions of praise, to watch with chearfulness for further manifestations of his Will, strength to perform it, success in the performance, that we may from all draw matter of praise: As we are in a posture of obedience to his precepts, so we should be in a posture of waiting for the blessing of it.

But naturally we reject the duty we owe to God, if he do not speed the blessing we expect from him. How many do secretly mutter the same as they in Job 21.15. What is the Almighty that we should serve him, and what profit shall we have if we pray to him? They serve not God out of Conscience to his Commands, but for some carnal profit; and if God make them to wait for it, they will not stay his leisure, but cease soliciting him any longer. Two things are exprest, that God was not worthy of any homage from them. What is the Almighty that we should serve him? And that the Service of him would not bring them in a good Revenue, or an advantage of that kind they expected. Interest drives many Men on to some kind of Service, and when they do not find an advance of that, they will acknowledge God no more; but like some Beggers, if you give them not upon their asking, and calling you good Master, from blessing they will turn to cursing.

How often do men do that secretly, practically, if not plainly, which Jobs Wife advised him to, Curse God, and cast off that disguise of Integrity they had assumed? Job 2.9. Dost thou still retain thy integrity? Curse God. What a stir and puling, and crying, is here? Cast off all thoughts of Religious Service, and be at Daggers drawing with that God, who for all thy service of him, has made thee so wretched a spectacle to men, and a banquet for worms. The like temper is deciphered in the Jews, Mal. 3.14. 'Tis in vain to serve God, and what profit is it that we have kept his Ordinances, that we have walked mournfully before the Lord? What profit is it that we have regarded his Statutes, and carried our selves in a way of subjection to God, as our Soveraign, when we inherit nothing but sorrow, and the Idolatrous Neighbours swim in all kind of pleasures? As if it were the most miserable thing to acknowledge God. If men have not the benefits they expect, they think God unrighteous in himself, and injurious to them, in not conferring the favour they imagine they have merited: And if they have not that recompence, they will deny God that subjection they owe to him as Creatures. Grace moves to God upon a sence of duty; corrupt Nature upon a sence of Interest: Sincerity is encouraged by gracious returns, but is not melted away by Gods delay or refusal: Corrupt Nature would have God at its beck, and steers a course of Duty by hope of some Carnal profit, not by a sence of the Soveraignty of God.

7. This contempt is seen in breaking promises with God *. [One while the Conscience of a man makes Vows of new Obedience, and perhaps binds himself with many an Oath, but they prove like Jonah's Gourd, withering the next day after their birth. This was Pharaoh's temper; under a storm he would submit to God, and let Israel go; but when the storm is ended, he will not be under Gods controul, and Israels slavery shall be increased: The fear of Divine wrath, makes many a Sinner turn his back upon his sin, and the love of his ruling Lust makes him turn his back upon his true Lord. This is from the prevalency of sin, that disputes with God for the Sovereignty.]

When God hath sent a sharp Disease, as a Messenger to bind men to their Beds, and make an interruption of their sinful pleasures, their mouths are full of promises of a new Life, in hope to escape the just vengeance of God: The sence of Hell, which strikes strongly upon them, makes them full of such pretended resolutions when they howl upon their Beds. But if God be pleased in his patience, to give them a respite, to take off the Chains wherewith he seemed to be binding them for destruction, and recruit their strength, they are more earnest in their sins, than they were in their promises of a Reformation; as if they had got the mastery of God, and had outwitted him. How often doth God charge them * of not returning to him after a succession of Judgments? So hard it is, not only to allure, but to scourge men to an acknowledgment of God as their Ruler.

Confider then,

Are we not naturally inclined to disobey the known Will of God? Can we say, Lord, for thy sake we refrain the thing to which our hearts incline? Do we not allow our selves to be licentious, earthly, vain, proud, revengeful, tho' we know it will offend him? Have we not been peevishly cross to his declared Will? Run Counter to him and those Laws which express most of the glory of his holiness? Is not this to disown him as our Rule? Did we never wish there were no Law to bind us, no Precept to check our Idols? What is this, but to wish that God would depose himself from being our Governor, and leave us to our own Conduct? Or else to wish that he were as unholy as our selves, as careless of his own Laws as we are; that is, that he were no more a God than we, a God as sinful and unrighteous as our selves? He whose heart riseth against the Law of God to unlaw it, riſeth againſt the Author of that Law to undeifie him. He that caſts contempt upon the deareſt thing God hath in the World, that which is the Image of his Holineſs, the delight of his Soul; that which he hath given a ſpecial charge to maintain, and that becauſe it is holy, juſt and good; would not ſtick to rejoyce at the deſtruction of God himſelf. If God's Holineſs and Righteouſneſs in the beam be deſpiſed, much more will an immenſe Goodneſs and Holineſs in the Fountain be rejected: He that wiſheth a beam far from his eyes, becauſe it offends and ſcorcheth him, can be no friend to the Sun, from whence that beam doth iſſue. How unworthy a Creature is Man, ſince he only, a rational Creature, is the ſole Being that withdraws it ſelf from the Rule of God in this Earth? And how miſerable a Creature is he alſo, ſince departing from the Order of Gods Goodneſs, he falls into the Order of his Juſtice; and while he refuſeth God to be the Rule of his Life, he cannot avoid him being the Judge of his puniſhment? 'Tis this is the Original of all Sin, and the Fountain of all our Miſery.

This is the firſt thing; Man diſowns the Rule which God ſets him.

Secondly, 2. Man naturally owns any other rule rather than that of Gods preſcribing. The Law of God orders one thing, the heart of Man deſires another. There is not the baſeſt thing in the World, but Man would ſooner ſubmit to be guided by it, rather than by the holineſs of God; and when any thing that God commands croſſes our own Wills, we value it no more, than we would the advice of a poor deſpicable Beggar.

How many are lovers of Pleaſure, more than lovers of God? * To make ſomething which contributes to the perfection of Nature, as Learning, Wiſdom, Moral Vertues, our Rule, would be more tolerable: But to pay that homage to a Swiniſh pleaſure, which is the right of God, is an inexcuſable contempt of him. The greateſt excellency in the World is infinitely below God; much more a beſtial delight, which is both diſgraceful and below the nature of Man. If we made the vileſt Creature on Earth our Idol, 'tis more excuſable than to be the ſlave of a brutiſh pleaſure. The viler the thing is that doth poſſeſs the Throne in our heart, the greater contempt it is of him who can only claim a right to it, and is worthy of it. Sin is the firſt object of Mans election, as ſoon as the faculty whereby he chuſes comes to exerciſe its power: And it is ſo dear to Man, that it is, in the eſtimate of our Saviour, counted as the right hand, and the right eye, dear, precious, and uſeful Members.

* 2 Tim. 3. v. 4.

1. The rule of Satan is owned before the rule of God. The natural Man would rather be under the guidance of Satan than the yoke of his Creator. Adam choſe him to be his Governor in Paradice. No ſooner had Satan ſpoke of God in a way of deriſion, Gen. 3. v. 1, 5. Yea, hath God ſaid? But Man follows his Counſel, and approves of the ſcoff; and the greateſt part of his poſterity, have not been wiſer by his fall, but would rather ramble in the Devils Wilderneſs, than to ſtay in Gods fold. 'Tis by the ſin of Man that the Devil is become the God of the World, as if Men were the Electors of him to the Government: Sin is an Election of him for a Lord, and a putting the Soul under his Government. Thoſe that live according to the courſe of the World, and are loth to diſpleaſe it, are under the Government of the Prince of it. The greateſt part of the Works done in the World, is to enlarge the Kingdom of Satan; for how many Ages were the Laws, whereby the greateſt part of the World was governed in the Affairs of Religion, the fruits of his Uſurpation and Policy? When Temples were erected to him, Prieſts conſecrated to his Service: The Rites uſed in moſt of the Worſhip of the World, were either of his own Coining, or the miſapplying the Rites, God had ordained to himſelf, under the notion of a God. Whence the Apoſtle calls all Idolatrous Feaſts, the Table of Devils, the Cup of Devils, Sacrifice to Devils, fellowſhip with Devils *, Devils being the real object of the Pagan Worſhip, tho' not formally intended by the Worſhipper; tho' in ſome parts of the Indies, the direct and peculiar worſhip is to the Devil, that he might not hurt them. And tho' the intention of others was to offer to God, and not the Devil, yet ſince the action was contrary to the Will of God, he regards it as a Sacrifice to Devils. It was not the intention of Jeroboam to eſtabliſh Prieſts to the Devil, when he Conſecrated them to the Service of his Calves, for Jehu afterwards calls them the Servants of the Lord, 2 Kings 10. 23. See if there be here none of the Servants of the Lord, to diſtinguiſh them from the Servants of Baal, ſignifying that the true God was worſhipped under thoſe Images, and not Baal, nor any of the Gods of the Heathens; yet Scripture couples the Calves and Devils together, and aſcribes the Worſhip given to one, to be given to the other. * He ordained him Prieſts for the high places, and for the Devils, and for the Calves which he had made; ſo that they were Sacrifices to Devils, notwithſtanding the intention of Jeroboam and his Subjects, that had ſet them up and worſhipped them, becauſe they were contrary to the mind of God, and agreeable to the Doctrine and Mind of Satan, tho' the object of their worſhip, in their own intention, were not the Devil, but ſome Deified Man, or ſome Canonized Saint: The intention makes not a good action: If ſo, when men kill the beſt Servants of God with a deſign to do God Service, as our Saviour foretels, * the action would not be Murder; yet who can call it otherwiſe, ſince God is wronged in the perſons of his Servants? Since moſt of the worſhip of the World, which mens corrupt natures incline them to, is falſe and different from the revealed Will of God, 'tis a practical acknowledgment of the Devil, as the Governor, by acknowledging and practiſing thoſe Doctrines, which have not the ſtamp of Divine Revelation upon them, but were minted by Satan to depreſs the Honour of God in the World. It doth concern men then to take good heed, that in their acts of worſhip they have a Divine Rule, otherwiſe it is an owning the Devil as the Rule, for there is no Medium: Whatſoever is not from God, is from Satan.

* 1 Cor. 10. v. 20, 21.

* 2 Chron. 11. 15.

* Joh. 16. 2.

But to bring this cloſer to us, and conſider that which is more common among us: Men that are in a natural condition, and wedded to their luſts, are under the paternal Government of Satan, Joh. 8. 44. Ye are of your Father the Devil, and the luſts of your Father you will do. If we divide Sin into Spiritual and Carnal, which diviſion comprehends all, the Devils Authority is owned in both: In Spiritual, we conform to his example, becauſe thoſe he commits. In Carnal, we obey his Will, becauſe thoſe he directs: He acts the one, and ſets us a Copy: He tempts to the other, and gives us a kind of a Precept. Thus Man by Nature being a willing Servant of Sin, is more deſirous to be bound in the Devils Iron Chains, than in Gods ſilken Cords.

What greater Atheiſm can there be, than to uſe God as if he were inferiot to the Devil? To take the part of his greateſt Enemy, who drew all others into the faction againſt him? To pleaſure Satan by offending God, and gratifie our Adverſary with the injury of our Creator? For a Subject to take Arms againſt his Prince with the deadlieſt Enemy, both himſelf and Prince hath, in the whole world, adds a greater blackneſs to the Rebellion.

2. The more viſible Rule preferred before God in the World, is Man. The Opinion of the World is more our Rule than the Precept of God; and many Mens Abſtinence from Sin, is not from a ſenſe of the Divine Will, no, not from a Principle of Reaſon, but from an Affection to ſome Man on whom they depend, or fear of Puniſhment from a Superior: The ſame Principle with that in a ravenous Beaſt, who abſtains from what he deſires for fear only of a Stick or Club: Men will walk with the Herds, go in faſhion with the moſt, ſpeak and act as the moſt do: While we conform to the World, we cannot perform a reaſonable Service to God, nor prove, nor approve practically what the good and acceptable Will of God is. The Apoſtle puts them in Oppoſition to one another *. *Rom. 12. v. 1, 2.

This appears,

1. In complying more with the Dictates of Men, than the Will of God. Men draw Encouragement from God's Forbearance, to ſin more freely againſt him; but the fear of Puniſhment for breaking the Will of Man, lays a reſtraint upon them: The fear of Man is a more powerful Curb to reſtrain Men in their Duty, than the fear of God: So we may pleaſe a Friend, a Maſter, a Governour, we are regardleſs whether we pleaſe God or no: Men-pleaſers are more than God-pleaſers: Man is more advanced as a Rule, than God, when we ſubmit to humane Orders, and ſtagger and diſpute againſt Divine. Would not a Prince think himſelf ſlighted in his Authority, if any of his Servants ſhould decline his Commands, by the Order of one of his Subjects? And will not God make the ſame Account of us, when we deny or delay our Obedience, for fear of one of his Creatures? In the fear of Man, we as little acknowledge God for our Sovereign, as we do for our Comforter: Iſa. 51. 12, 13. I, even I am he, that comforteth you, who art thou, that thou ſhouldſt be afraid of a Man that ſhall die, &c. and forgetteſt the Lord thy Maker, &c? We put a ſlight upon God, as if he were not able to bear us out in our Duty to him, and uncapable to ballance the ſtrength of an arm of fleſh.

2. In obſerving that which is materially the Will of God, not becauſe 'tis his Will, but the Injunctions of Men. As the Word of God may be received, yet not as his Word, ſo the Will of God may be perform'd yet not as his Will. 'Tis materially done, but not formally obeyed: An Action, and Obedience in that Action are two things: As when Man commands the ceaſing from all Works of the ordinary Calling on the Sabbath, 'tis the ſame that God enjoyns; the Ceſſation, or Attendance of his Servants on the hearing the Word, are conformable in the matter of it to the Will of God; but it is only conformable in the obediential part of the acts to the Will of Man, when it is done only with reſpect to a Humane Precept. As God hath a right to enact his Laws without conſulting his Creature in the way of his Government: So Man is bound to obey thoſe Laws, without conſulting whether they be agreeable to Mens Laws or no: If we act the Will of God, becauſe the Will of our Superiors concurs with it, we obey not God in that, but Man; a humane Will being the Rule of our Obedience, and not the Divine: This is to vilifie God, and make him inferior to Man in our eſteem, and a valuing the Rule of Man above that of our Creator.

Since God is the higheſt Perfection and infinitely good, whatſoever Rule he gives the Creature muſt be good, elſe it cannot proceed from God. A baſe thing cannot be the product of an infinite Excellency: and an unreaſonable thing cannot be the product of an infinite Wiſdom and Goodneſs: Therefore as the reſpecting God's Will before the Will of Man is excellent and worthy of a Creature, and is an acknowledging the Excellency, Goodneſs and Wiſdom of God; ſo the eying the Will of Man before and above the Will of God, is, on the contrary, a denyal of all thoſe in a lump, and a preferring the Wiſdom, Goodneſs and Power of Man in his Law above all thoſe perfections of God in his. Whatſoever Men do that looks like Moral Vertue or Abſtinence from Vices, not out of Obedience to the Rule God hath ſet, but becauſe of Cuſtom, Neceſſity, Example or Imitation, they may in the doing of it be rather ſaid to be Apes than Chriſtians.

3. In obeying the Will of Man, when 'tis contrary to the Will of God. As the Iſraelites willingly walked after the Commandment, * not of God, but of Jeroboam in the caſe of the Calves: And made the Kings Heart glad with their Lies. *They cheered him with their ready Obedience to his Command for Idolatry (which was a lie in it ſelf, and a lie in them) againſt the Commandment of God and the Warnings of the Prophets; rather than cheer the Heart of God with their Obedience to his worſhip inſtituted by him. Nay, and when God offered them, to cure their wound, their Iniquity breaks out afreſh; they would neither have him as a Lord to rule them, nor a Phyſician to cure them, Hoſ. 7. 1. When I would have healed Iſrael, then the Iniquity of Ephraim was diſcovered. The whole Perſian Nation ſhrunk at once from a Duty due by the Light of Nature to the Deity, upon a Decree, That neither God or Man ſhould be petitioned to for thirty Days, but only their King. One, only Daniel, excepted againſt it, who preferred his Homage to God above Obedience to his Prince. An Adulterous Generation is many times made the Rule of Mens Profeſſions, as is implyed in thoſe Words of our Saviour, Mark 8. 38. Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of Me and my Words in this Adulterous and Sinful Generation: Own him among his Diſciples, and be aſhamed of him among his Enemies: Thus Men are ſaid to deny God, Tit. 1. 16. When they attend to Jewiſh Fables and the Precepts of Men rather than the Word of God: When the Decrees or Canons of fallible Men are valued at a higher rate, and preferr'd before the Writings of the Holy Ghoſt by his Apoſtles. Hoſ. 5. 11. *Hoſ. 7. 3. *Daniel 6.

As Man naturally diſowns the Rule God ſets him, and owns any other Rule than that of God's preſcribing, ſo, Thirdly, 3. He doth this in order to the ſetting himſelf up as his own Rule. As tho' our own Wills, and not God's, were the true ſquare and meaſure of Goodneſs. We make an Idol of our own Wills: and as much as Self is exalted, God is depoſed: The more we eſteem our own Wills, the more we endeavour to annihilate the Will of God: Account nothing of him, the more we account of our ſelves: And endeavour to render our ſelves his Superiors by exalting our own Wills: No Prince but would look upon his Authority as invaded, his Royalty derided, if a Subject ſhould reſolve to be a Law to himſelf, in Oppoſition to his known Will: True Piety is to hate our ſelves, deny our ſelves, and cleave ſolely to the Service of God. To make our ſelves our own Rule, and the object of our chiefeſt Love is Atheiſm. If Self-denial be the greateſt part of Godlineſs, the great Letter in the Alphabet of Religion; Self-love is the great Letter in the Alphabet of Practical Atheiſm. Self is the great Anti-Chriſt and Anti-God in the World, that ſets up it ſelf above all that is called God: Self-love is the Captain of that black band, 2 Tim. 3. 2. It ſits in the Temple of God and would be ador'd as God: Self-love begins, but denying the Power of Godlineſs, which is the ſame with denying the ruling Power of God, ends the Liſt: 'Tis ſo far from binding to the Righteous Will of the Creator, that it would have the Eternal

Will of God ſtoop to the Humour and Unrighteous Will of a Creature: And this is the Ground of the Contention between the Fleſh and the Spirit in the Heart of a renewed Man; Fleſh Wars for the God-head of Self, the Spirit fights for the God-head of God: The one would ſettle the Throne of the Creator, and the other maintain a Law of Coveteouſneſs, Ambition, Envy, Luſt in the ſtead of God.

The evidence of this will appear in theſe Propoſitions.

1. This is Natural to Man as he is corrupted. What was the Venom of the Sin of Adam, is naturally deriv'd with his Nature to all his Poſterity. It was not the eating a Forbidden Apple, or the pleaſing his Palate that Adam aimed at, or was the chief Object of his Deſire; but to live independently on his Creator, and be a God to himſelf, Gen. 3. 5. You ſhall be as Gods. That which was the matter of the Devils Temptation, was the incentive of Man's Rebellion: A likeneſs to God he aſpired to in the Judgment of God himſelf, an infallible interpreter of Man's Thoughts; Behold, Man is become as one of us, to know Good and Evil, in regard of Self-ſufficiency and being a Rule to himſelf. The Jews underſtand the Ambition of Man to reach no further than an equality with the Angelical Nature: But Jehovah here underſtands it in another Senſe: God had ordered Man by this Prohibition not to eat of the Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil; not to attempt the Knowledge of Good and Evil of himſelf, but to wait upon the Dictates of God; not to truſt to his own Counſels, but to depend wholly upon him for Direction and Guidance. Certainly he that would not hold off his Hand from ſo ſmall a thing as an Apple, when he had his choice of the Fruit of the Garden, would not have denyed himſelf any thing his Appetite had deſired, when that principle had prevailed upon him: He would not have ſtuck at a greater matter to pleaſure himſelf with the diſpleaſing of God, when for ſo ſmall a thing he would incur the anger of his Creator.

Thus would he deifie his own Underſtanding againſt the Wiſdom of God, and his own Appetite againſt the Will of God: This Deſire of equality with God, a Learned Man thinks the Apoſtle intimates, Phil. 2. 6. Who being in the form of God, thought it not Robbery to be equal with God: The Son's being in the form of God, and thinking it not robbery to be equal with God, implies that the Robbery of Sacriledge committed by our firſt Parents, for which the Son of God humbled himſelf to the Death of the Croſs, was an attempt to be equal with God, and depend no more upon God's Directions, but his own Conduct, which could be no leſs than an invaſion of the Throne of God, and endeavour to put himſelf into a poſture to be his Mate: Other ſins, Adultery and Theft, &c. could not be committed by him at that time, but he immediately puts forth his Hand to uſurp the Power of his Maker: This Treaſon is the old Adam in every Man. The firſt Adam contradicted the Will of God to ſet up himſelf: The ſecond Adam humbled himſelf, and did nothing but by the Command and Will of his Father. This principle wherein the venom of the old Adam lies, muſt be Crucified to make way for the Throne of the humble and obedient Principle of the new Adam or quickning Spirit. Indeed ſin in its own nature is nothing elſe, but a willing according to ſelf, and contrary to the Will of God: Luſts are therefore called the Wills of the Fleſh and of the Mind *. As the Precepts of God are God's Will, ſo the Violations of theſe Precepts is Man's VVill: And thus Man uſurps a God-head to himſelf, by giving that Honour to his own VVill which belongs to God; appropriating the Right of Rule to himſelf and denying it to his Creator. That Servant that acts according to his own Will with a neglect of his Maſters, refuſeth the Duty of a Servant, and invades the Right of his Maſter: This Self-love and deſire of Independency on God has been the Root of all ſin in the World: The great controverſie between God and Man hath been, whether he or they ſhall be God; whether his Reaſon or theirs, his Will or theirs ſhall be the guiding Principle: As Grace is the union of the Will of God and the Will of the Creature; ſo ſin is the oppoſition of the Will of Self to the Will of God. Leaning to our own Underſtanding, is oppoſed as a Natural Evil, to truſting in the Lord,* a Supernatural Grace. Men commonly love what is their own, their own Inventions, their own Fancies; therefore the Ways of a wicked Man are called the ways of his own heart; * and the ways of a Superſtitious Man his own Devices, Jer. 18. 11. We will walk after our own Devices: We will be a Law to our ſelves: And what the Pſalmiſt ſaith of the Tongue, our Tongues are our own, who ſhall controul us? is as truly the Language of Mens Hearts, our Wills are our own, who ſhall check us?

2. This is evident in the Diſſatisfaction of Men with their own Conſciences when they contradict the deſires of Self. Conſcience is nothing but an actuated or reflex Knowledge of a ſuperior Power and an equitable Law; a Law impreſt, and a Power above it impreſſing it. Conſcience is not the Law-giver, but the Remembrancer to mind us of that Law of Nature imprinted upon our Souls, and actuate the conſiderations of the Duty and Penalty, to apply the Rule to our Acts, and paſs Judgment upon Matter of Fact: 'Tis to give the Charge, urge the Rule, enjoyn the Practice of thoſe Notions of Right, as part of our Duty and Obedience.

But Man is much diſpleaſed with the Directions of Conſcience, as he is out of Love with the Accuſations and condemning Sentence of this Officer of God: VVe cannot naturally endure any quick and lively practical Thoughts of God and his VVill, and diſtaſte our own Conſciences for putting us in mind of it: They therefore like not to retain God in their Knowledge, * that is, God in their own Conſciences; they would blow it out as it is the Candle of the Lord in them to direct them, and their acknowledgments of God, to ſecure themſelves againſt the practice of its Principles: They would ſtop all the Avenues to any Beam of Light, and would not ſuffer a ſparkle of Divine Knowledge to flutter in their Minds, in order to ſet up another directing rule ſuited to the fleſhly Appetite: And when they cannot ſtop the light of it from glaring in their Faces, they rebel againſt it, and cannot endure to abide in its Paths*: He ſpeaks not of thoſe which had the written word or ſpecial Revelations; but only a natural light or traditional, handed from Adam: Hence are all the endeavours to ſtill it when it begins to ſpeak, by ſome carnal Pleaſures; as Saul's evil Spirit with a fit of Muſick; or bribe it with ſome fits of a glavering Devotion when it holds the Law of God in its commanding Authority before the mind: they would wipe out all the Impreſſions of it when it preſſes the advancement of God above Self, and entertain it with no better Complement than Ahab did Elijah, Haſt thou found me O my Enemy?

If we are like to God in any thing of our natural Fabrick, 'tis in the Superior and more Spiritual part of our Souls: The reſiſtance of that which is moſt like to God, and inſtead of God in us, is a diſowning of the Sovereign repreſented by that Officer: He that would be without Conſcience, would be without God, whoſe Vicegerent it is, and make the ſenſitive part, which Conſcience oppoſes, his Law-giver. Thus a Man out of reſpect to ſinful Self, quarrels with his natural Self; and cann't comport himſelf in a friendly behaviour to his internal implanted Principles:

He hates to come under the rebukes of them, as much as Adam hated to come into the preſence of God, after he turned Traytor againſt him: The bad entertainment Gods Deputy hath in us, reflects upon that God whoſe cauſe it pleads: 'Tis upon no other account that men loath the upright Language of their own reaſons in thoſe matters, and wiſh the eternal ſilence of their own Conſciences, but as they maintain the rights of God, and would hinder the Idol of Self from uſurping his Godhead and Prerogative. Tho' this power be part of a Mans ſelf, rooted in his Nature, as eſſential to him, and inſeparable from him, as the beſt part of his Being, yet he quarrels with it as it is Gods Deputy, and ſtickling for the honour of God in his Soul, and quarrelling with that ſinful Self he would cheriſh above God: We are not diſpleaſed with this faculty barely as it exerciſeth a Self-reflection, but as it is Gods Vicegerent, and bears the mark of his Authority in it. In ſome caſes this Self-reflecting Act meets with good Entertainment, when it acts not in contradiction to Self, but ſuitable to natural affections. As ſuppoſe a man hath in his paſſion ſtruck his Child, and cauſed thereby ſome great miſchief to him, the reflection of Conſcience will not be unwelcome to him, will work ſome tenderneſs in him, becauſe it takes the part of Self and of natural affection: But in the more Spiritual concerns of God, it will be rated as a buſie body.

3. Many, if not moſt actions, materially good in the World, are done more becauſe they are agreeable to Self, than as they are honourable to God. As the Word of God may be heard not as his Word, * but as there may be pleaſing Notions in it, or diſcourſes againſt an Opinion or Party we diſaffect: So the Will of God may be performed, not as his Will, but as it may gratifie ſome ſelfiſh conſideration, when we will pleaſe God ſo far as it may not diſpleaſe our ſelves, and ſerve him as our Maſter, ſo far as his Command may be a Servant to our humour; when we conſider not who it is that Commands, but how ſhort it comes of diſpleaſing that ſin which rules in our heart, pick and chuſe what is leaſt burdenſome to the fleſh, and diſtaſtful to our luſts.

* 1 Theſ. 2. 13.

He that doth the Will of God, not out of Conſcience of that Will, but becauſe it is agreeable to himſelf, caſts down the Will of God, and ſets his own Will in the place of it; takes the Crown from the head of God, and places it upon the head of Self. If things are done, not becauſe they are commanded by God, but deſirable to us, 'tis a diſobedient obedience, a conformity to Gods Will in regard of the matter, a conformity to our own Will in regard of the motive; either as the things done are agreeable to Natural and Moral Self, or Sinful Self.

1. As they are agreeable to Natural or Moral Self. When men will practiſe ſome points of Religion, and walk in the track of ſome Divine Precepts; not becauſe they are Divine, but becauſe they are agreeable to their humour or conſtitution of Nature, from the ſway of a natural bravery, the byas of a ſecular intereſt, not from an ingenuous ſenſe of Gods Authority, or a voluntary ſubmiſſion to his Will: As when a man will avoid exceſs in drinking, not becauſe it is diſhonorable to God, but as it is a blemiſh to his own reputation, or an impair of the health of his body. Doth this deſerve the name of an obſervance of the Divine injunction, or rather an obedience to our ſelves? Or when a man will be liberal in the diſtribution of his Charity, not with an eye to Gods precept, but in compliance with his own natural compaſſion, or to pleaſure the generoſity of his nature: The one is obedience to a mans own preſervation, the other an obedience to the intereſt or impulſe of a moral Vertue. 'Tis not reſpect to the rule of God, but the Authority of Self; and at the beſt, is but the performance of the material part of the Divine Rule, without any concurrence of a Spiritual motive or a Spiritual manner. That only is a maintaining the rights of God, when we pay an obſervance to his Rule, without examining the agreeableneſs of it to our ſecular intereſt, or conſulting with the humour of fleſh and blood; when we will not decline his ſervice, tho' we find it croſs, and hath no affinity with the pleaſure of our own nature: Such an obedience as Abraham manifeſted in his readineſs to Sacrifice his Son: Such an obedience as our Saviour demands in cutting off the right hand. When we obſerve any thing of Divine Order, upon the account of its ſuitableneſs to our natural Sentiments, we ſhall readily divide from him, when the intereſt of Nature turns its point againſt the intereſt of Gods honour; we ſhall fall off from him, according to the change we find in our own humours: And can that be valued as a ſetting up the Rule of God, which muſt be depos'd upon the mutable intereſt of an inconſtant mind? Eſau had no regard to God, in delaying the execution of his reſolution to ſhorten his Brothers days, tho' he was awed by the reverence of his Father to delay it; he conſidered perhaps, how juſtly he might lie under the imputation of haſtening crazy Iſaacs death, by depriving him of a beloved Son: But had the old mans head been laid, neither the contrarary Command of God, nor the nearneſs of a Fraternal Relation, could have bound his hands from the act, no more than they did his heart from the reſolution, Gen. 27.41. Eſau hated Jacob becauſe of the bleſſing wherewith his Father bleſſed him; and Eſau ſaid in his heart, the days of mourning for my Father are at hand, then will I ſlay my Brother.

So many Children, that expect at the death of their Parents great Inheritances or Portions, may be obſervant of them, not in regard of the Rule fixed by God, but to their own hopes, which they would not fruſtrate by a diſobligement: Whence is it that many men abſtain from groſs ſins, but in love to their reputation? Wickedneſs may be acted privately, which a mans own credit puts a bar to the open commiſſion of. The preſerving his own eſteem, may divert him from entring into a Brothel-houſe, to which he hath ſet his mind before, againſt a known precept of his Creator. As Pharaoh parted with the Iſraelites, ſo do ſome men with their blemiſhing ſins; not out of a ſence of Gods Rule, but the ſmart of preſent Judgments, or fear of a future wrath: Our ſecurity then and reputation, is ſet up in the place of God.

This alſo may be, and is in renewed men, who have the Law written in their hearts; that is, an habitual diſpoſition to an agreement with the Law of God; when what is done is with a reſpect to this habitual inclination, without eying the Divine precept, which is appointed to be their Rule: This alſo is to ſet up a Creature, as renewed Self is, inſtead of the Creator, and that Law of his in his Word, which ought to be the Rule of his actions. Thus it is when men chuſe a moral Life, not ſo much out of reſpect to the Law of Nature, as it is the Law of God, but as it is a Law become one with their Souls and Conſtitutions: There is more of Self in this, than conſideration of God: For if it were the latter, the revealed Law of God would, upon the ſame reaſon, be received as well as his natural Law. From this principle of Self, Morality comes by ſome to be advanced above Evangelical dictates.

2. As they are agreeable to ſinful Self. Not that the Commands of God are ſuited to bolſter up the Corruptions of Men, no more than the Law can be ſaid to excite or revive ſin; * but it is like a ſcandal taken, not given; an occaſion taken by the tumultuouſneſs of our depraved Nature. The Phariſees were devout in long Prayers, not from a ſence of duty, or a care of Gods honour, but to ſatisfie their ambition,

* Rom. 7. 8, 9.

and rake together fuel for their covetousness; * that they might have the greater esteem and richer offerings, to free by their Prayers the Souls of deceased persons from Purgatory; an opinion that some think the Jewish Synagogue had then entertain'd, * since some of their Doctors have defended such a Notion. Men may observe some Precepts of God, to have a better conveniency to break others. Jehu was ordered to cut off the House of Ahab: The service he undertook was in it self acceptable, but corrupt Nature misacted that which Holiness and Righteousness commanded: God appointed it to magnifie his Justice, and check the Idolatry that had been supported by that Family: Jehu acted it to satisfie his revenge and ambition; he did it to fulfil his Lust, not the Will of God who enjoyn'd him: Jehu applauds it as zeal, and God abhors it as Murder, and therefore would avenge the blood of Jezreel on the House of Jehu, Hos. 1.4. Such kind of services are not paid to God for his own sake, but to our selves for our Lusts sake.

*Matth. 23. 14. Turn Widows Houses and for a pretence make long Prayers. * Gerhard in loc.

4. This is evident in neglecting to take Gods direction upon emergent occasions. This follows the Text [none did seek God]. When we consult not with him, but trust more to our own Will and Counsel, we make our selves our own Governors and Lords, independent upon him: As tho' we could be our own Counsellors, and manage our Concerns without his leave and assistance; as tho' our Works were in our own hands, and not in the hands of God, * that we can by our own strength and sagacity, direct them to a successful end without him. If we must acquaint our selves with God before we decree a thing, * then to decree a thing without acquainting God with it, is to prefer our purblind Wisdom before the infinite Wisdom of God; to resolve without consulting God, is to depose God, and deifie Self, our own wit and strength. We would rather, like Lot, follow our own humour, and stay in Sodom, than observe the Angels order to go out of it.

* Eccl. 9.1.

* Job 22.28.

5. As we account the actions of others to be good or evil, as they suit with, or spurn against our fancies and humours. Vertue is a Crime, and Vice a Vertue, as it is contrary or concurrent with our humours: Little reason have many men to blame the actions of others, but because they are not agreeable to what they affect and desire: We would have all men take directions from us, and move according to our beck: Hence that common Speech in the World, Such an one is an honest-friend, why? Because he is of their humour, and lackies according to their Wills. Thus we make Self the measure and square of good and evil in the rest of Mankind, and judge of it by our own Fancies, and not by the Will of God, the proper Rule of Judgment.

Well then let us Consider,

Is not this very common, are we not naturally more willing to displease God than displease our selves, when it comes to a point that we must do one or other? Is not our own Counsel of more value with us than Conformity to the Will of the Creator? Do not our Judgments often run Counter to the Judgment of God? Have his Laws a greater respect from us, than our own humours? Do we scruple the staining his Honour, when it comes in competition with our own? Are not the Lives of most Men a pleasing themselves, without a repentance that ever they displeased God? Is not this to undeifie God, to deifie our selves, and disown the propriety he hath in us by the right of Creation and Beneficence? We order our own ways by our own humours, as tho' we were the Authors of our own Being, and had given our selves Life and Understanding. This is to destroy the Order that God hath placed between our Wills and his own, and a lifting up of the foot above the head; 'tis the deformity of the Creature. The honour of every rational Creature, consists in the service of the first Cause of his Being, as the welfare of every Creature consists in the orders and proportionable motion of its members, according to the Law of its Creation.

He that moves and acts according to a Law of his own, offers a manifest wrong to God, the highest Wisdom and chiefest Good; disturbs the order of the World, nulls the design of the Righteousness and Holiness of God: The Law of God is the Rule of that Order he would have observed in the World: He that makes another Law his Rule, thrusts out the Order of the Creator, and establishes the Disorder of the Creature.

But this will yet be more evident in the fourth thing.

4. Man would make himself the Rule of God, and give Laws to his Creator. We are willing God should be our Benefactor, but not our Ruler; we are content to admire his Excellency, and pay him a Worship, provided he will walk by our Rule.

* [This commits a Riot upon his Nature. To think him to be what we our selves would have him and wish him to be, Psal. 50. 21. We would amplifie his Mercy and contract his Justice: We would have his power enlarg'd to supply our wants, and streightned when it goes about to revenge our Crimes: We would have him wise to defeat our Enemies, but not to disappoint our unworthy projects: We would have him all eye to regard our Indigence, and blind, not to discern our Guilt: We would have him true to his Promises, regardless of his Precepts, and false to his Threatnings. We would new mint the Nature of God according to our models, and shape a God according to our Fancies, as he made us at first according to his own Image:] Instead of obeying him, we would have him obey us: Instead of owning and admiring his perfections, we would have him strip himself of his infinite excellency, and cloth himself with a nature agreeable to our own. This is not only to set up Self as the Law of God, but to make our own Imaginations the model of the Nature of God.

* Decay of Christian Piety, p. 169. somewhat changed.

Corrupted man takes a pleasure to accuse or suspect the actions of God: We would not have him act conveniently to his Nature, but act what doth gratifie us, and abstain from what distasts us. Man is never well, but when he is impeaching one or other perfection of Gods Nature, and undermining his Glory, as if all his Attributes must stand Indicted at the Bar of our purblind Reason: This VVeed shoots up in the exercise of Grace: Peter intended the refusal of our Saviours washing his feet as an act of humility, but Christ understands it to be a prescribing a Law to himself, a correcting his love, John 13. 8, 9.

This is evidenc'd,

1. In the strivings against his Law. How many men imply by their Lives, that they would have God depos'd from his Government, and some unrighteous Being step into his Throne, as if God had or should change his Laws of Holiness into Laws of Licentiousness, as if he should abrogate his old eternal Precepts, and enact contrary ones in their stead? VVhat is the Language of such practices, but that they would be Gods Law-givers and not his Subjects? that he should deal with them according to their own VVills, and not according to his Righteousness? that they could make a more holy, wise and righteous Law, than the Law of God? that their imaginations, and not Gods righteousness, should be the Rule of his doing good to them? Jer. 9.31. They have forsaken my Law, and walked after the imaginations of their own heart.

VVhen an act is known to be a sin, and the Law that forbids it acknowledg'd to be the Law of God, and after this we persist in that which is contrary to it, we tax his Wisdom as if he did not understand what was

*Job 21.22 was convenient for us, we would teach God knowledge *; 'tis an implicite wish that God had laid aside the holiness of his Nature, and framed a Law to pleasure our Lusts. When God calls for weeping and mourning, and girding with sackcloath, upon approaching Judgments, then the corrupt heart is for joy and gladness, eating of Flesh and drinking of Wine, because to *Isa. 22.12, 13. morrow they should die *: As if God had mistaken himself, when he ordered them so much sorrow, when their lives were so near an end; and had lost his Understanding, when he ordered such a Precept. Disobedience is therefore called contention, Rom. 2. 8. Contentious and obey not the truth: Contention against God, whose truth it is that they disobey; a dispute with him, which hath more of Wisdom in it self, and conveniency for them, his truth or their imaginations. The more the love, goodness and holiness of God appears in any command, the more are we naturally averse from it, and cast an imputation on him, as if he were foolish, unjust, cruel, and that we could have advised and directed him better. The goodness of God is eminent to us, in appointing a day for his own Worship, wherein we might converse with him, and he with us, and our Souls be refresh'd with Spiritual Communications from him; and we rather use it for the ease of our bodies, than the advancement of our Souls; as if God were mistaken and injured his Creature, when he urg'd the Spiritual part of duty. Every disobedience to the Law is an implicite giving Law to him, and a Charge against him that he might have provided better for his Creature.

2. In disapproving the methods of Gods Government of the World. If the Counsels of Heaven roul not about according to their Schemes, instead of adoring the unsearchable depths of his Judgments, they call him to the Bar, and accuse him, because they are not fitted to their narrow Vessels; as if a Nut-shell could contain an Ocean. As corrupt Reason esteems the highest Truths foolishness, so it counts the most Righteous ways unequal. Thus we commence a Suit against God, as tho' he had not acted righteously and wisely, but must give an account of his proceedings at our Tribunal. This is to make our selves Gods Superiors, and presume to instruct him better in the Government of the World; As tho' God hinder'd himself and the World, in not making us of his Privy Council, and not ordering his Affairs according to the contrivances of our dim Understandings.

Is not this manifest in our immoderate complaints of Gods dealings with his Church, as tho' there were a coldness in Gods affections to his Church, and a glowing heat towards it only in us? Hence are those importunate desires for things which are not established by any promise, as tho' we would over-rule and over-perswade God to comply with our humour. We have an ambition to be Gods Tutors, and direct him in his Counsels: Who hath been his Counsellor, saith the Apostle *? Who ought not to be his Counsellor, * Rom. 11. 34. saith corrupt Nature? Men will find fault with God in what he suffers to be done according to their own minds, when they feel the bitter fruit of it. When Cain had kill'd his Brother, and his Conscience rackt him, how sawcily and discontentedly doth he answer God, Gen. 4. 9. Am I my Brothers keeper? Since thou dost own thy self the Rector of the World, thou shouldst have preserved his person from my fury; since thou dost accept his Sacrifice before my Offering, preservation was due as well as acceptance. If this temper be found on Earth, no wonder it is lodged in Hell. That deplorable person under the sensible stroke of God's Soveraign Justice, would oppose his Nay to Gods Will, Luke 16. 30. (And he said, nay, Father Abraham, but if one went to them from the dead, they will repent:) He would presume to prescribe more effectual means than Moses and the Prophets, to inform men of the danger they incurr'd by their Sensuality: David was displeas'd, it's said, 2 Sam. 6. 8. when the Lord had made a breach upon Uzzah; not with Uzzah, who was the object of his pity, but with God who was the inflicter of that punishment.

When any of our friends have been struck with a Rod against our sentiments and wishes, have not our hearts been apt to swell in complaints against God, as tho' he disregarded the goodness of such a person, did not see with our eyes, and measure him by our esteem of him? As if he should have ask'd our Counsel, before he had resolved, and managed himself according to our Will, rather than his own. If he be patient to the wicked, we are apt to tax his holiness, and accuse him as an enemy to his own Law. If he inflict severity upon the righteous, we are ready to suspect his goodness, and charge him to be an enemy to his affectionate Creature. If he spare the Nimrods of the World, we are ready to ask where is the God of Judgment? *If he afflict the Pillars of the Earth, * Mal. 2. 17. we are ready to question where is the God of Mercy? 'Tis impossible, since the depraved nature of Man, and the various interests and passions in the World, that infinite Power and Wisdom can act righteously for the good of the Universe, but he will shake some corrupt interest or other upon the Earth; so various are the inclinations of Men, and such a Weather-cock Judgment hath every Man in himself, that the divine method he applauds this day, upon a change of his interest he will cavil at the next: 'Tis impossible for the just Orders of God to please the same person many Weeks, scarce many minutes together: God must cease to be God, or to be holy, if he should manage the Concerns of the World according to the fancies of Men.

How unreasonable is it thus to impose Laws upon God: Must God revoke his own Orders? Govern according to the dictates of his Creature? Must God, who hath only Power and Wisdom to sway the Scepter, become the obedient Subject of every Mans humour, and manage every thing to serve the design of a simple Creature? This is not to be God, but to set the Creature in his Throne: Tho' this be not formally done, yet that it is interpretatively and practically done, is every hours experience.

3. In impatience in our particular concerns. 'Tis ordinary with Man to charge God in his complaints in the time of affliction. Therefore 'tis the commendation the Holy Ghost gives to Job, Job 1.22. That in all this, that is, in those many waves that roll'd over him, he did not charge God foolishly, he never spake nor thought any thing unworthy of the Majesty and Righteousness of God; yet afterwards we find him warping, he nicknames the affliction to be Gods oppression of him, and no act of his goodness, Job 10. v. 3. Is it good for thee, that thou shouldst oppress? He seems to charge God with Injustice, for punishing him when he was not wicked, for which he appeals to God; Thou knowest that I am not wicked, ver. 7. and that God acted not like a Creator, ver. 8.

If our Projects are disappointed, what fretfulness against Gods management are our hearts rack'd with? How do uncomely passions bubble up in us, interpretatively at least, wishing that the arms of his power had been bound, and the eye of his Omniscience been hoodwink'd, that we might have been left to our own liberty and designs? And this oftentimes, when we have more reason to bless him than repine at him: The Israelites murmured more against God in the Wilderness, with Manna in their Mouths, than they did at Pharaoh in the Brickilns, with their Garlike and Onyons between their Teeth: Tho' we repine at Instruments in our Affliction, yet God counts it a Reflection upon himself: The Israelites elites ſpeaking againſt Moſes, was in God's interpretation a Rebellion againſt himſelf *. And Rebellion is always a deſire of impoſing Laws and Conditions upon thoſe againſt whom the Rebellion is raiſed. The ſottiſh Dealings of the Vine-dreſſers in Franconia, with the Statue of St. Urban, the Protector of the Vines, upon his own Day, is an Emblem of our dealing with God: If it be a clear Day and portend a proſperous Vintage, they honour the Statue and drink Healths to it; if it be a rainy day, and preſage a ſcantineſs, they daub it with Dirt in indignation. We caſt out our Mire and Dirt againſt God when he acts croſs to our Wiſhes, and flatter him when the VVind of his Providence joyns it ſelf to the tide of our intereſt.

* Num. 16. v. 41. compar'd with 17. 10.

Men ſet a high prize upon themſelves, and are angry God values them not at the ſame rate, as if their Judgment concerning themſelves, were more piercing than his. This is to diſannul God's Judgment, and condemn him, and count our ſelves righteous, as 'tis Job 40. 8. This is the Epidemical Diſeaſe of humane Nature; they think they deſerve Careſſes inſtead of Rods, and upon Croſſes are more ready to tear out the Heart of God, than reflect humbly upon their own Hearts. When we accuſe God, we applaud our ſelves, and make our ſelves his Superiors, intimating that we have acted more righteouſly to him than he to us, which is the higheſt manner of impoſing Laws upon him; as that Emperor accuſed the Juſtice of God for ſnatching him out of the World too ſoon *. What an high piece of Practical Atheiſm is this, to deſire that that infinite Wiſdom ſhould be guided by our folly, and aſperſe the Righteouſneſs of God rather than blemiſh our own? Inſtead of ſilently ſubmitting to his Will and adoring his Wiſdom, we declaim againſt him, as an unwiſe and unjuſt Governour. We would invert his Order, make him the Steward and our ſelves the Proprietors of what we are and have: We deny our ſelves to be ſinners, and our mercies to be forfeited.

* Cælum Juſpiciens vitam, &c. Vita Titi, ca. 10.

4. 'Tis evidenced, in envying the gifts and proſperities of others. Envy hath a deep Tincture of Practical Atheiſm, and is a cauſe of Atheiſm *. We are unwilling to leave God to be the Proprietor and do what he will with his own, and as a Creator to do what he pleaſes with his Creatures: VVe aſſume a Liberty to direct God what Portions, when and how he ſhould beſtow upon his Creatures: VVe would not let him chuſe his own Favourites, and pitch upon his own Inſtruments for his Glory: As if God ſhould have ask'd Counſel of us how he ſhould diſpoſe of his Benefits. VVe are unwilling to leave to his VViſdom the Management of his own Judgments to the VVicked, and the Diſpenſation of his own Love to our ſelves. This temper is natural: 'Tis as ancient as the firſt Age of the VVorld: Adam envyed God a Felicity by himſelf, and would not ſpare a Tree that he had reſerved as a mark of his Sovereignty: The Paſſion that God had given Cain to employ againſt his Sin, he turns againſt his Creator: He was wroth with God * and with Abel; but envy was at the root, becauſe his Brothers Sacrifice was accepted and his refuſed. How could he envy his accepted Perſon, without reflecting upon the Acceptor of his Offering? Good Men have not been free from it. Job queſtions the Goodneſs of God, that he ſhould ſhine upon the Counſel of the wicked, Job 10. 3. Jonah had too much of Self in fearing to be counted a falſe Prophet, when he came with abſolute Denunciations of VVrath. * And when he could not bring a volley of deſtroying Judgments upon the Ninivites, he would ſhoot his Fury againſt his Maſter, envying thoſe poor People the Benefit, and God the honour of his Mercy: And this after he had been ſent into the VVhale's Belly to learn Humiliation; which tho' he exerciſed there, yet thoſe two great Branches of Self-pride and Envy were not lopp'd off from him in the Belly of Hell. And God was fain to take pains with him, and by a Gourd, ſcarce makes him aſhamed of his Peeviſhneſs. Envy is not like to ceaſe till all Atheiſm be caſhier'd, and that is in Heaven.

* Because wicked Men flouriſh in the World, Sollicitor nullos eſſe putare Deos

* Gen. 4. 5.

* Jon 4. 2.

This ſin is an imitation of the Devil, whoſe firſt ſin upon Earth was Envy, as his firſt in Heaven was Pride. 'Tis a wiſhing that to our ſelves which the Devil aſſerted as his Right, to give the Kingdoms of the World to whom he pleaſed *: 'Tis an anger with God, becauſe he hath not given us a Patent for Government. It utters the ſame Language in Diſparagement of God, as Abſolom did in reflection on his Father, If I were King in Iſrael, Juſtice ſhould be better managed: If I were Lord of the VVorld, there ſhould be more VViſdom to diſcern the merits of Men, and more Righteouſneſs in diſtributing to them their ſeveral Portions. Thus we impoſe Laws upon God, and would have the Righteouſneſs of his VVill ſubmit to the Corruptions of ours, and have him lower himſelf to gratifie our Minds, rather than fulfil his own: VVe charge the Author of thoſe gifts with Injuſtice, that he hath not dealt equally; or with Ignorance, that he hath miſtook his Mark. In the ſame breath that we cenſure him by our peeviſhneſs, we would Guide him by our VVills.

* Luke 4.6.

This is an unreaſonable part of Atheiſm. 'If all were in the ſame ſtate and condition, the order of the VVorld would be impaired: Is God bound to have a care of thee, and neglect all the world beſides? Shall the Earth be forſaken for thee? * Joſeph had reaſon to be diſpleaſed with his Brothers, if they had muttered, becauſe he gave Benjamin a double Portion, and the reſt a ſingle. It was unfit that they, who had deſerved no gift at all, ſhould preſcribe him rules how to diſpenſe his own doles; much more unworthy it is to deal ſo with God; yet this is too rife.

* Job 18.4.

5. It is evidenced in corrupt Matter or ends of Prayer and Praiſe. VVhen we are importunate for thoſe things, that we know not whether the Righteouſneſs, Holineſs and Wiſdom of God can grant, becauſe he hath not diſcovered his Will in any promiſe to beſtow them; we would then impoſe ſuch conditions on God, which he never obliged himſelf to grant; when we pray for things not ſo much to glorifie God, which ought to be the end of Prayer, as to gratifie our ſelves. We acknowledge indeed by the act of petitioning, That there is a God; but we would have him Un-God himſelf to be at our beck, and debaſe himſelf to ſerve our turns. When we deſire thoſe things, which are repugnant to thoſe Attributes, whereby he doth manage the Government of the World? When by ſome ſuperficial Services we think we have gained indulgence to ſins: Which ſeems to be thought of the Strumpet in her paying her Vows, to wallow more freely in the mire of her ſenſual Pleaſures; * I have Peace-offerings with me, this day I have paid my Vows, I have made my Peace with God, and have Entertainment for thee: Or when Men deſire God to bleſs them in the Commiſſion of ſome ſin. As when Balak and Balaam offered Sacrifices, that they might proſper in the Curſing of the Iſraelites, Num. 25. 1, &c.

* Pro. 7. 14.

So for a Man to pray to God to ſave him while he neglects the means of Salvation appointed by God: Or to renew him when he ſlights the Word, the only Inſtrument to that purpoſe: This is to impoſe Laws upon God, contrary to the declared Will and Wiſdom of God, and to deſire him to ſlight his own inſtitutions. VVhen we come into the Preſence of God with Lusts reeking in our Hearts, and leap from sin to duty, we would impose the Law of our Corruption on the Holiness of God. While we pray the will of God may be done, Self-love wishes its own will may be performed, as tho' God should serve our Humours, when we will not obey his Precepts. And when we make Vows under any Affliction, what is it often but a secret Contrivance to bend and flatter him to our Conditions? We will serve him if he will restore us; we think thereby to compound the business with him and bring him down to our terms.

6. 'Tis evidenced, in positive and bold interpretations of the Judgments of God in the World. To interpret the Judgments of God to the disadvantage of the sufferer, unless it be an unusual Judgment, and have a remarkable hand of God in it, and the sin be rendred plainly legible in the affliction, is a presumption of this Nature. When Men will judge the Galileans, [whose Blood Pilate mingled with the Sacrifices,] greater sinners than others, and themselves righteous, because no drops of it were dash'd upon them. Or when Shimei, being of the House of Saul, shall judge according to his own interest, and desires David's flight upon Absolom's Rebellion to be a punishment for invading the Rights of Saul's Family, and depriving him of the Succession in the Kingdom *, as if he had been of God's Privy Council when he decreed such acts of Justice in the World.

*2 Sam. 16. verse 5.

Thus we would fasten our own Wills as a Law or Motive upon God, and interpret his acts according to the Motions of Self. Is it not too ordinary when God sends an Affliction upon those that bear ill will to us, to judge it to be a righting of our cause, to be a fruit of God's concern for us in revenging our wrongs, as if we had heard the secrets of God, or as Eliphaz saith, had turned over the Records of Heaven, Job 15. v. 8. This is a judgment according to self-love, not a divine rule; and imposeth Laws upon Heaven, implying a secret wish, that God would take care only of them, make our concerns his own; not in ways of kindness and justice, but according to our fancies: And this is common in the profane world in those curses they so readily spit out upon any affront; as if God were bound to draw his Arrows and shoot 'em into the heart of all their offenders at their beck and pleasure.

7. It is evidenced, in mixing rules for the worship of God, with those which have been ordered by him. Since Men are most prone to live by sense, 'tis no wonder that a sensible worship, which affects their outward sense, with some kind of amazement, is dear to them, and spiritual worship most loathsom.

Pompous rites have been the great Engine wherewith the Devil hath deceived the Souls of Men, and wrought them to a nauseating the simplicity of divine worship, as unworthy the Majesty and Excellency of God *. Thus the Jews would not understand the glory of the second Temple in the presence of the Messiah, because it had not the pompous grandeur of that of Solomon's erecting.

*2 Cor. 11. verse 3.

Hence in all Ages Men have been forward to disfigure God's Models, and dress up a brat of their own, as, tho' God had been defective in providing for his own honour in his institutions without the assistance of his Creature. This hath always been in the world: The old world had their imaginations, and the new world hath continued them. The Israelites in the midst of Miracles, and under the memory of a famous deliverance would erect a Calf. The Pharisees that sate in Moses's Chair, would coin new Traditions and enjoyn them to be as currant as the Law of God *. Papists will be blending the Christian appointments with Pagan Ceremonies, to please the carnal fancies of the common People. Altars have been multiplied, under the knowledge of the Law of God *. Interest is made the ballance of the conveniency of God's injunctions. Jeroboam fitted a worship to politick ends, and posted up Calves to prevent his Subjects revolting from his Scepter, which might be occasioned by their resort to Jerusalem, and converse with the body of the People from whom they were separated. *Men will be putting in their own Dictates with God's Laws, and are unwilling he should be the sole Governour of the world without their Counsel: They will not suffer him to be Lord of that which is purely and solely his concern. How often hath the practice of the Primitive Church, the custom wherein we are bred, the Sentiments of our Ancestors been owned as a more authentick rule in Matters of worship, than the mind of God delivered in his word *? 'Tis natural by Creation to worship God; and it is as natural by corruption for Man to worship him in a humane way, and not in a Divine. Is not this to impose Laws upon God? To [illegible]em our selves wiser than he? To think him negligent of his own service, and that our feeble brains can find out ways to accommodate his honour, better than himself hath done? Thus do Men for the most part equal their own imaginations to God's oracles: As Solomon built a high place to Moloch and Chemoch, upon the Mount of Olives, to face on the East part Jerusalem and the Temple: *This is not only to impose Laws on God, but also to make Self the Standard of them.

*Mat. 13 6.

* Hos. 8. 12.

* 1 Kin. 12. verse 27.

* 1 Kin. 11. verse 7.

8. 'Tis evidenced, in fitting interpretations of Scripture to their own minds and humors. Like the Lacedemonians, that dress the Images of their Gods according to the fashion of their own Country: We would wring Scripture to serve our own designs; and Judge the Law of God by the Law of sin, and make the Serpentine Seed in us to be the interpreter of divine Oracles. This is like Belshazzar, to drink healths out of the Sacred Vessels. As God is the Author of his Law and Word, so he is the best Interpreter of it; the Scripture having an impress of divine Wisdom, Holiness and Goodness, must be regarded according to that impress, with a submission and meekness of Spirit and Reverence of God in it. But when in our Enquiries into the word, we enquire not of God, but consult Flesh and Blood, the temper of the times wherein we live, or the satisfaction of a party we side withal, and impose glosses upon it according to our own fancies; it is to put Laws upon God and make Self the rule of him. He that interprets the Law to bolster up some eager appetite against the Will of the Law-giver, ascribes to himself as great an Authority as he that enacted it.

In falling off from God after some fair compliances, when his Will grateth upon us and crosseth ours. They will walk with him as far as he pleaseth them, and leave him upon the first distaste, as though God must observe their Humors more than they his Will. Amos must be suspended from Prophecying, because the Land could not bear his Words, and his Discourses condemned their unworthy Practices against God *. The young Man came not to receive directions from our Saviour, but expected a Confirmation of his own Rules, rather than an imposition of new *. He rather cares for Commendations than Instructions, and upon the disappointment turns his Back; He was sad, that Christ would not suffer him to be rich and a Christian together, and leaves him because his command was not suitable to the Law of his Covetousness. Some Truths that are at a further distance from us, we can hear gladly. But when the Conscience begins to smart under others, if God will not observe our Wills, we will with Herod be a Law to our selves *.

* Amos 7. 10. &c.

* Mark 10. 17, 22.

* Mark 6. 20, 27.

More instances might be observed.

Ingratitude is a setting up Self, and an imposing Laws on God. 'Tis as much as to say, God did no more than he was obliged to do; as if the Mercies we have, were an Act of Duty in God, and not of Bounty. Insatiable desires after Wealth. Hence are those speeches, Jam. 4. 13. We will go into such a City and buy and sell, &c. to get gain. As tho' they had the Command of God, and God must Lacquey after their Wills. When our hearts are not contented with any supply of our wants, but are craving an overplus for our Lust: When we are unsatisfied in the midst of Plenty, and still like the Grave, cry give, give.

Incorrigibleness under affliction, &c.

Secondly, 2. The second main thing. As Man would be a Law to himself; So he would be his own End and Happiness in opposition to God.

Here four things shall be discoursed on.

1. Man would make himself his own End and Happiness.

2. He would make any thing his End and Happiness rather than God.

3. He would make himself the End of all Creatures.

4. He would make himself the End of God.

First, 1. Man would make himself his own End and Happiness. As God ought to be esteemed the first Cause, in point of our dependance on him, so he ought to be our last End, in point of our enjoyment of him. When we therefore trust in our selves, we refuse him as the first Cause; and when we act for our selves, and expect a blessedness from our selves, we refuse him as the Chiefest good, and last End, which is an undeniable piece of Atheism. For Man is a Creature of a higher rank than others in the World, and was not made as Animals, Plants, and other Works of the Divine Power, materially to glorifie God; but a rational Creature, intentionally to Honour God by obedience to his Rule, dependance on his goodness, and zeal for his glory. 'Tis therefore as much a slighting of God, for Man, a Creature, to set himself up as his own End, as to regard himself as his own Law.

For the discovery of this, observe that there is a threefold Self-love.

1. Natural; which is common to us by the Law of Nature with other Creatures, Inanimate as well as Animate, and so closely twisted with the Nature of every Creature, that it cannot be dissolved, but with the dissolution of Nature it self. It consisted not with the Wisdom and Goodness of God to create an unnatural Nature, or to command any thing unnatural: Nor doth he, for when he commands us to Sacrifice our selves, and dearest lives for himself, 'tis not without a promise of a more noble State and Being, in exchange for what we lose. This Self-love is not only commendable, but necessary, as a Rule to measure that Duty we owe to our Neighbour, whom we cannot love as our selves, if we do not first love our selves: God having planted this Self-love in our Nature, makes this Natural Principle the measure of our Affection to all Mankind of the same blood with our selves.

2. Carnal Self-Love; when a Man loves himself above God, in opposition to God, with a contempt of God; when our thoughts, affections, designs, center only in our own fleshly interest; and rifle God of his honour, to make a present of it to our selves. Thus the natural Self-love, in it Self good, becomes Criminal by the excess, when it would be superior and not subordinate to God.

3. A gracious Self-love: When we love our selves for higher ends than the nature of a Creature, as a Creature dictates, viz. in subserviency to the glory of God. This is a reduction of the revolted Creature, to his true and happy Order. A Christian is therefore said to be Created in Christ to good Works *. As all Creatures were Created, not only for themselves, but for the honour of God, so the grace of the new Creation carries a Man to answer this end, and to order all his operations to the honour of God, and his well pleasing.

* Eph. 1. 10.

The first is from Nature, the second from Sin, the third from Grace. The first is implanted by Creation, the second the fruit of Corruption, and the third is by the powerful operation of Grace.

This Carnal Self-love is set up in the stead of God as our last end; like the Sea, which all the little and great streams of our actions run to, and rest in.

And this is,

1. Natural. It sticks as close to us as our Souls; it is as natural as Sin; the foundation of all the evil in the World: As Self-abhorrency is the first stone that is laid in Conversion, so an inordinate Self-love was the first inlet to all Iniquity. As grace is a rising from Self to center in God, so is sin a shrinking from God, into the mire of a Carnal selfishness. Since every Creature is neerest to it self, and next to God, it cannot fall from God, but must immediately sink into Self. * And therefore all sins are well said to be branches, or modifications of this fundamental passion. What is wrath, but a defence and strengthning self, against the attempts of some real or imaginary evil? Whence springs envy, but from a Self-love, grieved at its own wants in the midst of anothers enjoyment, able to supply it? What is impatience, but a regret, that self is not provided for at the rate of our wish, and that it hath met with a shock against supposed merit? What is pride, but a sence of self-worth, a desire to have self of a higher elevation than others? What is drunkenness, but a seeking a satisfaction for sensual self in the spoils of Reason? No sin is committed as sin, but as it pretends a self-satisfaction. Sin indeed may well be term'd a mans self, because it is, since the loss of original Righteousness, the form that over-spreads every part of our Souls. The Understanding assents to nothing false, but under the Notion of true, and the Will embraceth nothing evil but under the Notion of good; but the Rule whereby we measure the truth and goodness of propos'd objects, is not the unerring Word, but the inclinations of Self, the gratifying of which is the aim of our whole lives.

* More, Dial. 2. § 17. p. 247.

Sin and Self are all one: What is called a living to sin in one place, * is called a living to Self in another: * That they that live should not live unto themselves. And upon this account it is, that both the Hebrew word, חטא and the Greek word, ἁμαρτάνειν, used in Scripture to express sin, properly signifie to miss the mark, and swerve from that white to which all our actions should be directed, viz. the glory of God. When we fell to loving our selves, we fell from loving God: And therefore when the Psalmist saith, Psal. 14. 2. There were none that sought God, viz. as the last end, he presently adds, They are all gone aside, viz. from their true mark, and therefore become filthy.

* Rom. 6. * 1 Cor. 5. v. 15.

2. Since 'tis natural, 'Tis also universal. * The not seeking God is as universal as our ignorance of him. No Man in a State of Nature, but hath it predominant; no renewed Man on this side Heaven, but hath it partially: The one hath it flourishing, the other hath it strugling. If to aim at the glory of God as the chief end, and not to live to our selves, be the greatest mark of the restauration of the Divine Image, * and a conformity to Christ, who glorified not himself, * but the Father *, then every Man wallowing in the mire of corrupt Nature, pays a homage to Self, as a renewed Man is byass'd by the honour of God.

* Psal. 14. 1. * 1 Cor. 5. v. 15. * Heb. 1. 5. * Joh. 17. 5.

The Holy Ghost excepts none from this Crime, Phil. 2. 21. All seek their own. 'Tis rare for them to look above or beyond themselves: Whatsoever may be be the immediate ſubject of their thoughts and enquiries, yet the utmoſt end and ſtage, is their profit, honour or pleaſure: Whatever it be, that immediately poſſeſſes the Mind and Will, Self ſits like a Queen, and ſways the Scepter, and orders things at that rate, that God is excluded, and can find no room in all his thoughts, *Pſal.*10.4. The wicked through the pride of his Countenance will not ſeek after God; God is not in all his thoughts. The whole little World of Man is ſo overflowed with a Deluge of Self, that the Dove, the Glory of the Creator, can find no place where to ſet its foot; and if ever it gain the favour of admittance, 'tis to diſguiſe, and be a Vaſſal to ſome Carnal Project, as the Glory of God was a Mask for the murdering his Servants.

'Tis from the Power of this Principle, that the difficulty of Converſion ariſeth. As there is no greater pleaſure to a believing Soul, than the giving it ſelf up to God, and no ſtronger deſire in him, than to have a fixed and unchangeable Will to ſerve the deſigns of his Honour; ſo there is no greater torment to a wicked Man, than to part with his Carnal Ends, and lay down the Dagon of Self at the feet of the Ark. Self-Love, and Self-Opinion, in the Phariſees, way-laid all the entertainment of Truth, John 5. 44. They ſought Honour one of another, and not the Honour which comes from God. 'Tis of ſo large an Extent, and ſo inſinuating Nature, that it winds it ſelf into the Exerciſe of Moral Virtues, mixeth with our Charity, Matt. 6. 2. and finds nouriſhment in the Aſhes of Martyrdom, 1 Cor.13.3.

This making our ſelves our End, will appear in a few things.

1. In frequent Self-applauſes, and inward overweening Reflections. Nothing more ordinary in the Natures of Men, than a dotage on their own Perfections, Acquiſitions, or Actions in the World: Moſt think of themſelves above what they ought to think, Rom.12.3,4. Few think of themſelves ſo meanly as they ought to think. This ſticks as cloſe to us as our Skin. And as Humility is the Beauty of Grace, this is the filthieſt Soil of Nature; our thoughts run more delightfully upon the track of our own Perfections, than the excellency of God. And when we find any thing of a ſeeming worth, that may make us glitter in the eyes of the World, how cheerfully do we graſp and embrace our ſelves? When the groſſer prophaneſſes of Men have been diſcarded, and the Flouds of them damm'd up, the Head of Corruption, whence they ſprang, will ſwell the higher within, in Self-applauding ſpeculations of their own Reformation, without acknowledgments of their own weakneſſes, and deſires of Divine Aſſiſtance to make a further Progreſs. I thank God I am not like this Publican *. A Self-reflection, with a contempt rather than compaſſion to his Neighbour, is frequent in every Phariſee. The vapours of Self-affections, in our clouded Underſtandings, like thoſe in the Air in miſty mornings, alter the appearance of things, and make them look bigger than they are. This is thought by ſome to be the Sin of the fallen Angels, who reflecting upon their own natural Excellency ſuperior to other Creatures, would find a Bleſſedneſs in their own Nature, as God did in his, and make themſelves the laſt end of their actions. 'Tis from this Principle we are naturally ſo ready to compare our ſelves, rather with thoſe that are below us, than with thoſe that are above us; and often think thoſe that are above us, inferior to us, and ſecretly glory that we are become none of the meaneſt and loweſt in Natural or Moral Excellencies.

* Luk. 18. v. 11.

How far were the gracious Pen-men of the Scripture from this, who when poſſeſſed and directed by the Spirit of God, and filled with a Senſe of him, inſtead of applauding themſelves, publiſh upon Record their own faults to all the Eyes of the World? And if Peter, as ſome think, dictated the Goſpel which Mark wrote as his Amanuenſis; 'tis obſervable, that his Crime in denying his Maſter, is aggravated in that Goſpel in ſome Circumſtances, and leſs ſpoken of his Repentance, than in the other Evangeliſts: When he thought thereon he wept *. But in the other, He went out and wept bitterly *.

* Mark 14. v.72. * Matt. 26. v.37. * Luke 22. v. 62.

This is one part of Atheiſm and Self-Idolatry, to magnifie our ſelves with the Forgetfulneſs, and to the injury of our Creator.

2. In aſcribing the glory of what we do or have, to our ſelves, to our own Wiſdom, Power, Vertue, &c. How flaunting is Nebuchadnezzar, at the Proſpect of Babylon, which he had exalted to be the Head of ſo great an Empire, *Dan.*4.30. Is not this great Babylon that I have built? For, &c. He ſtruts upon the Battlements of his Palace, as if there were no God but himſelf in the World, while his eye could not but ſee the Heavens above him to be none of his own framing; attributing his Acquiſitions to his own Arm, and referring them to his own Honour, for his own delight, not for the Honour of God, as a Creature ought, nor for the advantage of his Subjects, as the Duty of a Prince: He regards Babylon as his Heaven, and himſelf as his Idol, as if he were all, and God nothing. An Example of this we have in the preſent Age: But it is often obſerved, that God vindicates his own Honour, brings the moſt Heroical Men to contempt and unfortunate ends, as a puniſhment of their Pride, as he did here, *Dan.*4.31. While the word was in the Kings Mouth, there fell a voice from Heaven, &c. * This was Herods Crime, to ſuffer others to do it: He had diſcovered his Eloquence actively, and made himſelf his own end paſſively, in approving the flatteries of the People; and offered not with one hand to God the glory, he received from his people with the other. * Samoſatenus is reported to put down the Hymns which were ſung for the glory of God and Chriſt, and cauſed Songs to be ſung in the Temple for his own Honour.

* Sanderſons Sermons.

* Acts 12. v. 22,23.

When any thing ſucceeds well, we are ready to attribute it to our own Prudence and Induſtry: If we meet with a Croſs, we fret againſt the Stars and Fortune, and ſecond Cauſes, and ſometimes againſt God; as they curſe God as well as their King, Iſa. 8. 21. not acknowledging any defect in themſelves. The Pſalmiſt by his Repetition of Not unto us, not unto us, but to thy Name give glory, Pſal. 115. 1. implies the naturality of this temper, and the difficulty to cleanſe our hearts from thoſe Self reflections. If it be Angelical to refuſe an undue Glory ſtolen from God's Throne, Rev. 22. 8, 9. 'tis Diabolical to accept and cheriſh it. To ſeek our own glory is not glory, Prov.25. *v.*27. 'Tis vile, and the diſhonour of a Creature, who by the Law of his Creation is referred to another end. So much as we Sacrifice to our own credit, to the dexterity of our hands, or the ſagacity of our wit, we detract from God.

3. In deſires to have ſelf-pleaſing Doctrines. When we cannot endure to hear any thing that croſſes the Fleſh; tho' the Wiſe man tells us, 'tis better to hear the Rebuke of the Wiſe, than the Song of Fools, Eccl.7. *v.*5. If Hanani the Seer reprove King Aſa for not relying on the Lord, his paſſion ſhall be armed for ſelf againſt the Prophet, and arreſt him a Priſoner. 2 *Chron.*16.10. If Micaiah declare to Ahab the Evil that ſhall befal him, Amon the Governor ſhall receive Orders to clap him up in a Dungeon. Fire doth not ſooner ſeize upon combuſtible matter, than Fury will be kindled, if ſelf be but pinch'd. This intereſt of luſtful ſelf barr'd the heart of Herodias againſt the entertainment of the Truth, and cauſed her ſavagely to dip her hands in the blood of the Baptiſt, to make him a Sacrifice to that inward Idol *.

* Mark 6. v.18,19,20

4. In being highly concerned for injuries done to our ſelves, and little or not at all concerned for injuries done to God. How will the blood riſe in us, when our Honour and Reputation is invaded, and ſcarce reflect upon the Diſhonour God ſuffers in our ſight and hearing, violent Paſſions will transform us into Bonaarges in the one caſe, and our unconcernedneſs render us Gallios in the other. We ſhall extenuate that which concerns God, and aggravate that which concerns our ſelves. Nothing but the Death of Jonathan, a firſt born and a generous Son, will ſatisfie his Father Saul, when the Authority of his Edict was broken by his taſting of Hony, tho' he had recompenced his Crime committed in Ignorance, by the purchaſe of a gallant Victory. But when the Authority of God was violated in ſaving the Amalekites Cattle, againſt the Command of a greater Soveraign than himſelf, he can daub the buſineſs, and excuſe it with a deſign of Sacrificing. He was not ſo earneſt in hindring the people from the breach of Gods Command, as he was in vindicating the Honour of his *own: He could hardly admit of an excuſe to ſalve his own Honour; but in the Concerns of Gods Honour, pretends Piety, to cloak his Avarice.

*1 Sam. 15. v. 21.

And it is often ſeen, when the violation of Gods Authority, and the ſtain of our own Reputation, are coupled together, we are more troubled for what diſgraces us, than for what diſhonours God. When Saul had thus tranſgreſt, he is deſirous that Samuel would turn again to preſerve his own honour before the Elders, rather than grieved that he had broken the Command of God, v. 30.

5. In truſting in our ſelves. When we conſult with our own Wit and Wiſdom, more than inquire of God, and ask leave of him: As the Aſſyrian, Iſa. 10. v. 13. By the ſtrength of my hands I have done it, and by Wiſdom, for I am prudent. When we attempt things in the ſtrength of our own heads and parts, and truſt in our own Induſtry, without application to God, for direction, bleſſing and ſucceſs, we affect the priviledge of the Deity, and make Gods of our ſelves. The ſame language in reality with Ajax in Sophocles: Others think to overcome with the aſſiſtance of the Gods, but I hope to gain Honour without them. Dependence and Truſt is an act due from the Creature only to God. Hence God aggravates the crime of the Jews in truſting in Egypt, Iſa. 31. 3. The Egyptians are Men and not Gods. Confidence in our ſelves is a defection from God, Jer. 17. 5. And when we depart from, and caſt off God to depend upon our ſelves, which is but an arm of fleſh, we chuſe the arm of fleſh for our God: We rob God of that confidence we ought to place in him, and that adoration which is due to him, and build it upon another foundation; not that we are to neglect the reaſon and parts God hath given us, or ſpend more time in Prayer than in conſulting about our own affairs, but to mix our own intentions in buſineſs, with Ejaculations to Heaven, and take God along with us in every motion: But certainly it is an Idolizing of ſelf, when we are more diligent in our attendance on our own Wit, than fervent in our recourſes to God.

6. The power of ſinful Self, above the efficacy of the Notion of God, is evident in our workings for Carnal Self againſt the light of our own Conſciences. When Men of ſublime Reaſon, and clear natural Wiſdom, are voluntary Slaves to their own Luſts, row againſt the ſtream of their own Conſciences, ſerve Carnal Self with a diſgraceful and diſturbing Drudgery, making it their God, Sacrificing natural Self, all ſentiments of Virtue, and the quiet of their Lives, to the pleaſure, honour, and ſatisfaction of Carnal Self: This is a proſtituting God in his Deputy Conſcience, to Carnal Affections, when their eyes are ſhut againſt the inlightnings of it, and their ears deaf to its voice, but open to the leaſt breath and whiſper of Self: A debt that the Creature owes Supreamly to God.

Much more might be ſaid, but let us ſee what Atheiſm lurks in this, and how it intrencheth upon God.

1. 'Tis an uſurping God's Prerogative. 'Tis God's Prerogative to be his own end, and act for his own glory, becauſe there is nothing Superior to him in Excellency and Goodneſs to act for: He had not his Being from any thing without himſelf, whereby he ſhould be obliged to act for any thing but himſelf. To make our ſelves then our laſt End, is to corrival God in his being the Supream Good, and Bleſſedneſs to himſelf: As if we were our own Principle, the Author of our own Being, and were not obliged to a higher Power than our ſelves, for what we are and have. To direct the Lines of all our Motions to our ſelves, is to imply that they firſt iſſued only from our ſelves. When we are Rivals to God in his chief end, we own or deſire to be Rivals to him in the Principle of his Being: This is to ſet our ſelves in the place of God. All things have ſomething without them, and above them as their end: All inferior Creatures act for ſome ſuperior Order in the rank of Creation; the leſſer Animals are deſign'd for the greater, and all for Man; Man therefore for ſomething nobler than himſelf. To makes our ſelves therefore our own end, is to deny any Superior, to whom we are to direct our actions. God alone being the Supream Being, can only be his own Ultimate End; for if there were any thing higher and better than God, the purity and righteouſneſs of his own nature would cauſe him to act for and toward that as his chiefeſt mark. This is the higheſt Sacriledge, to alienate the proper Good and Rights of God, and employ them for our own uſe; to ſteal from him his own Honour, and put it into our own Cabinets; like thoſe Birds that raviſh'd the Sacrifice from the Altar, and carried it to their own Neſts *. When we love only our ſelves, and act for no other end but our ſelves, we inveſt our ſelves with the Dominion which is the Right of God, and take the Crown from his Head: For as the Crown belongs to the King, ſo to love his own Will, to Will by his own Will, and for himſelf, is the property of God, becauſe he hath no other Will, no other End, above him, to be the rule and ſcope of his Actions.

* Sabunde tit. 140.

When therefore we are by Self-love transformed wholly into our ſelves. we make our ſelves our own foundation, without God and againſt God; when we mind our own glory and praiſe, we would have a Royal State equal with God, who created all things for himſelf *. What can Man do more for God than he naturally doth for himſelf, ſince he doth all thoſe things for himſelf which he ſhould do for God? We own our ſelves to be our own Creators and Benefactors, and fling off all ſentiments of gratitude to him.

* Pro. 16. 4.

2. It is a vilifying of God. When we make our ſelves our End, 'tis plain Language that God is not our happineſs: We poſtpone God to our ſelves, as if he were not an object ſo excellent and fit for our love as our ſelves are: (for it is irrational to make that our end, which is not God, and not the chiefeſt good.) 'Tis to deny him to be better than we, to make him not to be ſo good as our ſelves, and ſo fit to be our chiefeſt good as our ſelves are; that he hath not deſerved any ſuch acknowledgment at our hands by all that he hath done for us: we aſſert our ſelves his ſuperiors by ſuch kind of acting, tho' we are infinitely more inferior to God than any Creature can be to us. Man cannot diſhonour God more than by referring that to his own glory, which God made for his own praiſe, upon account whereof he only hath a right to glory and praiſe, and none elſe.

He

He thus changeth the glory of the incorruptible God into a Corruptible Image; * a perishing fame and reputation, which extends but little beyond the Limits of his own habitation; or if it doth, survives but a few Years, and perishes at last with the Age wherein he lived. *Rom. 1. 23

3. 'Tis as much as in us lies a destroying of God. By this temper we destroy that God that made us, because we destroy his Intention and his Honour. God cannot outlive his Will and his Glory: Because he cannot have any other Rule but his own Will, or any other end but his own Honour. The setting up Self as our end, puts a nullity upon the true Deity; by paying to our selves that respect and honour which is due to God, we make the true God as no God. Whosoever makes himself a King of his Princes Rights and Territories, manifests an intent to throw him out of his Government: To chuse our selves as our end is to undeifie God, since to be the last end of a rational Creature is a right inseparable from the nature of the Deity; and therefore not to set God, but Self always before us is to acknowledge no Being but our selves to be God.

Secondly, 2. The second thing, Man would make any thing his End and Happiness rather than God. An end is so necessary in all our Actions, that he deserves not the name of a rational Creature, that proposeth not one to himself. This is the distinction between rational Creatures and others; they act with a formal intention, whereas other Creatures are directed to their end by a natural instinct, and moved by nature to what the others should be moved by reason: When a Man therefore Acts for that end, which was not intended him by the Law of his Creation, nor is suited to the noble Faculties of his Soul; He acts contrary to God, overturns his order, and merits no better a Title than that of an Atheist.

A Man may be said two ways to make a thing his last end and chief good.

1. Formally. When he actually Judges this or that thing to be his chiefest good, and orders all things to it. So Man doth not formally judge sin to be good, or any object which is the incentive of sin to be his last end: This cannot be while he hath the exercise of his rational Faculties.

2. Vertually and implicitely. When he loves any thing against the command of God, and prefers in the stream of his Actions the enjoyment of that, before the fruition of God; and lays out more strength and expends more time in the gaining that, than answering the true end of his Creation: When he acts so as if something below God could make him happy without God, or that God could not make him happy without the addition of something else. Thus the Glutton makes a God of his Dainties; the ambitious Man of his Honour; the incontinent Man of his Lust; and the covetous Man of his Wealth; and consequently esteems them as his chiefest good, and the most noble end, to which he directs his Thoughts: Thus he vilifies and lessens the true God, which can make him happy, in a multitude of false Gods, that can only render him miserable. He that loves Pleasure more than God, says in his heart, There is no God but his Pleasure. He that loves his Belly more than God, says in his heart, There is no God but his Belly: Their happiness is not accounted to lie in that God that made the World, but in the Pleasure or Profit they make their God.

In this, tho' a created object be the immediate and subordinate term to which we turn, yet principally and ultimately, the affection to it terminates in self: nothing is naturally entertained by us, but as it affects our sense or mingles with some promise of advantage to us.

This is seen,

1. In the fewer thoughts we have of God than of any thing else. Did we apprehend God to be our chiefest good and highest end, should we grudge him the pains of a few days thoughts upon him? Men in their Travels are frequently thinking upon their intended Stage: But our Thoughts run upon new acquisitions to increase our Wealth, rear up our Families, revenge our Injuries, and support our Reputation: Trifles possess us; but God is not in all our Thoughts, * seldom the sole object of them. We have durable Thoughts of transitory things, and flitting Thoughts of a durable and eternal good. The Covenant of Grace engageth the whole heart to God, and bars any thing else from ingrossing it: But what Strangers are God and the Souls of most Men? Though we have the Knowledge of him by Creation, yet he is for the most part an unknown God in the Relations wherein he stands to us, because a God undelighted in. Hence it is, as one observes, * that because we observe not the ways of God's Wisdom, conceive not of him in his vast Perfections, nor are striken with an admiration of his Goodness, that we have fewer good sacred Poems, than of any other kind. The wits of Men hang the wing when they come to exercise their Reasons and Fancies about God. Parts and Strength are given us, as well as Corn and Wine to the Israelites for the Service of God; but those are consecrated to some cursed Baal. * Like Venus in the Poet, we forsake Heaven to follow some Adonis. * Psa. 10. 4. * Jackson, vol. book 1. c. 14. p. 48. * Hos. 2. 8.

2. In the greedy pursuit of the World. * When we pursue worldly Wealth or worldly Reputation with more vehemency than the riches of Grace, or the favour of God. When we have a foolish imagination, that our happiness consists in them, we prefer Earth before Heaven, broken Cisterns which can hold no Water, before an ever Springing Fountain of Glory and Bliss. And, as tho' there were a defect in God, cannot be content with him as our portion, without an addition of something inferior to him: When we make it our hopes and say to the wedge, thou art my Confidence; and rejoyce more because it is great; and because our hand hath gotten much, than in the priviledge of Communion with God and the promise of an everlasting fruition of him. * This is so gross, that Job joyns it with the Idolatry of the Sun and Moon, which he purgeth himself of, ver. 26. And the Apostle when he mentions Covetousness or a Covetuous Man, passes it not over without the Title of Idolatry to the Vice, and Idolater to the Person: In that it is a preferring Clay and Dirt as an end more desirable than the original of all goodness, in regard of affection and dependence. * Quod quisq; præ cæteris petit, summum judicat bonum. Boet. l. 3. p. 24. * Job 31. 24, 25. * Col. 3. 5. Eph. 5. 5.

3. In a strong addictedness to sensual Pleasures, Phil. 3. 19. VVho make their Belly their God; subjecting the Truths of God to the maintenance of their Luxury. In debasing the higher Faculties to project for the satisfaction of the sensitive appetite as their chief happiness, whereby many render themselves no better than a rout of sublimated Brutes among Men, and gross Atheists to God. VVhen Mens thoughts run also upon inventing new Methods to satisfie their bestial Appetite, forsaking the Pleasures which are to be had in God, which are the delights of Angels for the satisfaction of Brutes: This is an open and unquestionable refusal of God for our end, when our rest is in them, as if they were the chief Good and not God.

4. In paying a service upon any success in the World, to Instruments more than to God the Sovereign Author. VVhen they Sacrifice to their Net, and burn incense to their Drag. * Not that the Assyrian did offer a Sacrifice to his Arms, but ascrib'd to them what was due only to God, and appropriated the * Hab. 1. 16.

the Victory to his Forces and Arms. The Prophet alludes to thoſe that worſhipped their Warlike Inſtruments, whereby they had attained great Victories; and thoſe Artificers who worſhipped the Tools by which they had purchaſed great Wealth, in the ſtead of God, preferring them as the cauſes of their happineſs before God who governs the World.

And are not our Affections, upon the receiving of good things, more cloſely fixed to the Inſtruments of Conveyance, than to the chief Benefactor, from whoſe Coffers they are taken? Do we not more delight in them, and hug them, with a greater indearedneſs, as if all our happineſs depended on them, and God were no more than a bare Spectator? Juſt as if when a Man were warmed by a beam, he ſhould adore that and not admire the Sun, that darts it out upon him.

5. In paying a reſpect to Man more than God. When in a publick Attendance on his Service, we will not laugh, or be gariſh, becauſe Men ſee us: But our hearts ſhall be in a ridiculous poſture, playing with feathers and trifling fancies, tho' God ſee us, as tho' our happineſs conſiſted in the pleaſing of Men, and our miſery in a reſpect to God. There is no Fool that ſaith in his heart there is no God, but he ſets up ſomething in his heart as a God.

This is,

1. A debaſing of God. 1. In ſetting up a Creature. It ſpeaks God leſs amiable than the Creature, ſhort of thoſe perfections, which ſome ſilly ſordid thing, which hath engroſſed their affections, is poſſeſſed with: As if the Cauſe of all Being could be tranſcended by his Creature, and a vile Luſt could equal, yea, ſurmount the Lovelineſs of God: 'Tis to ſay to God as the rich to the poor, James 2. 3. Stand thou there, or ſit here under my footſtool: 'Tis to ſink him below the mire of the World, to order him to come down from his glorious Throne, and take his place below a contemptible Creature, which in regard of its infinite diſtance, is not to be compared with him. It ſtrips God of the love that is due to him by the right of his nature, and the greatneſs of his dignity; and of the truſt that is due to him, as the firſt Cauſe and the chiefeſt Good, as tho' he were too feeble and mean to be our Bleſſedneſs. This is intolerable, to make that which is God's Footſtool, the Earth, to climb up into his Throne; to ſet that in our heart, which God hath made even below our ſelves, and put under our feet; to make that which we trample upon, to diſpoſe of the right God hath to our hearts: * 'Tis worſe than if a Queen ſhould fall in love with the little Image of the Prince in the Palace, and ſlight the beauty of his perſon; and as if people ſhould adore the footſteps of a King in the dirt, and turn their backs upon his preſence.

* Noremberg de adorat. p. 30.

2. It doth more debaſe him to ſet up a ſin, a luſt, a carnal affection, as our chief end. To ſteal away the honour due to God, and appropriate it to that which is no work of his hands, to that which is loathſome in his ſight, hath diſturbed his reſt, and wrung out his juſt breath to kindle a Hell for its eternal lodging, a God-diſhonouring, and a Soul-murdering Luſt, is worſe than to prefer Barabbas before Chriſt. The baſer the thing, the worſe is the injury to him with whom we would aſſociate it. If it were ſome generous principle, a thing uſeful to the World, that we place in an equality with, or a ſuperiority above him, tho' it were a vile uſage, yet it were not altogether ſo Criminal; but to gratifie ſome unworthy Appetite, with the diſpleaſure of the Creator, ſomething below the rational nature of Man, much more infinitely below the excellent Majeſty of God, is a more unworthy uſage of him. To advance one of the moſt vertuous Nobles in a Kingdom, as a mark of our ſervice and ſubjection, is not ſo diſhonourable to a deſpiſed Prince, as to take a ſcabby Begger, or a rotten Carcaſs, to place in his Throne. Creeping things, abominable Beaſts, the Egyptian Idols, Cats and Crocodiles, were greater abominations, and a greater deſpite done to God, than the Image of Jealouſie at the gate of the Altar *. * Ezek. 8. v. 5, 6, 10.

And let not any excuſe themſelves, that 'tis but one Luſt, or one Creature, which is preferred as the end: Is not he an Idolater that worſhips the Sun or Moon, one Idol, as well as he that worſhips the whole Hoſt of Heaven?

The inordinacy of the heart to one Luſt, may imply a ſtronger contempt of him, than if a Legion of Luſts did poſſeſs the heart. It argues a greater diſeſteem, when he ſhall be ſlighted for a ſingle vanity. The depth of Eſau's prophaneſs in contemning his birth-right, and God in it, is aggravated by his ſelling it for one morſel of meat *, and that none of the daintieſt, none of the coſtlieſt, a meſs of Pottage; implying, had he parted with it at a greater rate, it had been more tolerable, and his prophaneſs more excuſable. And it is reckoned as a high aggravation of the Corruption of the Iſraelite Judges, Amos 2. 6. That they ſold the poor for a pair of ſhoes: That is, that they would betray the Cauſe of the poor for a bribe of no greater value, than might purchaſe them a pair of Shoes. To place any one thing as our chief end, tho' never ſo light, doth not excuſe: He that will not ſtick to break with God for a trifle, a ſmall pleaſure, will leap the Hedge upon a greater temptation. * Heb. 12. v. 16.

Nay, and if Wealth, Riches, Friends, and the beſt thing in the World, our own Lives, be preferred before God, as our chief happineſs and end but one moment, 'tis an infinite wrong, becauſe the infinite goodneſs and excellency of God is denied: As tho' the Creature or Luſt we love, or our own Life, which we prefer in that ſhort moment before him, had a goodneſs in it ſelf, ſuperior to, and more deſirable than the bleſſedneſs in God: And tho' it ſhould be but one minute, and a Man in all the periods of his days, both before and after that failure, ſhould actually and intentionally prefer God before all other things, yet he doth him an infinite wrong, becauſe God in every moment is infinitely good, and abſolutely deſirable, and can never ceaſe to be good, and cannot have the leaſt ſhadow or change in him and his Perfections.

2. 'Tis a denying of God.

Job 31. 26, 27, 28. If I beheld the Sun when it ſhined, and the Moon walking in its brightneſs, and my Heart hath been ſecretly enticed, or my Mouth hath kiſt my Hand; this alſo were Iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judge; for I ſhould have denied the Lord above. This denial of God is not only the act of an open Idolater, but the conſequent of a ſecret confidence, and immoderate joy in worldly Goods: This denial of God is to be referred to, ver. 24, 25. When a Man ſaith to Gold, thou art my confidence, and rejoyces becauſe his Wealth is great; he denies that God, which is ſuperior to all thoſe, and the proper object of Truſt. Both Idolatries are coupled here together; that which hath Wealth, and that which hath thoſe glorious Creatures in Heaven for its Object: And tho' ſome may think it a light Sin, yet the Crime being of deeper guilt, a denial of God, deſerves a ſeverer puniſhment, and falls under the Sentence of the juſt Judge of all the Earth, under that Notion, which Job intimates in thoſe words, This alſo were an Iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judge.

The kiſſing the hand, to the Sun, Moon, or any Idol, was an external Sign of Religious Worſhip among thoſe and other Nations: This is far leſs than an inward hearty confidence, and an affectionate Truſt: If the motion of the hand be, much more the affection of the heart to an excrementitious Creature, or a brutish pleasure is a denial of God, and a kind of an Abjuring of him, since the Supream Affection of the Soul is undoubtedly and solely the Right of the Soveraign Creator, and not to be given in common to others, as the outward gesture may in a way of civil respect. Nothing that is an Honour peculiar to God, can be given to a Creature, without a plain exclusion of God to be God, it being a disowning the rectitude and excellency of his Nature. If God should Command a Creature such a Love, and such a confidence in any thing inferior to him, he would deny himself his own glory; he would deny himself to be the most excellent Being. Can the Romanists be free from this, when they call the Cross Spem unicam, and say to the Virgin, In te Domina speravi, as Bonaventure, &c.

Good reason therefore have Worldlings and Sensualists, persons of immoderate fondness to any thing in the World, to reflect upon themselves; since tho' they own the Being of a God, they are guilty of so great disrespect to him, that cannot be excused from the Title of an unworthy Atheism: And those that are renewed by the Spirit of God, may here see ground of a daily Humiliation, for the frequent and too common Excursions of their Souls in Creature-confidences and Affections, whereby they fall under the charge of an act of Practical Atheism, tho' they may be free from an habit of it.

3. The third thing is, Man would make himself the end of all Creatures. Man would sit in the Seat of God, and set his heart as the heart of God, as the Lord saith of Tyrus, *Ezek.*28.2. What is the consequence of this, but to be esteemed the chief Good, and end of other Creatures? A thing, that the heart of God cannot but be set upon, it being an inseparable Right of the Deity; who must deny himself, if he deny this affection of the heart.

Since it is the Nature of Man deriv'd from this Root, to desire to be equal with God, it follows that he desires no Creature should be equal with him, but subservient to his ends and his glory. He that would make himself God, would have the Honour proper to God: He that thinks himself worthy of his own supream affection, thinks himself worthy to be the object of the supream affection of others: Whosoever counts himself the chiefest Good and last End, would have the same place in the thoughts of others. Nothing is more natural to Man, than a desire to have his own Judgment, the Rule and Measure of the Judgments and Opinions of the rest of Mankind. He that sets himself in the Place of the Prince, doth by that act challenge all the Prerogatives and Dues belonging to the Prince; and apprehending himself fit to be a King, apprehends himself also worthy of the Homage and Fealty of the Subjects. He that loves himself chiefly, and all other things and persons for himself, would make himself the end of all Creatures. It hath not been once or twice only in the World, that some vain Princes have assumed to themselves the Title of Gods, and caused Divine Adorations to be given to them, and Altars to smoke with Sacrifices for their Honour: What hath been practised by one, is by Nature seminally in all: We would have all pay an Obedience to us, and give to us the Esteem that is due to God.

This is evident,

1. In Pride. When we entertain an high Opinion of our selves, and act for our own Reputes, we dispossess God from our own hearts; and while we would have our Fame to be in every mans Mouth, and be admired in the hearts of Men, we would chase God out of the hearts of others, and deny his Glory a Residence any where else, that our Glory should reside more in their minds than the glory of God, that their thoughts should be filled with our Atchievements, more than the Works and Excellency of God, with our Image and not with the Divine. Pride would paramount God in the affections of others, and justle God out of their Souls; and by the same reason that Man doth thus in the place where he lives, he would do so in the whole World, and press the whole Creation from the Service of their true Lord, to his own Service. Every proud Man would be counted by others as he counts himself; the highest, chiefest piece of Goodness; and be adored by others, as much as he adores and admires himself. No proud Man in his Self-love, and Self-admiration, thinks himself in an Error; and if he be worthy of his own admiration, he thinks himself worthy of the highest esteem of others, that they should value him above themselves, and value themselves only for him. What did Nebuchadnezzar intend, by setting up a Golden Image, and commanding all his Subjects to worship it, upon the highest Penalty he could inflict, but that all should aim only at the pleasing his humour?

2. In using the Creatures contrary to the End God has appointed. God created the World, and all things in it, as steps whereby Men might ascend to a Prospect of him, and the acknowledgment of his Glory; and we would use them to dishonour God, and gratifie our selves: He appointed them to supply our necessities, and support our rational delights; and we use them to cherish our sinful lusts. We wring groans from the Creature, in diverting them from their true scope, to one of our own fixing, when we use them not in his service, but purely for our own, and turn those things he created for himself to be Instruments of Rebellion against him to serve our turns, and hereby endeavour to defeat the ends of God in them, to establish our own ends by them: This is a high dishonour to God, a Sacrilegious undermining of his Glory; * to reduce what God hath made to serve our own glory, and our own pleasure: It perverts the whole Order of the World, and directs it to another end than what God hath constituted; to another intention contrary to the intention of God; and thus Man makes himself a God by his own Authority. As all things were made by God, so they are for God; but while we aspire to the end of the Creation, we deny and envy God the honour of being Creator. We cannot make our selves the chief end of the Creatures against Gods Order, but we imply thereby, that we were their first Principle: For if we lived under a sence of the Creator of them, while we enjoy them for our use, we should return the glory to the right Owner.

* Sabunde Tit. 200. p. 352.

This is Diabolical; tho' the Devil for his first affecting an Authority in Heaven, has been hurled down from the State of an Angel of Light, into that of Darkness, Vileness and Misery, to be the most accursed Creature living; yet he still aspires to mate God, contrary to the knowledge of the impossibility of success in it: Neither the terrors he feels, nor the future torments he doth expect, do a jot abate his Ambition to be Competitor with his Creator. How often hath he since his first sin, arrogated to himself the Honour of a God from the blind World, and attempted to make the Son of God by a particular Worship, count him as the chiefest Good and Benefactor of the World? * Since all Men by Nature are the Devils Children, the Serpents Seed, they have something of this venom in their Natures, as well as others of his qualities. We see that there may be, and is a prodigious Atheism lurking under the Belief of a God. The Devil knows there is a God, but acts like an Atheist, and so do his Children.

* Matt.4.9.

4. Man would make himself the End of God. This necessarily follows upon the former: Whosoever makes himself his own Law, and his own End, in the place of God, would make God the Subject in making himself the Soveraign: He that steps into the Throne of of a Prince, sets the Prince at his Foot-stool; and while he assumes the Princes Prerogative, demands a Subjection from him. The order of the Creation, has been inverted by the enterance of sin *. God implanted an affection in Man with a double aspect, the one to pitch upon God, the other to respect our selves; but with this proviso, that our affection to God should be infinite, in regard of the Object and Center in him, as the chiefest happiness and highest end; Our affections to our selves should be finite, and refer ultimately to God as the original of our Being: But sin hath turned Man's affections wholly to himself: Whereas he should love God first, and himself in order to God; he now loves himself first, and God in order to himself: Love to God is lost, and love to Self hath usurpt the Throne. As God by Creation put all things under the Feet of Man *, reserving the heart for himself: Man by Corruption hath dispossessed God of his heart, and put him under his own feet. We often intend our selves, when we pretend the Honour of God, and make God and Religion a Stale to some designs we have in hand; our Creator a Tool for our own ends.

* Pas. Pens. §30. p. 234.

* Ps. 8. 6.

This is evident,

1. In our loving God, because of some self-pleasing benefits distributed by him. There is in Men a kind of Natural love to God; but it is but a secondary one, because God gives them the good things of this world, spreads their Table, fills their Cup, stuffs their Coffers, and doth them some good turns by unexpected Providences: This is not an affection to God for the unbounded Excellency of his own Nature, but for his beneficence, as he opens his hand for them; an affection to themselves, and those Creatures, their Gold, their Honour, which their Hearts are most fixed upon; without a strong Spiritual Inclination that God should be glorified by them in the use of those Mercies. 'Tis rather a disowning of God, than any love to him; because it postpones God to those things they love him for. This would appear to be no love, if God should cease to be their Benefactor, and deal with them as a Judge; if he should change his outward smiles into afflicting frowns; and not only shut his hand, but strip them of what he sent them. The Motive of their love being expired, the affection raised by it, must cease for want of fewel to feed it: So that God is beholden to sordid Creatures, of no value (but as they are his Creatures) for most of the Love the Sons of Men pretend to him. The Devil spake truth of most Men, tho' not of Job, when he said (Job 1. 10.) They love not God for nought; but while he makes a hedge about them and their Families, whilst he blesseth the Works of their hands, and increaseth their honour in the Land. 'Tis like Peter's sharp reproof of his Master, when he spake of the ill usage, even to death, he was to meet with at Jerusalem; This shall not be unto thee: It was as much out of love to himself, as zeal for his Masters Interest, knowing his Master could not be in such a storm without some drops lighting upon himself. All the Apostacies of Men in the World are Witnesses to this: They fawn whilst they may have a prosperous Profession, but will not bear one chip of the Cross for the Interest of God. They would partake of his Blessings, but not endure the prick of a Launce for him: As those that admired the Miracles of our Saviour, and shrunk at his Sufferings. A time of tryal discovers these Mercenary Souls to be more Lovers of themselves than their Maker. This is a pretended love of Friendship to God, but a real love to a Lust, only to gain by God: A good Mans temper is contrary: Quench Hell, burn Heaven (said a holy Man) I will love and fear my God.

2. 'Tis evident, In abstinence from some sins; not because they offend God, but because they are against the Interest of some other beloved Corruption, or a bar to something Men hunt after in the World. When temperance is cherished not to honour God, but preserve a crazy Carcass: Prodigality forsaken, out of a humor of Avarice: Uncleanness forsaken, not out of a hatred of Lust, but love to their Money: Declining a Denial of the Interest and Truth of God, not out of affection to them, but an ambitious Zeal for their own Reputation. There is a kind of Conversion from sin, when God is made the term of it, Jer. 4. 1. If thou wilt return oh Israel, return unto me, saith the Lord *. When we forbear Sin, as Dogs do the Meat they love, they forbear not out of a hatred of the Carrion, but fear of the Cudgel: These are as wicked in their abstaining from sin, as others are in their furious committing it. Nothing of the Honour of God and the End of his Appointments is indeed in all this, but the conveniences Self gathers from them. Again, many of the motives the generality of the World uses to their Friends and Relations to draw them from Vices, are drawn from Self, and used to prop up natural or sinful Self in them: Come, reform your selves, take other Courses, you will smut your Reputation and be despicable; you will destroy your Estate and commence a Beggar; your Family will be undone, and you may rot in a Prison: Not laying close to them the Duty they owe to God, the Dishonour which accrues to him by their unworthy Courses, and the ingratitude to the God of their Mercies: Not that the other Motives are to be laid aside and slighted. Mint and Cummin may be tithed, but the weightier concerns are not to be omitted: But this shews that Self is the Byas, not only of Men in their own Course, but in their Dealings with others. What should be subordinate to the Honour of God, and the Duty we owe to him, is made superior.

* Trap. on Gen. p. 148.

3. Tis evident, In performing Duties meerly for a selfish interest: Making our selves the end of religious Actions, paying a Homage to that, while we pretend to render it to God, Zach. 7. 5. Did you at all fast unto me, even unto me? Things ordained by God may fall in with carnal ends affected by our selves; and then Religion is not kept up by any interest of God in the Conscience, but the interest of Self in the Heart: We then sanctifie not the Name of God in the Duty, but gratifie our selves: God may be the Object, Self is the End; and a heavenly Object is made subservient to a Carnal design. Hypocrisie passes a complement on God, and is called Flattery, Psal. 78. 36. They did flatter him with their Lips, &c. They gave him a parcel of good Words for their own preservation. Flattery in the old Notion among the Heathens, is a vice more peculiar to serve our own turn, and purvey for the Belly: They knew they could not subsist without God, and therefore gave him a parcel of good Words, that he might spare them, and make Provision for them. Israel is an empty Vine *, a Vine say some, with large Branches and few Clusters, but brings forth fruit to himself while they professed love God with their Lips. It was that God should promote their covetuous designs, and preserve their wealth and grandeur *: In which respect, an hypocrite may be well termd a Religious Atheist, an Atheist maskt with Religion. The chief arguments which prevail with many Men to perform some Duties and appear Religious, are the same that Hamour & Shechim used to the people of their City to submit to Circumcision, viz. the ingrossing of more wealth, Gen. 34. 21, 22. If every Male among us be Circumcised, as they are Circumcised, shall not their Cattle and their Substance, and every Beast of theirs be ours?

* Hos. 10. 1.

* Ezek. 33. v. 31.

This is seen,

1. In

1. In unweildineſs to Religious Duties, where Self is not concern'd. With what lively Thoughts will many approach to God, when a Revenue may be brought in to ſupport their own ends? But when the concerns of God only are in it, the Duty is not the Delight, but the Clogg; ſuch feeble Devotions that warm not the Soul, unleſs there be ſomething of Self to give ſtrength and heat to them. Jonah was ſick of his Work, and run from God, becauſe he thought he ſhould get no honour by his Meſſage; *Jona. 4. 2. *God's Mercy will diſcredit his Prophecy. Thoughts of diſadvantage, cut the very ſinews of Service. You may as well perſwade a Merchant to venture all his Eſtate upon the inconſtant Waves without hopes of gain, as prevail with a natural Man to be ſerious in Duty, without expectation of ſome warm Advantage. What profit ſhould we have if we pray to him? is the natural Queſtion, Job 21. 15. What profit ſhall I have if I be cleanſed from my Sin? Job 35. 3. I ſhall have more good by my ſin than by my ſervice. 'Tis for God that I dance before the Ark, ſaith David, therefore I will be more vile, 2 Sam. 6. 2. 'Tis for Self that I pray, ſaith a natural Man, therefore I will be more warm and quick. Ordinances of God are obſerved only as a point of Intereſt, and Prayer is often moſt fervent, when it is leaſt godly and moſt ſelfiſh: Carnal Ends and Affections will pour out lively Expreſſions. If there be no delight in the means that lead to God, there is no delight in God himſelf: Becauſe Love is appetitus unionis, a deſire of Union; and where the Object is deſirable, the means that brings us to it would be delightful too.

2. In calling upon God only in a time of neceſſity. How officious will Men be in affliction, to that God whom they neglect in their Proſperity? When he ſlew them, then they ſought him, and they returned and inquired after God, and they remembred that God was their Rock, Pſal. 78. 34. They remembred him under the Scourge, and forgat him under his Smiles: They viſit the Throne of Grace, knock loud at Heavens Gates, and give God no reſt for their early and importunate Devotions when under Diſtreſs: But when their deſires are anſwered, and the Rod removed; they ſtand aloff from him, and reſt upon their own bottom, as Jer. 2. 31. We are Lords, we will come no more unto thee. When we have need of him, he ſhall find us Clients at his Gate; and when we have ſerved our turn, he hears no more of us: Like Noah's Dove ſent out of the Ark, that returned to him when ſhe found no reſt on the Earth, but came not back when ſhe found a footing elſewhere. How often do Men apply themſelves to God, when they have ſome buſineſs for him to do for them? And then too, they are loath to put it ſolely into his hand, to manage it for his own Honour; but they preſume to be his Directors, that he may manage it for their Glory. Self ſpurs Men on to the Throne of Grace; they deſire to be furniſh'd with ſome Mercy they want, or to have the Clouds of ſome Judgments which they fear, blown over: This is not affection to God, but to our ſelves: As the Romans worſhipped a Quartane Ague as a Goddeſs, and Timorem & Pallorem, Fear and Paleneſs, as Gods; not out of any affection they had to the Diſeaſe or the Paſſion, but for fear to receive any hurt by them.

Again, when we have gained the Mercy we need, how little do we warm our Souls with the conſideration of that God that gave it, or lay out the Mercy in his Service? We are importunate to have him our Friend in our Neceſſities, and are ungratefully careleſs of him, and his injuries, he ſuffers by us or others: When he hath diſcharged us from the Rock where we ſtuck, we leave him, as having no more need of him, and able to do well enough without him: As if we were petty Gods our ſelves, and only wanted a lift from him at firſt: This is not to glorifie God, as God, but as our Servant; not an honouring of God, but a ſelf-ſeeking: He would hardly beg at God's Door, if he could pleaſure himſelf without him.

5. In begging his Aſſiſtance to our own Projects. When we lay the Plot of our own Affairs, and then come to God, not for Counſel but Bleſſing; Self only ſhall give us Counſel how to act; but becauſe we believe there is a God that governs the World, we will deſire him to contribute Succeſs. God is not conſulted with, till the Counſel of Self be fixed; then God muſt be the Executor of our Will: Self muſt be the Principal, and God the Inſtrument to hatch what we have contrived. 'Tis worſe when we beg of God to favour ſome ſinful aim, the Pſalmiſt implies this, Pſal. 66. 18. If I regard Iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me. Iniquity regarded as the aim in Prayer, renders the Prayer ſucceſleſs, and the Suppliant an Atheiſt, in debaſing God to back his Luſt by his holy Providence.

The Diſciples had determined Revenge; and becauſe they could not act it without their Maſter, they would have him be their ſecond in their vindictive paſſion, Luke 9. 55. Call for fire from Heaven.

We ſcarce ſeek God, till we have modell'd the whole Contrivance in our own Brains, and reſolved upon the Methods of Performance; as tho' there were not a fullneſs of Wiſdom in God to guide us in our Reſolves, as well as Power to breath Succeſs upon them.

4. In impatience upon the refuſal of our deſires. How often do Mens Spirits riſe againſt God, when he ſteps not in with the Aſſiſtance they want? If the glory of God ſwayed more with them than their private Intereſt, they would let God be Judge of his own Glory, and rather magnifie his Wiſdom, than complain of his want of Goodneſs: Selfiſh Hearts will charge God with neglect of them, if he be not as quick in their ſupplies as they are in their deſires; like thoſe in Iſa. 58. 3. Wherefore have we faſted ſay they, and thou ſeeſt not? wherefore have we afflicted our Souls and thou takeſt no Knowledge? When we aim at God's Glory in our Importunities, we ſhall fall down in humble Submiſſions when he denies us: Whereas Self riſeth up in bold Expoſtulations, as if God were our Servant, and had neglected the Service he owed us, not to come at our Call. We over-value the Satisfaction of ſelf above the Honour of God.

Beſides, if what we deſire be a ſin, our Impatience at a Refuſal is more Intolerable: 'Tis an anger, that God will not lay aſide his Holineſs to ſerve our Corruption.

5. In the actual aims Men have in their Duties. In Prayer for temporal things, when we deſire Health for our own Eaſe, Wealth for our own Senſuality, Strength for our Revenge, Children for the Increaſe of our Family, Gifts for our Applauſe, as Simon Magus did the Holy Ghoſt; or when ſome of thoſe ends are aimed at: This is to deſire God not to ſerve himſelf of us, but to be a Servant to our worldly Intereſt, our vain Glory, the greatning of our Names, &c. In Spiritual Mercies begged for; When pardon of ſin is deſired only for our own ſecurity from eternal Vengeance; Sanctification deſired only to make us fit for everlaſting Bleſſedneſs; Peace of Conſcience only that we may lead our lives more comfortably in the world; when we have not actual Intentions for the glory of God, or when our Thoughts of God's Honour are overtopt by the aims of Self-advantage: Not but that as God hath preſs'd us to thoſe things by Motives drawn from the Bleſſedneſs derived to our ſelves by them, ſo we may deſire them with a reſpect to our ſelves; but this reſpect muſt be contained within the due banks, in ſubordination to the glory of God, not above it, nor in an equal ballance with it. * That which is nouriſhing or medicinal in the firſt or ſecond degree, is in the fourth or fifth degree meer deſtructive Poyſon.

 Gurnall, Part 3. P. 337.*

Let us conſider it ſeriouſly; tho' a Duty be heavenly, doth not ſome baſe end ſmut us in it?

[1.] How is it with our Confeſſions of Sin? Are they not more to procure our Pardon, than to ſhame our ſelves before God, or to be freed from the Chains that hinder us from bringing him the glory for which we were Created? or more to partake of his benefits, than to honour him in acknowledging the Rights of his Juſtice? Do we not bewail ſin as it hath ruined us, not as it oppoſed the Holineſs of God? Do we not ſhuffle with God, and confeſs one ſin while we reſerve another, as if we would allure God by declaring our diſlike of one, to give us liberty to commit wantonneſs with another; not to abhor our ſelves, but to daub with God?

2. Is it any better in our Private and Family Worſhip? Are not ſuch Aſſemblies frequented by ſome, where ſome upon whom they have a dependance may eye them, and have a better opinion of them, and affection to them? If God were the ſole end of our hearts, would they not be as glowing under the ſole eye of God, as our Tongues or Carriages are ſeemingly ſerious under the eye of Man? Are not Family Duties performed by ſome that their voices may be heard, and their reputation ſupported among Godly Neighbours?

[3.] Is not the Charity of many Men tainted with this end Self? * as the Phariſees were, while they ſet the miſerable object before them, but not the Lord; beſtowing Alms, not ſo much upon the neceſſities of the people, as the friendſhip we owe them for ſome particular reſpects: Or caſting our Bread upon thoſe waters which ſtream down in the ſight of the World, that our Doles may be viſible to them, and commended by them: Or when we think to oblige God to pardon our Tranſgreſſions; as if we merited it, and Heaven too, at his hands, by beſtowing a few pence upon indigent perſons. And,

[4.] Is it not the ſame with the Reproofs of Men? Is not heat and anger carried out with full Sail, when our worldly Intereſt is prejudic'd, and becalm'd in the concerns of God? Do not many Maſters reprove their Servants with more vehemency, for the neglect of their Trade and Buſineſs, than the neglect of Divine Duties; and that upon Religious Arguments, pretending the honour of God, that they may mind their own intereſt? But when they are negligent in what they owe to God, no noiſe is made, they paſs without rebuke. Is not this to make God and Religion a Stale to their own ends? 'Tis a part of Atheiſm not to regard the injuries done to God, as Tiberius; * Let Gods wrongs be looked to, or cared for by himſelf.

 Dei injuria Deo cura.*

[5.] Is it not thus in our ſeeming Zeal for Religion? As Demetrius, and the Crafts-men at Epheſus, cried up aloud the greatneſs of Diana of the Epheſians, not out of any true zeal they had for her, but their gain, which was increaſed by the confluence of her Worſhippers, and the Sale of their own Shrines, Acts 19. 24, 28.

4. In making uſe of the Name of God to countenance our Sin. When we ſet up an Opinion that is a Friend to our Luſts, and then dig deep into the Scripture to find Crutches to ſupport it, and authorize our practices: When Men will thank God for what they have got by unlawful means, Fathering the fruit of their cheating Craft, and the ſimplicity of their Chapmen, upon God: Crediting their Couſenage by his Name, as Men do braſs Money, with a thin Plate of Silver, and the Stamp and Image of the Prince. The Jews urge the Law of God for the Crucifying his Son, John 19. 7. We have a Law, and by that Law he is to die; and would make him a Party in their private Revenge. * Thus often, when we have faulter'd in ſome actions, we wipe our Mouths, as if we ſought God more than our own Intereſt, proſtituting the Sacred Name and Honour of God, either to hatch or defend ſome unworthy Luſt againſt his Word.

 Sanderſon's S. Part 2. p. 158.*

Is not all this a high degree of Atheiſm?

1. 'Tis a vilifying God, an abuſe of the higheſt good: Other ſins ſubject the Creature, and outward things to them; but acting in Religious Services for Self, ſubjects not only the higheſt concernments of Mens Souls, but the Creator himſelf to the Creature: Nay, to make God contribute to that which is the pleaſure of the Devil: A greater ſlight, than to caſt the gifts of a Prince to a Herd of Naſty Swine. It were more excuſable to ſerve our ſelves of God upon the higher accounts, ſuch that materially conduce to his glory; but it is an intolerable wrong, to make him and his Ordinances Caterers for our own Bellies, as they did: * They Sacrificed the נִיכוֹת of which the Offerer might eat, not out of any reference to God, but love to their Gluttony; not pleaſe him, but feaſt themſelves. The Belly was truly made the God, when God was ſerved only in order to the Belly: As tho' the bleſſed God had his Being, and his Ordinances were enjoyned to pleaſure their fooliſh and wanton Appetites; as tho' the work of God were only to Patronize unrighteous ends, and be as bad as themſelves, and become a Pander to their corrupt Affections.

 Hoſ. 8. 13 Vid. Cocc. in locum.*

2. Becauſe it is a vilifying of God, It is an undeifying or dethroning God. 'Tis an acting, as if we were the Lords, and God our Vaſſal: A ſetting up thoſe Secular ends in the place of God, who ought to be our ultimate end in every action; to whom a glory is as due, as his mercy to us is utterly unmerited by us. He that thinks to Cheat and put the Fool upon God by his pretences, doth not heartily believe there is ſuch a Being. He could not have the Notion of a God, without that of Omniſcience and Juſtice; an Eye to ſee the Cheat, and an Arm to puniſh it: The Notion of the one would direct him in the manner of his Services, and the Senſe of the other would ſcare him from the cheriſhing his unworthy ends. He that ſerves God with a ſole reſpect to himſelf, is prepared for any Idolatry; his Religion ſhall warp with the Times and his Intereſt; he ſhall deny the true God for an Idol, when his worldly Intereſt ſhall adviſe him to it; and pay the ſame Reverence to the baſeſt Image, which he pretends now to pay to God: As the Iſraelites were as real for Idolatry, under their baſeſt Princes, as they were Pretenders to the true Religion under thoſe that were Pious.

Before I come to the uſe of this, give me leave to evince this practical Atheiſm by two other Conſiderations.

1. Unworthy Imaginations of God.

The fool hath ſaid in his heart there is no God: That is, he is not ſuch a God as you report him to be. This is meant by their being corrupt, in the 2*d*. corrupt being taken for playing the Idolaters, Exodus 32. 7. We cannot comprehend God; if we could, we ſhould ceaſe to be finite; and becauſe we cannot comprehend him, we erect ſtrange Images of him in our fancies and affections. And ſince guilt came upon us, becauſe we cannot root out the Notions of God, we would debaſe the Majeſty and Nature of God, that we may have ſome eaſe in our Conſciences, and lie down with ſome comfort in the ſparks of our own kindling.

This is univerſal in Men by Nature. God is not

in

*Psal. 10. 4. in all his thoughts *: Not in any of his thoughts according to the excellency of his Nature, and greatneſs of his Majeſty. As the Heathen did not glorifie God as God, ſo neither do they conceive of God as God: They are all infected with ſome one or other ill opinion of him, thinking him not ſo holy, powerful, juſt, good, as he is, and as the natural force of a Humane Underſtanding might arrive to. We joyn a new Notion of God in our vain fancies, and repreſent him not as he is, but as we would have him to be, fit for our own uſe, and ſuited to our own pleaſure: We ſet that active power of imagination on work, and there comes out a God, (a Calf) whom we own for a Notion of God.

Adam caſt him into ſo narrow a mould, as to think that himſelf, who had newly ſprouted up by his Almighty Power, was fit to be his Corrival in knowledge, and had vain hopes to graſp as much as Infiniteneſs: If he in his firſt declining begun to have ſuch a conceit, 'tis no doubt but we have as bad under a maſs of Corruption. When holy Agur ſpeaks of God, he cries out that he had not the underſtanding of a Man, nor the knowledge of the Holy *: He did not think rationally of God, as Man might by his ſtrength at his firſt Creation. There are as many Carved Images of God, as there are Minds of Men, and as monſtrous ſhapes as thoſe Corruptions, into which they would transform him.

* Pro. 30. v. 2, 3.

Hence ſprang,

1. Idolatry. Vain Imaginations firſt ſet afloat and kept up this in the World. * Vain Imaginations of the God, whoſe glory they changed into the Image of corruptible Man: They had ſet up vain Images of him in their fancy, before they ſet up Idolatrous repreſentations of him in their Temples: The likening him to thoſe Idols of Wood and Stone, and various Metals, were the fruit of an Idea erected in their own Minds: This is a mighty debaſing the Divine Nature, and rendring him no better, than that baſe and ſtupid Matter they make the viſible Object of their Adoration, equalling him with thoſe baſe Creatures they think worthy to be the repreſentations of him. Yet how far did this Crime ſpread it ſelf in all Corners of the World, not only among the more barbarous and ignorant, but the more poliſh'd and civilized Nations? Judea only, where God had placed the Ark of his preſence, being free from it, in ſome intervals of time, only after ſome ſweeping Judgment. And tho' they vomited up their Idols, under ſome ſharp ſcourge, they licked them up again after the Heavens were cleared over their Heads: The whole Book of Judges makes mention of it: And tho' an Evangelical Light hath chaſed that Idolatry away from a great part of the World, yet the Principle remaining, Coins more Spiritual Idols in the heart, which are brought before God in acts of Worſhip.

* Rom. 1. v. 21, 23.

2. Hence all Superſtition received its riſe and growth. When we Mint a God according to our own Complexion, like to us in mutable and various paſſions, ſoon angry and ſoon appeaſed, 'tis no wonder that we invent ways of pleaſing him after we have offended him, and think to expiate the Sin of our Souls, by ſome Melancholy Devotions and Self-Chaſtiſements. Superſtition is nothing elſe but an unſcriptural and unrevealed dread of God *. When they imagined him a rigorous, and ſevere Maſter, they caſt about for ways to mitigate him whom they thought ſo hard to be pleaſed: A very mean thought of him, as if a ſlight and pompous Devotion could as eaſily bribe and flatter him out of his rigors, as a few good words or baubling rattles could pleaſe and quiet little Children; and whatſoever pleaſed us, could pleaſe a God infinitely above us. Such narrow conceipts had the Philiſtins, when they thought to ſtill the anger of the God of Iſrael, whom they thought they poſſeſs'd in the Ark, with the preſent of a few Golden Mice *. All the Superſtition this day living in the World is built upon this foundation: So natural it is to Man to pull God down to his own Imaginations, rather than raiſe his Imaginations up to God. Hence doth ariſe alſo the diffidence of his mercy, tho' they repent; meaſuring God by the contracted Models of their own Spirits, as tho' his Nature were as difficult to Pardon their offences againſt him, as they are to remit wrongs done to themſelves.

* Δεισιδαιμονία.

* 1 Sam. 6. v. 3, 4.

3. Hence ſprings all Preſumption, the Common diſeaſe of the World. All the wickedneſs in the World, which is nothing elſe but preſuming upon God, riſes from the ill interpretations of the goodneſs of God, breaking out upon them in the Works of Creation and Providence; the Corruption of Mans nature engendred by thoſe Notions of Goodneſs, a monſtrous birth of vain Imaginations. Not of themſelves primarily, but of God; whence aroſe all that folly and darkneſs in their minds and converſations, Rom. 1. 20, 21. They glorified him not as God, but according to themſelves, imagined him good, that themſelves might be bad; fancied him ſo indulgent, as to neglect his own honour for their ſenſuality. How doth the unclean perſon repreſent him to his own thoughts, but as a Goat; the Murderer as a Tyger; the ſenſual perſon as a Swine; while they fancy a God indulgent to their Crimes without their repentance? As the Image on the Seal is ſtampt upon the Wax, ſo the thoughts of the heart are printed upon the Actions. Gods patience is apprehended to be an approbation of their Vices, and from the conſideration of his forbearance, they faſhion a God that they believe will ſmile upon their Crimes: They imagine a God that plays with them; and tho' he threatens, doth it only to ſcare, but means not as he ſpeaks: A God they fancy like themſelves, that would do as they would do, not be angry for what they count a light offence, Pſal. 50. 21. Thou thoughteſt I was ſuch a one as thy ſelf: That God and they were exactly alike as two Tallies *. [Our wilful miſapprehenſions of God, are the cauſe of our misbehaviour in all his Worſhip: Our ſlovenly and lazy Services tell him to his face, what ſlight thoughts and apprehenſions we have of him.]

* Gurnal, Part 2. p. 245, 246.

Compare theſe two together.

Superſtition ariſeth from terrifying miſapprehenſions of God: Preſumption from Self-pleaſing thoughts. One repreſents him only rigorous, and the other careleſs: One makes us over officious in ſerving him by our own rules; and the other over bold in offending him, according to our humours. The want of a true Notion of Gods Juſtice makes ſome Men ſlight him: And the want of a true apprehenſion of his goodneſs, makes others too ſervile in their approaches to him: One makes us careleſs of Duties, and the other makes us look on them rather as Phyſick than Food; an unſupportable Penance, than a deſirable Priviledge. In this Caſe, Hell is the Principle of Duty perform'd to Heaven. The Superſtitious Man believes God hath ſcarce Mercy to Pardon; the Preſumptuous Man believes he hath no ſuch perfection as Juſtice to puniſh. The one makes him inſignificant to what he deſires, kindneſs and goodneſs; the other renders him inſignificant to what he fears, his vindictive Juſtice: What between the Idolater, the Superſtitious, the preſumptuous Perſon, God ſhould look like no God in the World.

Theſe unworthy Imaginations of God are likewiſe,

A vilifying of him: Debaſing the Creator, to be a Creature of their own fancies; putting their own ſtamp upon him, and faſhioning him not according to that beautiful Image he impreſt upon them by Creation, but the defaced Image they inherit by their fall;

fall; and which is worſe, the Image of the Devil, which ſpread it ſelf over them at their Revolt and Apoſtacy. Were it poſſible to ſee a Picture of God, according to the fancies of Men, it would be the moſt monſtrous Being, ſuch a God that never was, nor ever can be.

We honour God when we have worthy opinions of him ſuitable to his Nature; when we conceive of him as a Being of unbounded lovelineſs and perfection. We detract from him, when we aſcribe to him ſuch qualities as would be a horrible diſgrace to a wiſe and good Man; as Injuſtice and Impurity. Thus Men debaſe God when they invert his Order, and would Create him according to their Image, as he firſt Created them according to his own: And think him not worthy to be a God, unleſs he fully anſwer the Mould they would Caſt him into, and be what is unworthy of his Nature: Men do not conceive of God as he would have them, but he muſt be what they would have him, one of their own ſhaping.

1. This is worſe than Idolatry. The groſſeſt Idolater commits not a Crime ſo hainous, by changing his Glory into the Image of creeping things and ſenceleſs Creatures, as the imagining God to be as one of our ſinful ſelves, and likening him to thoſe filthy Images we erect in our fancies: One makes him an earthly God, like an earthly Creature; the other fancies him an unjuſt and impure God, like a wicked Creature: One ſets up an Image of him in the Earth, which is his Footſtool; the other ſets up an Image of him in the heart, which ought to be his Throne.

2. 'Tis worſe than abſolute Atheiſm, or a denial of God. Dignius credimus non eſſe, quodcunque non ita fuerit, ut eſſe deberet, was the opinion of Tertullian *. 'Tis more commendable to think him not to be, than to think him ſuch a one as is inconſiſtent with his Nature. Better to deny his Exiſtence, than deny his Perfection. No wiſe Man but would rather have his Memory rot, than be accounted infamous; and would be more obliged to him that ſhould deny that ever he had a Being in the World, than to ſay he did indeed live, but he was a Sot, a debauch'd Perſon, and a Man not to be truſted. When we apprehend God deceitful in his Promiſes, unrighteous in his Threatnings, unwilling to pardon upon Repentance, or reſolved to pardon notwithſtanding impenitency, theſe are things either unworthy of the Nature of God, or contrary to that Revelation he hath given of himſelf. Better for a Man never to have been born, than be for ever miſerable; ſo better to be thought no God, than repreſented impotent or negligent, unjuſt or deceitful; which are more contrary to the Nature of God, than Hell can be to the greateſt Criminal. In this ſenſe perhaps the Apoſtle affirms the Gentiles, Eph. 2. 12. to be ſuch as are without God in the World; as being more Atheiſts in adoring God under ſuch Notions, as they commonly did, than if they had acknowledged no God at all.

* Tertul. cont. Maxim. lib. 1. cap. 2.

2. This is evident by our natural deſire to be diſtant from him, and unwillingneſs to have any acquaintance with him. Sin ſet us firſt at a diſtance from God; and every new act of groſs Sin eſtrangeth us more from him, and indiſpoſeth us more for him: It makes us both afraid and aſhamed to be near him. Senſual Men were of this frame that Job diſcourſeth of, Job 21. 7, 8, 9, & 14, & 15 verſes: Where grace reigns, the nearer to God, the more vigorous the motion: The nearer any thing approaches to us, that is the Object of our deſires, the more eagerly do we preſs forward to it: But our blood riſeth at the approaches of any thing to which we have an averſion: We have naturally a loathing of Gods coming to us, or our return to him: We ſeek not after him as our happineſs; and when he offers himſelf, we like it not, but put a diſgrace upon him, in chuſing other things before him. God and we are naturally at as great a diſtance, as Light and Darkneſs, Life and Death, Heaven and Hell: The ſtronger impreſſion of God any thing hath, the more we fly from it. The glory of God, in reflection upon Moſes his face, ſcar'd the Iſraelites; they who had deſired God to ſpeak to them by Moſes, when they ſaw a ſignal impreſſion of God upon his Countenance, were afraid to come near him, as they were before unwilling to come near to God *: Not that the bleſſed God is in his own nature a frightful object, but our own guilt renders him ſo to us, and our ſelves indiſpoſed to converſe with him. As the light of the Sun is as irkſome to a diſtemper'd eye, as it is in its own Nature deſirable to a ſound one. The Saints themſelves have had ſo much frailty, that they have cried out, that they were undone, if they had any more than ordinary diſcoveries of God made unto them; as if they wiſhed him more remote from them. Vileneſs cannot endure the ſplendor of Majeſty, nor guilt the glory of a Judge.

* Exod. 34. v. 30.

We have naturally, (1.) No deſire of remembrance of him, (2.) or converſe with him, (3.) or thorough return to him, (4.) or cloſe imitation of him: As if there were not any ſuch Being as God in the World; or as if we wiſhed there were none at all; ſo feeble and ſpiritleſs are our thoughts of the Being of a God.

(1.) No deſire for the remembrance of him. How delightful are other things in our minds? How burdenſome the Memorials of God, from whom we have our Being? With what pleaſure do we contemplate the Nature of Creatures, even of Flies and Toads, while our minds tire in the ſearch of him, who hath beſtowed upon us our knowing and meditating Faculties? Tho' God ſhews himſelf to us in every Creature, in the meaneſt Weed, as well as the higheſt Heavens, and is more apparent in them, to our reaſons, than themſelves can be to our ſence, yet tho' we ſee them, we will not behold God in them: We will view them to pleaſe our ſenſe, to improve our reaſon in their natural perfections, but paſs by the conſideration of Gods perfections ſo viſibly beaming from them. Thus we play the Beaſts and Atheiſts in the very exerciſe of reaſon, and neglect our Creator to gratifie our ſenſe; as tho' the pleaſure of that were more deſirable than the knowledge of God: The deſire of our Souls is not towards his Name, and the Remembrance of him *, when we ſet not our ſelves in a poſture to feaſt our Souls with deep and ſerious meditations of him; have a thought of him, only by the by and away, as if we were afraid of too intimate acquaintance with him.

* Iſa. 26. 8.

Are not the thoughts of God rather our Invaders, than our Gueſts, ſeldom invited to reſide and take up their home in our hearts? Have we not, when they have broke in upon us, bid them depart from us *, and warned them to come no more upon our ground, ſent them packing as ſoon as we could, and were glad when they were gone? And when they have departed, have we not often been afraid they ſhould return again upon us, and therefore look'd about for other inmates, things not good, or if good, infinitely below God, to poſſeſs the room of our hearts, before any thoughts of him ſhould appear again? Have we not often been glad of excuſes, to ſhake off preſent thoughts of him, and when we have wanted real ones, found out pretences to keep God and our Hearts at a diſtance? Is not this a part of Atheiſm, to be ſo unwilling to imploy our faculties about the giver of them, to refuſe to exerciſe them in a way of grateful remembrance of him, and tho' they were none of his gift, but our own acquiſition, as tho' the God that truly gave them had no right to them, and he that thinks on us every day in a way of Providence, were not worthy to be thought on by us in a way of ſpecial Remembrance?

* Job 22. 17

Do not the best, that love the remembrance of him, and abhor this natural averseness, find, that when they would think of God, many things tempt them and turn them to think elsewhere? Do they not find their Apprehensions too feeble, their Motives too dull, and the Impressions too slight? This natural Atheism is spread over humane Nature.

(2.) No desire of converse with him. The word [remember] in the Command for keeping holy the Sabbath-day, including all the Duties of the Day, and the choicest of our Lives; implies our natural unwillingness to them, and forgetfulness of them: God's pressing this Command with more Reasons than the rest, manifests that Man hath no heart for spiritual Duties. No Spiritual Duty, which sets us immediately Face to Face with God; but in the attempts of it, we find naturally a resistance, from some powerful Principle; so that every one may subscribe to the Speech of the Apostle, that when we would do good, evil is present with us. No reason of this can be rendred, but the natural temper of our Souls, and an affecting a distance from God under any consideration: For tho' our guilt first made the breach, yet this aversion to a converse with him steps up without any actual Reflections upon our Guilt, which may render God terrible to us as an offended Judge: Are we not often also in our attendance upon him, more pleased with the modes of Worship which gratifie our fancy, than to have our Souls inwardly delighted with the Object of Worship, Himself?

This is a part of our natural Atheism. To cast such Duties off by total neglect, or in part, by affecting a coldness in them; is to cast off the Fear of * Job 15.4. the Lord *. Not to call upon God, and not to know him, are one and the same thing, Jer. 10. 25. Either we think there is no such Being in the World, or that he is so slight a one, that he deserves not the respect he calls for; or so impotent and poor, that he cannot supply what our necessities require.

(3.) No desire of a thorough return to him. The first Man fled from him after his Defection, though he had no refuge to fly to, but the Grace of his Creator. Cain went from his presence, would be a Fugitive from God, rather than a Supplicant to him; when by Faith in, and application of the promised Redeemer, he might have escaped the Wrath to come for his Brothers Blood, and mitigated the sorrows he was justly sentenced to bear in the World. Nothing will separate prodigal Man from commoning with Swine, and make him return to his Father, but any Empty Trough: Have we but husks to feed on, we shall never think of a Father's Presence. It were well if our Sores and Indigence would drive us to him; but when our strength is devoured, we will not return to the Lord our God, nor seek him for all * Hos. 7. 10. this *. Not his drawn Sword as a God of Judgment, nor his mighty Power as a Lord, nor his open Arms as the Lord their God, could move them to turn their Eyes and their Hearts towards him. The more he invites us to partake of his Grace, the further we run from him to provoke his Wrath: The louder God called them by his Prophets, the closer * Hos. 11. 2. they stuck to their Baal *. We turn our backs when he stretches out his hand, stop our Ears when he lifts up his voice: We fly from him when he courts us, and shelter our selves in any Bush from his merciful hand, that would lay hold upon us; nor will we set our Faces towards him, till our way be hedged up with Thorns, and not a gap left to creep out any By-way *. Whosoever is brought to a return, puts * Hos. 2. v. 6, 7. the Holy-Ghost to the pain of striving; he is not easily brought to a spiritual Subjection to God, nor perswaded to a Surrender at a Sommons, but sweetly over-power'd by storm, and victoriously drawn into the Arms of God: God stands ready, but the heart stands off; Grace is full of Intreaties, and the Soul full of excuses. Divine Love offers, and Carnal Self-love rejects: Nothing so pleases us, as when we are furthest from him; as if any thing were more aimable, any thing more desirable than himself.

(4.) No desire of any close imitation of him. When our Saviour was to come as a Refiners Fire to purifie the Sons of Levi, the cry is, Who shall abide the day of his coming? Mal. 3. 2, 3. Since we are alienated from the Life of God, we desire no more naturally to live the life of God, than a Toad or any other Animal desires to live the life of a Man: No heart that knows God, but hath a holy ambition to imitate him: No Soul that refuseth him for a Copy, but is ignorant of his Excellency: Of this temper is all Mankind naturally. Man in Corruption is as loth to be like God in Holiness, as Adam after his Creation was desirous to be like God in Knowledge; his Posterity are like their Father, who soon turned his back upon his Original Copy.

What can be worse than this? Can the denial of his Being be a greater injury than this contempt of him; as if he had not goodness to deserve our remembrance, nor aimableness fit for our converse; as if he were not a Lord fit for our subjection, nor had a Holiness that deserved our imitation?

For the Use of this. It serves,

1. For information.

1. It gives us occasion to admire the wonderful patience and mercy of God. How many Millions of practical Atheists breath every day in his Air, and live upon his Bounty, who deserve to be Inhabitants in Hell, rather than Possessors of the Earth? An infinite Holiness is offended, an infinite Justice is provoked; yet an infinite Patience forbears the Punishment, and an infinite Goodness relieves our wants: The more we had merited his Justice and forfeited his Favour, the more is his affection inhanc'd, which makes his hand so liberal to us.

At the first invasion of his Rights, he mitigates the terror of the threatning, which was set to defend his Law, with the grace of a Promise to relieve and recover his Rebellious Creature *. Who would * Gen. 3. 15 have looked for any thing but tearing Thunders, sweeping Judgments, to raise up the Foundations of the Apostate World? But oh, how great are his Bowels to his aspiring Competitors? Have we not experimented his Contrivances for our good, tho' we have refused him for our Happiness? Has he not opened his Arms, when we spurned with our Feet; held out his alluring Mercy, when we have brandisht against him a rebellious Sword? Has he not entreated us while we have invaded him, as if he were unwilling to lose us, who are ambitious to destroy our selves? Has he yet denyed us the care of his Providence, while we have denyed him the Rights of his Honour, and would appropriate them to our selves? Has the Sun forborn shining upon us, tho' we have shot our Arrows against him? Have not our Beings been supported by his Goodness, while we have endeavoured to climb up to his Throne; and his mercies continued to charm us, while we have used them as Weapons to injure him? Our own necessities might excite us to own him as our happiness, but he adds his invitations to the voice of our wants. Has he not promised a Kingdom to those that would strip him of his Crown, and proclaimed Pardon upon Repentance to those that would take away his Glory? And hath so twisted together his own end, which is his Honour, and Man's true end, which is his Salvation, that a Man cannot truly mind himself and his own Salvation, but he must mind God's Glory; and cannot be intent upon God's Honour, but by the same act he promotes himself and his own Happineſs; So loth is God to give any juſt occaſion of diſſatisfaction to his Creature, as well as diſhonour himſelf. All thoſe wonders of his Mercy are inhanc'd by the hainouſneſs of our Atheiſm; a multitude of gracious Thoughts from him above the multitude of Contempts from us *. What Rebels in actual Arms againſt their Prince aiming at his Life, ever found that favour from him, to have all their neceſſaries richly afforded them, without which they would ſtarve, and without which they would be unable to manage their attempts, as we have received from God? Had not God had riches of goodneſs, forbearance and long-ſuffering, and infinite riches too; the deſpight the World hath done him in refuſing him as their Rule, Happineſs and End, would have emptied him long ago *.

* Pſ. 105. 7.

* Rom. 2. 4.

2. It brings in a Juſtification of the exerciſe of his Juſtice. If it gives us occaſion loudly to praiſe his Patience; it alſo ſtops our Mouths from accuſing any Acts of his Vengeance. What can be too ſharp a recompence for the deſpiſing and diſgracing ſo great a Being? The higheſt Contempt merits the greateſt Anger; and when we will not own him for our happineſs, 'tis equal we ſhould feel the Miſery of ſeparation from him. If he that is guilty of Treaſon deſerves to loſe his Life; what Puniſhment can be thought great enough for him that is ſo diſingenious as to prefer himſelf before a God ſo infinitely good, and ſo fooliſh as to invade the Rights of one infinitely powerful? 'Tis no injuſtice for a Creature, to be for ever left to himſelf, to ſee what advantage he can make of that Self he was ſo buſily imployed to ſet up in the place of his Creator. The Soul of Man deſerves an infinite Puniſhment for deſpiſing an infinite Good: And it is not unequitable, that that Self, which Man makes his Rule and Happineſs above God, ſhould become his Torment and Miſery, by the Righteouſneſs of that God whom he deſpiſed.

3. Hence ariſeth a neceſſity of a new ſtate and frame of Soul, to alter an Atheiſtical Nature. We forget God: Think of him with reluctancy: Have no reſpect to God in our courſe and acts: This cannot be our original State. God being infinitely good, never let Man come out of his hands with this actual unwillingneſs to acknowledge and ſerve him: He never intended to dethrone himſelf for the Work of his hands, or that the Creature ſhould have any other end than that of his Creator: As the Apoſtle ſaith in the Caſe of the Galatians Error, Gal. 5. 8. This Perſwaſion came not of him that called you; ſo this frame comes not from him that created you: How much therefore do we need a reſtoring Principle in us? Inſtead of ordering our ſelves according to the Will of God, we are deſirous to fulfil the Wills of the Fleſh *. There is a neceſſity of ſome other principle in us to make us fulfil the Will of God, ſince we were created for God, not for the Fleſh.

* Eph. 2. 3.

We can no more be voluntarily ſerviceable to God, while our Serpentine Nature, and Deviliſh Habits remain in us, than we can ſuppoſe the Devil can be willing to glorifie God, while the Nature he contracted by his fall abides powerfully in him. Our Nature and Will muſt be changed, that our actions may ragard God as our End, that we may delightfully meditate on him, and draw the Motives of our Obedience from him. Since this Atheiſm is ſeated in Nature, the change muſt be in our Nature: Since our firſt aſpirings to the Rights of God, were the Fruits of the Serpents Breath, which tainted our Nature; there muſt be a removal of this taint, whereby our Natures may be on the ſide of God againſt Satan, as they were before on the ſide of Satan againſt God. There muſt be a ſupernatural Principle before we can live a ſupernatural Life, i.e. live to God, ſince we are naturally alienated from the Life of God: The averſion of our Natures from God, is as ſtrong as our inclinations to evil; we are diſguſted with one, and preſſed with the other; we have no will, no heart, to come to God in any ſervice. This Nature muſt be broken in pieces and new moulded, before we can make God our Rule and End: While Mens deeds are evil, they cann't comply with God *; much leſs while their natures are evil: Till this be done, all the ſervice a Man performs riſeth from ſome evil imagination of the heart, which is evil, only evil, & that continually *, from wrong Notions of God, wrong Notions of Duty, or corrupt Motives. All the pretences of Devotion to God, are but the adoration of ſome golden Image. Prayers to God for the ends of ſelf, are like thoſe of the Devil to our Saviour, when he askt leave to go into the herd of Swine: The Object was right, Chriſt; the end was the deſtruction of the Swine, and the ſatisfaction of their Malice to the Owners: There is a neceſſity then that depraved ends ſhould be removed, that that which was God's end in our framing, may be our end in our acting, viz. his glory, which cann't be without a change of Nature. We can never honour him ſupreamly whom we do not ſupreamly love: Till this be, we cannot glorifie God as God, tho' we do things by his command and order; no more, than when God imployed the Devil in afflicting Job *: His performance cannot be ſaid to be good, becauſe his end was not the ſame with Gods, he acted out of Malice, what God commanded out of Sovereignty, and for gracious deſigns: Had God employed an Holy Angel in his deſign upon Job, the action had been good in the Affliction; becauſe his Nature was holy, and therefore his ends holy; but bad in the Devil, becauſe his ends were baſe and unworthy.

* John 3. 19, 20.

* Gen. 6. 5.

* Job 1.

4. We may gather from hence, the difficulty of Converſion, and Mortification to follow thereupon. What is the reaſon Men receive no more impreſſion from the voice of God and the light of his truth, than a dead Man in the Grave doth from the roaring Thunder, or a blind Mole from the light of the Sun? 'Tis becauſe our Atheiſm is as great as the deadneſs of the one, or the blindneſs of the other. The Principle in the heart is ſtrong to ſhut the door both of the thoughts and affections againſt God. If a Friend oblige us, we ſhall act for him as for our ſelves: We are won by intreaties, ſoft words overcome us, but our hearts are as deaf as the hardeſt Rock at the call of God: Neither the joys of Heaven propoſed by him can allure us, nor the flaſht terrors of Hell affright us to him; as if we conceived God unable to beſtow the one, or execute the other: The true reaſon is, God and ſelf conteſt for the Deity: The Law of ſin is, God muſt be at the foot-ſtool; the Law of God is, Sin muſt be utterly depoſed: Now 'tis difficult to leave a Law beloved, for a Law long ago diſcarded. The mind of Man will hunt after any thing; the will of Man embrace any thing; upon the propoſal of mean objects the Spirit of man ſpreads its wings, flyes to catch 'em, becomes one with 'em: But attempt to bring it under the power of God, the wings flag, the Creature looks liveleſs, as tho' there were no ſpring of Motion in it: 'Tis as much crucified to God, as the Apoſtle was to the World: The ſin of the heart diſcovers its ſtrength, the more God diſcovers the holineſs of his will *. The love of Sin hath been predominant in our Nature, has quaſh'd a love to God, if not extinguiſht it.

* Rom. 7. 9, 10, 11, 12.

Hence alſo is the difficulty of Mortification. This is a Work tending to the Honour of God: The abaſing of that inordinately aſpiring Humour in our ſelves. If the Nature of Man be inclin'd to Sin, as it is, it muſt needs be bent againſt any thing that oppoſes it. 'Tis impoſſible to ſtrike any true Blow at any Luſt, till the true Senſe of God be re-entertained in the Soil where it ought to grow.

Who

Who can be naturally willing to crucifie what is incorporated with him, his flesh? What is dearest to him, himself? Is it an easie thing for Man, the Competitor with God, to turn his Arms against himself? that Self should overthrow its own Empire? lay aside all its pretensions to, and designs for a Godhead? to hew off its own Members, and subdue its own Affections? 'Tis the nature of Man to cover his sin, to hide it in his bosom *; not to destroy it; and as unwillingly part with his carnal affections, as the Legion of Devils were with the Man that had been long possessed: And when he is forced and fired from one, he will endeavour to espouse some other Lust, as those Devils desired to possess Swine, when they were chased from their possession of that Man.

* Job 13. v. 33. If I cover my Transgression as Adam.

5. Here we see the reason of unbelief. That which hath most of God in it, meets with most aversion from us: That which hath least of God, finds better and stronger inclinations in us. What is the reason that the heart of Man is more unwilling to embrace the Gospel, than acknowledge the equity of the Law? Because there is more of Gods Nature and Perfection evident in the Gospel than in the Law: Besides there is more reliance on God, and distance from Self, commanded in the Gospel. The Law puts a Man upon his own strength, the Gospel takes him off from his own bottom: The Law acknowledges him to have a power in himself, and to act for his own reward; the Gospel strips him of all his proud and towring thoughts *, brings him to his due place, the foot of God; orders him to deny himself as his own Rule, Righteousness and End; and henceforth not to live to himself *. This is the true reason why Men are more against the Gospel than against the Law; because it doth more deifie God, and debase Man. Hence it is easier to reduce Men to some Moral Vertue, than to Faith; to make Men blush at their outward Vices, but not at the inward impurity of their Natures. Hence it is observed; that those that asserted, that all happiness did arise from something in a Mans self, as the Stoicks and Epicureans did; and that a wise Man was equal with God, were greater Enemies to the Truths of the Gospel than others, Acts 17. 18. because it lays the Ax to the root of their principal Opinion; takes the one from their Self-sufficiency, and the other from their Self-gratification: It opposeth the brutish principle of the one, which placed happiness in the pleasures of the Body, and the more noble principle of the other, which placed happiness in the vertue of the mind: The one was for a Sensual, the other for a Moral Self; both disowned by the Doctrine of the Gospel.

*2Cor.10.5

*2Cor.5.15

6. It informs us consequently, who can be the Author of Grace and Conversion, and every other good Work. No practical Atheist ever yet turned to God, but was turned by God; and not to acknowledge it to God, is a part of this Atheism, since it is a robbing God of the honour of one of his most glorious Works. If this practical Atheism be natural to Man ever since the first taint of Nature in Paradice, what can be expected from it but a resisting of the Work of God, and setting up all the forces of Nature against the operations of Grace, till a day of Power dawn and clear up upon the Soul *? Not all the Angels in Heaven, or Men upon Earth, can be imagined to be able to perswade a Man to fall out with himself. Nothing can turn the Tide of Nature, but a Power above Nature. God took away the sanctifying Spirit from Man, as a penalty for the first sin; who can regain it but by his Will and Pleasure? Who can restore it but he that remov'd it? Since every Man hath the same fundamental Atheism in him by Nature, and would be a Rule to himself, and his own End, he is so far from dethroning himself, that all the strength of his corrupted Nature is alarmed up to stand to their Arms, upon any attempt God makes to regain the Fort. The Will is so strong against God, that 'tis like many Wills twisted together, Eph. 2. 3. Wills of the Flesh; we translate it the desires of the Flesh: Like many Threds twisted in a Cable, never to be snapt asunder by a Humane Arm; a Power and Will above ours, can only untwist so many Wills in a knot. Man cannot rise to an acknowledgment of God without God: Hell may as well become Heaven, the Devil be changed into an Angel of Light. The Devil cannot but desire happiness; he knows the misery into which he is fallen; he cannot be desirous of that punishment he knows is reserved for him. Why doth he not sanctifie God and glorifie his Creator, wherein there is abundantly more pleasure than in his malicious course? Why doth he not petition to recover his ancient standing? He will not; there are Chains of Darkness upon his faculties; he will not be otherwise than he is: His desire to be God of the World, sways him against his own interest; and out of love to his malice, he will not sin at a less rate to make a diminution of his punishment. Man, if God utterly refuseth to work upon him, is no better; and to maintain his Atheism, would venture a Hell. How is it possible for a Man to turn himself to that God, against whom he hath a quarrel in his Nature, the most rooted and settled habit in him being to set himself in the place of God? An Atheist by Nature, can no more alter his own temper, and engrave in himself the Divine Nature, than a Rock can carve it self into the Statue of a Man, or a Serpent, that is an Enemy to Man, could or would raise it self to the Nobility of the humane Nature. That Soul that by Nature would strip God of his Rights, cannot without a Divine Power be made conformable to him, and acknowledge sincerely and cordially the Rights and Glory of God.

* Psal. 110. v. 3.

7. We may here see the reason why there can be no justification by the best and strongest works of Nature. Can that which hath Atheism at the root, justifie either the action or person? What strength can those Works have, which have neither Gods Law for their Rule, nor his Glory for their End; that are not wrought by any spiritual strength from him, nor tend with any spiritual affection to him? Can these be a foundation for the most holy God to pronounce a Creature righteous? They will justifie his Justice in Condemning, but cannot sway his Justice to an Absolution. Every natural Man in his Works picks and chuses; he owns the Will of God no further than he can wring it to suit the Law of his Members; and minds not the honour of God, but as it justles not with his own glory and secular ends. Can he be righteous that prefers his own Will and his own Honour, before the Will and Honour of the Creator? However Mens actions may be beneficial to others, what reason hath God to esteem them, wherein there is no respect to him but themselves, whereby they dethrone him in their thoughts, while they seem to own him in their religious Works? Every day reproves us with something differenr from the Rule: Thousands of wandrings offer themselves to our eyes. Can Justification be expected from that which in it self is matter of despair?

8. See here the cause of all the Apostacy in the World. Practical Atheism was never conquered in such: They are still alienated from the Life of God; and will not live to God, as he lives to himself and his own honour *. They loath his Rule, and distaste his Glory; are loth to step out of themselves, to promote the ends of another; find not the satisfaction in him as they do in themselves: They will be Judges of what is good for them and righteous in it self, rather than admit of God to judge for them. When Men draw back from Truth to Error, 'tis to such ſuch opinions which may ſerve more to foment and cheriſh their Ambition, Covetouſneſs, or ſome beloved Luſt that diſputes with God for precedency, and is deſigned to be ſerved before him, John 12. 42, 43. They love the praiſe of Men more than the praiſe of God. A preferring Man before God, was the reaſon they would not confeſs Chriſt, and God in him.

9. This ſhews us the excellency of the Goſpel and Chriſtian Religion. It ſets Man in his due place, and gives to God what the Excellency of his Nature requires. It lays Man in the duſt from whence he was taken, and ſets God upon that Throne where he ought to ſit. Man by Nature would annihilate God, and deifie himſelf; the Goſpel glorifies God and annihilates Man. In our firſt Revolt, we would be like him in knowledge; in the means he hath provided for our recovery, he deſigns to make us like him in grace: The Goſpel ſhews our ſelves to be an Object of Humiliation, and God to be a glorious Object for our Imitation. The Light of Nature tells us there is a God; the Goſpel gives us a more magnificent report of him: The Light of Nature condemns groſs Atheiſm, and that of the Goſpel condemns and conquers Spiritual Atheiſm in the hearts of Men.

Uſe 2. Of Exhortation.

1. Let us labour to be ſenſible of this Atheiſm in our Nature, and be humbled for it. How ſhould we lie in the duſt, and go bowing under the humbling thoughts of it all our days? Shall we not be ſenſible of that whereby we ſpill the blood of our Souls, and give a ſtab to the heart of our own Salvation? Shall we be worſe than any Creature, not to bewail that which tends to our deſtruction? He that doth not lament it, cannot challenge the Character of a Chriſtian, hath nothing of the divine Life and Love planted in his Soul. Not a Man, but ſhall one day be ſenſible, when the Eternal God ſhall call him out to Examination, and charge his Conſcience to diſcover every Crime, which will then own the Authority whereby it acted; when the heart ſhall be torn open, and the ſecrets of it brought to publick view; and the World and Man himſelf, ſhall ſee what a viperous Brood of corrupt Principles and Ends neſted in his heart. Let us therefore be truly ſenſible of it, till the conſideration draw tears from our Eyes, and ſorrow from our Souls: Let us urge the thoughts of it upon our hearts, till the Core of that Pride be eaten out, and our Stubbornneſs changed into Humility: Till our heads become Waters, and our eyes Fountains of Tears, and be a Spring of Prayer to God to change the Heart, and mortifie the Atheiſm in it; and conſider what a ſad thing it is to be a practical Atheiſt: And who is not ſo by Nature?

1. Let us be ſenſible of it in our ſelves. Have any of our hearts been a Soyl wherein the Fear and Reverence of God hath naturally grown? Have we a deſire to know him, or a will to embrace him? Do we delight in his will, and love the remembrance of his Name? Are our reſpects to him as God, equal to the ſpeculative knowledge we have of his Nature? Is the heart, wherein he hath ſtampt his Image, reſerved for his Reſidence? Is not the World more affected than the Creator of the World, as tho' that could contribute to us a greater happineſs than the Author of it? Have not Creatures as much of our love, fear, truſt; nay, more than God that framed both them and us? Have we not too often relied upon our own ſtrength, and made a Calf of our own Wiſdom, and ſaid of God as the Iſraelites of Moſes, As for this Moſes we wot not what is become of him, Exod. 32. 1. and given oftner the glory of our good ſucceſs to our Drag and our Net, to our Craft and our Induſtry, than to the Wiſdom and Bleſſing of God? Are we then free from this ſort of Atheiſm *? 'Tis as impoſſible to have two Gods at one time in one heart, as to have two Kings at one time in full power in one Kingdom. Have there not been frequent neglects of God? Have we not been deaf whilſt he hath knocked at our doors? ſlept when he hath ſounded in our ears, as if there had been no ſuch Being as a God in the World? How many ſtrugglings have been againſt our approaches to him? Hath not folly often been committed with vain imaginations, ſtarting up in the time of Religious Service, which we would ſcarce vouchſafe a look to at another time, and in another buſineſs, but would have thruſt them away with indignation? Had they ſtept in to interrupt our worldly affairs, they would have been troubleſome Intruders, but while we are with God they are acceptable Gueſts. How unwilling have our hearts been to fortifie themſelves with ſtrong and influencing conſiderations of God, before we addreſt to him? Is it not too often that our lifleſneſs in Prayer proceeds from this Atheiſm? a neglect of ſeeing what arguments and pleas may be drawn from the divine perfections, to ſecond our ſuit in hand, and quicken our hearts in the ſervice? Whence are thoſe indiſpoſitions to any ſpiritual duty, but becauſe we have not due thoughts of the Majeſty, Holineſs, Goodneſs and Excellency of God? Is there any duty which leads to a more particular inquiry after him, or a more clear viſion of him, but our hearts have been ready to riſe up and call it curſed rather than bleſſed? Are not our Minds bemiſted with an ignorance of him, our Wills drawn by averſion from him, our Affections riſing in diſtaſte of him? More willing to know any thing than his Nature, and more induſtrious to do any thing than his Will? Do we not all fall under ſome one or other of theſe conſiderations? Is it not fit then that we ſhould have a ſenſe of them? 'Tis to be bewail'd by us, that ſo little of God is in our hearts, when ſo many evidences of the love of God are in the Creatures; that God ſhould be ſo little our End, who hath been ſo much our Benefactor; that he ſhould be ſo little in our thoughts, who ſparkles in every thing which preſents it ſelf to our eyes.

2. Let us be ſenſible of it in others. We ought to have a juſt execration of the too open iniquity in the midſt of us; and imitate holy David, whoſe tears plentifully guſht out, becauſe Men kept not Gods Law *. And is it not a time to exerciſe this pious lamentation? Hath the wicked Atheiſm of any Age been greater, or can you find worſe in Hell, than we may hear of, and behold on Earth? How is the excellent Majeſty of God, adored by the Angels in Heaven, deſpiſed and reproached by Men on Earth, as if his Name were publiſh'd to be matter of their ſport? What a gaſping thing is a natural ſenſe of God among Men in the World? Is not the Law of God, accompanied with ſuch dreadful threatnings and curſes, made light of, as if Men would place their honour in being above or beyond any ſenſe of that glorious Majeſty? How many wallow in pleaſures, as if they had been made Men only to turn Brutes, and their Souls given them only for Salt to keep their Bodies from putrifying? 'Tis as well a part of Atheiſm not to be ſenſible of the abuſes of Gods Name and Laws by others, as to violate them our ſelves: What is the language of a ſtupid ſenſleſneſs of them, but that there is no God in the World, whoſe glory is worth a vindication, and deſerves our regards?

* Pſal. 119. v. 136.

That we may be ſenſible of the unworthineſs of neglecting God as our Rule and End; conſider,

1. The Unreaſonableneſs of it as it concerns God.

1. Firſt, 'Tis a high contempt of God. 'Tis an inverting the order of things; a making God the higheſt, to become the loweſt; and Self the loweſt, to become the higheſt: To be guided by every baſe Companion, ſome idle vanity, ſome carnal intereſt, is

is to acknowledge an excellency abounding in them, which is wanting in God: An equity in their Orders, and none in Gods Precepts: A goodneſs in their Promiſes, and a falſity in Gods; as if infinite excellency were a meer vanity, and to act for God were the debaſement of our Reaſon: To act for Self, or ſome pitiful Creature, or ſordid Luſt, were the glory and advancement of it. To prefer any one ſin before the honour of God, is as if that ſin had been our Creator and Benefactor, as if it were the original Cauſe of our Being and Support. Do not Men pay as great a homage to that as they do to God? Do not their Minds eagerly purſue it? Are not the revolvings of it in their fancies as delightful to them, as the remembrance of God to a holy Soul? Do any obey the Commands of God with more readineſs, than they do the orders of their baſe Affections? Did Peter leap more readily into the Sea to meet his Maſter, than many into the jaws of Hell to meet their Delilahs? How cheerfully did the Iſraelites part with their ornaments for the ſake of an Idol, who would not have ſpared a moiety for the honour of their Deliverer *? If to make God our End is the principal Duty in Nature, then to make our ſelves, or any thing elſe our End, is the greateſt Vice in the rank of Evils.

*Exod. 32. v. 3. All the people brake off the golden ear-rings.

Secondly, 'Tis a contempt of God, as the moſt amiable object. God is infinitely excellent and deſirable, Zach. 9. 17. How great is his goodneſs, and how great is his beauty? There is nothing in him but what may raviſh our affections; none that knows him but finds attractives to keep them with him: He hath nothing in him which can be a proper object of contempt, no defects or ſhadow of evil; there is infinite excellency to charm us, and infinite goodneſs to allure us; the Author of our Beings, the Benefactor of our Lives: Why then ſhould Man, which is his Image, be ſo baſe as to ſlight the beautiful original which ſtampt it on him? He is the moſt lovely object, therefore to be ſtudied, therefore to be honoured, therefore to be followed; in regard of his perfection, he hath the higheſt right to our thoughts. All other Beings were eminently contained in his eſſence, and were produced by his infinite power: The Creature hath nothing but what it hath from God; and is it not unworthy to prefer the Copy before the Original, to fall in love with a Picture inſtead of the beauty it repreſents? The Creature, which we advance to be our Rule and End, can no more report to us the true amiableneſs of God, than a few Colours mixed and ſuited together upon a piece of Cloth, can the Moral and Intellectual lovelineſs of the Soul of Man. To contemn God one moment is more baſe, than if all Creatures were contemned by us for ever, becauſe the excellency of Creatures is to God, like that of a drop to the Sea, or a ſpark to the glory of unconceiveable millions of Suns. As much as the excellency of God is above our conceptions, ſo much doth the debaſing of him admit of unexpreſſible aggravations.

2. Conſider the ingratitude in it. That we ſhould reſiſt that God with our hearts, who made us the work of his hands, and count him as nothing, from whom we derive all the good that we are or have: There is no contempt of Man but ſteps in here to aggravate our ſlighting of God, becauſe there is no relation one Man can ſtand in to another, wherein God doth not more highly appear to Man. If we abhor the unworthy carriage of a Child to a tender Father, a Servant to an indulgent Maſter, a Man to his obliging Friend, why do Men daily act that towards God, which they cannot ſpeak of without abhorrency, if acted by another againſt Man? Is God a Being leſs to be regarded than Man, and more worthy of contempt than a Creature? [* It would be ſtrange if a Benefactor ſhould live in the ſame Town, in the ſame Houſe with us, and we never exchange a word with him; yet this is our caſe, who have the Works of God in our Eyes, the goodneſs of God in our Being, the mercy of God in our daily Food] yet think ſo little of him, converſe ſo little with him, ſerve every thing before him, and prefer every thing above him? Whence have we our mercies but from his hand? Who, beſides him, maintains our breath this moment? Would he call for our Spirits this moment, they muſt depart from us to attend his Command. There is not a moment wherein our unworthy carriage is not aggravated, becauſe there is not a moment wherein he is not our Guardian, and gives us not taſtes of a freſh Bounty. And it is no light aggravation of our crime, that we injure him, without whoſe bounty in giving us our Being, we had not been capable of caſting contempt upon him: That he that hath the greateſt ſtamp of his Image, Man, ſhould deſerve the Character of the worſt of his Rebels: That he, who hath only reaſon by the gift of God to judge of the equity of the Laws of God, ſhould ſwell againſt them as grievous, and the Government of the Law-giver as burdenſome. Can it leſſen the crime to uſe the principle, wherein we excel the Beaſts, to the diſadvantage of God, who endowed us with that principle above the Beaſts?

*Reynolds.

1. 'Tis a debaſing of God beyond what the Devil doth at preſent. He is more excuſable in his preſent ſtate of acting, than Man is in his preſent refuſing God for his Rule and End. He ſtrives againſt a God that exerciſeth upon him a vindictive Juſtice: We debaſe a God that loads us with his daily mercies. The deſpairing Devils are excluded from any mercy or divine patience: But we are not only under the long ſuffering of his patience, but the large expreſſions of his bounty. He would not be governed by him when he was only his bountiful Creator. We refuſe to be guided by him, after he hath given us the bleſſing of Creation from his own hand, and the more obliging bleſſings of Redemption by the hand and blood of his Son.

It cannot be imagined that the Devils and the Damned ſhould ever make God their end, ſince he hath aſſured them he will not be their happineſs; and ſhut up all his perfections from their experimental notice, but thoſe of his power, to preſerve them, and his Juſtice, to puniſh them: They have no grant from God of ever having a heart to comply with his Will, or ever having the honour to be actively employed for his glory. They have ſome plea for their preſent contempt of God; not in regard of his nature, for he is infinitely amiable, excellent, and lovely, but in regard of his adminiſtration towards them. But what plea can Man have for his Practical Atheiſm, who lives by his power, is ſuſtained by his bounty, and ſolicited by his Spirit? What an ungrateful thing is it, to put off the Nature of Man for that of Devils; and diſhonour God, under mercy, as the Devils do under his wrathful anger?

2. 'Tis an ungrateful contempt of God, who cannot be injurious to us. He cannot do us wrong, becauſe he cannot be unjuſt, Gen. 18. 25. Shall not the Judge of all the Earth do right? His nature doth as much abhor unrighteouſneſs, as love a communicative goodneſs: He never commanded any thing, but what was highly conducible to the happineſs of Man. Infinite goodneſs can no more injure Man, than it can diſhonour it ſelf: It lays out it ſelf in additions of kindneſs, and whiles we debaſe him, he continues to benefit us: And is it not an unparallel'd ingratitude to turn our backs upon an object ſo lovely, an object ſo loving in the midſt of varieties of allurements from him? God did create intellectual Creatures, Angels and Men, that he might communicate more of himſelf, and his own goodneſs, and holineſs to Man, than Creatures of a lower rank were capable of. What do we do by rejecting him as our Rule and End, but croſs, as much as in us lies, Gods end in our Creation, and ſhut our Souls againſt the Communications of thoſe perfections he was ſo willing to beſtow? We uſe him as if he intended us the greateſt wrong, when 'tis impoſſible for him to do any to any of his Creatures.

3. Conſider the miſery which will attend ſuch a temper if it continue predominant. Thoſe that thruſt God away as their happineſs and end, can expect no other, but to be thruſt away by him as to any relief and compaſſion. A diſtance from God here can look for nothing, but a remoteneſs from God hereafter. When the Devil, a Creature of vaſt Endowments, would advance himſelf above God, and inſtruct Man to commit the ſame ſin, he is Curſed above all Crea-
*Gen.3.14. tures *. When we will not acknowledge him a God of all glory, we ſhall be ſeparated from him as a God of all comfort: All they that are afar off ſhall periſh, Pſal.73.27. This is the ſpring of all Woe. What the Prodigal ſuffered, was becauſe he would leave his Father and live of himſelf. Whoſoever is ambitious to be his own Heaven, will at laſt find his Soul to become his own Hell. As it loved all things for it ſelf, ſo it ſhall be grieved with all things for it ſelf. As it would be its own God againſt the right of God, it ſhall then be its own tormentor by the Juſtice of God.

2. Duty; Watch againſt this Atheiſm, and be daily employed in the Mortification of it. In every action we ſhould make the inquiry, what is the Rule I obſerve? Is it Gods Will or my own? Whether do my intentions tend, to ſet up God or Self? As much as we deſtroy this, we abate the power of ſin: Theſe two things are the head of the Serpent in us, which we muſt be bruiſing by the power of the Croſs. Sin is nothing elſe but a turning from God and centring in Self, and moſt in the inferior part of Self: If we bend our force againſt thoſe two, Self-Will and Self-Ends, we ſhall intercept Atheiſm at the Spring head, take away that which doth conſtitute and animate all ſin: The ſparks muſt vaniſh, if the fire be quench'd which affords them fuel. They are but two ſhort things to ask in every undertaking: Is God my Rule in regard of his Will? Is God my End in regard of his glory? All ſin lies in the neglect of theſe; all grace lies in the practice of them.

Without ſome degree of the mortification of theſe, we cannot make profitable and comfortable approaches to God. When we come with Idols in our hearts, we ſhall be anſwered according to the multitude and the *Ezek.14. baſeneſs of them too *. What expectation of a good
v.4. look from him can we have, when we come before him with undeifying thoughts of him; a Petition in our mouths, and a Sword in our hearts, to ſtab his honour?

To this purpoſe,

1. Be often in the views of the excellencies of God. When we have no intercourſe with God by delightful Meditations, we begin to be eſtranged from him, and prepare our ſelves to live without God in the World. Strangeneſs is the Mother and Nurſe of diſaffection; we ſlight Men ſometimes becauſe we know them not. The very Beaſts delight in the Company of Men, when being tamed and familiar, they become acquainted with their diſpoſition. A daily converſe with God would diſcover ſo much of lovelineſs in his nature, ſo much of ſweetneſs in his ways, that our injurious thoughts of God would wear off, and we ſhould count it our honour to contemn our ſelves and magnifie him. By this means a ſlaviſh fear, which is both
*1 Joh.4.18 a diſhonour to God and a torment to the Soul, * and the root of Atheiſm, will be caſt out, and an ingenious fear of him wrought in the heart. Exerciſed thoughts on him would iſſue out in affections to him, which would engage our hearts to make him both our Rule and our End. This courſe would ſtifle any temptations to groſs Atheiſm, wherewith good Souls are ſometimes haunted, by confirming us more in the belief of a God; and diſcourage any attempts, to a deliberate practical Atheiſm: We are not like to eſpouſe any principle, which is confuted by the delightful converſe we daily have with him. The more we thus enter into the Preſence-Chamber of God, the more we cling about him with our affections; the more vigorous and lively will the true Notion of God grow up in us, and be able to prevent any thing which may diſhonour him and debaſe our Souls.

Let us therefore conſider him as the only happineſs: Set up the true God in our Underſtandings; poſſeſs our hearts with a deep ſenſe of his deſirable excellency above all other things. This is the main thing we are to do in order to our great buſineſs: All the directions in the World with the neglect of this, will be inſignificant Ciphers. The neglect of this is common, and is the baſis of all the miſchiefs which happen to the Souls of Men.

2. To this purpoſe, Prize and ſtudy the Scripture. We can have no delight in Meditation on him, unleſs we know him; and we cannot know him, but by the means of his own Revelation. When the Revelation is deſpiſed, the Revealer will be of little eſteem. Men do not throw off God from being their Rule, till they throw off Scripture from being their Guide; and God muſt needs be caſt off from being an End, when the Scripture is rejected from being a Rule. Thoſe that do not care to know his Will, that love to be ignorant of his Nature, can never be affected to his honour. Let therefore the ſubtilties of Reaſon vail to the Doctrine of Faith, and the humour of the Will to the command of the Word.

3. Take heed of Senſual Pleaſures; and be very watchful and cautious in the uſe of thoſe comforts God allows us. Job was afraid when his Sons feaſted, that they ſhould curſe God in their hearts *. It * Job 1.4.
was not without cauſe that the Apoſtle Peter joyned Sobriety with Watchfulneſs and Prayer, 1 Pet. 4.7. The end of all things is at hand, be ye therefore ſober, and watch unto Prayer. A moderate uſe of worldly comforts. Prayer is the great acknowledgment of God, and too much ſenſuality is a hindrance of this, and a ſtep to Atheiſm. Belſhazzars lifting himſelf up againſt the Lord, and not glorifying of God, is charged upon his Senſuality, *Dan.*5.23. Nothing is more apt to quench the Notions of God, and root out the Conſcience of him, than an addictedneſs to Senſual Pleaſures: Therefore take heed of that Snare.

4. Take heed of Sins againſt knowledge. The more ſins againſt knowledge are committed, the more careleſs we are, and the more careleſs we ſhall be of God and his honour. We ſhall more fear his Judicial Power; and the more we fear that, the more we ſhall diſaffect that God in whoſe hand Vengeance is, and to whom it doth belong. Atheiſm in Converſation, proceeds to Atheiſm in Affection, and that will endeavour to ſink into Atheiſm in Opinion and Judgment.

The Sum of the Whole.

And now conſider in the whole what has been ſpoken.

1. Man would ſet himſelf up as his own Rule. He diſowns the Rule of God, is unwilling to have any acquaintance with the Rule God ſets him, negligent in uſing the means for the knowledge of his Will, and endeavours to ſhake it off when any notices of it breaks in upon him. When he cannot expel it, he hath no pleaſure in the Conſideration of it, and the heart ſwells againſt it. When the Notions of the Will of God are entertained, it is on ſome other Conſideration, or with wavering and unſettled Affections. Many times Men deſign to improve ſome Luſt by his his truth. This unwillingneſs reſpects Truth as 'tis moſt Spiritual and Holy; as it moſt relates and leads to God; as it is moſt contrary to Self. He is guilty of Contempt of the Will of God, which is ſeen in every preſumptuous breach of his Law. In the natural averſions to the Declaration of his Will and Mind which way ſoever he turns. In ſlighting that part of his Will which is moſt for his Honour. In the awkwardneſs of the Heart, when it is to pay God a ſervice. A conſtraint in the firſt engagement; ſlightneſs in the Service in regard of the matter; in regard of the frame, without a natural vigour. Many Diſtractions, much Wearineſs; in deſerting the Rule of God, when our Expectations are not anſwered upon our Service; in breaking promiſes with God.

Man naturally owns any other Rule, rather than that of God's preſcribing. The Rule of Satan, the Will of Man: In complying more with the dictates of Men than the Will of God: In obſerving that which is materially ſo, not becauſe it is his Will, but the injunctions of Men. In obeying the Will of Man, when it is contrary to the Will of God. This Man doth in order to the ſetting up himſelf. This is natural to Man as he is corrupted. Men are diſſatisfied with their own Conſciences when they contradict the deſires of Self. Moſt actions in the World are done, more becauſe they are agreeable to Self, than as they are honourable to God: As they are agreeable to natural and moral Self, or ſinful Self. 'Tis evident in neglects of taking God's Directions upon emergent Occaſions. In counting the Actions of others to be good or bad, as they ſuit with, or ſpurn againſt our Fancies and Humours. Man would make himſelf the Rule of God, and give Laws to his Creator: In ſtriving againſt his Law: Diſapproving of his Methods of Government in the World: In impatience in our particular concerns; envying the Gifts and Proſperity of others: Corrupt Matter or Ends of Prayer or Praiſe: Bold interpretations of the Judgments of God in the World. Mixing Rules in the Worſhip of God with thoſe which have been ordained by him. Suiting interpretations of Scripture with our own Minds and Humours. Falling off from God after ſome fair Compliances, when his Will grates upon us and croſſeth ours.

2. Man would be his own end. This is natural and univerſal. This is ſeen in frequent Self applauſes, and inward overweening Reflections. In aſcribing the glory of what we do or have to our ſelves. In deſire of ſelf-pleaſing Doctrines. In being highly concerned in injuries done to our ſelves, and little or not at all concerned for injuries done to God. In truſting in our ſelves. In working for carnal Self againſt the light of our own Conſciences, this is an uſurping God's Prerogative, vilifying God, deſtroying God. Man would make any thing his End or Happineſs rather than God. This appears in the fewer Thoughts we have of him than of any thing elſe. In the greedy purſuit of the World. In the ſtrong addictedneſs to ſenſual Pleaſures. In paying a ſervice upon any ſucceſs in the World to inſtruments more than to God. This is a debaſing God in ſetting up a Creature; but more in ſetting up a baſe Luſt: 'Tis a denying of God. Man would make himſelf the end of all Creatures. In Pride, uſing the Creatures contrary to the End God had appointed. This is to diſhonour God: And it is Diabolical. Man would make himſelf the end of God. In loving God, becauſe of ſome ſelf-pleaſing Benefits diſtributed by him. In abſtinence from ſome ſins, becauſe they are againſt the Intereſt of ſome other beloved Corruption. In performing Duties meerly for a ſelfiſh Intereſt which is evident in unwealdineſs in religious Duties where Self it not concern'd. In calling upon God only in a time of neceſſity. In begging his aſſiſtance to our own Projects, after we have by our own Craft laid the Plot. In impatience upon a Refuſal of our Deſires. In ſelfiſh aims we have in our Duties. This is a vilifying God, a dethroning him. In unworthy imaginations of God, univerſal in Man by Nature. Hence ſprings Idolatry, Superſtition, Preſumption, the common Diſeaſe of the World. This is a vilifying God; worſe than Idolatry, worſe than abſolute Atheiſm. Natural deſires to be diſtant from him. No deſires for the remembrance of him. No deſires of converſe with him. No deſires of a through return to him. No deſire of any cloſe imitation of him.

A DISCOURSE UPON God's being a Spirit.

John IV. 24.

God is a Spirit and they that Worſhip him, muſt Worſhip him in Spirit and in Truth.

THE Words are part of the Dialogue between our Saviour, and the Samaritan Woman. Chriſt intending to return from Judea to Galilee, paſſed thro' the Country of Samaria, a place inhabited not by Jews, but a mixt Company of ſeveral Nations, and ſome remainders of the Poſterity of Iſrael, who eſcaped the Captivity, and were returned from Aſſyria; and being weary with his Journey, arrived about the ſixth Hour or Noon (according to the Jews reckoning the time of the day) at a Well that Jacob had digged, which was of great account among the Inhabitants, for the Antiquity of it, as well as the Uſefulneſs of it, in ſupplying their Neceſſities. He being thirſty, and having none to furniſh him wherewith to draw Water, at laſt comes a Woman from the City, whom he deſires to give him ſome Water to drink. The Woman perceiving him by his Language or Habit to be a Jew, wonders at the queſtion ſince the hatred the Jews bore the Samaritans was ſo great, that they would not vouchſafe to have any Commerce with them, not only in Religious, but Civil Affairs and Common Offices belonging to Mankind. Hence our Saviour takes occaſion to publiſh to her the Doctrine of the Goſpel; and excuſeth her rude Anſwer by her ignorance of him; and tells her, that if ſhe had askt him a greater matter, even that which concerned her eternal Salvation, he would readily have granted it, notwithſtanding the rooted hatred between the Jews and Samaritans; and beſtowed a Water of a greater Vertue, the Water of Life *: The Woman is no leſs aſtoniſhed at his Reply, than ſhe was at his firſt demand. It was ſtrange to hear a Man ſpeak of giving living Water, to one of whom he had begg'd the Water of that Spring, and had no Veſſel to draw any to quench his own Thirſt. She therefore demands, whence he could have this Water that he ſpeaks of *, ſince ſhe conceived him not greater than Jacob, who had digged that Well and drunk of it. Our Saviour deſirous to make a progreſs in that Work he had begun, extolls the Water he ſpake of above this of the Well, from its particular verture, fully to refreſh thoſe that drank of it, and be as a cooling and comforting Fountain within them, of more efficacy than that without *. The VWoman conceiving a good opinion of our Saviour, deſires to partake of this Water, to ſave her pains in coming daily to the Well, not apprehending the Spirituality of Chriſt's Diſcourſe to her *: Chriſt finding her to take ſome pleaſure in his Diſcourſe, partly to bring her to a ſenſe of her ſin, before he did Communicate the excellency of his Grace, bids her return back to the City and bring her Husband with her to him *: She freely acknowledges that ſhe had no Husband, whether having ſome check of Conſcience at preſent for the unclean Life ſhe led, or loath to loſe ſo much time in the gaining this Water ſo much deſired by her: Our Saviour takes an occaſion from this to lay open her ſin before her, and to make her ſenſible of her own wicked Life, and the prophetick Excellency of himſelf; and tells her, ſhe had had five Husbands * to whom ſhe had been falſe, and by whom ſhe was divorced, and the Perſon ſhe now dwelt with was not her lawful Husband, and in living with him ſhe violated the Rights of Marriage, and increaſed guilt upon her Conſcience *. The Woman being affected with this Diſcourſe, and knowing him to be a ſtranger, that could not be certified of thoſe things, but in an extraordinary way, begins to have a high eſteem of him as a Prophet *. And upon this opinion ſhe eſteems him able to decide a Queſtion which had been canvaſt between them and the Jews about the place of Worſhip *. Their Fathers worſhipping in that Mountain, and the Jews affirming Jeruſalem to be a place of Worſhip: She pleads the Antiquity of the Worſhip in this place: Abraham having built an Altar there, Gen. 12. 7. And Jacob upon his return from Syria. And ſurely had the place been capable of an exception, ſuch Perſons as they, and ſo well acquainted with the Will of God, would not have pitched upon that place to celebrate their Worſhip.

Antiquity hath too too often bewitched the minds of Men, and drawn them from the revealed Will of God. Men are more willing to imitate the outward Actions of their famous Anceſtors, than conform themſelves to the revealed Will of their Creator. The Samaritans would imitate the Patriarchs in the place of Worſhip, but not in the Faith of the Worſhippers.

Chriſt anſwers her, that this Queſtion would quickly be reſolved by a new ſtate of the Church which was near at hand, and neither Jeruſalem which had not the precedency, nor that Mountain ſhould be of any more value in that concern than any other place in the World *: But yet to make her ſenſible of her ſin, and that of her Country-men, tells her, that their Worſhip in that Mountain was not according to the Will of God, he having long after the Altars built in this place, fixed Jeruſalem as the place of Sacrifices; beſides, they had not the knowledge of that God which ought to be worſhipped by them, but the Jews had the true object of Worſhip, and the true manner of Worſhip, according to the declaration God had made of himſelf to them *. But all that ſervice ſhall vaniſh, the vail of the Temple ſhall be rent in twain, and that carnal Worſhip give place to one more Spiritual; ſhadows ſhall fly before ſubſtance, and truth advance it ſelf above figures, and the worſhip of God ſhall be with the ſtrength of the Spirit; ſuch a Worſhip and ſuch Worſhippers doth the Father ſeek *: For God is a Spirit, and thoſe that worſhip him, muſt worſhip him in Spirit and in Truth. The deſign of our Saviour is to declare, that God is not taken with external Worſhip invented by Men, no nor commanded by himſelf; and that upon this reaſon, becauſe he is a Spiritual Eſſence, infinitely above Groſs and Corporeal Matter, and is not taken with that pomp which is a pleaſure to our earthly Imaginations.

Πνεῦμα ὁ Θεός. Some tranſlate it juſt as the Words lie: Spirit is God *: But it is not unuſual both in the old and new Teſtament Languages, to put the predicate before the ſubject, as Pſal. 5. 9. Their Throat is an open Sepulchre, in the Hebrew, a Sepulchre open their Throat. So Pſa. 111. 3. His work is honourable and glorious. Hebr. Honour and Glory his work. And there wants not one example in the ſame Evangeliſt, Joh. 1. 1. And the Word was God. Gr. And God was the Word. In all, the predicate or what is aſcribed, is put before the Subject to which it is aſcribed.

One tells us, (and he an head of a Party, that hath made a diſturbance in the Church of God) * That this place is not aptly brought to prove God to be a Spirit: And the Reaſon of Chriſt runs not thus, God is of a Spiritual Eſſence, and therefore muſt be worſhipped with a Spiritual Worſhip; for the Eſſence of God is not the Foundation of his Worſhip, but his Will; for then we were not to worſhip him with a Corporeal Worſhip, becauſe he is not a Body; but with an inviſible and eternal worſhip, becauſe he is inviſible and eternal.

But the nature of God is the foundation of worſhip, the Will of God is the Rule of worſhip; the matter and manner is to be performed according to the VVill of God. But is the nature of the object of worſhip to be excluded? No, as the object is, ſo ought our Devotion to be, Spiritual as he is Spiritual. God in his Commands for worſhip reſpected the diſcovery of his own Nature; in the Law he reſpected the diſcovery of his Mercy and Juſtice, and therefore commanded to worſhip by Sacrifices; a Spiritual Worſhip without thoſe inſtitutions would not have declared thoſe Attributes, which was God's end to diſplay to the World in Chriſt: And tho' the Nature of God is to be reſpected in worſhip, yet the obligations of the Creature are to be conſidered. God is a Spirit, therefore muſt have a ſpiritual worſhip: The Creature hath a Body as well as a Soul, and both from God; and therefore ought to worſhip God with the one as well as the other, ſince one as well as the other is freely beſtowed upon him.

The ſpirituality of God was the Foundation of the change from the Judaical Carnal Worſhip to a more Spiritual and Evangelical.

[God is a Spirit.]

That is, he hath noting Corporeal, no mixture of Matter, not a viſible ſubſtance, a bodily form *. He is a Spirit, not a bare Spiritual Subſtance: But an underſtanding willing Spirit, Holy, VViſe, Good and Juſt. Before Chriſt ſpake of the Father *, the firſt Perſon in the Trinity: Now he ſpeaks of God Eſſentially: The word [Father] is Perſonal, the word [God] Eſſential. So that our Saviour would render a reaſon, not from any one Perſon in the bleſſed Trinity, but from the Divine Nature, why we ſhould worſhip worſhip in Spirit, and therefore makes uſe of the word God, the being a Spirit being common to the other Perſons with the Father.

This is the reaſon of the Propoſition, *ver.*23. Of a Spiritual Worſhip. Every nature delights in that which is like it, and diſtaſtes that which is moſt different from it. If God were Corporeal, he might be pleaſed with the Victims of Beaſts, and the beautiful magnificence of Temples, and the noiſe of Muſick: But being a Spirit, he cannot be gratified with carnal things: He demands ſomething better and greater than all thoſe, that Soul which he made, that Soul which he hath endowed, a Spirit of a frame ſuitable to his Nature. He indeed appointed Sacrifices and a Temple, as ſhadows of thoſe things which were to be moſt acceptable to him in the Meſſiah, but they were impoſed only till the time of Reformation *. *Heb.9.10.

[Muſt Worſhip him.]

Not they may, or it would be more agreeable to God to have ſuch a manner of Worſhip; but they muſt. 'Tis not exclusive of bodily Worſhip, for this were to exclude all Publick Worſhip in Societies, which cannot be performed without reverential poſtures of the Body *. The geſtures of the Body are helps to Worſhip, and declarations of Spiritual acts. We can ſcarcely Worſhip God with our Spirits, without ſome tincture upon the outward-man. But he excludes all acts meerly Corporeal, all reſting upon an external Service and Devotion, which was the Crime of the Phariſees, and the general Perſwaſion of the Jews as well as Heathens, who uſed the outward Ceremonies, not as Signs of better things, but as if they did of themſelves pleaſe God, and render the Worſhippers accepted with him, without any ſuitable frame of the inward-man: * It is as if he had ſaid, now you muſt ſeparate your ſelves from all carnal modes to which the Service of God is now tied, and render a Worſhip chiefly conſiſting in the affectionate motions of the heart, and accommodated more exactly to the condition of the object, who is a Spirit. * Terniti. * Amirald. in loc.

[In Spirit and Truth.]

* The Evangelical Service now required, has the advantage of the former; that was a Shadow and Figure, this the Body and Truth *. Spirit, ſay ſome, is here oppoſed to the legal Ceremonies: Truth, to hypocritical Services; or * rather Truth is oppoſed to ſhadows, and an Opinion of worth in the outward action; 'tis principally oppoſed to external Rites, becauſe our Saviour ſaith, v. 23. The hour comes, and now is, &c. Had it been oppoſed to Hypocriſie, Chriſt had ſaid no new thing; for God always required Truth in the inward parts, and all true Worſhippers had ſerved him with a ſincere Conſcience and ſingle Heart. The old Patriarchs did worſhip God in Spirit and Truth, as taken for ſincerity: Such a Worſhip was always, and is perpetually due to God, becauſe he always was, and eternally will be a Spirit. * And it is ſaid, the Father ſeeks ſuch to Worſhip him; not ſhall ſeek. He always ſought it; it always was performed to him by one or other in the World: And the Prophets had always rebuked them, for reſting upon their outward Solemnities, Iſa. 58. 7. and Micah 6. 8. But a Worſhip without legal Rites was proper to an Evangelical State, and the times of the Goſpel; God having then exhibited Chriſt, and brought into the World the ſubſtance of thoſe ſhadows, and the End of thoſe Inſtitutions: There was no more need to continue them, when the true reaſon of them was ceaſed. All Laws do naturally expire, when the true reaſon, upon which they were firſt framed, is changed. * Amirald. in loc. * Muſcul. * Chemnit. * Muſcal.

Or by Spirit may be meant, ſuch a Worſhip as is kindled in the heart by the breath of the Holy Ghoſt. Since we are dead in ſin, a ſpiritual light and flame in the heart, ſuitable to the nature of the object of our Worſhip, cannot be raiſed in us without the operation of a Supernatural Grace: And tho' the Fathers could not Worſhip God without the Spirit, yet in the Goſpel-times, there being a fuller effuſion of the Spirit, the Evangelical State is called the adminiſtration of the Spirit, and the newneſs of the Spirit, in oppoſition to the legal Oeconomy, entitled the oldneſs of the Letter *. The Evangelical State is more ſuited to the Nature of God than any other: Such a Worſhip God muſt have, whereby he is acknowledged to be the true Sanctifier and Quickner of the Soul. The nearer God doth approach to us, and the more full his manifeſtations are, the more Spiritual is the worſhip we return to God. The Goſpel pares off the rugged parts of the Law, and Heaven ſhall remove what is material in the Goſpel, and change the Ordinances of Worſhip into that of a Spiritual Praiſe. *2 Cor.3.8. Rom.7.6.

In the words there is,

1. A Propoſition [God is a Spirit.] The Foundation of all Religion.

2. An Inference [They that worſhip him, &c.]

As God, a Worſhip belongs to him; as a Spirit, a Spiritual Worſhip is due to him: In the Inference we have,

1. The manner of Worſhip [in Spirit and in Truth.]

2. The neceſſity of ſuch a Worſhip [muſt.]

The Propoſition declares the Nature of God; the Inference, the Duty of Man.

The Obſervations lie plain.

Ob. 1. God is a pure Spiritual Being. [He is a Spirit.]

2. The Worſhip due from the Creature to God, muſt be agreeable to the Nature of God, and purely Spiritual.

3. The Evangelical State is ſuited to the Nature of God.

For the firſt,

D. God is a pure Spiritual Being.

'Tis the obſervation of one *, that the plain aſſertion of Gods being a Spirit is found but once in the whole Bible, and that is in this place; which may well be wondred at, becauſe God is ſo often deſcribed with hands, feet, eyes and ears, in the form and figure of a Man. The Spiritual Nature of God is deducible from many places, but not any where, as I remember, aſſerted totidem verbis, but in this Text. Some alledge that place, 2 *Cor.*3.17. the Lord is that Spirit, for the proof of it; but that ſeems to have a different ſenſe. In the Text the Nature of God is deſcribed; in that place, the operations of God in the Goſpel. [* 'Tis not the Miniſtry of Moſes, or that old Covenant, which communicates to you that Spirit it ſpeaks of; but it is the Lord Jeſus, and the Doctrine of the Goſpel delivered by him, whereby this Spirit and Liberty is diſpenſed to you. He oppoſes here the Liberty of the Goſpel to the Servitude of the Law]. 'Tis from Chriſt, that a Divine Vertue diffuſeth it ſelf by the Goſpel; 'tis by him, not by the Law, that we partake of that Spirit. * Epiſcop. inſtitut. l.4. c.3. * Amyrald. in loc.

* The Spirituality of God, is as evident as his Being. If we grant that God is, we muſt neceſſarily grant that he cannot be Corporeal, becauſe a Body is of an imperfect Nature. It will appear incredible to any that acknowledge God the firſt Being and Creator of all things, that he ſhould be a Maſſie heavy Body, and have Eyes and Ears, Feet and Hands, as we have. * Suarez. de Deo vol. 1. p.9. col.1

For the explication of it:

1. Spirit is taken various ways in Scripture. It ſignifies ſometimes an aerial ſubſtance, as *Pſal.*11.6. A horrible Tempeſt: Hebr. A Spirit of Tempeſt: Sometimes the breath, which is a thin ſubſtance, Gen. 6.17. All Fleſh wherein is the breath of Life: Hebr. Spirit of Life. A thin ſubſtance, tho' it be material and corporeal, is called Spirit: And in the Bodies of living Creatures, that which is the principle of their their actions is called Spirits; the animal and vital Spirits: And the finer parts, extracted from Plants and Minerals, we call Spirits. Thoſe volatile parts ſeparated from that groſs matter wherein they were immerſt, becauſe they come neareſt to the nature of an incorporeal ſubſtance: And from this notion of the word, 'tis tranſlated to ſignifie thoſe ſubſtances that are purely immaterial, as Angels, and the Souls of Men. Angels are called Spirits, Pſal. 104.4. Who * Heb. 1.14. makes his Angels Spirits *: And not only good Angels are ſo called, but evil Angels, Mark 1.27. Souls of Men are called Spirits, Eccl. 12. And the Soul of Chriſt is called ſo, John 19. 30. Whence God is called the God of the Spirits of all Fleſh, Numb. 22.16. and Spirit is oppoſed to Fleſh, Iſa. 31. 3. The Egyptians are Fleſh and not Spirit. And our Saviour gives us the notion of a Spirit to be ſomething above the nature of a Body, Luke 24.39. Not having fleſh and bones, extended parts, loads of groſs matter. 'Tis alſo taken for thoſe things which are active and efficacious; becauſe activity is of the nature of a Spirit. Caleb had another Spirit, Numb. 14. 24. an active affection. The vehement motions of ſin are called Spirit, Hoſ. 4. 12. The Spirit of Whoredoms, in that ſenſe that Prov. 29.11. A fool utters all his mind, all his ſpirit, he knows not how to reſtrain the vehement motions of his mind. So that the Notion of a Spirit is, that it is a fine immaterial Subſtance, and active Being, that acts it ſelf and other things. A meer Body cannot act it ſelf; as the Body of Man cannot move without the Soul, no more than a Ship can move it ſelf without Wind and Waves.

So God is called a Spirit, as being not a Body, not having the greatneſs, figure, thickneſs or length of a Body, wholly ſeparate from any thing of fleſh and matter. We find a Principle within us, nobler than that of our Bodies; and therefore we conceive the Nature of God, according to that which is more worthy in us, and not according to that which is the vileſt part of our Natures. God is a moſt Spiritual * Gerhard. μονοτερῶς Spirit, more Spiritual than all Angels, all Souls *: As he exceeds all in the Nature of Being, ſo he exceeds all in the Nature of Spirit: He hath nothing groſs, heavy, material in his Eſſence.

2. When we ſay God is a Spirit, 'tis to be underſtood by way of Negation. There are two ways of knowing or deſcribing God: By way of affirmation, affirming that of him in a way of eminency, which is excellent in the Creature; as when we ſay God is wiſe, good: The other, by way of negation, when we remove from God in our conceptions, what is tainted with imperfection in the Creature. * The firſt aſcribes * Gamacheus, Tom. 1. q. 3. Cap. 1. p. 42. to him whatſoever is excellent; the other ſeparates from him whatſoever is imperfect. The firſt is like a Limning, which adds one Colour to another to make a comely Picture; the other is like a Carving, which pares and cuts away whatſoever is ſuperfluous, to make a compleat Statue. This way of negation is more eaſie; we better underſtand what God is not, than what he is; and moſt of our knowledge of God is by this way: As when we ſay God is infinite, immenſe, immutable, they are negatives: He hath no limits, is confined to no place, admits of no change *. * Coccei. ſum. Theol. cap. 8. When we remove from him what is inconſiſtent with his Being, we do more ſtrongly aſſert his Being, and know more of him when we elevate him above all, and above our own capacity. And when we ſay God is a Spirit, 'tis a negation, he is not a Body; he conſiſts not of various parts, extended one without and beyond another: He is not a Spirit ſo as our Souls are, to be the form of any Body: A Spirit, not as Angels and Souls are, but infinitely higher; we call him ſo, becauſe in regard of our weakneſs, we have not any other term of excellency to expreſs or conceive of him by: We transfer it to God in honour, becauſe Spirit is the higheſt excellency in our nature: Yet we muſt apprehend God above any Spirit, ſince his Nature is ſo great, that he cannot be declared by Humane Speech, perceived by Humane Senſe, or conceived by Humane Underſtanding.

The ſecond thing, That God is a Spirit.

* Some among the Heathens imagined God to have a Body; ſome thought him to have a Body of Air, ſome a Heavenly Body, ſome a Humane Body: * And many of them aſcribed Bodies to their Gods, but Bodies without blood, without corruption; Bodies made up of the fineſt and thinneſt Atomes; ſuch Bodies, which if compared with ours, were as no Bodies. The Sadduces alſo, who denied all Spirits, and yet acknowledged a God, muſt conclude him to be a Body and no Spirit. Some among Chriſtians have been of that opinion. Tertullian is charged by ſome, and excuſed by others: And ſome Monks of Egypt were ſo fierce for this Error, that they attempted to kill one Theophilus a Biſhop, for not being of that Judgment.

* Theſ. Sedan. part 2. p. 1000. * Voſſius Idolol. lib. 2. cap. 1. Forbes Inſtrument, l. 1. c. 36.

But the wiſer Heathens were of another mind, and eſteemed it an unholy thing to have ſuch imaginations of God. And ſome Chriſtians have thought God only to be free from any thing of Body, becauſe he is omnipreſent, immutable, he is only incorporeal and ſpiritual; all things elſe, even the Angels are clothed with Bodies, tho' of a neater matter, and a more active frame than ours; a pure Spiritual Nature they allowed to no Being but God. Scripture and Reaſon meet together to aſſert the Spirituality of God. Had God had the Lineaments of a Body, the Gentiles had not fallen under that accuſation of changing his Glory into that of a Corruptible Man *.

'Ουκ ὄγκον. Plutarch incorporalis ratio divinus ſpiritus Seneca

* Rom. 1.23

This is ſignified by the Name God gives himſelf, Exod. 3. 14. I am that I am, a ſimple, pure, uncompounded Being, without any created mixture; as infinitely above the being of Creatures, as above the conceptions of Creatures, Job 37. 23. Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out. He is ſo much a Spirit, that he is the Father of Spirits, Heb. 12. 9. The Almighty Father is not of a Nature inferior to his Children: The Soul is a Spirit, it could not elſe exert actions without the aſſiſtance of the Body, as the act of Underſtanding it ſelf, and its own nature, the act of willing, and willing things againſt the incitements and intereſt of the Body: It could not elſe conceive of God, Angels and immaterial Subſtances. It could not elſe be ſo active, as with one glance to fetch a compaſs from Earth to Heaven, and by a ſudden motion, to elevate the Underſtanding from an earthly thought, to the thinking of things as high as the higheſt Heavens. If we have this opinion of our Souls, which in the nobleneſs of their acts ſurmount the Body, without which the Body is but a dull unactive piece of clay, we muſt needs have a higher conception of God, than to clog him with any matter, though of a finer temper than ours: We muſt conceive of him by the perfections of our Souls, without the vileneſs of our Bodies. If God made Man according to his Image, we muſt raiſe our thoughts of God according to the nobleſt part of that Image, and imagine the Exemplar or Copy, not to come ſhort, but to exceed the thing copied by it. God were not the moſt excellent Subſtance, if he were not a Spirit: Spiritual Subſtances are more excellent than Bodily; the Soul of Man more excellent than other Animals; Angels more excellent than Men: They contain in their own nature, whatſoever dignity there is in the inferior Creatures. God muſt have therefore an excellency above all thoſe, and therefore is intirely remote from the conditions of a Body.

* 'Tis a groſs conceit therefore to think that God is ſuch a Spirit as the Air is; for that is to be a a Body as the Air is, tho' it be a thin one; and if God were no more a Spirit than that, or than Angels, he would not be the moſt ſimple Being *: Yet ſome think that the ſpiritual Deity was repreſented by the Air in the Ark of the Teſtament. It was unlawful to repreſent him by any Image, that God had prohibited: Every thing about the Ark had a particular ſignification: The Gold and other Ornaments about it ſignified ſomething of Chriſt, but were unfit to repreſent the Nature of God: A thing purely inviſible and falling under nothing of ſenſe, could not repreſent him to the mind of Man: The Air in the Ark was the fitteſt, it repreſented the inviſibility of God, Air being imperceptible to our Eyes. Air diffuſeth it ſelf through all parts of the World, it glides through ſecret paſſages into all Creatures, it fills the ſpace between Heaven and Earth; there is no place wherein God is not preſent.

* Calov. Socin. Proſlig. p. 129, 130.

* Amyrald. Sup. Heb. 9. p. 146, &c.

To evidence this,

1. If God were not a Spirit, he could not be Creator. All multitude begins in, and is reduced to unity. As above multitude, there is an abſolute unity; ſo above mixt Creatures, there is an abſolute ſimplicity: You cannot conceive number without conceiving the beginning of it in that which was not numbred, viz. a unite: You cannot conceive any mixture, but you muſt conceive ſome ſimple thing to be the Original and Baſis of it. The Works of Art, done by rational Creatures, have their Foundation in ſomething Spiritual. Every Artificer, Watch-maker, Carpenter hath a model in his own Mind of the work he deſigns to frame: The material and outward Fabrick is ſquared according to an inward and Spiritual Idea. A Spiritual Idea ſpeaks a Spiritual Faculty as the Subject of it. God could not have an Idea of that vaſt number of Creatures he brought into Being, if he had not a Spiritual Nature *. The wiſdom whereby the World was created could never be the fruit of a Corporeal Nature; ſuch Natures are not capable of underſtanding and comprehending the things which are within the compaſs of their Nature, much leſs of producing them: And therefore Beaſts which have only Corporeal Faculties, move to objects by the force of their Senſe, and have no knowledge of things as they are comprehended by the Underſtanding of Man. All acts of wiſdom ſpeak an intelligent and Spiritual Agent: The effects of Wiſdom, Goodneſs, Power are ſo great and admirable, that they beſpeak him a more perfect and eminent Being, than can poſſibly be beheld under a bodily ſhape. Can a Corporeal Subſtance put Wiſdom in the inward parts and give Underſtanding to the Heart *?

* Amyral. moral. Tom. 1. p. 282.

* Job 38. 16.

2. If God were not a pure Spirit, he could not be one. If God had a body conſiſting of diſtinct Members, as ours; or all of one Nature, as the VVater and Air are, yet he were then capable of Diviſion, and therefore could not be entirely one. Either thoſe parts would be finite or infinite; if finite, they are not parts of God; for to be God and Finite is a contradiction: If infinite, then there are as many infinites as diſtinct Members, and therefore as many Deities: Suppoſe this Body had all parts of the ſame Nature as Air and VVater hath, every little part of Air is as much Air as the greateſt, and every little part of VVater is as much VVater as the Ocean; ſo every little part of God would be as much God as the whole; as many particular Deities to make up God, as little Atomes to compoſe a Body: VVhat can be more abſurd? If God had a Body like a humane Body, and were compounded of Body and Soul, of Subſtance and Quality, he could not be the moſt perfect Unity; he would be made up of diſtinct Parts, and thoſe of a diſtinct Nature, as the Members of a humane Body are: VVhere there is the greateſt unity, there muſt be the greateſt ſimplicity; but God is one: As he is free from any change, ſo he is void of any multitude, Deut. 6. 4. The Lord our God is one Lord.

3. If God had a Body as we have, he would not be inviſible. Every material thing is not viſible: The Air is a Body yet inviſible, but it is ſenſible; the cooling Quality of it is felt by us at every Breath, and we know it by our touch, which is the moſt material Senſe. Every Body, that hath Members like to Bodies, is viſible: But God is inviſible *. The Apoſtle reckons it amongſt his other Perfections, 1 Tim. 1. 17. Now unto the King Eternal, Immortal, Inviſible: He is inviſible to our Senſe, which beholds nothing but material and coloured things; and incomprehenſible to our underſtanding that conceives nothing but what is finite. God is therefore a Spirit uncapable of being ſeen, and infinitely uncapable of being underſtood. If he be Inviſible he is alſo Spiritual. If he had a Body, and hid it from our eyes, he might be ſaid not to be ſeen, but could not be ſaid to be inviſible. VVhen we ſay a thing is viſible, we underſtand that it hath ſuch Qualities which are the object of Senſe, tho' we may never ſee that, which in its own nature is to be ſeen. God hath no ſuch Qualities as fall under the preception of our Senſe. His VVorks are viſible to us, but not his God-head *. The Nature of a humane Body is to be ſeen and handled; Chriſt gives us ſuch a deſcription of it, Luke 24. 39. Handle me and ſee, for a Spirit hath not Fleſh and Bones as you ſee me have: But Man hath been ſo far from ſeeing God, that it is impoſſible he can ſee him, 1 Tim. 6. 16. There is ſuch a diſproportion between an infinite object and a finite ſenſe and underſtanding, that it is utterly impoſſible either to behold or comprehend him. But if God had a body more luminous and glorious than that of the Sun, he would be as well viſible to us as the Sun, tho' the immenſity of that light would dazle our eyes, and forbid any cloſe Inſpection into him by the vertue of our Senſe: VVe have ſeen the ſhape and figure of the Sun, but no Man hath ever ſeen the ſhape of God *. If God had a Body he were viſible, tho' he might not perfectly and fully be ſeen by us *. As we ſee the Heavens, tho' we ſee not the extenſion, latitude and greatneſs of them. Tho' God hath manifeſted himſelf in a bodily ſhape, Gen. 18. 1. And elſewhere Jehovah appear'd to Abraham: Yet the Subſtance of God was not ſeen, no more than the Subſtance of Angels was ſeen in their Apparitions to Men. A Body was formed to be made viſible by them, and ſuch actions done in that Body, that ſpake the Perſon that did them to be of a higher eminency than a bare Corporeal Creature: Sometimes a Repreſentation is made to the inward ſenſe and imagination, as to Michaiah *, and to Iſaiah, Chap. 6. v. 1. But they ſaw not the eſſence of God, but ſome Images and Figures of him proportioned to their Senſe or Imagination. The eſſence of God no Man ever ſaw, nor can ſee, John 1. 18.

* Nor doth it follow, that God hath a Body, becauſe Jacob is ſaid to ſee God face to face, Gen. 32. 30. And Moſes had the like Priviledge, Deut. 34. 10. This only ſignifies a fuller and clearer manifeſtation of God, by ſome Repreſentations offered to the bodily Senſe, or rather to the inward Spirit: For God tells Moſes, he could not ſee his Face, Exod. 33. 20. and that none ever ſaw the ſimilitude of God, Deut. 4. 15. VVere God a Corporeal Subſtance, he might in ſome meaſure be ſeen by Corporeal Eyes.

* Goulart de Dieu. p. 95, 96.

4. If God were not a Spirit, he could not be infinite. All Bodies are of a finite Nature: Every Body is material, and every material thing is terminated. The Sun, a vaſt Body, hath a bounded greatneſs: The Heavens of a mighty bulk, yet have their their limits. If God had a Body he muſt conſiſt of Parts, thoſe Parts would be bounded and limited, and whatſoever is limited is of a finite vertue, and therefore below an infinite nature. Reaſon therefore tells us, that the moſt excellent nature, as God is, cannot be of a Corporeal condition, becauſe of the limitation, and other actions which belong to every body. God is infinite, for the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain him, 2 Chron. 2. 6. The largeſt Heavens, and thoſe imaginary ſpaces beyond the World, are no bounds to him. He hath an eſſence beyond the bounds of the World, and cannot be included in the vaſtneſs of the Heavens. If God be infinite, then he can have no Parts in him; if he had, they muſt be finite, or infinite: Finite Parts can never make up an infinite Being. A Veſſel of Gold of a pound weight, cannot be made of the quantity of an Ounce. Infinite Parts they cannot be, becauſe then every Part would be equal to the whole, as infinite as the whole, which is contradictory. We ſee in all things every part is leſs than the whole bulk that is compoſed of it; as every Member of a Man is leſs than the whole body of Man. If all the Parts were finite, then God in his Eſſence were finite; and a finite God is not more excellent than a Creature: So that if God were not a Spirit, he could not be infinite.

5. If God were not a Spirit, he could not be an independent Being. Whatſoever is compounded of many Parts, depends either eſſentially or integrally upon thoſe Parts; as the eſſence of a Man depends upon the conjunction and union of his two main Parts, his Soul and Body; when they are ſeparated the eſſence of a Man ceaſeth; and the perfection of a Man depends upon every Member of the Body; So that if one be wanting, the perfection of the whole is wanting. As if a Man hath loſt a limb, you call him not a perfect Man, becauſe that Part is gone upon which his perfection, as an intire Man, did depend. If God therefore had a Body, the perfection of the Deity would depend upon every Part of that Body; and the more Parts he were compounded of, the more his dependency would be multiplied according to the number of thoſe Parts of the Body: For that which is compounded of many Parts, is more dependent than that which is compounded of fewer.

And becauſe God would be a dependent Being if he had a Body, he could not be the firſt Being, for the compounding Parts are in order of Nature before that which is compounded by them; as the Soul and Body are before the Man which reſults from the union of them. If God had Parts and Bodily Members as we have, or any compoſition, the Eſſence of God would reſult from thoſe Parts, and thoſe Parts be ſuppoſed to be before God. For that which is a Part, is before that whoſe Part it is, as in Artificial things you may conceive it: All the Parts of a Watch or Clock, are in time before that Watch which is made by ſetting thoſe Parts together. In natural things, you muſt ſuppoſe the Members of a Body framed, before you can call it a Man: So that the Parts of this Body are before that which is conſtituted by them. We can conceive no other of God, if he were not a pure, intire, unmixed Spirit: If he had diſtinct Parts he would depend upon them, thoſe Parts would be before him, his Eſſence would be the effect of thoſe diſtinct Parts, and ſo he would not be abſolutely and intirely the firſt Being: But he is ſo, Iſa. 44. 6. I am the firſt and I am the laſt. He is the firſt; nothing is before him. Whereas if he had bodily Parts, and thoſe finite, it would follow, God is made up of thoſe Parts which are not God; and that which is not God, is in order of Nature before that which is God: So that we ſee, if God were not a Spirit, he could not be independent.

6. If God were not a Spirit, he were not immutable and unchangeable. His immutability depends upon his ſimplicity. He is unchangeable in his Eſſence, becauſe he is a pure and unmixed Spiritual Being. Whatſoever is compounded of Parts, may be divided into thoſe Parts, and reſolved into thoſe diſtinct Parts which make up and conſtitute the Nature. Whatſoever is compounded, is changeable in its own Nature, tho' it ſhould never be changed. Adam, who was conſtituted of Body and Soul, had he ſtood in Innocence, had not died; there had been no ſeparation made between his Soul and Body whereof he was conſtituted, and his Body had not reſolved into thoſe Principles of Duſt from whence it was extracted. Yet in his own Nature, he was diſſoluble into thoſe diſtinct Parts whereof he was compounded: And ſo the glorified Saints in Heaven, after the Reſurrection, and the happy meeting of their Souls and Bodies in a new Marriage knot, ſhall never be diſſolved; yet in their own Nature they are mutable and diſſoluble, and cannot be otherwiſe, becauſe they are made up of ſuch diſtinct Parts that may be ſeparated in their own Nature, unleſs ſuſtained by the grace of God: They are immutable by Will, the Will of God, not by Nature. God is immutable by Nature as well as Will: As he hath a neceſſary Exiſtence, ſo he hath a neceſſary Unchangeableneſs, Mal. 3. 6. I the Lord change not. He is as unchangeable in his Eſſence, as in his Veracity and Faithfulneſs: They are perfections belonging to his Nature. But if he were not a pure Spirit, he could not be immutable by Nature.

7. If God were not a pure Spirit, he could not be Omnipreſent. He is in Heaven above, and the Earth below *: He fills Heaven and Earth *. The Divine Eſſence is at once in Heaven and Earth; but it is impoſſible a Body can be in two places at one and the ſame time. Since God is every where, he muſt be Spiritual. Had he a Body, he could not penetrate all things; he would be circumſcribed in place. He could not be everywhere but in parts, not in the whole; one Member in one place, and another in another; for to be confined to a particular place, is the property of a Body: But ſince he is diffuſed through the whole World, higher than Heaven, deeper than Hell, longer than the Earth, broader than the Sea *, he hath not any corporeal matter. If he had a Body wherewith to fill Heaven and Earth, there could be no Body beſides his own: 'Tis the Nature of Bodies to bound one another, and hinder the extending of one another. Two Bodies cannot be in the ſame place in the ſame point of Earth, one excludes the other: And it will follow hence, that we are nothing, no ſubſtances, meer illuſions; there could be no place for any body elſe *. If his Body were as big as the World, as it muſt be, if with that he filled Heaven and Earth, there would not be room for him to move a hand or a foot, or extend a finger, for there would be no place remaining for the motion.

8. If God were not a Spirit, he could not be the moſt perfect Being. The more perfect any thing is in the rank of Creatures, the more ſpiritual and ſimple it is, as Gold is the more pure and perfect that hath leaſt mixture of other Metals. If God were not a Spirit, there would be Creatures of a more excellent Nature than God; as Angels and Souls, which the Scripture calls Spirits, in oppoſition to Bodies. There is more of perfection in the firſt Notion of a Spirit, than in the Notion of a Body. God cannot be leſs perfect than his Creatures, and contribute an excellency of being to them which he wants himſelf. If Angels and Souls poſſeſs ſuch an excellency, and God want that excellency, he would be leſs than his Creatures, and excellency of the Effect would exceed the excellency of the Cauſe. But every Creature, even the higheſt Creature, is infinitely ſhort of the perfection of God; for whatſoever excellency they have, is finite and limied; 'tis but a ſpark from the Sun, a drop from the Ocean; but but God is unboundedly perfect in the highest manner, without any limitation; and therefore above Spirits, Angels, the highest Creatures that were made by him: An infinite sublimity, a pure act, to which nothing can be added, from which nothing can be taken.

*1 Joh. 1. 5 In him there is light and no darkness *, spirituality without any matter, perfection without any shadow or taint of imperfection: Light pierceth into all things, preserves its own purity, and admits of no mixture of any thing else with it.

Quest. It may be said, If God be a Spirit, and it is impossible he can be otherwise then a Spirit; how comes God so often to have such Members as we have in our Bodies, ascribed to him; not only a Soul, but particularly bodily parts; as heart, arms, hands, eyes, ears, face and back-parts? And how is it that he is never called a Spirit in plain words, but in this Text by our Saviour?

Ans. 'Tis true, many parts of the Body, and natural affections of the human nature, are reported of God in Scripture. Head, * Eyes and Eye-lids, * Apple of the Eye, Mouth, &c. our Affections also, Grief, Joy, Anger, &c. But it is to be considered,

* Dan. 7. 9. *Psal. 11. 4.

* Loquitur lex secund. ling. filiorum hominum, was the H. saying.

1. That this is in condescension to our weakness. God being desirous to make himself known to Man, whom he created for his Glory, humbles as it were his own Nature to such representations, as may suite and assist the capacity of the Creature: Since by the condition of our nature nothing erects a notion of it self in our understanding, but as it is conducted in by our sense. God hath served himself of those things which are most exposed to our sense, most obvious to our understandings, to give us some acquaintance with his own Nature, and those things which otherwise we were not capable of having any notion of. As our Souls are linkt with our Bodies, so our knowledge is linkt with our sense; that we can scarce imagine any thing at first but under a corporeal form and figure, till we come by great attention to the Object, to make by the help of reason, a separation of the spiritual substance from the corporeal fancy, and consider it in its own nature. We are not able to conceive a Spirit, without some kind of resemblance to something below it; nor understand the actions of a Spirit, without considering the operations of a human Body in its several Members. As the Glories of another Life are signified to us by the pleasures of this; so the Nature of God, by a gracious condescension to our capacities, is signified to us by a likeness to our own. The more familiar the things are to us which God uses to this purpose, the more proper they are to teach us what he intends by them.

Ans. 2. All such representations are to signifie the acts of God, as they bear some likeness to those, which we perform by those members he ascribes to himself. So that those members ascribed to him, rather note his visible operations to us, than his invisible Nature; and signifie that God doth some works like to those which men do, by the assistance of those Organs of their Bodies *. So the wisdom of God is called his Eye, because he knows that with his mind, which we see with our eyes. The efficiency of God is called his Hand and Arm; because as we act with our hands, so doth God with his Power. The Divine Efficacies are signified: By his eyes and ears, we understand his Omniscience; by his face, the manifestation of his Favour; by his mouth, the revelation of his Will; by his nostrils, the acceptation of our Prayers; by his bowels, the tenderness of his Compassion; by his heart, the sincerity of his Affections; by his hand, the strength of his Power; by his feet, the ubiquity of his Presence. And in this, he intends instruction and comfort: By his Eyes, he signifies his watchfulness over us: By his Ears, *his readiness to hear the cryes of the oppressed: By his Arm, his Power; an Arm to destroy his Enemies, and an Arm to relieve his People *. All those attributed to God to signifie Divine actions, which he doth without bodily Organs, as we do with them.

3. Consider also, That only those members which are the instruments of the noblest actions, and under that consideration, are used by him to represent a notion of him to our minds. Whatsoever is perfect and excellent, is ascribed to him, but nothing that savours of imperfection *. The heart is ascribed to him, it being the principle of vital actions, to signifie the Life that he hath in himself: Watchful and discerning eyes, not sleepy and lazy ones: A mouth to reveal his Will, not to take in food. To eat and sleep are never ascribed to him; nor those parts that belong to the preparing or transmitting nourishment to the several parts of the body, as stomach, liver, reins, nor bowels, under that consideration, but as they are significant of compassion; but only those parts are ascribed to him whereby we acquire knowledge, as eyes and ears, the Organs of learning and wisdom: Or to communicate it to others, as the mouth, lips, tongue, as they are Instruments of speaking, not of tasting: Or those parts which signifie strength and power, or whereby we perform the actions of Charity for the relief of others: Taste, and touch, senses that extend no further than to corporeal things, and are the grossest of all the senses, are never ascribed to him.

* Episcop. instit. l. 4. § 3 c. 3.

* It were worth consideration, whether this describing God by the Members of an human Body, were so much figuratively to be understood, as with respect to the Incarnation of our Saviour, who was to assume the human Nature, and all the Members of a human body?

* After the report of the Creation, and the forming of Man, we read of God's speaking to him, but not of God's appearing to him in any visible shape: A voice might be formed in the Air to give Man notice of his duty; some way of information he must have, what positive Laws he was to observe, besides that Law which was engraven in his Nature, which we call the Law of Nature: And without a voice the knowledge of the Divine Will could not be so conveniently communicated to Man: Tho' God was heard in a voice, he was not seen in a shape: But after the Fall we several times read of his appearing in such a form. Tho' we read of his speaking before Mans committing of sin, yet not of his walking, which is more corporeal, till afterwards *: [Tho' God would not have Man believe him to be corporeal, yet he judged it expedient to give some prenotices of that Divine Incarnation which he had promised.]

5. Therefore we must not conceive of the visible Deity according to the letter of such expressions, but the true intent of them. Tho' the Scripture speaks of his eyes and arms, yet it denies them to be arms of flesh. We must not conceive of God according to the Letter, but the design of the Metaphor. When we hear things described by Metaphorical expressions for the clearing them up to our fancy, we conceive not of them under that garb, but remove the vail by an act of our reason: When Christ is called a Sun, a Vine, Bread, is any so stupid as to conceive him to be a Vine with material Branches and Clusters; or be of the same nature with a Loaf? But the things designed by such Metaphors are obvious to the conception of a mean understanding. If we would conceive God to have a body like a man, because he describes himself so, we may conceit him to be like a Bird, because he is mentioned with wings *; or like a Lion or Leopard,

We ſhould conceive of God according to the deſign of the expreſſions: When we read of his eyes, we ſhould conceive his Omniſcience; of his hand, his power; of his ſitting, his immutability; of his Throne, his Majeſty; and conceive of him as ſurmounting, not only the groſsneſs of bodies, but the Spiritual excellency of the moſt dignified Creatures; ſomething ſo perfect, great, ſpiritual, as nothing can be conceived higher and purer.

Uſe. If God be a pure Spiritual Being, then

1. Man is not the Image of God, according to his external bodily form and figure. The Image of God in Man conſiſted not in what is ſeen, but in what is not ſeen; not in the conformation of the members, but rather in the Spiritual faculties of the Soul; or moſt of all in the holy endowments of thoſe faculties, Eph. 4. 24. That ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs *. The Image which is reſtored by redeeming grace, was the Image of God by Original Nature. The Image of God cannot be in that part which is common to us with Beaſts, but rather in that wherein we excel all living Creatures, in reaſon, underſtanding, and an immortal Spirit. God expreſly ſaith, that none ſaw a ſimilitude of him, Deut. 4 15, 16. which had not been true, if Man in regard of his body had been the Image and Similitude of God; for then a figure of God had been ſeen every day, as often as we ſaw a Man, or beheld our ſelves. Nor would the Apoſtles argument ſtand good, Acts 17. 29. That the Godhead is not like to ſtone graven by Art, if we were not the off-ſpring of God, and bore the ſtamp of his Nature in our Spirits rather than our Bodies *. It was a fancy of Eugubinus, that when God ſet upon the actual Creation of Man, he took a bodily form for an Exemplar of that which he would expreſs in his work, and therefore that the words of Moſes * are to be underſtood of the body of Man; becauſe there was in Man ſuch a ſhape which God had then aſſumed. To let alone Gods forming himſelf a body for that work as a groundleſs fancy; Man can in no wiſe be ſaid to be the Image of God, in regard of the ſubſtance of his body; but Beaſts may as well be ſaid to be made in the Image of God, whoſe bodies have the ſame Members as the body of Man for the moſt part, and excel Men in the acuteneſs of the ſenſes and ſwiftneſs of their motion, agility of body, greatneſs of ſtrength, aud in ſome kind of ingenuities alſo, wherein Man hath been a Scholar to the Brutes, and beholden to their skill. The Soul comes neareſt the Nature of God, as being a Spiritual ſubſtance; yet conſidered ſingly in regard of its Spiritual ſubſtance, cannot well be ſaid to be the Image of God: A Beaſt, becauſe of its Corporiety, may as well be called the Image of a Man; for there is a greater ſimilitude between Man and a Brute in the rank of Bodies, than there can be between God and the higheſt Angels, in the rank of Spirits. If it doth not conſiſt in the ſubſtance of the Soul, much leſs can it in any ſimilitude of the body. This Image conſiſted partly in the ſtate of Man, as he had dominion over the Creatures; partly in the Nature of Man, as he was an intelligent Being, and thereby was capable of having a grant of that Dominion; but principally in the conformity of the Soul with God in the frame of his Spirit, and the holineſs of his actions. Not at all in the figure and form of his body Phyſically, tho' morally there might be, as there was a rectitude in the body, as an inſtrument to conform to the holy motions of the Soul, as the holineſs of the Soul ſparkled in the actions and members of the body. If Man were like God, becauſe he hath a body, whatſoever hath a body, hath ſome reſemblance to God, and may be ſaid to be in part his Image: But the truth is, the eſſence of all Creatures cannot be an Image of the Immenſe Eſſence of God.

2. If God be a pure Spirit; 'Tis unreaſonable to frame any Image or Picture of God †. Some Heathens have been wiſer in this than ſome Chriſtians: Pythagoras forbad his Scholars to engrave any ſhape of him upon a Ring, becauſe he was not to be comprehended by ſenſe, but conceived only in our minds; our hands are as unable to faſhion him, as our eyes to ſee him *. The antient Romans worſhipped their Gods 170 years before any material repreſentations of them *; and the antient Idolatrous Germans thought it a wicked thing to repreſent God in a human ſhape. Yet ſome, and thoſe no Romaniſts, labour to defend the making Images of God in the reſemblance of Man; becauſe he is ſo repreſented in Scripture, he may be, * ſaith one conceived ſo in our minds, and figured ſo to our ſenſe. If this were a good reaſon, why may he not be pictured as a Lion, Horn, Eagle, Rock, ſince he is under ſuch Metaphors ſhadowed to us? The ſame ground there is for the one as for the other: What tho' Man be a nobler Creature, God hath no more the body of a Man, than that of an Eagle; & ſome perfections in other Creatures repreſent ſome excellencies in his nature and actions, which cannot be figur'd by a human ſhape, as ſtrength by the Lion, ſwiftneſs and readineſs by the wings of the Bird. But God hath abſolutely prohibited the making any Image whatſoever of him, and that with terrible threatnings, Exod. 20. 5. I the Lord am a jealous God, viſiting the iniquities of the Fathers upon their Children; and Deut. 5. 8, 9. After God had given the Iſraelites the Commandment, wherein he forbad them to have any other Gods before him, he forbids all figuring of him by the hand of Man; not only Images, but any likeneſs of him either by things in Heaven, in the Earth, or in the Water. How often doth he diſcover his indignation by the Prophets, againſt them that offer to mould him in a Creature form? This Law was not to ſerve a particular diſpenſation, or to endure a particular time, but it was a declaration of his Will, invariable in all places and all times; being founded upon the immutable nature of his Being, and therefore agreeable to the Law of nature; otherwiſe not chargeable upon the Heathens. And therefore when God had declared his Nature and his Works in a ſtately and majeſtick eloquence, he demands of them, To whom they would liken him, or what likeneſs they would compare unto him? Iſa. 40, 18: Where they could find any thing that would be a lively image and reſemblance of his infinite excellency? Founding it upon the infiniteneſs of his Nature, which neceſſarily implies the ſpirituality of it. God is infinitely above any Statue; and thoſe that think to draw God by a ſtroke of a Penſil, or form him by the engravings of Art, are more ſtupid than the Statues themſelves.

To ſhew the unreaſonableneſs of it; conſider,

1. 'Tis impoſſible to faſhion any Image of God. If our more capacious Souls cannot graſp his Nature, our weaker ſenſe cannot frame his Image: 'Tis more poſſible of the two, to comprehend him in our minds, than than to frame him in an Image to our ſenſe. He inhabits inacceſſible Light: As it is impoſſible for the eye of Man to ſee him, 'tis impoſſible for the Art of Man to paint him upon Walls, and carve him out of Wood. None knows him but himſelf, none can deſcribe him but himſelf *. Can we draw a figure of our own Souls, and expreſs that part of our ſelves, wherein we are moſt like to God? Can we extend this to any bodily figure and divide it into parts? How can we deal ſo with the Original Copy, whence the firſt Draught of our Souls was taken, and which is infinitely more ſpiritual than Men or Angels? No Corporeal thing can repreſent a ſpiritual Subſtance; there is no proportion in Nature between them, God is a Simple, Infinite, Immenſe, Eternal, Inviſible, Incorruptible Being: A Statue is a Compounded, Finite, Limited, Temporal, Viſible and Corruptible Body. God is a living Spirit; but a Statue, neither ſees, nor hears, nor perceives any thing. But ſuppoſe God had a Body, 'tis impoſſible to mould an Image of it in the true Glory of that Body: Can the Statue of an excellent Monarch repreſent the Majeſty and Air of his Countenance, tho' made by the skilfulleſt Workman in the World? If God had a Body in ſome meaſure ſuited to his excellency, were it poſſible for Man to make an exact Image of him, who cannot picture the Light, Heat, Motion, Magnitude and dazling Property of the Sun? The excellency of any Corporeal Nature of the leaſt Creature, the Temper, Inſtinct, Artifice, are beyond the power of a Carving-Tool; much more is God.

* Coccei. ſum. Theol. c. 9. p. 47.

2. To make any Corporeal Repreſentation of God is unworthy of God. 'Tis a diſgrace to his Nature. Whoſoever thinks a Carnal Corruptible Image to be fit for a Repreſentatien of God, renders God no better than a Carnal and Corporeal Being. 'Tis a kind of debaſing an Angel, who is a ſpiritual Nature, to repreſent him in a bodily ſhape, who is as far removed from any fleſhlineſs as Heaven from Earth? much more to degrade the Glory of the Divine Nature to the Lineaments of a Man. The whole ſtock of Images is but a lie of God; Jer. 10. 8, 14. A Doctrine of Vanities and Falſhood: It re-
* Ro. 1. 25. preſents him in a falſe Garb to the World *, and ſinks
* Ro. 1. 23. his Glory into that of a Corruptible Creature *. It impairs the Reverence of God in the Minds of Men, and by degrees may debaſe Mens apprehenſions of God, and be a means to make them believe he is ſuch a one as themſelves; and that not being free from the Figure, he is not alſo free from the Imperfections of their Bodies. Corporeal Images of God were the Fruits of baſe Imaginations of him; and as they ſprung from them, ſo they contribute to a greater Corruption of the Notions of the Divine Nature: The Heathens begun their firſt Repreſentations of him by the Image of a corruptible Man, then of Birds, till they deſcended, not only to four-footed Beaſts, but creeping things, even Serpents, as the Apoſtle ſeems to intimate in his enumeration, Ro. 1. 23. it had been more honourable to have continued in humane repreſentation of him, than have ſunk ſo low as Beaſts and Serpents, the baſer Images; tho' the firſt had been infinitely unworthy of him, he being more above a Man, tho' the nobleſt Creature, than Man is above a Worm, a Toad, or the moſt deſpicable creeping thing upon the Earth. To think we can make an Image of God of a piece of Marble, or an Ingot of Gold, is a greater debaſing of him, than it would be of a Great Prince, if you ſhould repreſent him in the Statue of a Frog. When the Iſraelites repreſented God by a Calf, 'tis ſaid, they ſinned a great ſin, Exod. 32. 31. And the ſin of Jeroboam, who intended only a repreſentation of God by the Calves at
* Hoſ. 10. 15 Dan and Bethel, is called more emphatically *, The wickedneſs of your wickedneſs, the very ſkum and dregs of wickedneſs. As Men debaſed God by this, ſo God debaſed Men for this; he degraded the Iſraelites into Captivity under the worſt of their Enemies, and puniſhed the Heathens with ſpiritual Judgments, as uncleanneſs through the Luſts of their own hearts, Rom. 1. 24. Which is repeated again in other Expreſſions, v. 26, 27. As a meet recompence for their diſgracing the ſpiritual Nature of God. Had God been like to Man, they had not offended in it: But I mention this, to ſhew a probable Reaſon of thoſe baſe Luſts which are in the midſt of us, that have ſcarce been exceeded by any Nation, viz. the unworthy and unſpiritual Conceits of God, which are as much a debaſing of him as material Images were when they were more rife in the World; and may be as well the cauſe of thoſe Spiritual Judgments upon Men, as the worſhipping molten and carved Images were the cauſe of the ſame upon the Heathen.

3. Yet this is natural to Man. Wherein we may ſee the contrariety of Man to God. Tho' God be a Spirit, yet there is nothing Man is more prone to, than to repreſent him under a Corporeal Form. The moſt famous Guides of the Heathen World have faſhioned him, not only according to the more honourable Images of Men, but Beaſtialized him in the form of a Brute. The Ægyptians, whoſe Country was the School of Learning to Greece, were notoriouſly guilty of this brutiſhneſs in Worſhipping an Ox for an Image of their God; and the Philiſtines their Dagon, in a figure compoſed of the Image of a Woman and a Fiſh *: Such repreſenta- * Daille. ſuper. Cor. tions were antient in the oriental Parts. The Gods of Laban, that he accuſeth Jacob of Stealing from him *, 1. 10. Ser. 3. * Gen. 31. are ſuppoſed to be little Figures of Men. Such was v. 30, 34. the Iſraelites Golden-Calf; their worſhip was not terminated on the Image, but they worſhipped the true God under that repreſentation: They could not be ſo brutiſh as to call a Calf their Deliverer, and give to him a great Title, [Theſe be thy Gods, O Iſrael, which brought thee up out of the Land of Ægypt, Ex. 32. 4.] Or that which they knew belonged to the true God, the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob *. They knew the Calf to be formed of their * Gen. 3. Ear-rings; but they had conſecrated it to God, as a v. 16, 17. repreſentation of him: Tho' they choſe the form of the Ægyptian Idol; yet they knew that Apis, Oſiris and Iſis the Gods the Ægyptians adored in that figure, had not wrought their Redemption from Bondage, but would have uſed their force, had they been poſſeſſed of any, to have kept them under the Yoke, rather than have freed them from it: The Feaſt alſo which they celebrated before that Image is called by Aaron, The Feaſt of the Lord, Exod. 32. 5. A Feaſt to Jehovah, the incommunicable Name of the Creator of the World. 'Tis therefore evident, That both the Prieſt and the People pretended to ſerve the true God, not any falſe Divinity of Ægypt. That God who had reſcued them from Ægypt with a mighty Hand, divided the Red-Sea before them, deſtroyed their Enemies, conducted them, fed them by miracle, ſpoken to them from Mount Sinai, and amazed them by his Thundrings and Lightnings when he inſtructed them by his Law; a God they could not ſo ſoon forget. And with this repreſenting God by that Image, they are charged by the Pſalmiſt, Pſa. 106. 19, 20. They made a Calf in Horeb, and changed their Glory into the ſimilitude of an Ox that eateth Graſs. They changed their Glory: that is, God, the Glory of Iſrael; ſo that they took this Figure for the Image of the true God of Iſrael, their own God; not the God of any other Nation in the World. Jeroboam intended no other by his Calves, but Symbols of the preſence of the true God, inſtead of the Ark and the propitiatory which remained among the Jews. We ſee the inclination of our Natures in the practice of the Iſraelities; a People choſen out of the whole World to bear up God's Name, and preſerve his Glory: And in that the Images of God were ſo ſoon ſet up in the Chriſtian Church; and to this day, the picture of God in the ſhape of an old Man, is viſible in the Temples of the Romaniſts.

'Tis prone to the Nature of Man.

4. To repreſent God by a Corporeal Image, and to Worſhip him in and by that Image, is Idolatry. Tho' the Iſraelites did not acknowledge the Calf to be God, nor intended a worſhip to any of the Ægyptian Deities by it; but worſhipped that God in it, who had ſo lately and miraculouſly deliver'd them from a cruel Servitude; and could not in natural reaſon judge him to be cloathed with a bodily ſhape, much leſs to be like an Ox that eateth Graſs; yet the Apoſtle brings no leſs a charge againſt them, than that of Idolatry, 1 Cor. 10. 7. He calls them Idolaters, who before that Calf, kept a Feaſt to Jehovah, citing Exod. 32. 5. Suppoſe we could make ſuch an Image of God as might perfectly repreſent him; yet ſince God hath prohibited it, ſhall we be wiſer than God? He hath ſufficiently manifeſted himſelf in his works, without Images: He is ſeen in the Creatures; more particularly in the Heavens, which declare his Glory. His Works are more excellent Repreſentations of him, as being the Works of his own Hands, than any thing that is the product of the Art of Man. His Glory ſparkles in the Heavens, Sun, Moon and Stars, as being magnificent Pieces of his Wiſdom and Power; yet the kiſſing the Hand to the Sun or the Heavens, as repreſentative of the Excellency and Majeſty of God, is *Idolatry in Scripture Account, and a denial of God; a proſtituting the Glory of God to a Creature *: Either the worſhip is terminated on the Image it ſelf, and then it is confeſſed by all to be Idolatry, becauſe it is a giving that worſhip to a Creature which is the ſole right of God; or not terminated in the Image, but in the Object repreſented by it; 'tis then a fooliſh thing; we may as well terminate our Worſhip on the true Object without, as with an Image. An erected Statue is no ſign or Symbol of God's ſpecial preſence, as the Ark, Tabernacle, Temple were. It is no part of Divine Inſtitution; has no Authority of a Command to ſupport it, no Cordial of a promiſe to encourage it; and the Image being infinitely diſtant from, and below the Majeſty and Spirituality of God, cannot conſtitute one object of Worſhip with him. To put a Religious Character upon any Image formed by the corrupt imagination of Man, as a repreſentation of the inviſible and ſpiritual Deity; is to think the God-head to be *like Silver and Gold, or ſtone graven by Art and Man's Device.

3. This Doctrine will direct us in our Conceptions of God, as a pure perfect Spirit, than which nothing can be imagin'd more perfect, more pure, more ſpiritual.

1. We cannot have an adequate or ſuitable Conception of God: He dwells in inacceſſible Light; inacceſſible to the acuteneſs of our fancy, as well as the weakneſs of our ſenſe. If we could have thoughts of him, as high and excellent as his Nature; our Conceptions muſt be as infinite as his Nature. All our imaginations of him cannot repreſent him, becauſe every created Species is finite; it cannot therefore repreſent to us a full and ſubſtantial Notion of an infinite Being. We cannot ſpeak or think worthily enough of him, who is greater than our words, vaſter than our underſtandings. Whatſoever we ſpeak or think of God, is handed firſt to us by the notice we have of ſome perfection in the Creature, and explains to us ſome particular excellency of God rather than the fulneſs of his Eſſence. No Creature, nor all Creatures together, can furniſh us with ſuch a magnificent Notion of God, as can give us a clear view of him. Yet God in his Word is pleaſed to ſtep below his own excellency, and point us to thoſe excellencies in his Works, whereby we may aſcend to the knowledge of thoſe excellencies which are in his Nature. But the Creatures, whence we draw our Leſſons being finite, and our underſtandings being finite, 'tis utterly impoſſible to have a Notion of God commenſurate to the immenſity and ſpirituality of his Being. [* God is not like to viſible Creatures, nor is there any proportion between him and the moſt ſpiritual.] We cannot have a full Notion of a Spiritual Nature; much leſs can we have of God, who is a Spirit above Spirits. No Spirit can clearly repreſent him. The Angels that are great Spirits, are bounded in their extent, finite in their Being, and of a mutable Nature.

* Amyrald Moral. Tom. 1. p. 289.

Yet tho' we cannot have a ſuitable Conception of God, we muſt not content our ſelves without any Conception of him. 'Tis our ſin not to endeavour after a true Notion of him. 'Tis our ſin to reſt in a mean and low Notion of him, when our reaſon tells us we are capable of having higher: But if we aſcend as high as we can, tho' we ſhall then come ſhort of a ſuitable Notion of him; this is not our ſin, but our weakneſs. God is infinitely Superior to the choiceſt Conceptions, not only of a ſinner, but of a Creature. If all Conceptions of God below the true Nature of God were ſin, there is not a holy Angel in Heaven free from ſin; becauſe tho' they are the moſt capacious Creatures, yet they cannot have ſuch a Notion of an infinite Being as is fully ſuitable to his Nature, unleſs they were infinite as he himſelf is.

2. But however, we muſt by no means conceive of God under a humane or corporeal Shape. Since we cannot have Conceptions honourable enough for his Nature, we muſt take heed we entertain not any which may debaſe his Nature: Tho' we cannot comprehend him as he is, we muſt be careful not to fancy him to be what he is not. 'Tis a vain thing to conceive him with humane Lineaments: We muſt think higher of him, than to aſcribe to him ſo mean a ſhape: We deny his Spirituality when we fancy him under ſuch a form: He is Spiritual, and between that which is Spiritual and that which is Corporeal, there is no reſemblance *. Indeed Daniel ſaw God in a humane Form, Dan. 7. 9. The Antient of Days did ſit, whoſe Garment was white as Snow, and the Hairs of his head like pure Wool; he is deſcribed as coming to Judgment; 'tis not meant of Chriſt probably, becauſe Chriſt, v. 13. is called the Son of Man coming near to the Antient of Days. This is not the proper ſhape of God, for no Man hath ſeen his ſhape. It was a Viſion wherein ſuch Repreſentations were made, as were accommodated to the inward Senſe of Daniel; Daniel ſaw him in a Rapture or Extaſie, wherein outward Senſes are of no uſe: God is deſcribed, not as he is in himſelf, of a humane Form, but in regard of his fitneſs to Judge: White notes the purity and ſimplicity of the Divine Nature: Antient of Days in regard of his Eternity; white Hair in regard of his Prudence and Wiſdom, which is more eminent in Age than Youth, and more fit to diſcern Cauſes, and to diſtinguiſh betwixt Right and Wrong. Viſions are Riddles and muſt not be underſtood in a Literal Senſe. We are to watch againſt ſuch determinate Conceptions of God. Vain Imaginations do eaſily infeſt us; Tinder will not ſooner take Fire than our Natures kindle into wrong Notions of the Divine Majeſty. We are very apt to faſhion a God like our Selves: We muſt therefore look upon ſuch Repreſentations of God, as accommodated to our weakneſs: And no more think them to be literal deſcriptions of God, as he is in himſelf, than we will think the Image of the Sun in the Water to be the true Sun in the Heavens. We may indeed conceive of Chriſt as Man, who hath in Heaven the Veſtment of our Nature, and is Deus Figuratus, tho' we cann't conceive the Godhead under a human ſhape.

* Epiſc. inſti. l. 4. § 2. c. 17.

1. To

1. To have ſuch a fancy is to diſparage and wrong God. A corporeal fancy of God, is as ridiculous in it ſelf, and as injurious to God, as a wooden Statue. The capricio's of our imagination are often more monſtrous, than the Images which are the Works of Art: 'Tis as irreligious to meaſure Gods Eſſence by our line, his perfections by our imperfections, as to meaſure his thoughts and actings by the weakneſs and unworthineſs of our own. This is to limit an infinite eſſence, and pull him down to our ſcanty meaſures, and render that which is unconceivably above us, equal with us. 'Tis impoſſible we can conceive God after the manner of a Body, but we muſt bring him down to the proportion of a Body, which is to diminiſh his Glory, and ſtoop him below the dignity of his Nature. God is a pure Spirit, he hath nothing of the nature and tincture of a Body; whoſoever therefore conceives of him as having a bodily form, tho' he fancy the moſt beautiful and comely Body, inſtead of owning his dignity, detracts from the ſuper-eminent excellency of his nature and bleſſedneſs. When men fancy God like themſelves in their corporeal nature, they will ſoon make a progreſs, and aſcribe to him their corrupt Nature; and while they cloath him with their Bodies, inveſt him alſo in the infirmities of them. God is a jealous God, very ſenſible of any diſgrace, and will be as much incenſed againſt an inward Idolatry as an outward: That * Exod. 20. v. 4. * Command which forbad Corporeal Images, would not indulge Carnal Imaginations, ſince the Nature of God is as much wronged by unworthy Images erected in the fancy, as by Statues carved out of Stone or Metals: One as well as the other, is a deſerting of our true Spouſe, and committing Adultery, one with a material Image, and the other with a carnal Notion of God. Since God humbles himſelf to our apprehenſions, we ſhould not debaſe him in thinking him to be that in his Nature, which he makes only a reſemblance of himſelf to us.

2. To have ſuch fancies of God, will obſtruct and pollute our Worſhip of him. How is it poſſible to give him a right Worſhip, of whom we have ſo debaſing a Notion? We ſhall never think a corporeal Deity, worthy of a dedication of our Spirits. The hating Inſtruction, and caſting God's Word behind the back, is charged upon the imagination they had, that God was ſuch a one as themſelves, Pſal. 50. 17, 21. Many of the wiſer Heathens did not judge their Statues to be their Gods, or their Gods to be like their Statues, but ſuited them to their politick deſigns, and judged them a good invention to keep people within the bounds of Obedience and Devotion, by ſuch viſible figures of them, which might imprint a reverence and fear of thoſe Gods upon 'em: But theſe were falſe meaſures: A deſpiſed and undervalued God, is not an Object of Petition or Affection: Who would addreſs ſeriouſly to a God he has low apprehenſions of? The more raiſed thoughts we have of him, the viler ſenſe we ſhall have of our ſelves: They would make us humble and Self-abhorrent in our Supplications to him, Job 42. 6. Wherefore I abhor my ſelf, &c.

3. Tho' we muſt not conceive of God, as of a Humane or Corporeal ſhape, yet we cannot think of God without ſome reflection upon our own Being. We cannot conceive him to be an intelligent Being, but we muſt make ſome compariſon between him and our own underſtanding Nature, to come to a knowledge of him. Since we are incloſed in Bodies, we apprehend nothing but what comes in by ſenſe, and what we in ſome ſort meaſure by ſenſible Objects. And in the conſideration of thoſe things, which we deſire to abſtract from ſenſe, we are fain to make uſe of the aſſiſtances of ſenſe and viſible things; And therefore when we frame the higheſt notion, there will be ſome ſimilitude of ſome corporeal thing in our fancy; and tho' we would ſpiritualize our thoughts, and aim at a more abſtracted and raiſed underſtanding, yet there will be ſome dregs of matter ſticking to our conceptions; yet we ſtill judge by argument and reaſoning, what the thing is we think of under thoſe material Images. * A corporeal Image will follow us, as the ſhadow doth the body: While we are in the body, and ſurrounded with fleſhly matter, we cannot think of things without ſome help from corporeal repreſentations: Something of ſenſe will interpoſe it ſelf in our pureſt conceptions of ſpiritual things; for the faculties which ſerve for contemplation, are either corporeal, as the ſenſe and fancy, or ſo allied to them, that nothing paſſes into them but by the Organs of the Body; ſo that there is a natural inclination to figure nothing but under a corporeal notion, till by an attentive application of the mind and reaſon to the object thought upon, we ſeparate that which is bodily from that which is ſpiritual, and by degrees aſcend to that true notion of that we think upon, and would have a due conception of in our mind. Therefore God tempers the declaration of himſelf to our weakneſs, and the condition of our natures: He condeſcends to our littleneſs and narrowneſs, when he declares himſelf by the ſimilitude of bodily Members. As the light of the Sun is tempered, and diffuſeth it ſelf to our ſenſe thro' the air and vapours, that our weak eyes may not be too much dazled with it: Without it we could not know or judge of the Sun, becauſe we could have no uſe of our ſenſe, which we muſt have before we can judge of it in our underſtanding: So we are not able to conceive of Spiritual Beings in the purity of their own nature, without ſuch a temperament, and ſuch ſhadows to uſher them into our minds. And therefore we find the Spirit of God accommodates himſelf to our contracted and teddered capacities, and uſes ſuch expreſſions of God, as are ſuited to us in this ſtate of fleſh wherein we are: And therefore becauſe we cannot apprehend God in the ſimplicity of his own Being, and his undivided Eſſence, he draws the repreſentations of himſelf from ſeveral Creatures, and ſeveral actions of thoſe Creatures: As ſometimes he is ſaid to be angry, to walk, to ſit, to fly; not that we ſhould reſt in ſuch conceptions of him, but take our riſe from this foundation, and ſuch perfections in the Creatures, to mount up to a knowledge of Gods nature by thoſe ſeveral ſteps, and conceive of him by thoſe divided Excellencies, becauſe we cannot conceive of him in the purity of his own Eſſence. * We cannot poſſibly think or ſpeak of God, unleſs we tranſfer the names of created perfections to him; yet we are to conceive of them in a higher manner when we apply them to the Divine Nature, than when we conſider them in the ſeveral Creatures formally, exceeding thoſe perfections and excellencies which are in the Creature, and in a more excellent manner: * [as one ſaith, tho' we cannot comprehend God without the help of ſuch reſemblances, yet we may without making an Image of him; ſo that inability of ours excuſeth thoſe apprehenſions of him, from any way offending againſt his Divine Nature.] Theſe are not notions ſo much ſuited to the nature of God as the weakneſs of Man: They are helps to our meditations, but ought not to be formal conceptions of him. We may aſſiſt our ſelves in our apprehenſions of him, by conſidering the ſubtilty and ſpirituality of Air, and conſidering the members of a Body, without thinking him to be Air, or to have any corporeal Member. Our reaſon tells us, that whatſoever is a Body, is limited and bounded; and the notion of infiniteneſs and bodilineſs, cannot agree and conſiſt together: And therefore what is offered by our fancy, ſhould be purified by our reaſon.

4. Therefore we are to elevate and refine all our notions of God, and ſpiritualize our conceptions of him. Every Man is to have a conception of God; therefore he ought to have one of the higheſt elevation. Since we we cannot have a full notion of him, we ſhould endeavour to make it as high and as pure as we can. Tho' we cannot conceive of God, but ſome corporeal repreſentations or Images in our minds will be converſant with us, as motes in the Air when we look upon the Heavens, yet our conception may, and muſt riſe higher: As when we ſee the draught of the Heavens and Earth in a Globe, or a Kingdom in a Map, it helps our conceptions, but doth not terminate them: We conceive them to be of a vaſt extent, far beyond that ſhort deſcription of them: So we ſhould endeavour to refine every repreſentation of God, to riſe higher and higher, and have our apprehenſions ſtill more purified, ſeparating the perfect from the imperfect, caſting away the one, and greatning the other; conceive him to be a Spirit diffuſed through all, containing all, perceiving all. All the perfections of God are infinitely elevated above the excellencies of the Creatures; above whatſoever can be conceived by the cleareſt and moſt piercing underſtanding. The Nature of God as a Spirit, is infinitely ſuperior to whatſoever we can conceive perfect in the notion of a created Spirit. Whatſoever God is, he is infinitely ſo: He is infinite Wiſdom, infinite Goodneſs, infinite Knowledge, infinite Power, infinite Spirit, infinitely diſtant from the weakneſs of Creatures, infinitely mounted above the excellencies of Creatures: As eaſie to be known that he is, as impoſſible to be comprehended what he is.

Conceive of him as excellent, without any imperfection: A Spirit without parts; great without quantity; perfect without quality; every where without place: Powerful without members; underſtanding without ignorance; wiſe without reaſoning; light without darkneſs; infinitely more excelling the beauty of all Creatures, than the light in the Sun pure and unviolated, exceeds the ſplendor of the Sun diſperſed and divided through a cloudy and mitty Air: And when you have riſen to the higheſt, conceive him yet infinitely above all you can conceive of Spirit, and acknowledge the infirmity of your own minds. And whatſoever conception comes into your minds, ſay, this is not God, God is more than this: If I could conceive him, he were not God; for God is incomprehenſibly above whatſoever I can ſay, whatſoever I can think and conceive of him.

4 Inference. If God be a Spirit, no corporeal thing can defile him. Some bring an argument againſt the Omnipreſence of God, that it is a diſparagement to the Divine Eſſence to be every where, in naſty Cottages, as well as beautiful Palaces and garniſht Temples. What place can defile a Spirit? Is Light, which approaches to the nature of Spirit, polluted by ſhining upon a Dung-hill, or a Sun-beam tainted by darting upon a Quag-mire? Doth an Angel contract any Soil, by ſtepping into a naſty Priſon to deliver Peter? What can ſteam from the moſt noyſom Body, to pollute the ſpiritual nature of God? As he is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity *, ſo he is of a more ſpiritual ſubſtance than to contract any phyſical pollution from the places where he doth diffuſe himſelf. Did our Saviour, who had a true Body, derive any taint from the Lepers he touched, the diſeaſes he cured, or the Devils he expell'd? God is a pure Spirit, plungeth himſelf into no filth, is daſh'd with no ſpot by being preſent with all bodies. Bodies only receive defilement from bodies.

* Hab. 1. 13.

5. Inference. If God be a Spirit, he is active and communicative. He is not clogg'd with heavy and ſluggiſh matter, which is cauſe of dulneſs and inactivity. The more ſubtil, thin, and approaching nearer the nature of a Spirit any thing is, the more diffuſive it is. Air is a gliding ſubſtance, ſpreads it ſelf through all Regions, pierceth into all Bodies; it fills the ſpace between Heaven and Earth; there is nothing but partakes of the vertue of it. Light, which is an emblem of Spirit, inſinuates it ſelf into all places, refreſheth all things. As Spirits are fuller, ſo they are more overflowing, more piercing, more operative than Bodies. The Egyptians Horſes were weak things, becauſe they were Fleſh and not Spirit *: The Soul being a Spirit conveys more to the Body, than the Body can to it. What cannot ſo great a Spirit do for us? What cannot ſo great a Spirit work in us? God being a Spirit above all Spirits, can pierce into the center of all Spirits; make his way into the moſt ſecret receſſes; ſtamp what he pleaſes: 'Tis no more to him to turn our Spirits, than to make a Wilderneſs become Waters, and ſpeak a Chaos into a beautiful frame of Heaven and Earth: He can act our Souls with infinite more eaſe, than our Souls can act our Bodies; he can fix in us what motions, frames, inclinations he pleaſes; he can come and ſettle in our hearts with all his Treaſures. 'Tis an encouragement to confide in him, when we petition him for Spiritual Bleſſings: As he is a Spirit, he is poſſeſſed with Spiritual Bleſſings *. A Spirit delights to beſtow things ſuitable to its Nature, as Bodies do to Communicate what is agreeable to theirs: As he is a Father of Spirits, we may go to him for the Welfare of our Spirits; he being a Spirit, is as able to repair our Spirits, as he was to create them.

* Iſa. 31.

* Eph. 1. 3.

As he is a Spirit, he is indefatigable in acting: The members of the Body tire and flag; but whoever heard of a Soul wearied with being active? Whoever heard of a weary Angel? In the pureſt ſimplicity, there is the greateſt power, the moſt efficacious goodneſs, the moſt reaching Juſtice to affect the Spirit, that can inſinuate it ſelf every where to puniſh wickedneſs without wearineſs, as well as to comfort goodneſs. God is active, becauſe he is Spirit; and if we be like to God, the more Spiritual we are, the more active we ſhall be.

6 Inference. God being a Spirit is Immortal. His being Immortal, and being Inviſible, are joyned together *. Spirits are in their nature incorruptible; they can only periſh by that hand that framed them. Every compounded thing is ſubject to mutation; but God being a pure and ſimple Spirit, is without corruption, without any ſhadow of change *. Where there is compoſition, there is ſome kind of repugnancy of one part againſt the other; and where there is repugnancy, there is a capability of diſſolution. God in regard of his infinite Spirituality, hath nothing in his own nature contrary to it; can have nothing in himſelf which is not himſelf. The World periſhes, Friends change and are diſſolved; Bodies moulder, becauſe they are mutable. God is a Spirit in the higheſt excellency and glory of Spirits; nothing is beyond him; nothing above him; no contrariety with him. This is our comfort, if we devote our ſelves to him; this God is our God; this Spirit is our Spirit; this is our All, our Immutable, our incorruptible Support; a Spirit that cannot die and leave us.

* 1 Tim. 1. v. 17.

* James 1. v. 17.

7 Inference. If God be a Spirit, we ſee how we can only converſe with him by our Spirits. Bodies and Spirits are not ſuitable to one another: We can only ſee, know, embrace a Spirit with our Spirits. He judges not of us by our corporeal actions, nor our external devotions, by our masks and diſguiſes: He fixes his eye upon the frame of the Heart, bends his ear to the groans of our Spirits: He is not pleaſed with outward pomp: He is not a Body, therefore the beauty of Temples, delicacy of Sacrinces, fumes of Incenſe, are not grateful to him; by thoſe, or any external action, we have no communion with him: A Spirit when broken, is his delightful Sacrifice *: We muſt therefore have our Spirits fitted for him, be renewed in the Spirit of our minds *, that we may be in a poſture to live with him, and have an intercourſe with him. We can never be united to God, but in our Spirits: Bodies unite with Bodies, Spirits with Spirits. The more ſpiritual any thing is, the more cloſely doth it unite. Air hath the cloſeſt union, nothing meets together ſooner than that when the parts are divided by the interposition of a body.

* Pſal. 51. 17

* Eph. 4. 23.

that

8 Inference. If God be a Spirit, he can only be the true satisfaction of our Spirits. Spirit can only be fill'd with a Spirit. Content flows from likeness and suitableness: As we have a resemblance to God in regard of the spiritual nature of our Soul, so we can have no satisfaction but in him. Spirit can no more be really satisfied with that which is corporeal, than a Beast can delight in the company of an Angel. Corporeal things can no more fill a hungry Spirit, than pure Spirit can feed an hungry Body. God the highest Spirit, can only reach out a full content to our spirits. Man is Lord of the Creation; nothing below him can be fit for his converse; nothing above him offers it self to his converse but God. We have no correspondence with Angels: The influence they have upon us, the protection they afford, is secret and undiscern'd; but God the highest Spirit offers himself to us in his Son, in his Ordinances, is visible in every Creature, presents himself to us in every providence; to him we must seek; in him we must rest. God had no rest from the Creation, till he had made Man; and Man can have no rest in the Creation, till he rests in God. God only is *our dwelling place; our Souls should *only long for him; our Souls should only wait upon him. The spirit of Man never riseth to its original glory, till it be carried up on the wings of Faith and Love to its original Copy. The face of the Soul looks most beautiful, when it is turned to the face of God the Father of Spirits; when the derived Spirit is fixed upon the original Spirit, drawing from it Life and Glory. Spirit is only the receptacle of Spirit. God as Spirit is our Principle; we must therefore live upon him. God as Spirit, hath some resemblance to us as his Image; we must therefore only satisfie our selves in him.

* Ps. 90. 1.
* Ps. 63. 1.

9 Inference. If God be a Spirit, we should take most care of that wherein we are like to God. Spirit is nobler than Body; we must therefore value our Spirits above our Bodies: The Soul as Spirit, partakes more of the Divine Nature, and deserves more of our choicest cares. If we have any love to this Spirit, we should have a real affection to our own Spirits, as bearing a stamp of the Spiritual Divinity, the chiefest of all the works of God; as it is said of Behemoth, Job 40. 19. That which is most the Image of this immense Spirit, should be our Darling: So David calls his Soul, Psal. 35. 17. Shall we take care of that wherein we partake not of God, and not delight in the Jewel which hath his own signature upon it? God was not only the Framer of spirits, and the end of spirits; but the Copy and Exemplar of Spirits. God partakes of no corporiety, he is pure Spirit. But how do we act, as if we were only matter and body! We have but little kindness for this great Spirit as well as our own, if we take no care of his immediate Off-spring, since he is not only Spirit, but the Father of Spirits*.

10 Inference. If God be a Spirit, let us take heed of those sins which are spiritual. Paul distinguish'd between the filth of the Flesh, and that of the Spirit*: By the one we defile the Body; by the other we defile the Spirit, which in regard of its Nature is of kin to the Creator. To wrong one who is neer of kin to a Prince, is worse than to injure an inferior Subject. When we make our Spirits, which are most like to God in their Nature, and framed according to his Image, a Stage to act vain Imaginations, wicked Desires and unclean Affections, we wrong God in the excellency of his Work, and reflect upon the nobleness of the Pattern; we wrong him in that part where he hath stampt the most signal character of his own Spiritual Nature; we defile that whereby we have only converse with him as a Spirit, wch he hath ordered more immediately to represent him in this nature, than all Corporeal Things in the World can, and make that Spirit with whom we desire to be joyned, unfit for such a Knot. God's Spirituality is the Root of his other Perfections. We have already heard, he could not be Infinite, Omnipresent, Immutable without it. Spiritual sins are the greatest root of Bitterness within us: As Grace in our Spirits renders us more like to a spiritual God; so spiritual sins bring us into a conformity to a degraded Devil*. Carnal sins change us from Men to Brutes, and Spiritual sins devest us of the Image of God for the Image of Satan. We should by no means make our Spirits a Dung-hill, which bear upon them the Character of the spiritual Nature of God, and were made for his Residence: Let us therefore behave our selves towards God in all those ways which the spiritual Nature of God requires us.

A DISCOURSE Of Spiritual Worship.

HAving thus dispatcht the first Proposition, God is a Spirit; it will not be amiss to handle the Inference our Saviour makes from that Proposition: Which is the second Observation propounded.

Doct. That the Worship due from us to God ought to be spiritual, and spiritually performed.

Spirit and Truth are understood variously. Either we are to Worship God,

1. Not by Legal Ceremonies. The Evangelical administration, being called Spirit in opposition to the legal Ordinances as carnal; and Truth in opposition to them as typical. As the whole Judaical service is called flesh; so the whole Evangelical service is called Spirit. Or Spirit may be opposed to the Worship at Jerusalem, as it was carnal; Truth, to the Worship on the Mount Gerizim, because it was false. They had not the true object of Worship, nor the true Medium of Worship as those at Jerusalem had. Their Worship should cease, because it was false; and the Jewish Worship should cease, because it was carnal.

There is no need of a Candle, when the Sun spreads its beams in the Air; no need of those Ceremonies, when the Sun of righteousness appeared: They only served for a Candle to instruct and direct men till the time of his coming. The shadows are chased away by displaying the substance, so that they can be of no more use in the worship of God, since the end for which they were instituted, is expired; and that is discovered to us in the Gospel which the Jews sought for in vain, among the baggage and stuff of their Ceremonies.

2. With a spiritual and sincere frame. In Spirit, i.e. with Spirit; with the inward operations of all the faculties of our Souls, and the cream and flower of them: And the reason is, because there ought to be a worship suitable to the nature of God. And as the worship was to be spiritual, so the exercise of that worship ought to be in a spiritual manner*. It shall be a worship in Truth, because the true God shall be adored adored without thoſe vain imaginations, and phantaſtick reſemblances of him, which were common among the blind Gentiles, and contrary to the glorious nature of God, and unworthy ingredients in Religious ſervices. It ſhall be a worſhip in Spirit, without thoſe carnal Rites the degenerate Jews reſted on: Such a poſture of Soul which is the life and ornament of every ſervice God looks for at your hands: There muſt be ſome proportion between the object adored, and the manner in which we adore it. It muſt not be a meer corporeal worſhip, becauſe God is not a body; but it muſt riſe from the Center of our Soul, becauſe God is a Spirit. If he were a body, a bodily worſhip might ſuit him, Images might be fit to repreſent him; but being a Spirit, our bodily ſervices enter us not into communion with him. Being a Spirit, we muſt baniſh from our minds all carnal imaginations of him, and ſeparate from our Wills all cold and diſſembled affections to him. We muſt not only have a loud Voice, but an elevated Soul; not only a bended knee, but a broken heart; not only a ſupplicating tone, but a groaning Spirit; not only a ready ear for the word, but a receiving heart; and this ſhall be of greater value with him, than the moſt coſtly outward ſervices offered at Gerizim or Jeruſalem.

Our Saviour certainly meant not by worſhipping in Spirit, only the matter of the Evangelical ſervice, as oppoſed to the legal adminiſtration, without the manner wherein it was to be performed. 'Tis true, God always ſought a worſhip in Spirit; he expected the heart of the worſhipper ſhould joyn with his inſtituted rights of adoration in every exerciſe of them: But he expects ſuch a carriage more under the Goſpel adminiſtration, becauſe of the clearer diſcoveries of his nature made in it, and the greater aſſiſtances conveyed by it. I ſhall therefore,

1. Lay down ſome general Propoſitions.
2. Shew what this Spiritual Worſhip is.
3. Why we muſt offer to God a ſpiritual ſervice.
4. The Uſe.

1. Some general Propoſitions.

Prop. 1. Firſt, *The right exerciſe of worſhip is founded upon, and riſeth from the ſpirituality of God. The firſt ground of the worſhip we render to God, is the infinite excellency of his nature, which is not only one attribute, but reſults from all: For God, as God, is the object of worſhip; and the notion of God conſiſts not in thinking him wiſe, good, juſt, but all thoſe infinitely beyond any conception. And hence it follows that God is an object infinitely to be loved and honoured. His goodneſs is ſometimes ſpoken of in Scripture as a motive of our homage. Pſal. 130. 4. There is forgiveneſs with thee that thou mayeſt be feared. Fear in the Scripture dialect ſignifies the whole worſhip of God, Acts 10. 35. But in every Nation he that fears him is accepted of him*. If God ſhould act towards Men according to the rigors of his Juſtice due to them for the leaſt of their Crimes, there could be no exerciſe of any Affection but that of Deſpair, which could not ingender a Worſhip of God which ought to be joyned with Love, not with Hatred. The Beneficence and Patience of God and his readineſs to Pardon Men is the reaſon of the Honour they return to him. And this is ſo evident a Motive, that generally the Idolatrous World rankt thoſe Creatures in the number of their Gods, which they perceived uſeful and beneficial to Mankind; as the Sun and Moon, the Ægyptians the Ox, &c. And the more benencial any thing appeared to Mankind, the higher Station Men gave it in the Rank of their Deities, and beſtowed a more peculiar and ſolemn Worſhip upon it. Men worſhipped God to procure or continue his favour, which would not have been acted by them, had they not conceived it a pleaſing thing to him to be merciful and gracious.

* Ames medul. l. 2. c. 4. § 20.

* So 2 Kings 17. 32, 33.

Sometimes his Juſtice is propoſed to us as a Motive of Worſhip, Heb. 12. 28, 29. Serve God with Reverence and godly Fear. For our God is a conſuming Fire; which includes his Holineſs, whereby he doth hate ſin, as well as his wrath, whereby he doth puniſh it. Who but a mad and totally brutiſh Perſon, or one that was reſolved to make war againſt Heaven, could behold the effects of God's Anger in the World, conſider him in his Juſtice as a conſuming Fire, and deſpiſe him, and rather be drawn out by that conſideration to Blaſphemy and Deſpair, than to ſeek all ways to appeaſe him? Now tho' the infinite power of God, his unſpeakable Wiſdom, his incomprehenſible Goodneſs, the holineſs of his Nature, the vigilance of his Providence, the bounty of his Hand ſignifie to Man, that he ſhould love and honour him, and are the Motives of Worſhip; yet the Spirituality of his Nature is the Rule of Worſhip, and directs us to render our Duty to him with all the powers of our Soul. As his Goodneſs beams out upon us, worſhip is due in Juſtice to him; and as he is the moſt excellent Nature, veneration is due to him in the higheſt manner with the choiceſt affections.

So that indeed the ſpirituality of God comes chiefly into conſideration in matter of Worſhip: All his Perfections are grounded upon this: He could not be infinite, immutable, omniſcient if he were a Corporeal Being*: We cannot give him a worſhip unleſs we judge him worthy, excellent and deſerving a Worſhip at our hands: And we cannot judge him worthy of a Worſhip, unleſs we have ſome Apprehenſions and Admirations of his infinite Vertues: And we cannot apprehend and admire thoſe Perfections, but as we ſee them as cauſes ſhining in their Effects. When we ſee therefore the frame of the World to be the Work of his Power; the order of the World to be the Fruit of his Wiſdom, and the Uſefulneſs of the World to be the Product of his Goodneſs: We find the Motives and Reaſons of Worſhip; and weighing that this Power, Wiſdom, Goodneſs, infinitely tranſcend any Corporeal Nature; we find a Rule of Worſhip, that it ought to be offered by us in a manner ſuitable to ſuch a Nature, as is infinitely above any bodily Being. His being a Spirit declares what he is, his other Perfections declare what kind of Spirit he is. All God's Perfections ſuppoſe him a Spirit; all center in this: His Wiſdom doth not ſuppoſe him Merciful, or his Mercy ſuppoſe him omniſcient: There may be diſtinct Notions of thoſe, but all ſuppoſe him to be of a Spiritual Nature. How cold and frozen will our Devotions be, if we conſider not his Omniſcience, whereby he diſcerns our Hearts? How carnal will our Services be, if we conſider him not as a pure Spirit? In our offers to, and tranſactions with Men, we deal not with them as meer Animals, but as rational Creatures; and we debaſe their Natures if we treat them otherwiſe: And if we have not raiſed Apprehenſions of God's Spiritual Nature in our treating with him, but allow him only ſuch frames as we think fit enough for Men; we debaſe his Spirituality to the littleneſs of our own Being. We muſt therefore poſſeſs our Souls with this, we ſhall elſe render him no better than a fleſhly Service. We do not much concern our ſelves in thoſe things, of which we are either utterly ignorant, or have but ſlight apprehenſions of.

That is the firſt Propoſition; the right exerciſe of Worſhip is grounded upon the Spirituality of God.

Prop. 2. This Spiritual Worſhip of God is manifeſt by the Light of Nature, to be due to him. In reference to this conſider,

1. The outward means or matter of that Worſhip which would be acceptable to God, was not known by the light of Nature. The Law for a worſhip, and for a ſpiritual Worſhip, by the Faculties of our Souls was natural, and part of the Law of Creation; tho' the determination of the particular Acts, whereby God would have this Homage teſtified, was of poſitive Inſtitution, and depended not upon the Law of Creation. Tho' Adam in Innocence knew God was to be Worſhipped; yet by Nature he did not know by what outward acts he was to pay this reſpect, or at what time he was more ſolemnly to be exerciſed in it than at another: This depended upon the Directions God, as the Sovereign Governour and Law-giver, ſhould preſcribe. You therefore find the poſitive Inſtitutions of the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil, and the determination of the time of Worſhip, Gen. 2.3,17. Had there been any ſuch Notion in Adam naturally, as ſtrong as that other, that a Worſhip was due to God, there would have been found ſome Reliques of theſe Modes univerſally conſented to by Mankind, as well as of the other: But tho' all Nations have by an univerſal conſent concurred in the acknowledgment of the Being of God, and his right to adoration, and the obligation of the Creature to it; and that there ought to be ſome publick Rule and Polity in matters of Religion; (for no Nation hath been in the World without a Worſhip, and without external Acts and certain Ceremonies to ſignifie that Worſhip) yet their Modes and Rites have been as various as their Climates, unleſs in that common Notion of Sacrifices, not deſcending to them by Nature, but tradition from Adam; and the various ways of worſhip have been more provoking than pleaſing: Every Nation ſuited the kind of Worſhip to their particular Ends and Polities they deſigned to Rule by. How God was to be worſhipped, is more difficult to be diſcerned by Nature with its eyes out, than with its eyes clear. * The Pillars upon which the Worſhip of God ſtands, cannot be diſcerned without Revelation, no more than blind Sampſon could tell where the Pillars of the Philiſtines Theatre ſtood, without one to conduct him. What Adam could not ſee with his ſound Eyes, we cannot with our dim Eyes; he muſt be told from Heaven, what Worſhip was fit for the God of Heaven. 'Tis not by Nature that we can have ſuch a full proſpect of God as may content and quiet us; This is the Noble effect of Divine Revelation; he only knows himſelf, and can only make himſelf known to us. It could not be ſuppoſed, that an infinite God, ſhould have no Perfections but what were viſible in the Works of his Hands; and that theſe Perfections ſhould not be infinitely greater, than as they were ſenſible in their preſent Effects: This had been to apprehend God a limited Being, meaner than he is. Now 'tis impoſſible to honour God as we ought, unleſs we know him as he is; and we could not know him as he is, without Divine Revelation from himſelf; for none but God can acquaint us with his own Nature: And therefore the Nations void of this conduct, heap up Modes of Worſhip from their own Imaginations, unworthy of the Majeſty of God, and below the Nature of Man: A Rational Man would ſcarce have owned ſuch for ſigns of Honour, as the Scripture mentions in the Services of Baal and Dagon. Much leſs an infinitely wiſe and glorious God. And when God had ſignified his Mind to his own People, how unwilling were they to reſt ſatisfied with God's Determination, but would be warping to their own Inventions, and make Gods, and ways of Worſhip to themſelves? * As in the matter of the Golden Calf, as was lately ſpoken of.

* King on Jona. p. 63.

* Amos 5. v. 26.

2. Tho' the outward manner of Worſhip acceptable to God, could not be known without Revelation, and thoſe Revelations might be various; yet the inward manner of Worſhip with our Spirits was manifeſt by Nature. And not only manifeſt by Nature to Adam in Innocence, but after his Fall, and the Scales he had brought upon his Underſtanding by that Fall. When God gave him his poſitive Inſtitutions before the Fall, or whatſoever additions God ſhould have made, had he perſiſted in that ſtate; or when he appointed him after his Fall to teſtifie his Acknowledgement of him by Sacrifices, there needed no Command to him to make thoſe Acknowledgments by thoſe outward ways preſcribed to him, with the Intention and prime Affection of his Spirit: This Nature would inſtruct him in without Revelation: For he could not poſſibly have any ſemblance of reaſon to think, that the offering of Beaſts, or the preſenting the Firſt Fruits of the increaſe of the Ground, as an acknowledgment of God's Sovereignty over him, and his Bounty to him, was ſufficient without devoting to him that part wherein the Image of his Creator did conſiſt: He could not but diſcern by a Reflection upon his own Being, that he was made for God as well as by God: [For it is a natural Principle, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Rom. 11.36. For of him, and thro' him, and to him are all things, &c.] That the whole, whereof he did conſiſt was due to God; and that his Body, the dreggy and duſty part of his Nature, was not fit to be brought alone before God, without that nobler Principle, which he had by Creation link'd with it. Nothing in the whole Law of Nature, as it is informed of Religion, was clearer next to the Being of God, than this manner of Worſhipping God with the Mind and Spirit. And as the Gentiles never ſunk ſo low into the mud of Idolatry, as to think the Images they worſhipped were really their Gods, but the Repreſentations, or Habitations of their Gods; ſo they never deſerted this Principle in the Notion of it, that God was to be honoured with the beſt they were, and the beſt they had: As they never denied the Being of God in the Notion, tho' they did in the practice; ſo they never rejected this Principle in Notion, tho' they did, and now moſt Men do, in the inward obſervation of it: It was a Maxim among them that God was mens animus, Mind and Spirit, and therefore was to be honoured with the Mind and Spirit. That Religion did not conſiſt in the Ceremonies of the Body, but the work of the Soul; whence, the ſpeech of one of them, * Sacrifice to the Gods not ſo much cloathed with purple garments as a pure heart. And of another *, * God regards not the multitude of the Sacrifices, but the Diſpoſition of the Sacrificer. 'Tis not fit we ſhould deny God the Cream and Flower, and give him the flotten part and the ſtalks. And with what Reverence and Intention of Mind they thought their Worſhip was to be performed, is evident by the Prieſts crying out often, hoc age, Mind this, let your Spirits be intent upon it. This could not but reſult,

* Menand.

(1.) From the Knowledge of our ſelves. 'Tis a natural Principle, God hath made us, and not we our ſelves, Pſal. 100. 1, 2. Man knows himſelf to be a rational Creature: As a Creature he was to ſerve his Creator, and as a rational Creature with the beſt part of that rational Nature he derived from him. By the ſame act of reaſon that he knows himſelf to be a Creature, he knows himſelf to have a Creator: That this Creator is more excellent than himſelf, and that an honour is due from him to the Creator for framing of him; and therefore this honour was to be offered to him by the moſt excellent part which was framed by him. Man cannot conſider himſelf as a thinking, underſtanding Being; but he muſt know that he muſt give God the honour of his Thoughts, and worſhip him with thoſe Faculties whereby he Thinks, Wills, and Acts *. He muſt know his Faculties were given him to act, and to act for the glory of that God who gave him his Soul and the Faculties of it; and he could not in reaſon think they muſt be only active in his own Service, and the Service of the Creature, and idle and unprofitable in the Service of his Creator.

* Amyrald. Mor. Tom. 1. p. 309,310.

With the ſame Powers of our Soul whereby we contemplate God, we muſt alſo worſhip God: We cannot think of him but with our Minds, nor love him but with our Will; and we cannot worſhip him without the acts of Thinking and Loving, and therefore cannot worſhip him without the exerciſe of our inward Faculties: How is it poſſible then for any Man that knows his own nature, to think that extended Hands, bended Knees, and lifted-up Eyes, were ſufficient Acts of Worſhip, without a quickned and active Spirit?

(2.) From the knowledge of God. As there was a knowledge of God by Nature, ſo the ſame nature did dictate to Man that God was to be glorified as God: The Apoſtle implies the inference in the charge he brings againſt them for neglecting it. We ſhould ſpeak of God as he is, ſaid one ; and the ſame reaſon would inform them, that they were to act towards God as he is. The excellency of the Object required a Worſhip according to the dignity of his Nature, which could not be anſwered but by the moſt ſerious inward affection, as well as outward decency; and a want of this, cannot but be judged to be unbecoming the Majeſty of the Creator of the World, and the excellency of Religion. No Nation, no Perſon did ever aſſert, that the vileſt part of Man was enough for the moſt excellent Being, as God is: That a bodily Service could be a ſufficient acknowledgment of the greatneſs of God, or a ſufficient return for the bounty of God. Man could not but know that he was to act in Religion, conformably to the Object of Religion, and to the excellency of his own Soul: The notion of a God was ſufficient to fill the mind of Man with admiration and reverence, and the firſt concluſion from it would be to honour God, and that he have all the affection placed on him, that ſo infinite and ſpiritual a Being did deſerve: The progreſs then would be, that this excellent Being was to be honoured with the motions of the Underſtanding and Will, with the pureſt and moſt ſpiritual Powers in the Nature of Man, becauſe he was a Spiritual Being, and had nothing of matter mingled with him. Such a brutiſh imagination, to ſuppoſe that blood and fumes, beaſts and incenſe, could pleaſe a Deity without a ſpiritual frame, cannot be ſuppoſed to befal any but thoſe that had loſt their Reaſon in the Rubbiſh of Senſe. Meer rational Nature could never conclude, that ſo excellent a Spirit would be put off with a meer animal Service; and attendance of matter and body without Spirit, when they themſelves of an inferior Nature, would be loath to ſit down contented with an outſide Service from thoſe that belong to them: So that this inſtruction of our Saviour, that God is to be worſhipped in Spirit and Truth, is conformable to the ſentiments of Nature, and drawn from the moſt undeniable Principles of it. The excellency of God's Nature, and the excellent conſtitution of Humane faculties, concur naturally to ſupport this perſwaſion: This was as natural to be known by Men, as the neceſſity of Juſtice and Temperance for the ſupport of Humane Societies and Bodies. 'Tis to be feared that if there be not among us ſuch brutiſh apprehenſions, there are ſuch brutiſh dealings with God in our Services againſt the light of Nature, when we place all our worſhip of God in outward attendances and drooping countenances, with unbelieving frames and formal devotions; when Prayer is muttered over in private ſlightly, as a Parrot learns leſſons by rote, not underſtanding what it ſpeaks, or to what end it ſpeaks it; not glorifying God in thought and ſpirit, with underſtanding and will.

*Rom. 1. 21. Bias.

* Amyrald. Ib.

3. Spiritual Worſhip therefore was always required by God, and always offered to him by one or other. Man had a perpetual obligation upon him to ſuch a worſhip from the nature of God, and what is founded upon the nature of God is unvariable. This and that particular mode of worſhip, may wax old as a Garment, and as a Veſture may be folded up and changed, as the expreſſion is of the Heavens *: But God endures for ever; his ſpirituality fails not, therefore a worſhip of him in Spirit muſt run through all ways and rites of Worſhip. God muſt ceaſe to be Spirit, before any ſervice but that which is ſpiritual, can be accepted by him. The light of Nature is the light of God; the light of Nature being unchangeable; what was dictated by that, was always, and will always be required by God. The worſhip of God being perpetually due from the Creature, the worſhipping him as God is as perpetually his right. Tho' the outward expreſſions of this Honour were different, one way in Paradice, (for a worſhip was then due, ſince a ſolemn time for that worſhip was appointed) another under the Law, another under the Goſpel; the Angels alſo worſhip God in Heaven, and fall down before his Throne; yet tho' they differ in rites, they agree in this neceſſary ingredient: All rites, tho' of a different ſhape, muſt be offered to him not as Carcaſſes, but animated with the affections of the Soul. Abels Sacrifice had not been ſo excellent in Gods eſteem, without thoſe gracious habits and affections working in his Soul *. Faith works by Love; his heart was on fire as well as his Sacrifice. Cain reſted upon his Preſent, perhaps thought he had obliged God; he depended upon the outward Ceremony, but ſought not for the inward Purity: It was an Offering brought to the Lord *; he had the right object but not the right manner, Gen. 4. 7. If thou doſt well, ſhalt thou not be accepted? And in the command afterwards to Abraham, Walk before me, and be thou perfect, was the direction in all our religious acts and walkings with God. A ſincere act of the Mind and Will, looking above and beyond all Symbols, extending the Soul to a pitch far above the Body, and ſeeing the day of Chriſt through the veil of the Ceremonies, was required by God: And tho' Moſes by Gods order had inſtituted a multitude of Carnal Ordinances, Sacrifices, Waſhings, Oblations of ſenſible things, and recommended to the People the diligent obſervation of thoſe Statutes by the allurements of Promiſes, and denouncing of Threatnings, as if there were nothing elſe to be regarded, and the true workings of Grace were to be buried under a heap of Ceremonies, yet ſometimes he doth point them to the inward worſhip, and by the Command of God, requires of them the Circumciſion of the Heart, Deut. 10. 16. the turning to God with all their heart, and all their Soul, Deut. 30. 10. whereby they might recollect, that it was the engagement of the Heart, and the worſhip of the Spirit, that was moſt agreeable to God; and that he took not any pleaſure in their obſervance of Ceremonies, without true Piety within, and the true Purity of their thoughts.

*Heb. 11. 12.

* Gen. 4. 5.

4. 'Tis therefore as much every Mans duty to worſhip God in Spirit, as it is their duty to worſhip him. Worſhip is ſo due to him as God, as that he that denies it, diſowns his Deity: And Spiritual worſhip is ſo due, that he that waves it denies his Spirituality. 'Tis a debt of Juſtice we owe to God to worſhip him, and it is as much a debt of Juſtice to worſhip him according to his Nature. Worſhip is nothing elſe but a rendring to God the honour that is due to him; and therefore the right poſture of our Spirits in it, is as much, or more due, than the material worſhip in the modes of his own preſcribing; that is grounded both upon his Nature, and upon his Command; this only upon his Command; that is perpetually due, whereas the Channel wherein outward Worſhip runs may be dried up, and the River diverted another way: Such a Worſhip wherein the mind thinks of God, feels a ſenſe of God, has the Spirit conſecrated to God, the Heart glowing with affections to God; 'tis elſe a mocking God with a feather. A rational Nature muſt worſhip God with that wherein the glory of God doth moſt ſparkle in him. God is moſt viſible in the frame

frame of the Soul, 'tis there his Image glitters: He hath given us a Jewel as well as a Caſe, and the Jewel as well as the Caſe we muſt return to him: The Spi-
*Eccl.12.7. rit is Gods gift, and muſt return to him *: It muſt return to him in every ſervice morally, as well as it muſt return to him at laſt phyſically. 'Tis not fit we ſhould ſerve our Maker only with that which is the Brute in us, and withhold from him that which doth conſtitute us reaſonable Creatures; we muſt give him our
*Rom.12.1 Bodies, but a living Sacrifice *. If the Spirit be abſent from God when the Body is before him, we preſent a dead Sacrifice; 'tis morally dead in the duty, tho' it be naturally alive in the poſture and action. 'Tis not an indifferent thing whether we ſhall Worſhip God or no, nor is it an indifferent thing whether we ſhall Worſhip him with our Spirits or no; as the excellency of Mans knowledge conſiſts in knowing things as they are in Truth, ſo the excellency of the Will in willing things as they are in goodneſs. As it is the excellency of Man to know God as God, ſo it is no leſs his excellency, as well as his duty, to honour God as God. As the obligation we have to the Power of God for our Being, binds us to a worſhip of him, ſo the obligation we have to his bounty for faſhioning us according to his own Image, binds us to an exerciſe of that part wherein his Image doth conſiſt. God hath made all things for himſelf, Prov.16.4. that is, for the evidence of his own goodneſs and wiſdom: We are therefore to render him a glory according to the excellency of his nature, diſcovered in the frame of our own. 'Tis as much our ſin not to glorifie God as God, as not to attempt the glorifying of him at all: 'Tis our ſin not to worſhip God as God, as well as to omit the teſtifying any reſpect at all to him. As the Divine Nature is the object of Worſhip, ſo the Divine Perfections are to be honoured in Worſhip: We do not honour God if we honour him not as he is; we honour him not as a Spirit, if we think him not worthy of the ardors and raviſhing admirations of our Spirits. If we think the Devotions of the Body are ſufficient for him, we contract him into the condition of our own Being; and not only deny him to be a Spiritual Nature, but daſh out all thoſe Perfections which he could not be poſſeſſed of, were he not a Spirit.

5. The Ceremonial Law was aboliſh'd to promote the Spirituality of Divine Worſhip. That ſervice was groſs, carnal, calculated for an infant and ſenſitive Church; it conſiſted in Rudiments, the Circumciſion of the Fleſh, the blood and ſmoke of Sacrifices, the ſteams of Incenſe, obſervation of Days, diſtinction of Meats, Corporeal Purifications; every Leaf of the Law is clogged with ſome Rite to be particularly obſerved by them: The Spirituality of Worſhip lay veil'd under a thick Cloud, that the People could not behold the glory of the Goſpel, which lay covered under thoſe ſhadows, 2 *Cor.*3.13. They could not ſtedfaſtly look to the end of that which is aboliſhed: They underſtood not the Glory and Spiritual intent of the Law, and therefore came ſhort of that Spiritual frame in the Worſhip of God, which was their duty. And therefore in oppoſition to this adminiſtration, the Worſhip of God under the Goſpel is called by our Saviour in the Text, a Worſhip in ſpirit; more ſpiritual for the matter, more ſpiritual for the motives, and more ſpiritual for the manner and frames of Worſhip.

(1.) This legal ſervice is called fleſh in Scripture, in oppoſition to the Goſpel, which is called ſpirit. The Ordinances of the Law, tho' of Divine Inſtitution, are dignified by the Apoſtle with no better a Title than *Heb.9.10. Carnal Ordinances *, and a Carnal Command *; but
*Heb.7.16. the Goſpel is called the Miniſtration of the Spirit, as being attended with a ſpecial and ſpiritual efficacy on
* 2Cor.3.8. the minds of Men *: And when the degenerate Galatians, after having taſted of the pure ſtreams of the Goſpel, turned about to drink of the thicker ſtreams of the Law; the Apoſtle tells them, that they begun in the Spirit, and would now be made perfect in the Fleſh *. They would leave the Righteouſneſs of Faith * Gal. 3.3. for a Juſtification by Works. The Moral Law which is in its own nature Spiritual *, in regard of the abuſe *Rom.7.14 of it, in expectation of Juſtification by the outward works of it, is called Fleſh; much more may the Ceremonial adminiſtration, which was never intended to run parallel with the Moral, nor had any foundation in nature as the other had.

That whole Oeconomy conſiſted in ſenſible and material things which only touched the fleſh: 'Tis called the Letter and the oldneſs of the Letter *; as *Rom. 7.6. Letters which are but empty ſounds of themſelves, but put together and formed into words, ſignifie ſomething to the mind of the Hearer or Reader: An old Letter, a thing of no efficacy upon the Spirit, but as a Law written upon Paper. The Goſpel hath an efficacious Spirit attending it, ſtrongly working upon the Mind and Will, and moulding the Soul into a Spiritual frame for God, according to the Doctrine of the Goſpel; the one is old and decays, the other is new and increaſeth daily.

And as the Law it ſelf is called fleſh, ſo the obſervers of it, and reſters in it, are called Iſrael after the fleſh *: And the Evangelical worſhipper is called a * 1 Cor.10. Few after the Spirit, Rom.2.29. They were Iſrael af- v.18. ter the fleſh as born of Jacob, not Iſrael after the Spirit as born of God; and therefore the Apoſtle calls them Iſrael and not Iſrael *. Iſrael after a carnal birth, * Rom.9.6. not Iſrael after a ſpiritual: Iſrael in the Circumciſion of the fleſh, not Iſrael by a regeneration in the heart.

(2.) The legal Ceremonies were not a fit means to bring the heart into a ſpiritual frame. They had a ſpiritual intent; the Rock and Manna prefigured the Salvation and ſpiritual nouriſhment by the Redeemer. 1 Cor.10. The Sacrifices were to point them to the Juſtice of v.3,4. God in the puniſhment of ſin, and the mercy of God in ſubſtituting them in their ſteads, as types of the Redeemer, and the Ranſom by his blood. The Circumciſion of the fleſh was to inſtruct them in the Circumciſion of the heart: They were fleſh in regard of their matter, weakneſs and cloudineſs: Spiritual in regard of their intent and ſignification: They did inſtruct, but not efficaciouſly work ſtrong ſpiritual affections in the Soul of the Worſhipper. They were weak and beggerly elements *; had neither wealth to inrich, nor ſtrength * Gal.4.9. to nouriſh the Soul: They could not perfect the Comers to them, or put them into a frame agreeable to the nature of God *, nor purge the Conſcience from thoſe *Heb.10.1. dead and dull diſpoſitions which were by nature in Heb.9.9. them *: Being carnal, they could not have an efficacy *Heb.9.15. to purifie the Conſcience of the offerer, and work ſpiritual effects: Had they continued without the exhibition of Chriſt, they could never have wrought any change in us, or purchaſed any favour for us *. At the * Burges best they were but ſhadows, and came unexpreſſibly vind. p.256. ſhort of the efficacy of that perſon and ſtate whoſe ſhadows they were. The ſhadow of a Man is too weak to perform what the Man himſelf can do, becauſe it wants the Life, Spirit and Activity of the ſubſtance: The whole Pomp and Scene was ſuited more to the ſenſitive than the intellectual nature; and like Pictures, pleaſed the fancy of Children, rather than improved their reaſon. The Jewiſh ſtate was a ſtate of Childhood *, and that adminiſtration a Pedagogy *. The Law 4Gal.5.2. was a School-maſter, fitted for their weak and childiſh *Gal.4.24. capacity, and could no more Spiritualize the heart, than the teachings in a Primer-School can enable the Mind, and make it fit for Affairs of State: And becauſe they could not better the Spirit, they were inſtituted only for a time, as elements delivered to an Infant Age, which naturally lives a life of ſenſe, rather than a life of reaſon. It was alſo a ſervile ſtate, which doth rather debaſe than elevate the Mind; rather Carnalize than Spiritualize the Heart: Beſides, 'tis a ſenſe of mercy, that both melts and elevates the heart into a Spiritual frame: * There is forgiveneſs with thee that thou mayeſt be feared: And they had in that ſtate but ſome glimmerings of mercy in the daily bloody intimations of Juſtice: There was no Sacrifice for ſome ſins, but a cutting off without the leaſt hints of pardon; and in the yearly remembrance of ſin, there was as much to ſhiver them with fear, as to poſſeſs them with hopes. And ſuch a ſtate which always held them under the Conſcience of ſin, could not produce a free Spirit, which was neceſſary for a worſhip of God according to his nature.

* Pſal.130. v.4.

(3.) In their uſe they rather hindred than furthered a Spiritual worſhip. In their own nature they did not tend to the obſtructing a Spiritual worſhip, for then they had been contrary to the nature of Religion, and the end of God who appointed them: Nor did God cover the Evangelical Doctrine under the clouds of the legal adminiſtration, to hinder the people of Iſrael from perceiving it; but becauſe they were not yet capable to bear the ſplendor of it, had it been clearly ſet before them. The ſhining of the face of Moſes was too dazling for their weak eyes, and therefore there was a neceſſity of a veil, not for the things themſelves, but the weakneſs of their eyes *. The carnal affections of that people ſunk down into the things themſelves, ſtuck in the outward pomp, and pierced not through the veil to the ſpiritual intent of them. And by the uſe of them, without rational conceptions, they beſotted their minds, and became ſenſeleſs of thoſe Spiritual motions required of them. Hence came all their expectations of a carnal Meſſiah; the veil of Ceremonies was ſo thick, and the film upon their eyes ſo condenſed, that they could not look through the veil to the Spirit of Chriſt. They beheld not the Heavenly Canaan for the beauty of the Earthly, nor minded the regeneration of the Spirit, while they reſted upon the purifications of the fleſh: The prevalency of ſenſe, and ſenſitive affections, diverted their minds from enquiring into the intent of them. Senſe and matter are often clogs to the mind, and ſenſible objects are the ſame often to ſpiritual motions. Our Souls are never more raiſed, than when they are abſtracted from the intanglements of them. A pompous worſhip made up of many ſenſible objects, weakens the ſpirituality of Religion: Thoſe that are moſt zealous for outward, are uſually moſt cold and indifferent in inward obſervances: And thoſe that overdo in carnal modes, uſually underdo in ſpiritual affections.

* 2Cor.3. v.13,14.

This was the Jewiſh ſtate *. The nature of the ceremonies being pompous and earthly by their ſhow and beauty, meeting with their weakneſs and childiſh affections, filled their eyes with an outward luſtre; allured their minds, and detained them from ſeeking things higher and more ſpiritual: The kernel of thoſe rites lay concealed in a thick ſhell, the ſpiritual glory was little ſeen, and the ſpiritual ſweetneſs little taſted. Unleſs the Scripture be diligently ſearched, it ſeems to transfer the worſhip of God from true faith and the ſpiritual motions of the heart, and ſtake it down to outward obſervances, and the opus operatum. Beſides, the voice of the Law did only declare Sacrifices, and invited the Worſhipper to them, with a promiſe of the atonement of ſin, turning away the wrath of God. It never plainly acquainted them, that thoſe things were types and ſhadows of ſomething future, that they were only outward purifications of the fleſh: It never plainly told them, at the time of appointing them, that thoſe Sacrifices could not aboliſh ſin, and reconcile them to God. Indeed we ſee more of them, ſince their death and diſſection, in that one Epiſtle to the Hebrews, than can be diſcern'd in the five Books of Moſes: Beſides, Man naturally affects a carnal Life, and therefore affects a carnal Worſhip: He deſigns the gratifying his ſenſe, and would have a Religion of the ſame nature. Moſt Men have no mind to buſie their Reaſon above the things of ſenſe, and are naturally unwilling to raiſe them up to thoſe things which are allied to the ſpiritual nature of God; and therefore the more ſpiritual any Ordinance is, the more averſe is the heart of Man to it. There is a ſimplicity of the Goſpel, from which our minds are eaſily corrupted by things that pleaſure the ſenſe, as Eve was by the curioſity of her eye, and the liquoriſhneſs of her Palate *. From this Principle hath ſprung all the Idolatry in the World. The Jews knew they had a God who had delivered them, but they would have a ſenſible God to go before them *: And the Papacy at this day, is a witneſs of the truth of this natural Corruption.

* Exod.32. v.1.

4. Upon theſe accounts therefore God never teſtified himſelf well pleaſed with that kind of Worſhip. He was not diſpleaſed with them as they were his own inſtitution, and ordained for the repreſenting (tho' in an obſcure manner) the glorious things of the Goſpel; nor was he offended with thoſe peoples obſervance of them: For ſince he had commanded them, it was their duty to perform them, and their ſin to neglect them: But he was diſpleaſed with them as they were practiſed by them, with Souls as morally carnal in the practices, as the ceremonies were materially carnal in their ſubſtance. It was not their diſobedience to obſerve them, but it was a diſobedience, and a contempt of the end of the inſtitution to reſt upon them; to be warm in them, and cold in morals: They fed upon the Bone, and neglected the Marrow; pleaſed themſelves with the Shell, and ſought not for the Kernel: They joyned not with them the internal Worſhip of God, Fear of him, with Faith in the promiſed Seed, which lay veil'd under thoſe coverings, Hoſ.6.6. I deſired Mercy, and not Sacrifice; and the knowledge of God, more than burnt Offerings: And therefore he ſeems ſometimes weary of his own inſtitutions, and calls them not his own, but their Sacrifices, their Feaſts, Iſa.1.11,14. They were his by appointment, theirs by abuſe: The Inſtitution was from his goodneſs and condeſcenſion, therefore his; the corruption of them was from the Vice of their Nature; therefore theirs. He often blamed them for their carnality in them; ſhew'd his diſlike of placing all their Religion in them, gives the Sacrificers upon that account, no better a Title, than that of the Princes of Sodom and Gomorrah *, and compares the Sacrifices themſelves to the cutting off a Dogs neck, Swines blood, and the murder of a Man *. And indeed, God never valued them, or expreſt any delight in them: He deſpiſed the Feaſts of the wicked, Amos 5.21. and had no eſteem for the material Offerings of the Godly, *Pſal.*50.13. Will I eat the fleſh of Bulls, or drink the blood of Goats? Which he ſpeaks to his Saints and People, before he comes to reprove the wicked; which he begins, v.16. But to the wicked, God ſaid, &c. So ſlightly he eſteemed them, that he ſeems to diſown them to be any part of his command, when he brought his People out of the Land of Egypt, Jer.7.21. I ſpake not to your Fathers, nor commanded them concerning burnt Offerings and Sacrifices. He did not value nor regard them, in compariſon of that inward frame which he had required by the moral Law; that being given before the Law of Ceremonies, obliged them in the firſt place, to an obſervance of thoſe Precepts. They ſeemed to be below the Nature of God, and could not of themſelves pleaſe him. None could in reaſon perſwade themſelves, that the death of a Beaſt was a proportionable Offering for the ſin of a Man, or ever was intended for the expiation of Tranſgreſſion. In the ſame rank are all our bodily ſervices under the Goſpel: A loud voice without Spirit, bended bulruſhes without inward affections, are no more delightful to God, than the Sacrifices of Animals: 'Tis but a change of one Brute for another of a higher ſpecies; a meer Brute, for that part of Man which hath an agreement with Brutes: Such a Service is a meer Animal Service, and not Spiritual.

* Iſa.1.10.

5. And therefore God never intended that ſort of worſhip to be durable, and had often mentioned the change of it for one more Spiritual. It was not good or evil in it ſelf; whatſoever goodneſs it had, was ſolely deriv'd to it by Inſtitution, and therefore it was mutable. It had no conformity with the Spiritual Nature of God who was to be worſhipped; nor with the Rational Nature of Man, who was to worſhip, and therefore he often ſpeaks of taking away the New Moons, and Feaſts, and Sacrifices, and all the ceremonial Worſhip, as things he took no pleaſure in, to have a Worſhip more ſuited to his excellent Nature: But he never ſpeaks of removing the Goſpel Adminiſtration, and the worſhip preſcribed there, as being more agreeable to the Nature and Perfections of God, and diſplaying them more Illuſtriouſly to the World.

The Apoſtle tells us, it was to be diſannull'd because of its weakneſs *: A determinate time was fixed for its duration, till the accompliſhment of the truth figured under that Pedagogy *. Some of the modes of that worſhip being only typical, muſt naturally expire and be inſignificant in their uſe, upon the finiſhing of that by the Redeemer, which they did prefigure: And other patts of it, tho' God ſuffered them ſo long because of the weakneſs of the Worſhipper; yet becauſe it became not God to be always worſhipped in that manner, he would reject them, and introduce another more ſpiritual and elevated. Incenſe and a pure Offering ſhould be offered every where unto his Name *.

*Heb.7.18. * Gal.4.2. *Mal.1.11.

* He often told them he would make a New Covenant by the Meſſiah, and the Old ſhould be rejected; that the former things ſhould not be remembred, and the things of old no more conſidered, when he ſhould do a new thing in the Earth *: Even the Ark of the Covenant, the Symbol of his Preſence, and the Glory of the Lord, in that Nation ſhould not any more be remembered and viſited *; that the Temple and Sacrifices ſhould be rejected, and others eſtabliſhed; that the Order of the Aaronical Prieſthood ſhould be aboliſh'd, and that of Melchiſedeck ſet up in the ſtead of it in the Perſon of the Meſſiah to endure for ever *: That Jeruſalem ſhould be changed, a new Heaven and Earth created, a Worſhip more conformable to Heaven, more advantageous to Earth. God had proceeded in the removal of ſome part of it, before the time of taking down the whole furniture of this Houſe: The Pot of Manna was loſt, Urim and Thummim ceaſed, the glory of the Temple was diminiſh'd, and the ignorant People wept at the ſight of the one, without raiſing their Faith and Hope in the conſideration of the other, which was promiſed to be filled with a Spiritual Glory. And as ſoon as ever the Goſpel was ſpread in the World, God thundred out his Judgments upon that place in which he had fixed all thoſe legal obſervances; ſo that the Jews, in the Letter and Fleſh, could never practiſe the main part of their Worſhip, ſince they were expelled from that place where it was only to be celebrated. 'Tis one thouſand ſix hundred years ſince they have been deprived of their Altar, which was the foundation of all the Levitical worſhip, and have wandred in the World without a Sacrifice, a Prince or Prieſt, an Ephod or Teraphim *.

* Pſal. Pen. 142. * Iſa. 43. v. 18, 19. * Jer. 3. 16. * Pſal. 110. * Hoſ. 3. 4.

And God fully put an end to it in the Command he gave to the Apoſtles, and in them to us, in the preſence of Moſes and Elias, to hear his Son only, Matth. 17. 5. Behold a voice out of the Cloud, which ſaid, this is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed, hear him. And at the death of our Saviour, teſtified it to that whole Nation and the World, by the rending in twain the Veil of the Temple.

The whole frame of that Service, which was Carnal, and by reaſon of the corruption of Man, weakned, is nulled; and a ſpiritual worſhip is made known to the World, that we might now ſerve God in a more Spiritual manner, and with more Spiritual frames.

6 Propoſition. The Service and Worſhip the Goſpel ſettles, is ſpiritual, and the performance of it more ſpiritual. Spirituality is the Genius of the Goſpel, as Carnality was of the Law; the Goſpel is therefore called Spirit. We are abſtracted from the imployments of ſenſe, and brought nearer to a heavenly State. The Jews had Angels Bread poured upon them; we have Angels Service preſcribed to us, the Praiſes of God, Communion with God in Spirit, through his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and ſtronger foundations for ſpiritual affections. 'Tis called a reaſonable Service *, 'tis ſuited to a Rational Nature, tho' it finds no friendſhip from the corruption of Reaſon. It preſcribes a Service fit for the reaſonable Faculties of the Soul, and advanceth them while it employs them. The word reaſonable may be tranſlated, word Service *, as well as reaſonable Service; an Evangelical Service in oppoſition to a Law Service. All Evangelical Service is reaſonable, and all truly reaſonable Service is Evangelical.

*Rom. 12. 1 * V. Hammond in loc.

The matter of the worſhip is Spiritual; it conſiſts in love of God, faith in God, recourſe to his goodneſs, Meditation on him, and Communion with him. It lays aſide the Ceremonial, Spiritualizeth the Moral: The Commands that concerned our Duty to God, as well as thoſe that concerned our Duty to our Neighbour, were reduced by Chriſt to the Spiritual intention.

The Motives are Spiritual; 'tis a ſtate of more grace as well as of more truth *, ſupported by ſpiritual promiſes, beaming out in ſpiritual priviledges: Heaven comes down in it to Earth, to ſpiritualize Earth for Heaven.

The manner of worſhip is more Spiritual; higher flights of the Soul, ſtronger ardours of affections, ſincerer aims at his glory; miſts are removed from our minds, cloggs from the Soul, more of love than fear; Faith in Chriſt kindles the affections and works by them.

The aſſiſtances to Spiritual worſhip are greater. The Spirit doth not drop, but is plentifully poured out. It doth not light ſometimes upon, but dwells in the heart. Chriſt ſuited the Goſpel to a Spiritual heart, and the Spirit changeth a Carnal heart to make it fit for a Spiritual Goſpel. He blows upon the Garden, and cauſes the Spices to flow forth: And often makes the Soul in worſhip like the Chariots of Aminadab, in a quick and nimble motion. Our Bleſſed Lord and Saviour, by his death, diſcovered to us the nature of God; and after his Aſcenſion, ſent his Spirit to fit us for the worſhip of God, and converſe with him.

One Spiritual Evangelical believing breath, is more delightful to God than Millions of Altars made up of the richeſt Pearls, and ſmoaking with the coſtlieſt Oblations, becauſe it is Spiritual: And a mite of Spirit is of more worth than the greateſt weight of Fleſh. One Holy Angel is more excellent than a whole World of meer Bodies.

7 Propoſition. Yet the Worſhip of God with our Bodies is not to be rejected upon the account that God requires a Spiritual Worſhip. Tho' we muſt perform the weightier Duties of the Law, yet we are not to omit, and leave undone the lighter Precepts. Since both the Magnalia and minutula legis, the greater and the leſſer Duties of the Law, have the ſtamp of Divine Authority upon them.

As God under the Ceremonial Law did not command the worſhip of the Body, and the Obſervation of of outward Rites without the Engagement of the Spirit; ſo neither doth he command that of the Spirit, without the peculiar attendance of the Body.

The Schwelkfendians denied bodily Worſhip. And the indecent Poſtures of many in publick Attendance, intimate no great care either of compoſing their Bodies or Spirits. A morally diſcompoſed Body intimates a tainted Heart.

Our Bodies as well as our Spirits are to be preſen-
*Ro. 12. 1. ted to God *. Our Bodies in lieu of the Sacrifices of Beaſts, as in the Judaical Inſtitutions; Body for the whole Man; a living Sacrifice, not to be ſlain, as the Beaſts were, but living a new Life, in a holy Poſture, with crucified Affections: This is the inference the Apoſtle makes of the Priviledges of Juſtification, Adoption, Co-heirſhip with Chriſt, which he had before diſcourſed of; Priviledges conferred upon the Perſon and not upon a part of Man.

1. Bodily Worſhip is due to God. He hath a right to an Adoration by our Bodies as they are his by Creation; his right is not diminiſht but increaſed by the bleſſing of Redemption, 1 Cor. 6. 20. For you are bought with a Price, therefore glorifie God in your Bodies and your Spirits, which are Gods. The Body as well as the Spirit is redeemed, ſince our Saviour ſuffered Crucifixion in his Body, as well as Agonies in his Soul. Body is not taken here for the whole Man, as it may be in Rom. 12. But for the material part of our Nature, it being diſtinguiſht from the Spirit: If we are to render to God an Obedience with our Bodies, we are to render him ſuch Acts of Worſhip with our Bodies, as they are capable of. As God is the Father of Spirits, ſo he is the God of all Fleſh: Therefore the fleſh he hath framed of the Earth, as well as the Noble Portion he hath breathed into us, cannot be denyed him without a palpable Injuſtice: The Service of the Body we muſt not deny to God, unleſs we will deny him to be the Author of it, and the exerciſe of his providential care about it. The mercies of God are renewed every day upon our Bodies as well as our Souls, and therefore they ought to expreſs a fealty to God for his boun-
*Sherman's Greek in the Temple. p. 61, 62. ty every day; [* both are from God, both ſhould be for God. Man conſiſts of Body and Soul, the Service of Man is the Service of both. The Body is to be ſanctified as well as the Soul, and therefore to be offered to God as well as the Soul. Both are to be glorified, both are to glorifie: As our Saviours Divinity was manifeſted in his Body, ſo ſhould our ſpirituality in ours. To give God the Service of the Body and not of the Soul, is Hypocriſie; to give God the Service of the Spirit, and not of the Body, is ſacrilege; to give him neither, Atheiſm.] If the only part of Man that is viſible were exempted from the Service of God, there could be no viſible Teſtimonies of Piety given upon any occaſion: Since not a Moiety of Man, but the whole is God's Creature, he ought to pay a homage with the whole, and not only with a moiety of himſelf.

2. Worſhip in Socities is due to God, but this cannot be without ſome bodily Expreſſions. The Law of Nature doth as much direct Men to combine together in publick Societies for the acknowledment of God, as in Civil Communities for ſelf-preſervation and order. And the notice of a Society for Religion is more antient than the mention of Civil Aſſociations for Politick Government, Gen. 4. 26. Then began Men to call upon the Name of the Lord, viz. in the time of Seth. No queſtion but Adam had worſhipped God before as well as Abel, and a Family-Religion had been preſerved; but as Mankind increaſed in diſtinct

Families, they knit together in Companies to ſolemnize the Worſhip of God. * Hence, as ſome think, thoſe that incorporated together for ſuch ends, were called the Sons of God: Sons by profeſſion, tho' not Sons by Adoption: As thoſe of Corinth were Saints by profeſſion, tho' in ſuch a corrupted Church they could not be all ſo by Regeneration; yet Saints, as being of a Chriſtian Society, and calling upon the Name of Chriſt, i. e. worſhipping God in Chriſt, tho' they might not be all Saints in Spirit and Practice. So Cain and Abel met together to worſhip, Gen. 4. 3. At the end of the days, at a ſet time. God ſettled a publick Worſhip among the Jews, inſtituted Synagogues for their Convening together, whence call'd the Synagogues of God *. * Pſ. 47. 8. The Sabbath was inſtituted to acknowledge God a common Benefactor. Publick Worſhip keeps up the memorials of God in a World prone to Atheiſm, and a ſenſe of God in a heart prone to Forgetfulneſs. The Angels ſung in Company, not ſingly at the Birth of Chriſt *, and praiſed God not only with a ſimple *Luk. 2. 13. elevation of their Spiritual Nature, but audibly by forming a voice in the Air: Affections are more lively, Spirits more raiſed in Publick than Private: God will credit his own Ordinance. Fire increaſeth by laying together many Coals on one Place; ſo is Devotion inflamed by the union of many Hearts, and by a joynt Preſence: Nor can the approach of the laſt day of Judgment, or particular Judgments upon a Nation give a Writ of eaſe from ſuch Aſſemblies, Heb. 10. 25. Not forſaking the aſſembling our ſelves together, but ſo much the more as you ſee the day approaching: Whether it be underſtood of the day of Judgment, or the day of the Jewiſh Deſtruction and the Chriſtian Perſecution, the Apoſtle uſes it as an Argument to quicken them to the obſervance, not to encourage them to a neglect. Since therefore natural light informs us, and Divine inſtitution commands us publickly to acknowledge our ſelves the Servants of God, it implies the Service of the Body: Such acknowledgments cannot be without viſible Teſtimonies, and outward Exerciſes of Devotion, as well as inward Affections. This promotes God's Honour, checks others Prophaneneſs, allures Men to the ſame Expreſſions of Duty. And tho' there may be Hypocriſie, and an outward Garb without an inward frame; yet better a moiety of Worſhip, than none at all; better acknowledge God's Right in one than diſown it in both.

3. Jeſus Chriſt the moſt Spiritual Worſhipper, worſhip'd God with his Body: He prayed orally, and kneeled, Father, if it be thy Will, &c *. He bleſſed with his *Luke 22. mouth, Father, I thank thee *. He lifted up his Eyes, v. 41, 42. as well as elevated his Spirit, when he praiſed his *Matt. 11. Holy Men of God have employed the Body in ſignificant expreſſions of Worſhip: Abraham in falling on his face, Paul in kneeling, employing their Tongues, lifting up their Hands. Tho' Jacob was bed-rid, yet he would not worſhip God without ſome devout expreſſions of Reverence; 'tis in one place leaning upon his Staff *, in another bowing himſelf upon his Beds- * Heb. 11. head *: The reaſon of the diverſity is in the Hebrew v. 21. word, which without vowels may be read Mittah a * Gen. 47. Indeed in Angels and ſeparated Souls a Worſhip is performed purely by the Spirit; but whiles the Soul is in conjunction with the Body, it can hardly perform a ſerious act of worſhip without ſome Tincture upon the outward Man, and reverential compoſure of the Body: Fire cann't be in the cloaths, but it will be felt by the Members; nor flames be pent up in the Soul without burſting out in the Body: The heart can no more reſtrain it ſelf from breaking out, than Joſeph could incloſe his affections, without ex- * Gen. 45. preſſing them in tears to his Brethren *. We believe, *2 Cor. 4. and therefore ſpeak *. v. 1, 2. v. 13.

To

To conclude; God hath appointed ſome parts of Worſhip which cannot be performed without the body, as Sacraments; we have need of them, becauſe we are not wholly ſpiritual and incorporeal Creatures.

The Religion, which conſiſts in externals only, is not for an intellectual nature: A worſhip purely intellectual, is too ſublime for a nature allied to ſenſe and depending much upon it: The Chriſtian mode of worſhip is proportioned to both; it makes the ſenſe to aſſiſt the mind, and elevates the ſpirit above the ſenſe: Bodily worſhip helps the ſpiritual: The members of the body reflect back upon the heart, the voice bars diſtractions, the tongue ſets the heart on fire in good as well as in evil. 'Tis as much againſt the light of nature to ſerve God without external ſignifications, as to ſerve him only with them without the intention of the mind. As the inviſible God declares himſelf to men by viſible works and ſigns, ſo ſhould we declare our inviſible frames by viſible expreſſions: God hath given us a ſoul and body in conjunction, and we are to ſerve him in the ſame manner he hath framed us.

The ſecond thing I am to ſhew, is, what Spiritual Worſhip is. In general, the whole Spirit is to be employed: The Name of God is not ſanctified but by the engagement of our Souls.

Worſhip is an act of the underſtanding, applying it ſelf to the knowledge of the excellency of God, and actual thoughts of his Majeſty, recognizing him as the ſupreme Lord and Governour of the world, which is natural knowledge; beholding the glory of his Attributes in the Redeemer, which is Evangelical knowledge: This is the ſole act of the ſpirit of Man. The ſame reaſon is for all our worſhip as for our thankſgiving: This muſt be done with underſtanding, Pſal. 47.7. Sing ye praiſe with underſtanding, with a knowledge and ſenſe of his greatneſs, goodneſs and wiſdom. 'Tis alſo an act of the Will, whereby the Soul adores and reverenceth his Majeſty, is raviſht with his amiableneſs, embraceth his goodneſs, enters it ſelf into an intimate Communion with this moſt lovely object, and pitcheth all his affections upon him.

We muſt worſhip God underſtandingly; 'tis not elſe a reaſonable ſervice: The Nature of God, and the Law of God abhor a blind Offering; we muſt worſhip him heartily, elſe we offer him a dead Sacrifice: A reaſonable ſervice is that wherein the mind doth truly act ſomething with God. All ſpiritual acts muſt be acts of reaſon, otherwiſe they are not human acts, becauſe they want that principle which is conſtitutive of Man, and doth difference him from other Creatures: Acts done only by ſenſe are the acts of a Brute; acts done by reaſon are the acts of a Man: That which is only an act of ſenſe, cannot be an act of Religion: The ſenſe without the conduct of reaſon is not the ſubject of Religious acts, for then Beaſts were capable of Religion as well as Men: There cannot be Religion where there is not reaſon; and there cannot be the exerciſe of Religion, where there is not an exerciſe of the rational faculties. Nothing can be a Chriſtian act, that is not a human act: Beſides, all worſhip muſt be for ſome end; the worſhip of God muſt be for God; 'tis by the exerciſe of our rational faculties, that we only can intend an end: An ignorant and carnal worſhip is a brutiſh worſhip.

Particularly,

1. Spiritual Worſhip is a Worſhip from a ſpiritual Nature. Not only Phyſically ſpiritual, ſo our Souls are in their frame; but morally ſpiritual, by a renewing principle. The heart muſt be firſt caſt into the mould of the Goſpel, before it can perform a worſhip required by the Goſpel. Adam living in Paradice, might perform a ſpiritual worſhip; but Adam fallen from his rectitude, could not: We being Heirs of his Nature, as Heirs of his Impotence: Reſtoration to a ſpiritual Life, muſt precede any act of ſpiritual worſhip. As no work can be good, ſo no worſhip can be ſpiritual, till we are created in Chriſt*. Chriſt is our Life *. As no natural action can be performed without life in the root or heart, ſo no ſpiritual act without Chriſt in the Soul: Our being in Chriſt, is as neceſſary to every ſpiritual act, as the union of our Soul with our Body is neceſſary to natural action. Nothing can exceed the limits of its nature; for then it ſhould exceed it ſelf in acting, and do that which it hath no principle to do. A Beaſt cannot act like a Man, without partaking of the nature of a Man; nor a Man act like an Angel, without partaking of the Angelical nature: How can we perform ſpiritual acts, without a ſpiritual principle. Whatſoever worſhip proceeds from the corrupted nature, cannot deſerve the title of ſpiritual worſhip, becauſe it ſprings not from a ſpiritual habit. If thoſe that are evil cannot ſpeak good things, thoſe that are carnal cannot offer a ſpiritual ſervice. Poyſon is the fruit of a Vipers nature, Matt. 12.34. Oh, Generation of Vipers, how can you being evil ſpeak good things? For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaks. As the root is, ſo is the fruit. If the Soul be habitually carnal, the worſhip cannot be actually ſpiritual: There may be an intention of ſpirit, but there is no ſpiritual principle as a root of that intention. A heart may be ſenſibly united with a duty, when it is not ſpiritually united with Chriſt in it. Carnal motives, and carnal ends may fix the mind in an act of worſhip, as the ſenſe of ſome preſſing affliction may enlarge a mans mind in Prayer. Whatſoever is agreeable to the Nature of God, muſt have a ſtamp of Chriſt upon it; a ſtamp of his grace in performance, as well as of his Mediation in the acceptance. The Apoſtle lived not, but Chriſt lived in him *; the Soul worſhips not, but Chriſt in him: Not that Chriſt performs the act of worſhip, but enables us ſpiritually to worſhip, after he enables us ſpiritually to live. As God counts not any Soul living but in Chriſt, ſo he counts not any a ſpiritual worſhipper but in Chriſt. The goodneſs and farneſs of the fruit comes from the fatneſs of the Olive wherein we are engrafted: We muſt find healing in Chriſts wings, before God can find ſpirituality in our ſervices. All worſhip iſſuing from a dead nature, is but a dead ſervice: A living action cannot be performed, without being knit to a living root.

* Eph. 2.10
* Col. 3.4.
* Gal. 2.20.

2. Spiritual Worſhip is done by the influence, and with the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God. A heart may be ſpiritual, when a particular act of worſhip may not be ſpiritual. The Spirit may dwell in the heart, when he may ſuſpend his influence on the act. Our worſhip is then ſpiritual, when the fire that kindles our affections comes from Heaven, as that fire upon the Altar wherewith the Sacrifices were conſumed. God taſts a ſweetneſs in no ſervice, but as it is dreſt up by the hand of the Mediator, and hath the Air of his own Spirit in it: They are but natural acts, without a ſupernatural aſſiſtance: Without an actual influence, we cannot act from ſpiritual motives, nor for ſpiritual ends, nor in a ſpiritual manner. We cannot mortifie a luſt without the Spirit *, nor quicken a ſervice without the Spirit. Whatſoever corruption is killed, is ſlain by his Power; whatſoever duty is ſpiritualized, is refined by his Breath. He quickens our dead bodies in our Reſurrection *; he renews our dead Souls in our Regeneratioa; he quickens our carnal ſervices in our adorations: The choiceſt acts of worſhip are but infirmities, without his auxiliary help *. We are Loggs, unable to move our ſelves, till he raiſe our faculties to a pitch agreeable to God; puts his hand to the duty, and lifts that up, and us with it. Never any great act was performed by the Apoſtles to God, or for God, but they are ſaid to be filled with the

the Holy Ghoſt. Chriſt could not have been conceived immaculate as that holy thing, without the Spirits overſhadowing the Virgin; nor any ſpiritual act conceived in our heart, without the ſpirits moving upon us, to bring forth a living Religion from us. The acts of Worſhip are ſaid to be in the Spirit, ſupplication in the *Eph.6.18. Spirit *; not only with the ſtrength and affection of our own Spirits, but with the mighty operation of the * Jude 20. Holy Ghoſt, if Jude may be the Interpreter *. The Holy Ghoſt exciting us, impelling us, and firing our Souls by his divine flame; raiſing up the affections, and making the Soul cry, with a holy importunity, Abba, Father. To render our Worſhip ſpiritual, we ſhould, before every ingagement in it, implore the actual preſence of the Spirit, without which we are not able to ſend forth one ſpiritual breath or groan; but be Wind-bound, like a Ship without a Gale, and our Worſhip be no better than carnal. How doth the Spouſe ſolicit the Spirit with an awake oh North-wind, and come Cant.4.16. thou South-wind, &c.

3. Spiritual Worſhip is done with Sincerity: When the heart ſtands right to God, and the Soul performs what it pretends to perform: When we ſerve God with our Spirits, as the Apoſtle, Rom. 1. 9. God is my Witneſs, whom I ſerve with my Spirit in the Goſpel of his Son. This is not meant of the Holy Ghoſt; for the Apoſtle would never have called the Spirit of God, his own Spirit; but with my Spirit, that is a ſincere frame of heart. A Carnal worſhip, whether under the Law or Goſpel, is when we are buſied about external Rites, without an inward compliance of Soul. *Pro.23.26 God demands the heart; * My Son give me thy heart, not give me thy tongue, or thy lips, or thy hands; theſe may be given without the heart, but the heart can never be beſtowed without theſe as its attendants. A heap of Services can be no more welcome to God, without our Spirits, than all Jacobs Sons could be to Joſeph, without the Benjamin he deſired to ſee. God is not taken with the Cabinet, but the Jewel: He firſt reſpected Abels Faith and Sincerity, and then his Sacrifice; he diſreſpected Cains Infidelity and Hypo- Moulin. Semons De cad.4.Ser.4 p.80. criſie, and then his Offering. [For this cauſe he rejected the Offerings of the Jews, the Prayers of the Phariſees, and the Alms of Ananias and Saphira, becauſe their hearts and their duties were at a diſtance from one another. In all Spiritual Sacrifices, our Spirits are Gods Portion. Under the Law, the Reins were to be conſumed by the Fire on the Altar, becauſe the ſecret intentions of the heart were ſignified by them, Pſal. 7. 9. The Lord trieth the Heart and the Reins. It was an ill Omen among the Heathen, if a Victim wanted a Heart. The Widows Mites with her heart in them, were more eſteemed than the richer Offerings without it.] Not the quantity of Service, but the will in it, is of account with this infinite Spirit. All that was to be brought for the framing of the Tabernacle, was to be offered willingly with the *Exod.25. v. 7. heart *. The more of Will, the more of Spirituality and Acceptableneſs to God, *Pſal.*119.108. Accept the Free-will Offering of my lips. Sincerity is the Salt which ſeaſons every Sacrifice. The Heart is moſt like to the object of Worſhip: The Heart in the Body is the ſpring of all vital Actions; and a ſpiritual Soul is the ſpring of all ſpiritual Actions. How can we imagine God can delight in the meer Service of the Body, any more than we can delight in converſe with a Carcaſs?

Without the Heart 'tis no Worſhip; 'tis a Stage-Play; an Acting a Part without being that Perſon really which is Acted by us: A Hypocrite in the notion of the Word, is a Stage-Player. We may as well ſay a Man may believe with his Body, as worſhip God only with his Body. Faith is a great ingredient in Worſhip, and it is with the heart Man believes unto * Rom. 10. v. 10. Righteouſneſs *. We may be truly ſaid to worſhip God, tho' we want perfection; but we cannot be ſaid to worſhip him, if we want ſincerity. A Statue upon a Tomb, with eyes and hands lifted up, offers as good and true a Service; it wants only a voice, the geſtures and poſtures are the ſame; nay, the Service is better, 'tis not a mockery, it repreſents all that it can be framed to: But to worſhip without our Spirits, is a preſenting God with a Picture, an Eccho, Voice, and nothing elſe; a Complement, a meer Lye, a compaſſing him about with Lyes *. Without the heart, the tongue * Hoſ. 11. is a Lyar, and the greateſt Zeal diſſembling with him. v. 12. To preſent the Spirit, is to preſent that which can never naturally die; to preſent him only the Body, is to preſent him that which is every day crumbling to duſt, and will at laſt lie rotting in the Grave: To offer him a few Rags eaſily torn; a skin for a Sacrifice, a thing unworthy the Majeſty of God; a fixed eye and elevated hands, with a ſleepy Heart and earthly Soul, are pitiful things for an ever bleſſed and glorious Spirit: Nay, it is ſo far from being Spiritual, that it is Blaſphemy: To pretend to be a Jew outwardly, without being ſo inwardly, is in the Judgment of Chriſt to Blaſpheme *. And is not the ſame Title *Revel.2.9. to be given with as much reaſon to thoſe that pretend a worſhip and perform none? Such a one is not a Spiritual Worſhipper, but a blaſpheming Devil in Samuel's Mantle.

4. Spiritual Worſhip is performed with an unitedneſs of heart. The heart is not only now and then with God, but united to fear or worſhip his name *. A ſpi- * Pſ.86.11. ritual Duty muſt have the engagement of the ſpirit, and the thoughts tied up to the ſpiritual Object: The union of all the Parts of the heart together with the Body, is the life of the Body; and the Moral union of our hearts, is the life of any Duty. A heart quickly flitting from God, makes not God his Treaſure; he ſlights the worſhip, and therein affronts the Object of Worſhip. All our thoughts ought to be raviſhed with God, bound up in him as in a bundle of life: But when we ſtart from him to gaze after every feather, and run after every bubble, we diſown a full and affecting excellency, and a ſatisfying ſweetneſs in him. When our thoughts run from God, 'tis a Teſtimony we have no ſpiritual affection to God: Affection would ſtake down the thoughts to the Object affected: 'Tis but a Mouth-love, as the Prophet phraſeth it *: But their hearts go after their Covetouſneſs: Co- * Ezek.33. vetous Objects Pipe, and the Heart Danceth after v.31. them; and thoughts of God are ſhifted off, to receive a multitude of other imaginations: The Heart and the Service ſtayed a while together, and then took leave of one another. The Pſalmiſt * ſtill found his * Pſ. 39.18. heart with God when he awak'd; ſtill with God in ſpiritual affections, and fixed meditations. A carnal heart is ſeldom with God, either in or out of worſhip: If God ſhould knock at the heart in any Duty, it would be found not at home, but ſtraying abroad. Our worſhip is ſpiritual, when the door of the heart is ſhut againſt all Intruders, as our Saviour commands in Cloſet Duties *. It was not his meaning, to command the * Mat.6.6. ſhutting the Cloſet-door, and leave the Heart-door open for every thought that would be apt to haunt us. Worldly affections are to be laid aſide, if we would have our Worſhip ſpiritual. This was meant by the Jewiſh cuſtom of wiping or waſhing off the duſt of their feet, before their entrance into the Temple; and of not bringing money in their girdles. To be ſpiritual in Worſhip, is to have our Souls gathered and bound up wholly in themſelves, and offered to God. Our Loyns muſt be girt, as the faſhion was in the Eaſtern Countries, where they wore long Garments, that they might not waver with the Wind, and be blown between their leggs, to obſtruct them in their Travel; our Faculties muſt not hang looſe about us. He is a carnal Worſhipper, that gives God but a piece of his heart, as well as he he that denies him the whole of it; that hath ſome thoughts pitch'd upon God in Worſhip, and as many willingly upon the World, David ſought God, not with a moiety of his heart, but with his whole heart, with his intire frame *. He brought not half his heart, and left the other in the poſſeſſion of another Maſter. It was a good Leſſon Pythagoras gave his Scholars *, Not to make the obſervance of God a Work by the by. If thoſe Gueſts be invited, or entertained kindly, or if they come unexpected, the ſpirituality of that Worſhip is loſt; the Soul kicks down what is wrought before. But if they be Brow-beaten by us, and our grief, rather than our pleaſure, they divert our ſpiritual intention from the work in hand, but hinder not Gods acceptance of it as ſpiritual, becauſe they are not the acts of our Will, but offences to our Wills.

5. Spiritual Worſhip is performed with a ſpiritual activity and ſenſibleneſs of God. With an active Underſtanding to meditate on his excellency, and an active Will to embrace him when he drops upon the Soul. If we underſtand the amiableneſs of God, our affections will be raviſh'd; if we underſtand the immenſity of his goodneſs, our ſpirits will be enlarged. We are to act with the higheſt intention, ſuitable to the greatneſs of that God with whom we have to do, *Pſal.*150.2. Praiſe him according to his excellent greatneſs: Not that we can Worſhip him equally, but in ſome proportion, the frame of the heart is to be ſuited to the excellency of the Object: Our ſpiritual ſtrength is to be put out to the utmoſt, as Creatures that act naturally do: The Sun ſhines, and the Fire burns to the utmoſt of their natural Power. This is ſo neceſſary, that David, a ſpiritual Worſhipper, prays for it before he ſets upon acts of adoration, *Pſal.*80.18. Quicken us, that we may call upon thy Name. As he was loth to have a drowzy faculty, he was loth to have a drowzy inſtrument, and would willingly have them as lively as himſelf, *Pſal.*57.8. Awake up my glory; awake Pſaltery and Harp; I my ſelf will awake early. How would this Divine Soul ſcrew himſelf up to God, and be turned into nothing but a holy flame? Our Souls muſt be boiling hot when we ſerve the Lord *. The heart doth no leſs burn when it ſpiritually comes to God, than when God doth ſpiritually approach to it *. A Nabals heart, one as cold as a ſtone, cannot offer up a ſpiritual ſervice.

*Ro.12.11.

* Luke 24. v. 32.

Whatſoever is enjoyned us as our Duty, ought to be performed with the greateſt intenſeneſs of our Spirit. As it is our Duty to pray, ſo it is our Duty to pray with the moſt fervent importunity. 'Tis our Duty to love God, but with the pureſt and moſt ſublime affections: Every command of God requires the whole ſtrength of the Creature to be imployed in it. That love to God, wherein all our Duty to God is ſummed up, is to be with all our ſtrength, with all our might, &c.

* Lady Falklands Life. p. 130. * Tho' in the Covenant of Grace he hath mitigated the ſeverity of the Law, and requires not from us ſuch an elevation of our Affections as was poſſible in the ſtate of Innocence, yet God requires of us the utmoſt moral Induſtry to raiſe our Affections to a pitch, at leaſt equal to what they are in other things: What ſtrength of Affection we naturally have, ought to be as much and more excited in acts of Worſhip than upon other occaſions, and our ordinary Works. As there was an inactivity of Soul in Worſhip and a quickneſs to ſin, when ſin had the dominion; ſo when the Soul is Spiritualized, the temper is changed; there is an inactivity to ſin and an ardor in Duty: The more the Soul is dead to ſin, the more it is alive to God *, and the more lively too in all that concerns God and his Honour. For Grace being a new ſtrength added to our natural, determines the affections to new Objects, and excites them to a greater vigor. And as the hatred of ſin is more ſharp, the love to every thing that deſtroys the dominion of it, is more ſtrong. And acts of Worſhip may be reckoned as the chiefeſt Batteries againſt the power of this inbred Enemy. When the Spirit is in the Soul, like the Rivers of Waters flowing out of the Belly, the Soul hath the activity of a River, and makes haſte to be ſwallow'd up in God, as the Streams of the River in the Sea. Chriſt makes his People Kings and Prieſts to God *; First Kings, then Prieſts: Gives firſt a Royal temper of Heart, that they may offer ſpiritual Sacrifices as Prieſts: Kings and Prieſts to God acting with a magnificent Spirit in all their Motions to him: We cann't be Spiritual Prieſts, till we be Spiritual Kings. The Spirit appeared in the likeneſs of fire, and where he reſides, communicates, like fire, purity and activity.

* Rev.1.6.

Dulneſs is againſt the Light of Nature. I do not remember that the Heathen ever offer'd a Snail to any of their falſe Deities, nor an Aſs, but to Priapus their unclean Idol; but the Perſians ſacrificed to the Sun a Horſe, a ſwift and generous Creature. God provided againſt thoſe in the Law, commanding an Aſſes Firſtling, the off-ſpring of a ſluggiſh Creature, to be Redeemed, or his neck broke; but by no means to be offered to him *. God is a Spirit infinitely active, and therefore frozen and benummed Frames are unſuitable to him: He rides upon a Cherub and flies, he comes upon the Wings of the Wind, he rides upon a ſwift Cloud *; and therefore demands of us not a dull Reaſon, but an active Spirit: God is a living God, therefore muſt have a lively Service. Chriſt is life, and ſloathful Adorations are not fit to be offered up in the name of Life. The Worſhip of God is called Wreſtling in Scripture, and Paul was a Striver in the Service of his Maſter *, in an Agony *. Angels worſhip God ſpiritually with their Wings on; and when God commands them to worſhip Chriſt, the next Scripture quoted is, that he makes them flames of fire *.

If it be thus, how may we charge our ſelves? What Paul ſaid of the ſenſual Widow *, that ſhe is dead while ſhe lives, we may ſay often of our ſelves, we are dead while we Worſhip. Our hearts are in duty as the Jews were in Deliverances, as thoſe in a Dream *; by which unexpectedneſs, God ſhewed the greatneſs of his care and mercy; and we attend him as Men in a dream whereby we diſcover our negligence and folly. This activity doth not conſiſt in outward Acts. The Body may be hot and the heart may be faint; but in an inward ſtirring, meltings, flights. In the higheſt Raptures the Body is moſt inſenſible. Strong Spiritual Affections are abſtracted from outward Senſe.

6. Spiritual Worſhip is performed with acting Spiritual Habits. When all the living Springs of Grace are opened, as the Fountains of the deep were in the deluge, the Soul and all that is within it, all the ſpiritual impreſſes of God upon it, erect themſelves to bleſs his holy Name *.

* Pſ.130.1.

This is neceſſary to make a Worſhip Spiritual. As Natural Agents are determined to act ſuitable to their proper Nature; ſo rational Agents are to act conformable to a rational Being: When there is a conformity between the act and the nature whence it flows, 'tis a good act in its kind; if it be rational, 'tis a good rational act, becauſe ſuitable to its Principle: As a Man endowed with Reaſon muſt act ſuitable to that Endowment, and exerciſe his Reaſon in his Acting; ſo a Chriſtian endued with Grace muſt act ſuitable to that Nature, and exerciſe his Grace in his Acting. Acts done by a natural inclination are no more humane Acts, than the natural Acts of a Beaſt may be ſaid to be humane; Tho' they are the acts of a Man, as he is the efficient cauſe of them, yet they are not humane acts, becauſe they ariſe not from that principle of Reaſon which denominates him a Man. So acts of Worſhip performed by a bare exerciſe of Reaſon, are not Chriſtian and Spiritual Acts, becauſe they come not from the Principle which conſtitutes him a Chriſtian; Reaſon is not the Principle, for then all rational Creatures would be Chriſtians: They ought therefore to be acts of a higher principle; Exerciſes of that Grace whereby Chriſtians are what they are: Not but that rational acts in Worſhip are due to God; for Worſhip is due from us as Men; and we are ſettled in that rank of being by our Reaſon. Grace doth not exclude Reaſon, but ennobles it, and calls it up to another form: But we muſt not reſt in a bare rational VVorſhip, but exert that Principle whereby we are Chriſtians. To VVorſhip God with our Reaſon, is to worſhip him as Men: To worſhip God with our Grace, is to worſhip him as Chriſtians, and ſo ſpiritually: but to worſhip him only with our Bodies, is no better than Brutes.

Our deſires of the word are to iſſue from the regenerate Principle, 1 *Pet.*2.2. As new born Babes deſire the ſincere Milk of the Word: It ſeems to be not a Compariſon but a Reſtriction. All Worſhip muſt have the ſame ſpring, and be the exerciſe of that Principle; otherwiſe we can have no Communion with God. Friends that have the ſame habitual Diſpoſitions, have a fundamental fitneſs for an agreeable Converſe with one another; but if the temper wherein their likneſs conſiſts, be languiſhing, and the ſtring out of tune, there is not an actual fitneſs; and the preſent Indiſpoſition breaks the Converſe, and renders the Company troubleſome. Tho' we may have the habitual Graces which compoſe in us a reſemblance to God, yet for want of acting thoſe ſuitable Diſpoſitions, we render our ſelves unfit for his Converſe, and make the Worſhip, which is fundamentally ſpiritual, to become actually carnal. As the Will cannot naturally act to any Object, but by the exerciſe of its affections, ſo the Heart cannot ſpiritually act towards God, but by the exerciſe of Graces. This is God's Muſick, *Eph.*5.19. Singing and making Melody to God in your Hearts. Singing and all other Acts of Worſhip are outward, but the ſpiritual Melody is by Grace in the Heart, Col.3.16. This renders it a ſpiritual Worſhip; for it is an effect of the fulneſs of the Spirit in the Soul, as *v.*19. But be filled with the Spirit: The overflowing of the Spirit in the Heart, ſetting the Soul of a Believer thus on Work to make a Spiritual Melody to God, ſhews that ſomething higher than bare Reaſon is put in tune in the Heart. Then is the fruit of the Garden pleaſant to Chriſt when the holy Spirit, the North and South Wind blow upon the Spices, and ſtrike out the fragrancy of them *. Since God is the Author of Graces and beſtows them to have a Glory from them, they are beſt employed about him and his Service. 'Tis fit he ſhould have the Cream of his own Gifts. Without the exerciſe of Grace we perform but a Work of Nature, and offer him a few dry Bones without Marrow.

*Cant. 4. v. 16.

The whole ſet of Graces muſt be one way or other exerciſed. If any treble be wanting in a Lute, there will be a great defect in the Muſick. If any one ſpiritual ſtring be dull, the ſpiritual Harmony of Worſhip will be ſpoiled.

And therefore,

1. Firſt, Faith muſt be acted in Worſhip. A confidence in God. A natural Worſhip cannot be performed without a natural Confidence in the Goodneſs of God. VVhoſever comes to him, muſt regard him as a Rewarder and a Faithful Creator *. A Spiritual VVorſhip cannot be performed without an Evangelical Confidence in him as a gracious Redeemer. To think him a Tyrant meditating Revenge, damps the Soul; to regard him as a gracious King full of tender Bowels, Spirits the Affections to him. The Mercy of God is the proper Object of Truſt, *Pſal.*33.18. The Eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his Mercy. The VVorſhip of God in the old Teſtament is moſt deſcribed by Fear: In the new Teſtament by Faith. Fear, or the VVorſhip of God and hope in his Mercy are link'd together; when they go hand in hand, the accepting Eye of God is upon us: When we do not truſt, we do not worſhip. Thoſe of Judah had the Temple Worſhip among them, eſpecially in Joſiah's time, *Zeph.*3.2. the time of that Prophecy; yet it was accounted no Worſhip, becauſe no Truſt in the Worſhippers. Intereſt in God, cannot be improved without an Exerciſe of Faith. The Goſpel Worſhip is propheſied of, to be a confidence in God, as in a Husband more than in a Lord, Hoſ. 2. 16. Thou ſhalt call me Iſhi, and ſhalt call me no more Baali: Thou ſhalt call me, that is, thou ſhalt Worſhip me. Worſhip being often comprehended under Invocation. More confidence is to be exerciſed in a Husband or Father, than in a Lord or Maſter.

*Heb.11.6.

If a Man have not Faith, he is without Chriſt; and though a Man be in Chriſt by the habit of Faith, he performs a Duty out of Chriſt without an act of Faith: Without the Habit of Faith, our Perſons are out of Chriſt; and without the exerciſe of Faith, the Duties are out of Chriſt. As the want of Faith in a Perſon is the death of the Soul; ſo the want of Faith in a Service, is the death of the Offering. Tho' a Man were at the coſt of an Ox; yet to kill it without bringing it to the door of the Tabernacle, was not a Sacrifice, but a Murder. The Tabernacle was a Type of Chriſt; and a look to him is neceſſary in every ſpiritual Sacrifice. As there muſt be Faith to make any Act, an act of Obedience; ſo there muſt be Faith to make any act of Worſhip Spiritual. That Service is not Spiritual, that is not Vital; and it cannot be Vital, without the Exerciſe of a Vital Principle: All Spiritual Life is hid in Chriſt, and drawn from him by Faith *. Faith, as it hath relation to Chriſt, makes every act of Worſhip, a living act, and conſequently a ſpiritual act. Habitual unbelief cuts us off from the Body of Chriſt, *Rom.*11.20. Becauſe of unbelief they were broken off; and a want of actuated belief breaks us off from a preſent Communion with Chriſt in Spirit. As unbelief in us hinders Chriſt from doing any mighty Work, ſo unbelief in us hinders us from doing any mighty ſpiritual Duty.

*Lev.17.3.

*Gal. 2.20.

So that the exerciſe of Faith, and a Confidence in God, is neceſſary to every Duty.

2. Love muſt be acted to render a Worſhip Spiritual. Tho' God commanded Love in the Old-Teſtament; yet the manner of giving the Law, beſpoke more of Fear than Love. The Diſpenſation of the Law was with Fire, Thunder, &c. proper to raiſe horror and benum the Spirit; which effect it had upon the Iſraelites, when they deſired that God would ſpeak no more to them. Grace is the Genius of the Goſpel, proper to excite the affection of Love. The Law was given by the Diſpoſition of Angels, with ſigns to amaze; the Goſpel was uſher'd in with the Songs of Angels, compoſed of Peace and Good Will, calculated to raviſh the Soul. Inſtead of the terrible voice of the Law, Do this and live: The comfortable Voice of the Goſpel is, Grace, Grace: Upon this account the Principle of the old Teſtament was Fear; and the worſhip often expreſt by the fear of God. The Principle of the new Teſtament is Love. The Mount Sinai gendreth to Bondage *; Mount Sion, from whence the Goſpel or Evangelical Law goes forth, gendreth to Liberty; and therefore the Spirit of Bondage unto Fear, as the property of the Law is oppoſed to the ſtate of Adoption, the Principle of Love, as the Property of the Goſpel *: And therefore the worſhip of God under the Goſpel, or new Teſtament, is often expreſt by Love than Fear; as proceeding from higher Principles, and acting nobler Paſſions. In this ſtate, we are to ſerve him without fear *; without a Bondage-fear; not without a fear of unworthy treating him; with a fear of his goodneſs as it is propheſied of *: Goodneſs is not the object of terror, but Reverence. God in the Law, had more the Garb of a Judge; in the Goſpel, of a Father: The Name of

of a Father is ſweeter, and beſpeaks more of Affection. As their Services were with a feeling of the Thunders of the Law in their Conſciences; ſo is our Worſhip to be with a ſenſe of Goſpel-Grace in our Spirits: Spiritual Worſhip is that therefore, which is exerciſed with a Spiritual and heavenly Affection, proper to the Goſpel. The Heart ſhould be enlarged, according to the Liberty the Goſpol gives of drawing neer to God as a Father: As he gives us the nobler Relation of Children, we are to act the nobler Qualities of Children. Love ſhould act according to its Nature, which is deſire of Union; deſire of a moral Union by Affections, as well as a myſtical Union by Faith; as flame aſpires to reach flame, and become one with it. In every act of worſhip, we ſhould endeavour to be united to God, and become one Spirit with him: This Grace doth ſpiritualize Worſhip: In that one word Love, God hath wrapt up all the Devotion he requires of us: 'Tis the total Sum of the firſt Table, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God. 'Tis to be acted in every thing we do: But in worſhip, our hearts ſhould more ſolemnly riſe up and acknowledge him aimable and lovely, ſince the Law is ſtript of its curſing Power, and made ſweet in the Blood of the Redeemer. Love is a thing acceptable of it ſelf; but nothing acceptable without it. The Gifts of one Man to another are ſpiritualized by it. We would not value a Preſent, without the Affection of the Donor: Every Man would lay claim to the Love of others, tho' he would not to their Poſſeſſions. Love is God's Right in every Service, and the nobleſt thing we can beſtow upon him in our Adorations of him. God's Gifts to us are not ſo eſtimable, without his Love; nor our Services valuable by him, without the exerciſe of a choice Affection. Hezekiah regarded not his Deliverance, without the Love of the Deliverer; In love to my Soul thou haſt delivered me *. So doth God ſay, in love to my Honour thou haſt worſhipped me. *Iſa.38.17.

So that Love muſt be acted, to render our Worſhip Spiritual.

3. A Spiritual ſenſibleneſs of our own weakneſs, is neceſſary to make our Worſhip Spiritual. Affections to God cannot be without Relentings in our ſelves. When the Eye is ſpiritually fixed upon a ſpiritual God, the Heart will mourn, that the VVorſhip is no more ſpiritually ſutable. The more we act love upon God, as amiable and gracious, the more we ſhould exerciſe grief in our ſelves, as we are vile and offending. Spiritual Worſhip is a melting Worſhip, as well as an elevating Worſhip; it exalts God, and debaſeth the Creature. The Publican was more ſpiritual in his humble addreſs to God, when the Phariſee was wholly carnal with his ſwelling language. A ſpiritual love in Worſhip will make us grieve, that we have given him ſo little, and could give him no more. 'Tis a part of ſpiritual duty to bewail our carnality mixed with it; as we receive mercies ſpiritually, when we receive them with a ſenſe of Gods goodneſs and our own vileneſs, in the ſame manner we render a ſpiritual Worſhip.

4. Spiritual deſires for God render the ſervice ſpiritual. When the Soul follows hard after him *; purſues after God as a God of Infinite communicative goodneſs, with ſighs and groans unutterable. A ſpiritual Soul ſeems to be transformed into hunger and thirſt, and becomes nothing but deſire. A carnal VVorſhipper is taken with the beauty and magnificence of the Temple; a ſpiritual VVorſhipper deſires to ſee the glory of God in the Sanctuary *; he pants after God. As he came to Worſhip to find God, ſo he boyls up in deſires for God, and is loth to go from it without God, the living God, Pſal.42.2. He would ſee the Urim and the Thummim; the unuſual ſparkling of the ſtones upon the High-Prieſts Breaſt-Plate. That deſerves not the Title of ſpiritual Worſhip, when the Soul makes no longing inquiries; ſaw you him whom my Soul loves? A ſpiritual VVorſhip is, when our deſires are chiefly for God in the VVorſhip: As David deſires to dwell in the Houſe of the Lord; but his deſire is not terminated there, but to behold the beauty of the Lord *, and taſte the raviſhing ſweetneſs of his preſence. No doubt but Elijah's deſires for the enjoyment of God, while he was mounting to Heaven, were as fiery as the Chariot wherein he was carried. Unutterable groans acted in VVorſhip, are the fruit of the Spirit, and certainly render it a ſpiritual Service *. Strong Appetites are agreeable to God, and prepare us to eat the fruit of VVorſhip. A ſpiritual Paul preſſeth forward to know Chriſt, and the power of his Reſurrection; and a ſpiritual VVorſhipper actually aſpires in every Duty to know God, and the power of his Grace. To deſire VVorſhip as an end, is carnal; to deſire it as a means, and act deſires in it for communion with God in it, is ſpiritual, and the fruit of a ſpiritual life. *Pſal.27.4. *Rom.8.26

5. Thankfulneſs and admiration are to be exerciſed in Spiritual Services. This is a worſhip of Spirits. Praiſe is the adoration of the bleſſed Angels *, and of glorified Spirits, *Rev.*4.11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive Glory, and Honour, and Power: And *Rev.*5. *v.*13,14. they worſhip him, aſcribing Bleſſing, Honour, Glory and Power, to him that ſits upon the Throne, and to the Lamb, for ever and ever. Other acts of worſhip are confined to this Life, and leave us as ſoon as we have ſet our foot in Heaven; there no notes, but this of Praiſe, are warbled out. The Power, Wiſdom, Love and Grace, in the diſpenſation of the Goſpel, ſeat themſelves in the Thoughts and Tongues of bleſſed Souls. Can a Worſhip on Earth be ſpiritual, that hath no mixture of an eternal heavenly duty with it? The Worſhip of God in Innocence had been chiefly an admiration of him in the works of Creation; and ſhould not our Evangelical worſhip be an admiration of him in the work of Redemption, which is a reſtoration to a better ſtate? After the Petitioning for Pardoning Grace *, there is a rendring the Calves or Heifers of our lips, alluding to the Heifers uſed in Euchariſtical Sacrifices. The praiſe of God is the choiceſt Sacrifice and Worſhip, under a diſpenſation of redeeming Grace; this is the prime and eternal part of Worſhip under the Goſpel. The Pſalmiſt, *Pſal.*149.& 150. ſpeaking of the Goſpel-times, ſpurs on to this kind of Worſhip, Sing to the Lord a new Song; Let the Children of Zion be joyful in their King; Let the Saints be joyful in Glory, and ſing aloud upon their Beds; Let the high praiſes of God be in their mouths: He begins and ends both Pſalms with praiſe ye the Lord. That cannot be a Spiritual and Evangelical Worſhip, that hath nothing of the praiſe of God in the heart. The conſideration of Gods adorable perfections diſcovered in the Goſpel, will make us come to him with more ſeriouſneſs, beg Bleſſings of him with more confidence, fly to him with a winged Faith and Love, and more ſpiritually glorifie him in our attendances upon him. *Iſa.6.3. *Hoſ.14.2.

7. Spiritual Worſhip is performed with delight. The Evangelical Worſhip is Prophetically ſignified by keeping the Feaſt of Tabernacles; they ſhall go up from year to year, to worſhip the King the Lord of Hoſts, and to keep the Feaſt of Tabernacles. Why that Feaſt, when there were other Feaſts obſerved by the Jews? That was a Feaſt celebrated with the greateſt joy; typical of the gladneſs which was to be under the exhibition of the Meſſiah, and a thankful commemoration of the Redemption wrought by him. It was to be celebrated five days after the ſolemn day of Atonement, Levit.23.34. compared with v. 27. wherein there was one of the ſolemneſt types of the Sacrifice of the death of Chriſt. In this Feaſt they commemorated their exchange of Egypt for Canaan; the Manna wherewith they were fed; the Water out of the Rock wherewith they were refreſh'd. In remembrance of this, they Zach.14.16

*Pſal.63.8.

*Pſal.63.2.

poured Water on the ground, pronouncing thoſe words in Iſaiah, they ſhall draw Waters out of the Wells of Salvation, which our Saviour refers to himſelf, John 7. *v.*37. inviting them to him to drink, upon the laſt day, the great day of the Feaſt of Tabernacles, wherein this ſolemn Ceremony was obſerved. Since we are freed by the death of the Redeemer from the Curſes of the Law, God requires of us a Joy in ſpiritual Priviledges. A ſad frame in Worſhip, gives the lye to all Goſpel-liberty; to the Purchaſe of the Redeemers death; the Triumphs of his Reſurrection: 'Tis a carriage, as if we were under the influences of the legal Fire and Lightning, and an entring a Proteſt againſt the freedom of the Goſpel. The Evangelical Worſhip is a Spiritual Worſhip; and Praiſe, Joy and Delight, are Propheſied of, as great ingredients in attendance on Goſpel Ordinances, *Iſa.*12.3,4,5. What was occaſion of terror in the Worſhip of God under the Law, is the occaſion of delight in the Worſhip of God under the Goſpel. The Juſtice and Holineſs of God, ſo terrible in the Law, becomes comfortable under the Goſpel, ſince they have feaſted themſelves on the Active and Paſſive Obedience of the Redeemer. The approach is to God as gracious, not to God as unpacified; as a Son to a Father, not as a Criminal to a Judge. Under the Law God was repreſented as a Judge, remembring their Sin in their Sacrifices, and repreſenting the puniſhment they had merited; in the Goſpel as a Father, accepting the Atonement, and publiſhing the Reconciliation wrought by the Redeemer. Delight in God, is a Goſpel frame; therefore the more joyful, the more ſpiritual. The Sabbath is to be a delight; not only in regard of the Day, but in regard of the Duties of it *; in regard of the marvelous Work he wrought on it, raiſing up our bleſſed Redeemer on that day, whereby a foundation was laid for the rendring our Perſons and Services acceptable to God, *Pſal.*118.24. This is the day which the Lord hath made, we will be glad and rejoyce in it. A lumpiſh frame becomes not a Day and a Duty, that hath ſo noble and ſpiritual a mark upon it.

* Iſa.58.13.

The Angels in the firſt act of Worſhip after the Creation, were highly joyful, Job 38.7. They ſhouted for joy, &c.

The Saints have particularly acted this in their Worſhip. David would not content himſelf with an approach to the Altar, without going to God as his exceeding joy, Pſal.43.4. My triumphant joy: When he danced before the Ark, he ſeems to be transformed into delight and pleaſure, 2 Sam. 6. 14, 16. He had as much delight in Worſhip, as others had in their Harveſt and Vintage. And thoſe that took joyfully the ſpoiling of their Goods, would as joyfully attend upon the Communications of God. Where there is a fulneſs of the Spirit, there is a making melody to God in the heart *; and where there is an acting of love, (as there is in all ſpiritual ſervices) the proper fruit of it is joy in a near approach to the Object of the Souls affection. Love is appetitus unionis: The more love, the more delight in the approachings of God to the Soul, or the out-goings of the Soul to God. As the Object of Worſhip is amiable in a ſpiritual eye, ſo the means tending to a communion with this Object are delightful in the exerciſe: Where there is no delight in a Duty, there is no delight in the Object of the Duty: The more of Grace, the more of Pleaſure in the actings of it: As the more of Nature there is in any natural Agent, the more of pleaſure in the act: So the more Heavenly the Worſhip, the more Spiritual. Delight is the frame and temper of Glory. A heart filled up to the brim with joy, is a heart filled up to the brim with the ſpirit: Joy is the fruit of the Holy Ghoſt *.

* Eph. 5. v. 18, 19.

* Gal.5.22.

1. Not the joy of Gods diſpenſation flowing from God, but a gracious active joy ſtreaming to God. There is a joy, when the Comforts of God are dropt into the Soul, as Oyl upon the Wheel; which indeed makes the faculties move with more ſpeed and activity in his ſervice, like the Chariots of Aminadab: And a Soul may ſerve God in the ſtrength of this taſte, and its delight terminated in the ſenſible comfort. This is not the joy I mean, but ſuch a joy that hath God for its Object, delighting in him as the term, in worſhip as the way to him: The firſt is Gods diſpenſation, the other is our duty: The firſt is an act of Gods favour to us, the ſecond a ſprout of habitual grace in us. The Comforts we have from God, may elevate our Duties, but the Grace we have within, doth ſpiritualize our Duties.

2. Nor is every delight an argument of a ſpiritual Service. All the requiſites to worſhip muſt be taken in. A Man may invent a Worſhip, and delight in it; as Micah in the adoration of his Idol, when he was glad he had got both an Ephod and a Levit *. As a Man may have a contentment in ſin, ſo he may have a contentment in Worſhip; not becauſe it is a Worſhip of God, but the Worſhip of his own Invention, agreeable to his own humour and deſign, as *Iſa.*58.2. 'tis ſaid, they delighted in approaching to God, but it was for carnal ends. Novelty ingenders Complacency; but it muſt be a Worſhip wherein God will delight; and that muſt be a Worſhip according to his own Rule and infinite Wiſdom, and not our ſhallow fancies.

* Judges 17

God requires cheerfulneſs in his Service, eſpecially under the Goſpel, where he ſits upon a Throne of Grace; diſcovers himſelf in his amiableneſs, and acts the Covenant of Grace, and the ſweet relation of a Father. The Prieſts of old were not to ſully themſelves with any ſorrow, when they were in the exerciſe of their Functions. God put a bar to the natural affections of Aaron and his Sons, when Nadab and Abihu had been cut off by a ſevere hand of God *. Every true Chriſtian in a higher Order of Prieſthood, is a Perſon dedicated to Joy and Peace, offering himſelf a lively Sacrifice of Praiſe and Thankſgiving: And there is no Chriſtian Duty, but is to be ſet off and ſeaſoned with cheerfulneſs: He that loves a cheerful Giver in acts of Charity, requires no leſs a cheerful Spirit in acts of Worſhip: As this is an ingredient in worſhip, ſo it is the means to make your ſpirits intent in Worſhip. When the heart triumphs in the conſideration of Divine excellency and goodneſs, it will be angry at any thing that offers to jog and diſturb it.

* Lev.10.6.

8. Spiritual Worſhip is to be performed, tho' with a delight in God; yet with a deep reverence of God. The Goſpel in advancing the ſpirituality of Worſhip, takes off the terror, but not the reverence of God; which is nothing elſe in its own nature, but a due and high eſteem of the excellency of a thing according to the nature of it: And therefore the Goſpel preſenting us with more illuſtrious notices of the glorious nature of God, is ſo far from indulging any diſeſteem of him, that it requires of us a greater reverence ſuitable to the height of its diſcovery, above what could be ſpell'd in the Book of Creation: The Goſpel-worſhip is therefore expreſt by trembling, *Hoſ.*11.10. They ſhall walk after the Lord; he ſhall roar like a Lion; when he ſhall roar, then the Children ſhall tremble from the Weſt. When the Lion of the Tribe of Judah ſhall lift up his powerful voice in the Goſpel, the Weſtern Gentiles ſhall run trembling to walk after the Lord. God hath always attended his greateſt manifeſtations with remarkable Characters of Majeſty, to create a reverence in his Creature: He cauſed the Wind to march before him; to cut the Mountain, when he manifeſted himſelf to Elijah, 1 Kings 19.11. A Wind and a Cloud of Fire, before that magnificent Viſion to Ezekiel, Ezek.1.4,5. Thunders and Lightnings before the giving the Law, *Exod.*19.18. And a mighty Wind before the giving the Spirit, Acts 2. God requires of us an awe of him in the very act of performance. The Angels are pure, and cannot fear him as Sinners, but in reverence they cover their Faces when they ſtand before him *.

* Iſa.6.2.

His

His power ſhould make us reverence him, as we are Creatures: His Juſtice as we are Sinners: His Goodneſs as we are reſtored Creatures. *[God is cloathed with unſpeakable Majeſty; the glory of his face ſhines brighter than the Lights of Heaven in their beauty. Before him the Angels tremble, and the Heavens melt; we ought not therefore to come before him with the Sacrifice of Fools, nor tender a duty to him, without falling low upon our faces, and bowing the knees of our hearts in token of reverence.] Not a ſlaviſh fear, like that of Devils, but a godly fear, like that of Saints *, joyned with a ſenſe of an unmoveable Kingdom, becometh us. And this the Apoſtle calls a grace neceſſary to make our ſervice acceptable; and therefore the grace neceſſary to make it ſpiritual, ſince nothing finds admiſſion to God, but what is of a ſpiritual nature. The conſideration of his glorious nature, ſhould imprint an awful reſpect upon our Souls to him: His goodneſs ſhould make his Majeſty more adorable to us, as his Majeſty makes his goodneſs more admirable in his condeſcenſions to us. As God is a Spirit, our Worſhip muſt be ſpiritual; and being he is the ſupream ſpirit, our Worſhip muſt be reverential. We muſt obſerve the State he takes upon him in his Ordinances: He is in Heaven, we upon the Earth; we muſt not therefore be haſty to utter any thing before God, Eccleſ. 5. 7. Conſider him a Spirit in the higheſt Heavens, and our ſelves Spirits dwelling in a dreggy Earth. Looſe and gariſh frames debaſe him to our own quality: Slight poſtures of Spirit, intimate him to be a ſlight and mean Being: Our being in Covenant with him, muſt not lower our awful apprehenſions of him: As he is the Lord thy God, 'tis a glorious and fearful Name, or wonderful *: Tho' he lay by his Juſtice to Believers, he doth not lay by his Majeſty, when we have a confidence in him, becauſe he is the Lord our God; we muſt have awful thoughts of his Majeſty, becauſe his Name is glorious. God is terrible from his Holy Places, in regard of the great things he doth for his Iſrael *. We ſhould behave our ſelves with that inward honour and reſpect of him, as if he were preſent to our bodily eyes: The higher apprehenſions we have of his Majeſty, the greater awe will be upon our hearts in his preſence, and the greater ſpirituality in our acts. We ſhould manage our hearts ſo, as if we had a view of God in his heavenly glory.

9. Spiritual Worſhip is to be performed with humility in our Spirits. This is to follow upon the reverence of God. As we are to have high thoughts of God, that we may not debaſe him, we muſt have low thoughts of our ſelves, not to vaunt before him. When we have right notions of the Divine Majeſty, we ſhall be as Worms in our own thoughts, and creep as Worms into his preſence: We can never conſider him in his glory, but we have a fit opportunity to reflect upon our ſelves, and conſider how baſely we revolted from him, and how graciouſly we are reſtored by him: As the Goſpel affords us greater diſcoveries of Gods nature, and ſo enhanceth our reverence of him, ſo it helps us to a fuller underſtanding of our own vileneſs and weakneſs, and therefore is proper to ingender Humility: The more Spiritual and Evangelical therefore any ſervice is, the more humble it is. That is a ſpiritual Service, that doth moſt manifeſt the glory of God; and this cannot be manifeſted by us, without manifeſting our own emptineſs and nothingneſs. The Heathens were ſenſible of the neceſſity of Humility by the Light of Nature *; after the Name of God ſignified by Ἐι inſcribed on the Temple at Delphos, followed Γνῶθι σεαυτὸν, whereby was infinuated, that when we have to do with God, who is the only Ens, we ſhould behave our ſelves with a ſenſe of our own infirmity, and infinite diſtance from him. As a Perſon, ſo a Duty leavened with Pride, hath nothing of ſincerity, and therefore nothing of ſpirituality in it, Hab. 2. 4. His Soul which is lifted up, is not upright in him. The Elders that were crowned by God to be Kings and Prieſts, to offer ſpiritual Sacrifices, uncrown themſelves in their VVorſhip of him, and caſt down their Ornaments at his feet *: The Greek word to VVorſhip προσκυνεῖν ſignifies to creep like a Dog upon his belly before his Maſter; to lie low. How deep ſhould our ſenſe be of the Priviledge of Gods admitting us to his Worſhip, and affording us ſuch a mercy under our deſerts of wrath? How mean ſhould be our thoughts, both of our Perſons and Performances? How patiently ſhould we wait upon God for the ſucceſs of VVorſhip? How did Abraham, the Father of the Faithful, equal himſelf to the Earth, when he ſupplicated the God of Heaven, and devoted himſelf to him under the Title of very Duſt and Aſhes *? Iſaiah did but behold an Evangelical Apparition of God and the Angels VVorſhiping him, and preſently reflects upon his own uncleanneſs *. Gods preſence both requires and cauſes Humility. How lowly is David in his own opinion, after a magnificent duty performed by himſelf and his People? 1 Chron. 29. 14. Who am I? And what is my People, that we ſhould be able to offer ſo willingly? The more ſpiritual the Soul is in its carriage to God, the more humble it is; and the more gracious God is in his communications to the Soul, the lower it lies.

* Gen. 18. v. 27.
* Iſa. 6. 5.

God commanded not the fiercer Creatures to be offered to him in Sacrifices, but Lambs and Kids, meek and lowly Creatures; none that had ſtings in their tails, or venom in their tongues *. The meek Lamb was the daily Sacrifice: The Doves were to be offered by Pairs: God would not have Hony mixed with any Sacrifice, Lev. 2. 11. That breeds Choler, and Choler Pride; but Oyl, he commanded to be uſed; that ſupplies and mollifies the parts. Swelling Pride, and boiling Paſſions render our ſervices carnal; they cannot be ſpiritual, without an humble ſweetneſs and an innocent ſincerity: One grain of this tranſcends the moſt coſtly Sacrifices. A Contrite Heart puts a gloſs upon Worſhip *. The departure of Men and Angels from God, began in Pride; our approaches and return to him muſt begin in Humility: And therefore all thoſe Graces which are bottom'd on Humility, muſt be acted in Worſhip, as Faith, and a ſenſe of our own indigence. Our bleſſed Saviour, the moſt ſpiritual Worſhipper, proſtrated himſelf in the Garden with the greateſt lowlineſs, and offered himſelf upon the Croſs a Sacrifice with the greateſt humility. Melted Souls in Worſhip, have the moſt ſpiritual conformity to the Perſon of Chriſt in the ſtate of Humiliation, and his deſign in that ſtate: As Worſhip without it is not ſuitable to God, ſo neither is it advantageous for us. A time of Worſhip, is a time of Gods Commuuication. The Veſſel muſt be melted to receive the Mould it is deſigned for: Softned Wax is fitteſt to receive a ſtamp, and a ſpiritually melted Soul fitteſt to receive a ſpiritual impreſſion. We cannot perform duty in an evangelical and ſpiritual ſtrain, without the meltings and meanneſs in our ſelves which the Goſpel requires.

10. Spiritual Worſhip is to be performed with Holineſs. God is a holy Spirit; a likeneſs to God muſt attend the worſhiping of God, as he is: Holineſs is alway in ſeaſon; It becomes his houſe for ever *. We never can ſerve the living God, till we have Conſciences purged from dead works, Heb. 9. 14. Dead works in our Conſciences, are unſuitable to God, an eternal living Spirit. The more mortified the heart, the more quickned the ſervice. Nothing can pleaſe an infinite Purity, but that which is pure: Since God is in his Glory, in his Ordinances, we muſt not be in our Filthineſs. The Holineſs of his Spirit doth ſparkle in his Ordinances, the holineſs of our Spirits ought alſo to ſparkle in our obſervance of them. The Holineſs of God is moſt celebrated in the worſhip of Angels *: Spiritual worſhip ought to be like Angelical: That cannot be with Souls totally impure. As there muſt be perfect holineſs to make a worſhip perfectly ſpiritual; ſo there muſt be ſome degree of holineſs to make it in any meaſure ſpiritual. God would have all the Utenſils of the Sanctuary employed about his ſervice to be holy: The Inwards of the Sacrifice were to be rinſed thrice *. The Crop and Feathers of Sacrificed Doves, was to be hung Eaſtward towards the entrance of the Temple, at a diſtance from the Holy of Holies where the preſence of God was moſt eminent *. When Aaron was to go into the Holy of Holies, he was to ſanctifie himſelf in an extraordinary manner *. The Prieſts were to be bare-footed in the Temple, in the exerciſe of their Office; ſhoes alway were to be put off upon holy ground: Look to thy foot when thou goeſt to the Houſe of God, ſaith the wiſe man, Eccleſ. 5. 1. Strip the affections, the feet of the Soul, of all the dirt contracted; diſcard all earthly and baſe thoughts from the heart. A Beaſt was not to touch the Mount Sinai, without loſing his Life: Nor can we come near the Throne with brutiſh affections, without loſing the life and fruit of the worſhip. An unholy Soul degrades himſelf from a Spirit to a Brute, and the worſhip from ſpiritual to brutiſh. If any unmortified ſin be found in the Life, as it was in the comers to the Temple, it taints and pollutes the Worſhip *. All worſhip is an acknowledgment of the excellency of God as he is holy: Hence it is called a ſanctifying Gods Name: How can any perſon ſanctifie Gods Name, that hath not a holy reſemblance to his Nature? If he be not holy as he is holy, he cannot worſhip him according to his excellency in Spirit and in Truth: No worſhip is ſpiritual wherein we have not a communion with God. But what intercourſe can there be between a holy God, and an impure Creature; between Light and Darkneſs? We have no fellowſhip with him in any ſervice, unleſs we walk in the Light, in ſervice and out of ſervice, as he is Light *. The Heathen thought not their Sacrifices agreeable to God, without waſhing their hands, whereby they ſignified the preparation of their hearts, before they made the Oblation: Clean hands without a pure heart, ſignifie nothing: The frame of our hearts muſt anſwer the purity of the outward Symbols, Pſal. 26. 6. I will waſh my hands in Innocence, ſo will I compaſs thine Altar, O Lord. He would obſerve the appointed Ceremonies, but not without cleanſing his heart as well as his hands. Vain man is apt to reſt upon outward acts and rites of worſhip: But this muſt alway be practiſed: The words are in the Preſent Tenſe, I waſh, I compaſs. Purity in worſhip ought to be our continual care. If we would perform a ſpiritual ſervice, wherein we would have communion with God, it muſt be in Holineſs: If we would walk with Chriſt, it muſt be in white *; alluding to the white Garments the Prieſts put on, when they went to perform their ſervice: As without this we cannot ſee God in Heaven, ſo neither can we ſee the beauty of God in his own Ordinances.

11. Spiritual Worſhip is performed with ſpiritual ends, with raiſed aims at the glory of God. No duty can be ſpiritual that hath a carnal aim: Where God is the ſole Object, he ought to be the principal End: In all our actions he is to be our End, as he is the principle of our Being; much more in Religious Acts, as he is the Object of our worſhip. The worſhip of God in Scripture, is expreſt by the ſeeking of him *: Him, not our ſelves; all is to be referred to God. As we are not to live to our ſelves, that being the ſign of a carnal ſtate; ſo we are not to worſhip for our ſelves, Rom. 14. 7, 8. As all actions are denominated good from their end, as well as their object; ſo upon the ſame account they are denominated ſpiritual. The end ſpiritualizeth our natural actions; much more our religious: Then are our faculties devoted to him, when they center in him. If the intention be evil, there is nothing but darkneſs in the whole ſervice, Luke 11. 34. The firſt Inſtitution of the Sabbath, the ſolemn day for worſhip, was to contemplate the glory of God in his ſtupendous works of Creation, and render him a homage for them, Rev. 4. 11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive Honour, Glory and Power; for thou haſt created all things, and for thy pleaſure they are and were created. No worſhip can be returned without a glorifying of God; and we cannot actually glorifie him, without direct aims at the promoting his honour. As we have immediately to do with God, ſo we are immediately to mind the praiſe of God. As we are not to content our ſelves with habitual grace, but be rich in the exerciſe of it in worſhip; ſo we are not to acquieſce in habitual aims at the glory of God, without the actual outflowings of our hearts in thoſe aims.

* Heb. 11. 6

'Tis natural for Man to worſhip God for ſelf: Self-righteouſneſs is the rooted aim of Man in his worſhip ſince his revolt from God, and being ſenſible it is not to be found in his natural actions, he ſeeks for it in his moral and religious. By the firſt Pride we flung God off from being our Soveraign, and from being our end; ſince, a Phariſaical ſpirit ſtruts it in nature, not only to do things to be ſeen of men, but to be admired by God, Iſa. 58. 3. Wherefore have we faſted and thou takeſt no knowledge? This is to have God worſhip them, inſtead of being worſhiped by them. Cain's carriage after his Sacrifice, teſtified ſome baſe end in his worſhip; he came not to God as a Subject to a Soveraign, but as if he had been the Soveraign, and God the Subject; and when his deſign is not anſwered, and his deſire not gratified, he proves more a Rebel to God, and a Murderer of his Brother. Such baſe ſcents will riſe up in our worſhip from the body of death which cleaves to us, and mix themſelves with our ſervices, as Weeds with the Fiſh in the Next. David therefore, after his People had offered willingly to the Temple, begs of God, that their hearts might be prepared to him *; that their hearts might ſtand right to God, without any ſquinting to ſelf-ends.

* 1 Chron. 29. 18.

Some preſent themſelves to God, as poor men offer a Preſent to a great Perſon; not to honour him, but to gain for themſelves a reward richer than their gift. What profit is it that we have kept his Ordinances, &c? Mal. 3. 14. Some worſhip him, intending thereby to make him amends for the wrong they have done him; wipe off their ſcores, and ſatiſfie their debts; as though a ſpiritual wrong could be recompenſed with a bodily ſervice, and an infinite Spirit be outwitted and appeaſed by a carnal flattery. Self is the Spirit of Carnality: To pretend a homage to God, and intend only the advantage of ſelf, is rather to mock him, than worſhip him. When we believe that we ought to be ſatisfied, rather than God glorified; we ſet God below our ſelves, imagine that he ſhould ſubmit his own honour to our advantage: We make our ſelves more glorious than God, as tho' we were not made for him, but he hath a Being only for us; this is to have a very low eſteem of the Majeſty of God. Whatſoever any man aims at in worſhip above the glory of God, that he forms as an Idol to himſelf inſtead of God, and ſets up a Golden-Image: God counts not this as a worſhip. The Offerings made in the Wilderneſs for forty years together, God eſteemed as not offered to him, Amos 5. 25. Have you offered to me Sacrifices and Offerings in the Wilderneſs forty years, O Houſe of Iſrael? They did it not to God, but to themſelves; for their own ſecurity, and the attainment of the poſſeſſion of the promiſed Land. A ſpiritual Worſhiper performs not worſhip for ſome hopes of carnal advantage; he uſes Ordinances as means to bring God and his Soul together; to be more fitted to honour God in the World, in his particular particular place: When he hath been inflamed and humble in any addreſs or duty, he gives God the glory; his heart ſuits the doxology at the end of the Lord's Prayer, aſcribes the Kingdom, Power and Glory to God alone; and if any viper of Pride ſtarts out upon him, he endeavours preſently to ſhake it off. That which was the firſt end of our framing, ought to be the chief end of our acting towards God: But when men have the ſame ends in worſhip as Brutes, the ſatisfaction of a ſenſitive part; the ſervice is no more than Brutiſh. The acting for a ſenſitive end, is unworthy of the Majeſty of God to whom we addreſs, and unbecoming a rational Creature. The acting for a ſenſitive end, is not rational, much leſs can it be a ſpiritual ſervice; though the act may be good in it ſelf, yet not good in the Agent, becauſe he wants a due end: We are then ſpiritual, when we have the ſame end in our redeemed ſervices, as God had in his redeeming love, viz. his own glory.

12. Spiritual ſervice is offered to God in the name of Chriſt. Thoſe are only ſpiritual Sacrifices, that are offered up to God by Jeſus Chriſt *; that are the fruits of the Sanctification of the Spirit, and offered in the mediation of the Son: As the Altar ſanctifies the gift, ſo doth Chriſt ſpiritualize our ſervices for Gods acceptation; as the Fire upon the Altar ſeparated the airy and finer parts of the Sacrifice from the terrene and earthly: This is the Golden Altar upon which the Prayers of the Saints are offered up before the Throne *. As all that we have from God ſtreams through his blood; ſo all that we give to God aſcends by vertue of his merits. All the bleſſings God gave to the Iſraelites came out of Sion *, that is, from the Goſpel hid under the Law; all the duties we preſent to God are to be preſented in Sion, in an evangelical manner: All our worſhip muſt be bottomed on Chriſt. God hath intended that we ſhould honour the Son as we honour the Father: As we honour the Father by offering our ſervice only to him; ſo we are to honour the Son by offering it only in his name: In him alone God is well pleaſed, becauſe in him alone he finds our ſervices ſpiritual and worthy of acceptation: We muſt therefore take faſt hold of him with our Spirits, and the faſter we hold him, the more ſpiritual is our worſhip. To do any thing in the name of Chriſt, is not to believe the worſhip ſhall be accepted for it ſelf, but to have our eye fixed upon Chriſt for the acceptance of it, and not to reſt upon the work done as carnal people are apt to do. The Creatures preſent their acknowledgments to God by Man; and Man can only preſent his by Chriſt. It was utterly unlawful after the building of the Temple, to ſacrifice any where elſe: The Temple being a Type of Chriſt, it is utterly unlawful for us to preſent our Services in any other name than his.

* 1 Pet. 2. 5.

*Rev. 8. 3.

* Pſ. 134. 3.

This is the way to be Spiritual. If we conſider God out of Chriſt, we can have no other Notions but thoſe of Horror and Bondage. We behold him a Spirit, but environ'd with Juſtice and Wrath for Sinners: But the conſideration of him in Chriſt, vails his Juſtice; draws forth his Mercy; repreſents him more a Father than a Judge. In Chriſt the Aſpect of Juſtice is changed, and by that the temper of the Creature; ſo that in and by this Mediator, we can have a ſpiritual boldneſs, and acceſs to God with Confidence *; whereby the Spirit is kept from benummedneſs and diſtraction; and our Souls quickned and refined. The Thoughts kept upon Chriſt in a Duty of Worſhip, quickly elevates the Soul, and ſpiritualizeth the whole Service. Sin makes our Services black, and the Blood of Chriſt makes both our Perſons and Services white.

* Eph. 3. 12.

To conclude this Head.

God is a Spirit infinitely happy, therefore we muſt approach to him with cheerfulneſs; He is a Spirit of infinite Majeſty, therefore we muſt come before him with Reverence; He is a Spirit infinitely High, therefore we muſt offer up our Sacrifices with the deepeſt Humility; He is a Spirit infinitely Holy, therefore we muſt addreſs with Purity; He is a Spirit infinitely Glorious, we muſt therefore acknowledge his Excellency in all that we do, and in our Meaſures contribute to his Glory, by having the higheſt Aims in his Worſhip; He is a Spirit infinitely provoked by us, therefore we muſt offer up our Worſhip in the Name of a pacifying Mediator and Interceſſour.

3. The third general is, Why a Spiritual Worſhip is due to God, and to be offered to him. We muſt conſider the Object of Worſhip, and the Subject of Worſhip; the Worſhipper and the Worſhipped. God is a Spiritual Being; Man is a reaſonable Creature. The Nature of God informs us, what is fit to be preſented to him; our own Nature informs us, what is fit to be preſented by us.

Reaſon 1. The beſt we have is to be preſented to God in Worſhip. For,

1. Since God is the moſt excellent Being, he is to be ſerved by us with the moſt excellent thing we have, and with the choiceſt Veneration. God is ſo incomprehenſibly excellent, that we cannot render him what he deſerves; We muſt render him what we are able to offer; the beſt of our Affections; the flower of our Strength; the cream and top of our Spirits. By the ſame Reaſon that we are bound to give to God the beſt Worſhip, we muſt offer it to him in the beſt manner. We cannot give to God any thing too good for ſo Bleſſed a Being: God being a great King, ſlight Services become not his Majeſty *: 'Tis unbecoming the Majeſty of God, and the reaſon of a Creature, to give him a trivial thing: 'Tis unworthy to beſtow the beſt of our Strength on our Luſt, and the worſt and weakeſt in the Service of God. An infinite Spirit, ſhould have Affections as near to infinite as we can: As he is a Spirit without Bounds, ſo he ſhould have a Service without Limits: When we have given him all, we cannot ſerve him according to the excellency of his Nature *; and ſhall we give him leſs than all? His infinite Excellency and our Dependance on him, as Creatures, demands the choiceſt Adoration: Our Spirits being the nobleſt part of our Nature, are as due to him, as the Service of our Bodies which are the vileſt: To ſerve him with the worſt only, is to diminiſh his Honour.

* Mal. 1. 13.

* Joſh. 24. v. 19.

2. Under the Law, God commanded the beſt to be offered him. He would have the Males, the beſt of the kind; the Fat, the beſt of the Creature *: He commanded them to offer him the Firſtlings of the Flock; not the Firſtlings of the Womb, but the Firſtlings of the Year: The Jewiſh Cattle having two breeding times, in the beginning of the Spring, and the beginning of September; the latter breed was the weaker, which Jacob knew *, when he laid the Rods before the Cattle when they were ſtrong in the Spring, and with-held them when they were feeble in the Autumn. One Reaſon (as the Jews ſay) why God accepted not the Offerings of Cain, was, becauſe he brought the meaneſt, not the beſt of the Fruit; and therefore 'tis ſaid, only that he brought of the Fruit of the Ground, Gen. 4. 3. not the firſt of the Fruit, or the beſt of the Fruit; as Abel who brought the Firſtling of his Flock, and the Fat thereof, v. 4.

* Ex. 29. 13. The inward Fat, not the Offalls.

* Gen. 30.

3. And this the Heathen practiſed by the Light of Nature. They for the moſt part offered Males, as being more worthy; and burnt the Male, not the Female Frankincenſe, as it is divided into thoſe two kinds: They offered the beſt, when they offered their Children to Moloch. Nothing more excellent than Man, and nothing dearer to Parents than their Children, which are parts of themſelves. When the Iſraelites would have a Golden-Calf for a Repreſentation of God, they would dedicate their Jewels, and ſtrip their their Wives and Children of their Richeſt Ornaments, to ſhew their Devotion. Shall Men ſerve their dumb Idols with the beſt of their Subſtance, and the ſtrength of their Souls; and ſhall the Living God have a duller Service from us, than Idols had from them? God requires no ſuch hard, but delightful Worſhip from us, [our Spirits.]

4. All Creatures ſerve Man, by the providential Order of God, with the beſt they have. As we by God's Appointment receive from Creatures the beſt they can give, ought we not with a free-will render to God the beſt we can offer? The Beaſts give us their beſt Fat; the Trees their beſt Fruit; the Sun its beſt Light; the Fountains their beſt Streams: Shall God order us the beſt from Creatures, and we put him off with the worſt from our ſelves?

5. God hath given us the choiceſt thing he had. A Redeemer that was the Power of God, and the Wiſdom of God: The beſt he had in Heaven, his own Son, and in himſelf, a Sacrifice for us, that we might be enabled to preſent our ſelves a Sacrifice to Him. And Chriſt offered himſelf for us, the beſt he had, and that with the ſtrength of the Deity thro' the Eternal Spirit; and ſhall we grudge God the beſt part of our ſelves? As God would have a worſhip from his Creature, ſo it muſt be with the beſt part of his Creature. If we have given our ſelves *to the Lord, we can worſhip with no leſs than our ſelves. What is the Man without his Spirit? If we are to worſhip God with all that we have received from him, we muſt Worſhip him with the beſt part we have received from him: 'Tis but a ſmall glory we can give him with the beſt, and ſhall we deprive him of his Right by giving him the worſt? As what we are, is from God; ſo what we are, ought to be for God. Creation is the Foundation of VVorſhip, Pſ. 100.2,3. Serve the Lord with gladneſs: Know ye that the Lord he is God; 'tis he that hath made us: He hath ennobled us with ſpiritual Affections; where is it fitteſt for us to employ them, but upon him? and at what time, but when we come ſolemnly to converſe with him? Is it Juſtice to deny him the Honour of his beſt Gift to us? Our Souls are more his Gift to us, than any thing in the World: Other things are ſo given that they are often taken from us, but our Spirits are the moſt durable Gift. Rational Faculties cannot be removed without a Diſſolution of Nature.

*2 Cor. 8. 5.

*Amyrald. Mor. Tom. 2. p. 311.

Well then*, as he is God, he is to be honoured with all the Propenſions and Ardor that the infiniteneſs and excellency of ſuch a Being requires, and the incomparable Obligations he hath laid upon us in this ſtate deſerve at our Hands: In all our Worſhip therefore, our Minds ought to be filled with the higheſt Admiration, Love and Reverence. Since our End was to glorifie God, we Anſwer not our End, and Honour him not, unleſs we give him the choiceſt we have.

Reaſon 2. We cannot elſe act towards God according to the nature of Rational Creatures. Spiritual Worſhip is due to God, becauſe of his Nature; and due from us, becauſe of our Nature. As we are to adore God, ſo we are to adore him as Men: The Nature of a Rational Creature makes this Impreſſion upon him: He cannot view his own Nature without having this Duty ſtriking upon his Mind. As he knows by inſpection into himſelf, that there was a God that made him; ſo, that he is made to be in ſubjection to God; ſubjection to him in his Spirit as well as his Body, and ought morally to teſtifie this Natural Dependance on him: His Conſtitution informs him, that he hath a Capacity to Converſe with God; that he cannot converſe with him, but by thoſe inward Faculties: If it could be managed by his Body without his Spirit, Beaſts might as well Converſe with God as Men. It can never be a reaſonable Service as it ought to be*, unleſs the Reaſonable Faculties be employed in the Management of it: It muſt be a Worſhip prodigiouſly lame, without the concurrence of the chiefeſt part of Man with it. As we are to act conformably to the Nature of the Object, ſo alſo to the Nature of our own Faculties. Our Faculties in the very Gift of them to us were deſtined to be exerciſed; about what? What? All other things but the Author of them: 'Tis a conceit cannot enter into the heart of a Rational Creature, that he ſhould act as ſuch a Creature in other things, and as a ſtone in things relating to the Donor of them; as a Man, with his Mind about him in the Affairs of the World, as a Beaſt without Reaſon in his acts towards God. If a Man did not employ his Reaſon in other things, he would be an unprofitable Creature in the World: If he do not employ his ſpiritual Faculties in Worſhip, he denies them the proper end and uſe for which they were given him; 'tis a practical denial that God hath given him a Soul, and that God hath any right to the exerciſe of it. If there were no Worſhip appointed by God in the VVorld, the natural inclination of Man to ſome kind of Religion would be in vain; and if our inward Faculties were not employed in the Duties of Religion, they would be in vain: The true end of God in the endowment of us with them, would be defeated by us, as much as lies in us, if we did not ſerve him with that which we have from him ſolely at his own coſt. As no Man can with reaſon conclude, that the reſt commanded on the Sabbath and the Sanctification of it, was only a reſt of the Body; that had been performed by the Beaſts as well as Men; but ſome higher end was aimed at for the rational Creature: So no Man can think that the command for VVorſhip, terminated only in the preſence of the Body; that God ſhould give the command to Man as a reaſonable Creature, and expect no other Service from him than that of a Brute.

*Ro. 12. 1.

God did not require a worſhip from Man, for any want he had, or any Eſſential Honour that could accrue to him; but that Men might teſtifie their gratitude to him, and dependance on him. 'Tis the moſt horrid Ingratitude, not to have lively and deep Sentiments of Gratitude after ſuch Obligations, and not to make thoſe due acknowledgments that are proper for a rational Creature. Religion is the higheſt and choiceſt act of a reaſonable Creature: No Creature under Heaven is capable of it that wants Reaſon. As it is a violation of Reaſon not to worſhip God, ſo it is no leſs a violation of Reaſon not to worſhip him with the Heart and Spirit: It is a high diſhonour to God, and defeats him not only of the Service due to him from Man, but that which is due to him from all the Creatures. Every Creature, as it is an effect of God's Power and Wiſdom, doth paſſively worſhip God; that is, it doth afford matter of Adoration to Man that hath reaſon to collect it and return it where it is due: VVithout the exerciſe of the Soul we can no more hand it to God, than without ſuch an exerciſe we can gather it from the Creature: So that by this neglect, the Creatures are reſtrained from anſwering their chief end; they cannot pay any ſervice to God without Man; nor can Man without the Employment of his rational Faculties, render a Homage to God, any more than Beaſts can. This Engagement of our inward Power ſtands firm and unviolable, let the Modes of VVorſhip be what they will, or the Changes of them by the Sovereign Authority of God never ſo frequent; this could not expire or be changed, as long as the Nature of Man indured. As Man had not been capable of a Command for VVorſhip, unleſs he had been indued with ſpiritual Faculties; ſo he is not active in a true practice of Worſhip, unleſs they be employed by him in it. The Conſtitution of Man makes this manner of Worſhip perpetually obligatory; and the Obligation can never ceaſe, till Man ceaſe to be a Creature furniſht with ſuch Faculties:

In

In our worſhip therefore, if we would act like rational Creatures, we ſhould extend all the powers of our Souls to the utmoſt pitch, and eſſay to have apprehenſions of God, equal to the excellency of his Nature, which tho' we may attempt, we can never attain.

Reaſon 3. Without this engagement of our Spirits, no act is an act of Worſhip. True VVorſhip being an acknowledgment of God and the Perfections of his Nature, reſults only from the Soul, that being only capable of knowing God and thoſe Perfections, which are the Object and Motive of VVorſhip. The poſture of the Body is but to teſtifie the inward temper and affection of the Mind: If therefore it teſtifies what it is not, 'tis a Lie and no Worſhip: The cringes a Beaſt may be taught to make to an Altar, may as well be called Worſhip, ſince a Man thinks as little of that God he pretends to honour, as the Beaſt doth of the Altar to which he bows. Worſhip is a reverent remembrance of God, and giving ſome honour to him with the intention of the Soul: It cannot juſtly have the name of VVorſhip, that wants the eſſential part of it: 'Tis an aſcribing to God the glory of his Nature, an owning ſubjection and obedience to him as our Soveraign Lord: This is as impoſſible to be performed without the Spirit, as that there can be life and motion in a Body without a Soul: 'Tis a drawing near to God, not in regard of his eſſential preſence; ſo all things are near to God, but in an aknowledgment of his excellency, which is an act of the Spirit; without this, the worſt of Men in a place of Worſhip, are as near to God as the beſt. The neceſſity of the conjunction of our Soul, ariſeth from the nature of Worſhip, which being the moſt ſerious thing we can be employed in, the higheſt converſe with the higheſt object, requires the choiceſt temper of Spirit in the performance. That cannot be an act of Worſhip, which is not an act of Piety and Vertue; but there is no act of Vertue done by the Members of the Body, without the concurrence of the Powers of the Soul. We may as well call the preſence of a dead Carcaſs in a place of Worſhip, an act of Religion, as the preſence of a living Body without an intent Spirit: The ſeparation of the Soul from one is Natural, the other Moral; that renders the Body lifeleſs, but this renders the Act loathſome to God: As the Being of the Soul gives life to the Body, ſo the operation of the Soul gives life to the Actions: As he cannot be a Man that wants the form of a Man, a rational Soul, ſo that cannot be a VVorſhip that wants an eſſential part, the act of the Spirit: God will not vouchſafe any acts of Man ſo noble a Title without the requiſite qualifications, Hoſ. 5.6. They ſhall go with their Flocks and their Herds, to ſeek the Lord, &c. A multitude of Lambs and Bullocks for Sacrifice, to appeaſe Gods anger: God would not give it the Title of VVorſhip, tho' Inſtituted by himſelf, when it wanted the qualities of ſuch a ſervice: The Spirit of VVhoredom was in the midſt of them, *v.*4. In the judgment of our Saviour, it is a vain Worſhip, when the Traditions of Men are taught for the Doctrines of God *; and no leſs vain muſt it be, when the Bodies of Men are preſented to ſupply the place of their Spirits. As an omiſſion of Duty is a contempt of Gods Soveraign Authority, ſo the omiſſion of the manner of it, is a contempt of it, and of his amiable excellency; and that which is a contempt and mockery, can lay no juſt claim to the Title of VVorſhip.

*Mat.15.9.

Reaſon 4. There is in Worſhip, an approach of God to Man. It was Inſtituted to this purpoſe, that God might give out his bleſſings to Man: And ought not our Spirits to be prepared and ready to receive his communications? VVe are in ſuch acts, more peculiarly in his preſence. In the Iſraelites hearing the Law, it is ſaid God was to come among them *: Then, Men are ſaid to ſtand before the Lord *: God before whom I ſtand, that is, whom I VVorſhip: And therefore when Cain forſook the VVorſhip of God ſettled in his Fathers Family, he is ſaid to go out from the preſence of the Lord, Gen.4.16. God is eſſentially preſent in the World; graciouſly preſent in his Church. The name of the Evangelical City is Jehovah Shammah *, the Lord is there. God is more graciouſly preſent in the Evangelical Inſtitutions, than in the Legal: He loves the Gates of Zion, more than all the dwellings of Jacob *: His Evangelical Law and VVorſhip which was to go forth from Zion, as the other did from Sinai, *Mic.*4.2. God delights to approach to Men, and converſe with them in the VVorſhip Inſtituted in the Goſpel, more than in all the dwellings of Jacob. If God be graciouſly preſent, ought not we to be ſpiritually preſent? A liveleſs Carcaſs ſervice, becomes not ſo high and delectable a preſence as this: 'Tis to thruſt him from us, not invite him to us: 'Tis to practiſe in the Ordinances, what the Prophet predicts concerning Mens uſage of our Saviour, *Iſa.*53.2. There is no form, no comelineſs, nor beauty, that we ſhould deſire him. A ſlightneſs in VVorſhip, reflects upon the excellency of the object of VVorſhip. God and his VVorſhip are ſo link'd together, that whoſoever thinks the one not worth his inward care, eſteems the other not worth his inward affection. How unworthy a ſlight is it of God, who proffers the opening his Treaſure, the re-impreſſing his Image, conferring his Bleſſings, admits us into his preſence, when he hath no need for us, who hath millions of Angels to attend him in his Court, and celebrate his Praiſe? He that VVorſhips not God with his Spirit, regards not Gods preſence in his Ordinances, and ſlights the great end of God in them, and that Perfection he may attain by them. VVe can only expect, what God hath promiſed to give, when we render to him what he hath commanded us to preſent. If we put off God with a Shell, he will put us off with a Husk. How can we expect his heart, when we do not give him ours? or hope for the bleſſing needful for us, when we render not the glory due to him? It cannot be an advantageous VVorſhip, without ſpiritual Graces; for thoſe are uniting, and Union is the ground of all Communion.

*Exod.19. *v.*10,11. *Deut.10.8 Kings 1.17.

Reaſon 5. To have a ſpiritual Worſhip is Gods end, in the reſtoration of the Creature; both in Redemption by his Son, and Sanctification by his Spirit. A fitneſs for ſpiritual Offerings, was the end of the Coming of Chriſt *; He ſhould purge them, as gold and ſilver by fire, a ſpirit burning up their droſs, melting them into a holy compliance with, and ſubmiſſion to God. To what purpoſe? That they may offer to the Lord an Offering in Righteouſneſs; a pure Offering from a purified Spirit: He came to bring us to God * in ſuch a Garb, as that we might be fit to converſe with him. Can we be thus, without a fixedneſs of our Spirits on him?

* Mal.3.3.

* 1Pet.3.18

The offering of ſpiritual Sacrifices, is the end of making any a ſpiritual Habitation, and a holy Prieſthood *. VVe can no more be VVorſhipers of God, without a VVorſhipers nature, than a Man be a Man without Humane Nature. As Man was at firſt created for the Honour and VVorſhip of God, ſo the deſign of reſtoring that Image, which was defaced by ſin, tends to the ſame end. VVe are not brought to God by Chriſt, nor are our ſervices preſented to him, if they be without our Spirits. VVould any Man that undertakes to bring another to a Prince, introduce him in a ſlovenly and ſordid habit, ſuch a garb that he knows hateful to him? Or bring the Cloaths or Skin of a Man ſtuft with ſtraw, inſtead of the Perſon? To come with our skins before God without our ſpirits, is contrary to the deſign of God, in Redemption and Regeneration.

* 1 Pet.2.5

If a carnal VVorſhip would have pleaſed God, a carnal heart would have ſerved his turn, without the expence of his Spirit in Sanctification: He beſtows upon Man a ſpiritual nature, that he may return to him a ſpiritual ſervice: He enlightens the Underſtanding, that he may have a rational ſervice; and new moulds the VVill, that he may have a voluntary ſervice. As it is the Milk of the VVord wherewith he feeds us, ſo it is the ſervice of the Word wherewith we muſt glorifie him. So much as there is of confuſedneſs in our Underſtanding, ſo much of ſtarting and levity in our VVills; ſo much of ſlipperineſs and skipping in our affections, ſo much is abated of the due qualities of the VVorſhip of God, and ſo much we fall ſhort of the end of Redemption and Sanctification.

Reaſon 6. A ſpiritual Worſhip is to be offered to God, becauſe no Worſhip but that can be acceptable. VVe can never be ſecured of acceptance without it; he being a Spirit, nothing but the worſhip in Spirit can be ſuitable to him: VVhat is unſuitable cannot be acceptable; there muſt be ſomething in us, to make our ſervices capable of being preſented by Chriſt for an actual acceptation. No ſervice is acceptable to God by Jeſus Chriſt, but as it is a ſpiritual Sacrifice, and offered by a ſpiritual heart, 1 *Pet.*2.5. The Sacrifice is firſt ſpiritual, before it be acceptable to God by Chriſt: When it is an offering in righteouſneſs, it is then, and only then, pleaſant to the Lord, *Mal.*3.3,4. No Prince would accept a gift that is unſuitable to his Majeſty, and below the condition of the Perſon that preſents it: Would he be pleaſed with a Bottle of Water for drink, from one that hath his Cellar full of Wine? How unacceptable muſt that be, that is unſuitable to the Divine Majeſty? And what can be more unſuitable, than a withdrawing the operations of our Souls from him, in the oblation of our Bodies? We as little glorifie God, as God, when we give him only a corporeal Worſhip, as the Heathen did, when they repreſented him in a corporeal ſhape *; one as well as the other denies his ſpiritual nature: This is worſe, for had it been lawful to repreſent God to the eye, it could not have been done, but by a bodily figure ſuted to the ſenſe; but ſince it is neceſſary to Worſhip him, it cannot be by a corporeal attendance, without the operation of the ſpirit. A ſpiritual frame is more pleaſing to God, than the higheſt exterior adornments; than the greateſt gifts, and the higheſt Prophetical Illumination. The glory of the ſecond Temple exceeded the glory of the firſt *: As God accounts the ſpiritual glory of Ordinances moſt beneficial for us, ſo our ſpiritual attendance upon Ordinances is moſt pleaſing to him: He that offers the greateſt ſervices without it, offers but fleſh, *Hoſ.*8.13. They Sacrifice Fleſh for the Sacrifices of my Offerings, but the Lord accepts them not, Spiritual frames are the Soul of Religious Services; all other carriages without them, are contemptible to this Spirit: We can never lay claim to that promiſe of God, none ſhall ſeek my face in vain: We affect a vain ſeeking of him, when we want a due temper of Spirit for him: And vain Spirits ſhall have vain returns: 'Tis more contrary to the nature of Gods Holineſs to have communion with ſuch, than it is contrary to the nature of Light to have communion with Darkneſs.

*Rom.1.21

*Hag.2.8,9

To make uſe of this,

Uſe 1. Firſt it ſerves for information.

1. If Spiritual Worſhip be required by God; How ſad is it for them that are ſo far from giving God a ſpiritual Worſhip, that they render him no Worſhip at all? I ſpeak not of the neglect of publick, but of private, when Men preſent not a devotion to God from one years end to the other. The Speech of our Saviour, that we muſt Worſhip God in Spirit and in Truth, implies that a Worſhip is due to him from every one: That is the common impreſſion upon the Conſciences of all Men in the World, if they have not by ſome conſtant courſe in groſs ſins, hardned their Souls, and ſtifled thoſe natural ſentiments. There was never a Nation in the World, without ſome kind of Religion; and no Religion was ever without ſome modes, to teſtifie a devotion. The Heathens had their Sacrifices and Purifications; and the Jews, by Gods order, had their Rites, whereby they were to expreſs their Allegiance to God.

Conſider,

1. Worſhip is a duty incumbent upon all Men. 'Tis a homage Mankind owes to God, under the relation wherein he ſtands obliged to him: 'Tis a prime and immutable Juſtice to own our Allegiance to him. 'Tis as unchangeable a truth that God is to be Worſhiped, as that God is: He is to be Worſhiped as God; as Creator; and therefore by all, ſince he is the Creator of all, the Lord of all, and all are his Creatures, and all are his Subjects. Worſhip is founded upon Creation, *Pſal.*100.2.3. 'Tis due to God for himſelf, and his own eſſential excellency, and therefore due from all: 'Tis due upon the account of Mans nature: The humane rational nature is the ſame in all. Whatſoever is due to God upon the account of Mans Nature, and the Natural obligations he hath laid upon Man, is due from all Men, becauſe they all enjoy the benefits which are proper to their nature.

Man in no ſtate was exempted, nor can be exempted from it: In Paradiſe he had his Sabbaths and Sacraments; Man therefore diſſolves the obligation of a reaſonable Nature, by neglecting the Worſhip of God.

Religion is in the firſt place to be minded. As ſoon as Noah came out of the Ark, he contrived not a Habitation for himſelf, but an Altar for the Lord, to acknowledge him the Author of his preſervation from the Deluge *: And whereſoever Abraham came, his firſt buſineſs was to erect an Altar, and pay his Arrears of gratitude to God, before he ran upon the ſcore for new Mercies *: He left a teſtimony of VVorſhip where ever he came.

*Gen.8.20.

*Gen.12.7. Gen. 13. v. 4.18.

2. Wholly therefore to neglect it, is a high degree of Atheiſm. He that calls not upon God, ſaith in his heart there is no God; and ſeems to have the ſentiments of natural Conſcience, as to God, ſtifled in him *: It muſt ariſe from a conceit that there is no God, or that we are equal to him, adoration not being due from perſons of an equal ſtate; or that God is unable, or unwilling to take notice of the adoring acts of his Creatures. VVhat is any of theſe but an undeifying the ſupream Majeſty? VVhen we lay aſide all thoughts of paying any homage to him, we are in a fair way opinionatively to deny him, as much as we practically diſown him. VVhere there is no knowledge of God, that is, no acknowledgment of God, a gap is opened to all Licentiouſneſs *: And that by degrees brawns the Conſcience, and raſeth out the ſenſe of God. Thoſe forſake God that forget his Holy Mountain *: They do not practically own him as the Creator of their Souls or Bodies. 'Tis the ſin of Cain, who turning his back upon VVorſhip, is ſaid to go out from the preſence of the Lord *. Not to VVorſhip him with our Spirits, is againſt his Law of Creation: Not to VVorſhip him at all, is againſt his act of Creation: Not to VVorſhip him in Truth is Hypocriſie: Not to VVorſhip him at all is Atheiſm, whereby we render our ſelves worſe than the Worms in the Earth, or a Toad in a Ditch.

*Hoſ.4.1,2.

*Iſa.65.11.

*Gen.4.16.

3. To perform a Worſhip to a falſe God, or to the true God, in a falſe manner, ſeems to be leſs a ſin than to live in perpetual neglects of it. Tho' it be directed to a falſe Object inſtead of God, yet it is under the notion of a God, and ſo is an acknowledgment of ſuch a Being as God in the VVorld; whereas the total neglect of any VVorſhip, is a practical denying of the exiſtence of any ſupream Majeſty.

VVhoſoever conſtantly omits a Publick and Private VVorſhip, tranſgreſſes againſt an univerſally received dictate; for all Nations have agreed in the common notion notion of worſhiping God, tho' they have diſagreed in the ſeveral Modes and Rites whereby they would teſtifie that adoratiou. By a worſhip of God, tho' ſuperſtitious, a veneration and reverence of ſuch a Being is maintained in the VVorld; whereas by a total neglect of VVorſhip, he is vertually diſowned and diſcarded, if not from his Exiſtence, yet from his Providence and Government of the VVorld: All the mercies we breath in are denied to flow from him. A fooliſh VVorſhip owns Religion, tho' it beſpatters it. As if a ſtranger coming into a Country miſtakes a Subject for the Prince, and pays that reverence to the Subject, which is due to the Prince, tho' he miſtakes the object, yet he owns an Authority; or if he pays any reſpect to the true Prince of that Country, after the mode of his own, tho' appearing ridiculous in the place where he is, he owns the Authority of the Prince; whereas the omiſſion of all reſpect would be a contempt of Majeſty: And therefore the Judgments of God have been more ſignal upon the Sacrilegious contemners of VVorſhip among the Heathens, than upon thoſe that were diligent and devout in their falſe VVorſhip; and they generally owned the bleſſings received, to the preſervation of a ſenſe, and worſhip of a Deity among them. Tho' ſuch a worſhip be not acceptable to God, and every Man is bound to offer to God a devotion agreeable to his own mind, yet it is commendable, not as worſhip, but as it ſpeaks an acknowledgment of ſuch a Being as God in his power in Creation, and his beneficence in his Providence.

VVell then, omiſſions of worſhip are to be avoided. Let no Man execute that upon himſelf, which God will pronounce at laſt as the greateſt miſery, and bid God depart from him, who will at laſt be loath to hear God bid him depart from him. Tho' Man hath natural ſentiments that God is to be Worſhiped, yet having an hoſtility in his nature, he is apt to neglect, or give it him in a ſlight manner. He therefore ſets a particular mark and notice of attention upon the fourth Command, Remember thou keep holy the Sabbath day. Corrupt nature is apt to neglect the worſhip of God, and ſlag in it: This Command therefore which concerns his worſhip, he fortifies with ſeveral reaſons.

Nor let any neglect worſhip, becauſe they cannot find their hearts ſpiritual in it. The further we are from God, the more carnal ſhall we be. No man can expect heat by a diſtance from the Sun beams, or other means of warmth. Though God commanded a circumciſed heart in the Jewiſh ſervices; yet he did not warrant a neglect of the outward Teſtimonies of Religion he had then appointed; he expected according to his Command, that they ſhould offer the Sacrifices & practiſe the Legal Purifications he had commanded; he would have them diligently obſerved, tho' he had declared that he impoſed them only for a time. And our Saviour ordered the practice of thoſe poſitive Rites as long as the Law remained unrepealed, as in the Caſe of the *Leper. 'Tis an injuſtice to refuſe the offering our ſelves to God according to the manner he hath in his Wiſdom preſcribed and required.

* Mark 14. v. 4.

If ſpiritual worſhip be required by God, then

2. It informs us, *that diligence in outward worſhip is not to be reſted in. Men may attend all their days on worſhip, with a juiceleſs heart and unquickned frame, and think to compenſate the neglect of the manner with abundance of the matter of ſervice. Outward expreſſions are but the Badges and Livery of ſervice, not the ſervice it ſelf. As the ſtrength of ſin lies in the inward frame of the heart; ſo the ſtrength of worſhip in the inward complexion and temper of the Soul. What do a thouſand ſervices avail, without cutting the throat of our carnal affections? What are loud Prayers, but as ſounding Braſs and tinkling Cymbals, without Divine Charity? A Phariſaical diligence in outward forms without inward Spirit, had no better a title vouchſafed by our Saviour, than that of hypocritical. God deſires not Sacrifices, nor delights in burnt Offerings: Shadows are not to be offered inſtead of ſubſtance. God required the heart of man for it ſelf; but commanded outward Ceremonies, as ſubſervient to inward worſhip, and goads and ſpurs unto it: They were never appointed as the ſubſtance of Religion, but auxiliaries to it. What value had the Offering of the Human Nature of Chriſt been of, if he had not had a Divine Nature to qualifie him to be the Prieſt? And what is the Oblation of our Bodies, without a Prieſtly act of the Spirit in the preſentation of it? Could the Iſraelites have called themſelves Worſhipers of God according to his Order, if they had brought a thouſand Lambs that had died in a Ditch, or been killed at home? They were to be brought living to the Altar; the Blood ſhed at the foot of it: A thouſand Sacrifices killed without, had not been ſo valuable as one brought alive to the place of Offering: One ſound Sacrifice is better than a thouſand rotten ones. As God took no pleaſure in the Blood of Beaſts without its relation to the Antitype; ſo he takes no pleaſure in the outward Rites of worſhip, without Faith in the Redeemer. To offer a Body with a ſapleſs Spirit, is a Sacriledge of the ſame nature with that of the Iſraelites when they offered dead Beaſts. A man without ſpiritual worſhip is dead whiles he worſhips, though by his diligence in the externals of it, he may like the Angel of the Church of Sardis, *have a name to live. What ſecurity can we expect from a multitude of dead ſervices? What weak ſhields are they againſt the holy Eye, and revenging Wrath of God? What man, but one out of his wits, would ſollicite a dead man to be his Advocate or Champion?

* Rev. 3. 1.

Diligence in outward worſhip is not to be reſted in.

Uſe II. Shall be for Examination: Let us try our ſelves concerning the manner of our worſhip. We are now in the end of the World, and the dregs of time; wherein the Apoſtle predicts, there may be much of a *form, and little of the power of Godlineſs: And therefore it ſtands us in hand to ſearch into our ſelves, whether it be not thus with us? Whether there be as much reverence in our Spirits, as there may be devotion in our countenances and outward carriages.

* 2 Tim. 3. v. 1, 5.

1. How therefore are our hearts prepared to worſhip? Is our diligence greater, to put our hearts in an adoring poſture, than our bodies in a decent garb? Or are we content to have a muddy Heart, ſo we may have a dreſt Carcaſs? To have a Spirit a Cage of unclean Birds, while we wipe the filth from the outſide of the Platter, is no better than a Phariſaical devotion, and deſerves no better a name, than that of a whited Sepulcher.

Do we take opportunities to excite and quicken our Spirits to the performance, and cry aloud with David, awake, awake, my glory? Are not our hearts aſleep when Chriſt knocks; when we hear the voice of God, ſeek my face; Do we anſwer him with warm reſolutions, *thy face Lord we will ſeek? Do we comply with ſpiritual motions, and ſtrike whiles the Iron is hot? Is there not more of reluctancy, than readineſs? Is there a quick riſing of the Soul in reverence to the motion, as Eglon to Ehud; or a ſullen hanging the head at the firſt approach of it? Or if our hearts ſeem to be engaged, and on fire; What are the motives that quicken that fire? Is it only the Blaſt of a natural Conſcience; fear of Hell, deſires of Heaven as abſtracted from God? Or is it an affection to God; an obedient will to pleaſe him; longings to enjoy him, as a holy and ſanctifying God in his Ordinances, as well as a bleſſed and glorified God in Heaven?

* Pſal. 27. 8

* Daille melange. des Sermons Ser. 2.

What do we expect in our approaches to him? That which may make Divine Impreſſions upon us, and more exactly conform us to the Divine Nature? Or do we deſign nothing but an empty formality, a rowling eye, and a filling the Air with a few words, without any openings of heart to receive the incomes, which according to the nature of the duty might be conveyed to us? Can this be a ſpiritual worſhip? The Soul then cloſely waits upon him, when its expectation is only from him, Pſal. 62. 6. Are our hearts ſeaſoned with a ſenſe of ſin; a ſight of our ſpiritual wants; raiſed notions of God; glowing affections to him; ſtrong appetite after a ſpiritual fulneſs? Do we rouze up our ſleepy Spirits, and make a Covenant with all that is within us to attend upon him? So much as we want of this, ſo much we come ſhort of a ſpiritual worſhip: In Pſal. 57. 7. My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed. David would fix his heart, before he would engage in a praiſing act of worſhip: He appeals to God about it, and that with doubling the expreſſion, as being certain of an inward preparedneſs. Can we make the ſame appeals in a fixation of Spirit?

2. How are our hearts fixed upon him? How do they cleave to him in the duty? Do we reſign our Spirits to God, and make them an intire Holocauſt, a whole burnt-offering in his worſhip? O do we not willingly admit carnal thoughts to mix themſelves with ſpiritual duties, and faſten our minds to the Creature, under pretences of directing them to the Creator? Do we not paſs a meer Complement on God, by ſome ſuperficial act of Devotion; while ſome covetous, envious, ambitious, voluptuous imagination may poſſeſs our minds? Do we not invert God's order, and worſhip a Luſt inſtead of God with our Spirit, that ſhould not have the leaſt ſervice, either from our Souls or Bodies, but with a ſpiritual diſdain be ſacrificed to the juſt indignation of God? How often do we fight againſt his will, while we cry hail Maſter; inſtead of Crucifying our own thoughts, Crucifying the Lord of our Lives; Our outward carriage plauſible, and our inward ſtark naught? Do we not often regard iniquity more than God in our hearts, in a time of worſhip? Roul ſome filthy imagination as a ſweet morſel under our tongues, and taſte more ſweetneſs in that, than in God? Do not our Spirits ſmell rank of Earth, while we offer to Heaven, and have we not hearts full of thick Clay, as their hands were full of blood *? When we ſacrifice, do we not wrap up our Souls in communion with ſome ſordid fancy, when we ſhould entwine our Spirits about an amiable God? While we have ſome fear of him, may we not have a love to ſomething elſe above him? This is to worſhip, or ſwear by the Lord, and by Malchon *. How often doth an Apiſh-fancy render a ſervice inwardly ridiculous, under a grave outward poſture; skipping to the Shop, Ware-houſe, Compting-houſe in the ſpace of a ſhort Prayer? And we are before God as a Babel, a confuſion of internal Languages; and this in thoſe parts of worſhip which are in the right uſe moſt agreeable to God; profitable for our ſelves; ruinous to the Kingdom of Sin and Satan, and means to bring us into a cloſer communion with the Divine Majeſty: Can this be a ſpiritual worſhip?

* Iſa. 1. 15.

* Zeph. 1. 5

3. How do we act our Graces in worſhip? Though the Inſtrument be ſtrung, if the ſtrings be not wound up, what melody can be the iſſue? All readineſs and alacrity diſcover a ſtrength of Nature, and a readineſs in Spirituals, diſcovers a ſpirituality in the heart. As unaffecting thoughts of God are not ſpiritual thoughts; ſo unaffecting addreſſes to God, are not ſpiritual addreſſes. Well then, what awakenings, and elevations of Faith and Love have we? What ſtrong outflowings of our Souls to him? What indignation againſt Sin? What admirations of redeeming Grace? How low have we brought our corruptions to the foot-ſtool of Chriſt, to be made his conquered Enemies? How ſtraitly have we claſp our Faith about the Croſs and the Throne of Chriſt, to become his intimate Spouſe? Do we in hearing hang upon the Lips of Chriſt; in prayer take hold of God, and will not let him go; in confeſſions rent the Caul of our hearts, and indite our Souls before him with a deep humility? Do we act more by a ſoring love than a drooping fear? So far as our Spirits are ſervile, ſo far they are legal and carnal; ſo much as they are free and ſpontaneous, ſo much they are Evangelical and Spiritual. As men under the Law are ſubject to the conſtraint of Bondage * all their life-time, in all their worſhip; ſo under the Goſpel they are under a conſtraint of Love *: How then are believing affections exerciſed, which are always accompanied with holy fear, a fear of his goodneſs that admits us into his preſence, and a fear to offend him in our act of worſhip? So much as we have of forced or feeble affection, ſo much we have of carnality.

* Heb. 2. 15

* 2 Cor. 5. v. 14.

4. How do we find our hearts after worſhip? By an after carriage, we may judge of the ſpirituality of it.

1. How are we as to inward ſtrength? When a worſhip is ſpiritually performed, grace is more ſtrengthened, corruption more mortified: The Soul, like Sampſon after his awakening, goes out with a renewed ſtrength: As the inward man is renewed day by day, that is, every day; ſo it is renewed in every worſhip. Every ſhower makes the graſs and fruit grow in good ground where the root is good, and the weeds where the ground is naught: The more prepared the heart is to obedience in other duties after worſhip, the more evidence there is that it hath been ſpiritual in the exerciſe of it. 'Tis the end of God in every diſpenſation, as in that of John Baptiſt; To make ready a People prepared for the Lord *. When the heart is by worſhip prepared for freſh acts of obedience, and hath a more exact watchfulneſs againſt the incroachments of Sin. As carnal men after worſhip ſprout up in ſpiritual wickedneſs; ſo do ſpiritual worſhippers in ſpiritual graces: Spiritual fruits, are a ſign of a ſpiritual frame. When men are more prone to ſin after duty, 'tis a ſign there was but little communion with God in it, and a greater ſtrength of ſin, becauſe ſuch an act is contrary to the end of worſhip, which is the ſubduing of ſin. 'Tis a ſign the Phyſick hath wrought well, when the ſtomach hath a better appetite to its appointed food; and worſhip hath been well performed, when we have a ſtronger inclination to other acts well pleaſing to God, and a more ſenſible diſtate of thoſe temptations we too much reliſht before. 'Tis a ſign of a good Concoction, when there is a greater ſtrength in the vitals of Religion, a more eager deſire to know God. When Moſes had been praying to God, and prevailed with him, he puts up a higher requeſt, to behold his Glory *. When the appetite ſtands ſtrong to fuller diſcoveries of God, it is a ſign there hath been a ſpiritual converſe with him.

* Lev. 1. 1

* Exod. 33. 13, 18.

2. How is it eſpecially as to Humility? The Phariſees Worſhip was without diſpute, carnal; and we find them not more humble after all their devotions, but over-grown with more weeds of Spiritual Pride; they performed them as their righteouſneſs. What men dare plead before God in his day, they plead before him in their hearts, in their day; but this men will do at the day of Judgment; we have propheſied in thy name, &c. Matth. 7. 11. They ſhew what tincture their ſervices left upon their Spirits: That which excludes them from any acceptation at the laſt day, excludes them from any eſtimation of being ſpiritual in this day. The carnal worſhipers charge God with injuſtice in not rewarding them, and claim an acceptation as a compenſation due to them, them, *Iſa.*58.3. Wherefore have we afflicted our Souls, and thou takeſt no knowledge? A ſpiritual Worſhiper looks upon his Duties with ſhame, as well as he doth upon his Sins with confuſion, and implores the mercy of God for the one as well as the other. In the Pſalm 143.*v.*2. the Prophet David after his ſupplications, begs of God not to enter into Judgment with him, and acknowledges any anſwer that God ſhould give him, as a fruit of his faithfulneſs to his promiſe, and not the merit of his worſhip. In thy faithfulneſs Pſal.143.2. anſwer me, &c. Whatſoever ſprings from a gracious Principle, and is the breath of the Spirit, leaves a Man more humble; whereas that which proceeds from a ſtock of Nature, hath the true blood of Nature running in the veins of it, viz. That Pride which is naturally derived from Adam. The breathing of the Divine Spirit is in every thing to conform us to our Redeemer; that being the main work of his Office, is his work in every particular Chriſtian act influenced by him. Now Jeſus Chriſt in all his actions was an exact Pattern of Humility. After the Inſtitution and Celebration of the Supper, a ſpecial act of Worſhip in the Church; tho' he had a ſenſe of all the Authority his Father had given him, yet he humbles himſelf to waſh his Diſciples feet *: And after * John 13. v.2,3,4. his ſublime Prayer, John 17. He humbles himſelf to the death, and offers himſelf to his Murderers, becauſe of his Fathers pleaſure, John 18.1. When he had ſpoken thoſe words, he went over the Brook Kedron into the Garden. What is the end of God in appointing Worſhip, is the end of a ſpiritual heart in offering it; not his own exaltation, but Gods glory: Glorifying the name of God, is the fruit of that Evangelical worſhip the Gentiles were in time to give to God, *Pſal.*86.9. All Nations which thou haſt made, ſhall come and worſhip before thee, O Lord, and ſhall glorifie thy Name. Let us examine then what debaſing our ſelves there is in a ſenſe of our own vileneſs, and diſtance from ſo glorious a ſpirit. Self-denial is the heart of all Goſpel-grace. Evangelical Spiritual worſhip cannot be without the ingredient of the main Evangelical Principle.

3. What delight is there after it? What pleaſure is there, and what is the Object of that pleaſure? Is it Communion we have had with God, or a Fluency in our ſelves? Is it ſomething which hath touched our hearts, or tickled our fancies? As the ſtrength of ſin is known by the delightful thoughts of it after the commiſſion, ſo is the ſpirituality of duty, by the object of our delightful remembrance after the performance. It was a ſign David was ſpiritual in the Worſhip of God in the Tabernacle, when he enjoyed it, becauſe he longed for the ſpiritual part of it, when he was exil'd from it: His deſires were not only for Liberty to re-viſit the Tabernacle, but to ſee the power and glory of God in the Sanctuary, as he Pſal.63.2. had ſeen it before *: His deſires for it could not have been ſo ardent, if his reflection upon what had paſt had not been delightful; nor could his Soul be poured out in him for the want of ſuch opportunities, if the remembrance of the converſe he had had with God, * Pſal.42.4. had not been accompanied with a delighful reliſh *.

Let us examine what delight we find in our ſpirits after Worſhip.

Uſe III. Is of Comfort. And 'tis very comfortable to conſider, that the ſmalleſt Worſhip with the Heart and Spirit, flowing from a Principle of Grace, is more acceptable than the moſt pompous veneration; yea, if the oblation were as precious as the whole Circuit of Heaven and Earth without it. That God, that values a Cup of cold Water given to any as his Diſciple, will value a ſincere ſervice above a coſtly Sacrifice. God hath his eye upon them that honour his nature; he would not ſeek ſuch to worſhip him, if he did not intend to accept ſuch a worſhip from them: When we therefore invoke him, and praiſe him, which are the prime parts of Religion, he will receive it as a ſweet ſavour from us, and overlook infirmities mixed with the graces.

The great matter of diſcomfort, and that which makes us queſtion the ſpirituality of Worſhip, is the many ſtarts of our Spirits, and rovings to other things.

For anſwer to which,

1. 'Tis to be confeſt, that theſe ſtarts are natural to us. Who is free from them? We bear in our own boſom a neſt of turbulent thoughts, which like buſie Gnats will be buzzing about us, while we are in our moſt inward and ſpiritual converſes. Many wild Beaſts lurk in a Mans heart, as in a cloſe and covert Wood, and ſcarce diſcover themſelves, but at our ſolemn Worſhip.

No Duty ſo holy, no Worſhip ſo ſpiritual, that can wholly priviledge us from them; they will jog us in our moſt weighty employments, that, as God ſaid to Cain, ſin lies at the door, and enters in, and makes a riot in our Souls. As it is ſaid of wicked Men, they cannot ſleep for multitude of thoughts *, ſo it *Eccl.5.12. may be of many a good Man, he cannot worſhip for multitude of thoughts. There will be ſtarts, and more in our Religious than Natural Imployments; 'tis natural to Man. Some therefore think, the Bells tied to Aarons Garments between the Pomegranates, were to warn the People, and recal their fugitive Minds to the preſent Service, when they heard the ſound of them, upon the leaſt motion of the High Prieſt. The Sacrifice of Abraham, the Father of the Faithful, was not exempt from the Fowls pecking at it. Zachariah himſelf was drowſie in the midſt of his Viſions, which being more amazing, might cauſe a heavenly intentneſs *, *Zach.*4.1. The Angel that talked with me, came *Gen.15.12 again and awaked me, as a Man is awaked out of ſleep. He had been rouzed up before, but he was ready to drop down again; his heart was gone, till the Angel jogged him. We may complain of ſuch imaginations, as Jeremiah doth of the Enemies of the Jews *, *Lam.4.19. Our Perſecuters are ſwifter than Eagles; they light upon us with as much ſpeed, as Eagles upon a Carcaſs; they purſue us upon the Mountain of Divine Inſtitution, and they lay wait for us in the Wilderneſs, in our retired addreſſes to God.

And this will be ſo while,

1. There is natural Corruption in us. There are in a Godly Man two contrary Principles, Fleſh and Spirit, which endeavour to hinder one anothers acts, and are always ſtirring upon the offenſive or defenſive part *. There is a body of death continually exhaling * Gal.5.17. its noyſom vapours: 'Tis a body of Death in our Worſhip, as well as in our Natures, it ſnaps our reſolutions aſunder *; it hinders us in the doing good, *Rom.7.19 and contradicts our Wills in the ſtirring up evil: This corruption being ſeated in all the faculties, and a conſtant Domeſtick in them, has the greater opportunity to trouble us, ſince it is by thoſe faculties that we ſpiritually tranſact with God; and it ſtirs more in the time of Religious Exerciſes, tho' it be in part mortified: As a wounded Beaſt tho' tired, will rage and ſtrive to its utmoſt, when the Enemy is about to fetch a blow at it. All Duties of Worſhip tend to the wounding of Corruption; and it is no wonder to feel the ſtriving of ſin, to defend it ſelf, and offend us, when we have our Arms in our hands to mortifie it, that the blow may be diverted which is directed againſt it.

The Apoſtles had aſpiring thoughts; and being perſwaded of an earthly Kingdom, expected a Grandeur in it: And tho' we find ſome appearance of it at other times, as when they were caſting out Devils, and gave an account of it to their Maſter, he gives them a kind of a check *, intimating that there was *Luk.10.20 ſome kind of evil in their rejoycing upon that account. Yet this never ſwell'd ſo high, as to break out into a quarrel who ſhould be greateſt, until they had the moſt moſt ſolemn Ordinance, the Lord's Supper, to quell it *. Our corruption is like Lime, which diſcovers not its fire by any ſmoke or heat, till you caſt Water, the Enemy of fire, upon it: Neither doth our natural corruption rage ſo much, as when we are uſing means to quench and deſtroy it.

*Luke 22. v. 24.

2. While there is a Devil, and we in his Precinct. As he accuſeth us to God, ſo he diſturbs us in our ſelves: He is a bold Spirit, and loves to intrude himſelf when we are converſing with God: We read, that when the Angels preſented themſelves before God, Satan comes among them *. Motions from Satan will thruſt themſelves in with our moſt raiſed and Evangelical frames: He loves to take off the edge of our Spirits from God: He acts but after the old rate: He from the firſt envied God an obedience from Man, and envied Man the felicity of communion with God: He is unwilling God ſhould have the honour of Worſhip, and that we ſhould have the fruit of it: He hath himſelf loſt it, and therefore is unwilling we ſhould enjoy it; and being ſubtil, he knows how to make impreſſions upon us ſuitable to our inbred corruptions, and aſſault us in the weakeſt part: He knows all the Avenues to get within us, (as he did in the temptation of Eve) and being a Spirit, he wants not a power to dart them immediately upon our fancy; and being a Spirit, and therefore active and nimble, he can ſhoot thoſe darts faſter than our weakneſs can beat them off: He is diligent alſo, and watcheth for his Prey, and ſeeks to devour our Services as well as our Souls, and ſnatch our beſt Morſels from us: We know he mixed himſelf with our Saviours retirements in the Wilderneſs, and endeavoured to Fly-blow his holy converſe with his Father in the preparation to his Mediatory work.

* Job 1. 6.

Satan is God's Ape, and imitates the Spirit in the Office of a Remembrancer: As the Spirit brings good thoughts and divine promiſes to mind, to quicken our Worſhip, ſo the Devil brings evil things to mind, and endeavours to faſten them in our Souls to diſturb us: And tho' all the fooliſh ſtarts we have in Worſhip are not purely his iſſue, yet being of kin to him, he claps his hands, and ſets them on like ſo many Maſtives to tear the Service in pieces.

And both thoſe diſtractions which ariſe from our own corruption, and from Satan, are moſt rife in Worſhip, when we are under ſome preſſing affliction. This ſeems to be David's Caſe, Pſal. 86. when in v. 11. he prays God to unite his heart to fear and worſhip his Name; he ſeems to be under ſome affliction, or fear of his Enemies: Oh free me from thoſe diſtractions of Spirit, and thoſe paſſions which ariſe in my Soul, upon conſidering the deſigns of my Enemies againſt me, and preſs upon me in my addreſſes to thee, and attendances on thee. Job alſo in his affliction complains, Job 17. 11. That his purpoſes were broken off: He could not make an even thread of thoughts and reſolutions; they were frequently ſnapt aſunder, like rotten Yarn when one is winding it up.

Good Men and Spiritual Worſhipers have lain under this trouble: Tho' they are a ſign of weakneſs of grace, or ſome obſtructions in the acting of ſtrong grace, yet they are not always evidences of a want of grace: What ariſeth from our own Corruption, is to be matter of Humiliation and Reſiſtance; what ariſeth from Satan, ſhould edge our minds to a noble conqueſt of them. If the Apoſtle did comfort himſelf with his diſapproving of what roſe from the natural ſpring of ſin within him, with his conſent to the Law, and diſſent from his Luſt, and charges it not upon himſelf, but upon the ſin that dwelt in him, with which he had broken off the former League, and was reſolved never to enter into Amity with it; by the ſame reaſon we may comfort our ſelves, if ſuch thoughts are undelighted in, and alienate not our hearts from the worſhip of God by all their buſie intruſions to interrupt us.

2. Theſe diſtractions (not allowed) may be occaſions by an holy improvement to make our hearts more ſpiritual after Worſhip, though they diſturb us in it, by anſwering thoſe ends for which we may ſuppoſe God permits them to invade us. And that is,

1. When they are occaſions to humble us.

(1.) For our carriage in the particular Worſhip. There is nothing ſo dangerous as Spiritual Pride; it deprived Devils and Men of the preſence of God, and will hinder us of the influence of God. If we had had raiſed and uninterrupted motions in Worſhip, we ſhould be apt to be lifted up; and the Devil ſtands ready to tempt us to Self-confidence. You know how it was with Paul *, his buffetings were occaſions to render him more ſpiritual than his raptures, becauſe more humble. God ſuffers thoſe wandrings, ſtarts and diſtractions, to prevent our ſpiritual Pride, which is as a Worm at the root of Spiritual Worſhip, and minds us of the duſty frame of our Spirits, how eaſily they are blown away; as he ſends ſickneſs to put us in mind of the ſhortneſs of our breath, and the eaſineſs to loſe it. God would make us aſhamed of our ſelves in his preſence, that we may own, that what is good in any duty, is meerly from his Grace and Spirit, and not from our ſelves. That with Paul we may cry out, by Grace we are what we are, and by Grace we do what we do: We may be hereby made ſenſible, that God can always find ſomething in our exacteſt Worſhip, as a ground of denying us the ſucceſsful fruit of it. If we cannot ſtand upon our Duties for Salvation, what can we bottom upon in our ſelves? If therefore they are occaſions to make us out of love with any Righteouſneſs of our own, to make us break our hearts for them, becauſe we cannot keep them out; If we mourn for them as our ſins, and count them our great afflictions, we have attained that brokenneſs which is a choice ingredient in a ſpiritual Sacrifice: Tho' we have been diſturbed by them, yet we are not robbed of the ſucceſs; we may behold an anſwer of our Worſhip in our Humiliation, in ſpite of all of them.

* 2 Cor. 12. from v. 1. to v. 7.

(2.) For the baſeneſs of our Nature. Theſe unſteady motions help us to diſcern that heap of vermin that breeds in our Nature. Would any Man think he had ſuch an averſeneſs to his Creator and Benefactor, ſuch an unſuitableneſs to him, ſuch an eſtrangedneſs from him, were it not for his inſpection into his diſtracted frames? God ſuffers this to hang over us as a Rod of Correction, to diſcover and fetch out the folly of our hearts. Could we imagine our Natures ſo highly contrary to that God who is ſo infinitely amiable, ſo deſirable an Object? Or that there ſhould be ſo much folly and madneſs in the heart, as to draw back from God in thoſe Services, which God hath appointed as Pipes through which to communicate his grace, to convey himſelf, his love and goodneſs, to the Creature? If therefore we have a deep ſenſe of, and ſtrong reflections upon our baſe Nature, and bewail that maſs of averſeneſs which lies there, and that fulneſs of irreverence towards the God of our Mercies, the Object of our Worſhip, 'tis a bleſſed improvement of our wandrings and diverſions. Certainly if any Iſraelite had brought a lame and rotten Lamb to be Sacrificed to God, and afterward had bewailed it, and laid open his heart to God in a ſenſible and humble confeſſion of it, that Repentance had been a better Sacrifice, and more acceptable in the ſight of God, than if he had brought a ſound and a living Offering.

(2.) When they are occaſions to make us prize Duties of Worſhip: When we argue, as rationally we may, that they are of ſingular uſe; ſince our corrupt Hearts and a Malicious Devil doth chiefly endeavour to hinder us from them: And that we find we have not

thoſe

thoſe gadding Thoughts when we are upon worldly Buſineſs, or upon any ſinful deſign which may diſhonour God and wound our Souls: This is a ſign Sin and Satan diſlike Worſhip; for he is too ſubtle a Spirit to oppoſe that which would further his Kingdom. As it is an Argument, The Scripture is the Word of God, becauſe the Wickedneſs of the World doth ſo much oppoſe it; ſo it is a Ground to believe the profitableneſs and excellency of Worſhip, becauſe Satan and our own unruly Hearts do ſo much interrupt us in it: If therefore we make this uſe of our croſs ſteps in Worſhip, to have a greater value for ſuch Duties, more affections to them, and deſires to be frequent in them: Our Hearts are growing ſpiritual, under the weights that would depreſs them to carnality.

(3.) When we take a riſe from hence, to have heavenly Admirations of the graciouſneſs of God. That he ſhould pity and pardon ſo many ſlight addreſſes to him, and give any gracious returns to us. Tho' Men have fooliſh ranging every Day, and in every Duty; yet free Grace is ſo tender as not to puniſh them, Gen. 8. 21. And the Lord ſmelt a ſweet ſavour; and the Lord ſaid in his Heart, I will not curſe the Ground for Man's ſake, for the imagination of Man's Heart is evil from his Youth. 'Tis obſervable, that this was juſt after a Sacrifice which Noah offer'd to God, v. 20. But probably not without Infirmities common to humane Nature, which may be grounded upon the Reaſon God gives; that tho' he had deſtroyed the Earth before, becauſe of the evil of Man's Imaginations, Gen. 6. 5. He ſtill found evil Imaginations; He doth not ſay in the heart of Cham, or others of Noah's Family; but in Man's Heart, including Noah alſo; who had both the Judgments of God upon the former World, and the Mercy of God in his own Preſervation before his Eyes; yet God ſaw evil imaginations rooted in the Nature of Man; and tho' it were ſo, yet he would be merciful: If therefore we can, after finding our Hearts ſo vagrant in Worſhip, have real frames of thankfulneſs that God hath ſpared us; and be heightned in our Admirations at Gods giving us any Fruit of ſuch a diſtracted Worſhip; we take advantage from them, to be raiſed into an Evangelical Frame, which conſiſts in the humble acknowledgments of the Grace of God. When David takes a review of thoſe Tumultuous Paſſions which had ruffled his Mind, and poſſeſſed him with unbe- *Pſ. 116. 11. lieving Notions of God in the Perſons of his Prophets *; how high doth his Soul mount in aſtoniſhment and * verſe 12. thankfulneſs to God for his Mercy *? Notwithſtanding his diſtruſt, God did graciouſly perform his promiſe, and anſwer his deſire; Then it is, What ſhall I render to the Lord? His Heart was more affected for it, becauſe it had been ſo paſſionate in former Diſtruſts. 'Tis indeed a ground of wondring at the patience of the Spirit of God, that he ſhould guide our Hearts when they are ſo apt to ſtart out; as it is the patience of a Maſter to guide the hand of his Scholar, while he mixes his Writing with many Blots. 'Tis not one or two infirmities the Spirit helps us in, *Ro. 8. 26. and helps over, but many *. 'Tis a ſign of a ſpiritual Heart, when he can take a riſe to bleſs God for the renewing and blowing up his Affections, in the midſt of ſo many incurſions from Satan to the contrary, and the readineſs of the Heart too much to comply with them.

(4.) When we take occaſion from thence to prize the mediation of Chriſt. The more Diſtractions jog us, the more need we ſhould ſee of going out to a Saviour by Faith. One part of our Saviour's Office is to ſtand between us and the infirmities of our Worſhip: As he is an Advocate, he preſents our Services, *1 Joh. 2. 1. and pleads for them and us *; for the ſins of our Duties, as well as for our other ſins. Jeſus Chriſt is an High-prieſt, appointed by God to take away the iniquities of our Holy Things, which was typified by Aaron's Plate upon his Mitre *. Were there no im- *Exod. 28. perfections, were there no creeping up of thoſe Frogs 36, 38. into our Minds, we would think our worſhip might merit acceptance with God upon its own Account: But if we behold our own weakneſs, that not a tear, a groan, a ſigh is ſo pure, but muſt have Chriſt to make it entertainable; that there is no Worſhip without thoſe Blemiſhes; and upon this, throw all our Services into the Arms of Chriſt for acceptance, and ſolicite him to put his Merits in the front, to make our Ciphers appear valuable; 'tis a ſpiritual act, the deſign of God in the Goſpel being to advance the Honour and Mediation of his Son. That is a ſpiritual and evangelical Act, which anſwers the evangelical Deſign. The deſign of Satan and our own Corruption is defeated, when thoſe Interruptions make us run ſwifter, and take faſter hold on the High-prieſt, who is to preſent our Worſhip to God, and our own Souls receive comfort thereby. Chriſt had Temptations offered to him by the Devil in his Wilderneſs Retirement; that from an experimental Knowledge, he might be able more compaſſionately to ſuccour us *; *Heb. 2. 18. we have ſuch aſſaults in our retir'd Worſhip eſpecially, that we may be able more highly to value him and his Mediation.

3. Let us not therefore be diſcouraged by thoſe Interruptions and Starts of our Hearts.

(1.) If we find in our ſelves a ſtrong reſiſtance of them. The Fleſh will be luſting; that cannot be hindred; yet if we do not fulfil the Luſts of it, riſe up at its command and go about its Work, we may be ſaid to walk in the Spirit *: We walk in the Spirit, if we * Gal. 5. 16. fulfil not the Luſts of the Fleſh, tho' there be a luſting of the Fleſh againſt the Spirit: So we worſhip in the Spirit, tho' there be carnal Thoughts ariſing if we do not fulfil them; tho' the ſtirring of them diſcovers ſome contrariety in us to God, yet the reſiſtance manifeſts, that there is a Principle of contrariety in us to them; that as there is ſomething of Fleſh that luſts againſt the Spirit, ſo there is ſomething of Spirit in worſhip which luſts againſt the Fleſh: We muſt take heed of omitting Worſhip, becauſe of ſuch In-rodes; and lying down in the mire of a total neglect. If our Spirits are made more lively and vigorous againſt them; If thoſe cold Vapours which have riſen from our Hearts, make us like a ſpring in the midſt of the cold Earth, more warm: There is in this caſe more reaſon for us to bleſs God, than to be diſcouraged. God looks upon it as the Diſeaſe, not the wilfulneſs of our Nature; as the weakneſs of the Fleſh, not the willingneſs of the Spirit. If we would ſhut the Door upon them, it ſeems they are unwelcome Company: Men do not uſe to lock their Doors upon thoſe they love; If they break in and diſturb us with their Impertinences, we need not be diſcomforted, unleſs we give them a ſhare in our affections, and turn our back upon God to entertain them: If their preſence makes us ſad, their flight would make us joyful.

(2.) If we find our ſelves excited to a ſtricter watch over our Hearts againſt them. As Travellers will be careful when they come to Places where they have been robb'd before, that they be not ſo eaſily ſurprized again. We ſhould not only lament when we have had ſuch fooliſh Imaginations in Worſhip breaking in upon us, but alſo bleſs God that we have had no more, ſince we have Hearts ſo fruitful of Weeds. We ſhould give God the Glory when we find our Hearts preſerved from theſe Intruders, and not boaſt of our ſelves, but return him our Praiſe for the Watch and Guard he kept over us to preſerve us from ſuch Thieves.

Let us not be diſcomforted; for as the greatneſs of our ſins upon our turning to God is no hindrance to our Juſtification, becauſe it doth not depend upon our Converſion as the meritorious Cauſe, but upon the infinite value of our Saviour's Satisfaction, which reaches the greateſt Sins as well as the leaſt; ſo the multitude of our bewail'd Diſtractions in Worſhip are not a hindrance to our Acceptation, becauſe of the uncontroulable Power of Chriſts Interceſſion.

Uſe III. is for Exhortation. Since Spiritual Worſhip is due to God, and the Father ſeeks ſuch to Worſhip him, how much ſhould we endeavour to ſatisfie the deſire and order of God, and act conformable to to the Law of our Creation, and the love of Redemption? Our end muſt be the ſame in Worſhip which was God's end in Creation and Redemption; to glorifie his Name, ſet forth his Perfections, and be rendred fit as Creatures and Redeemed Ones to partake of that Grace which is the Fruit of Worſhip. An Evangelical Diſpenſation requires a Spiritual Homage; to neglect therefore either the Matter or Manner of Goſpel Duties, is to put a ſlight upon Goſpel Priviledges. The manner of Duty is ever of more value than the matter; the Scarlet dye is more precious than the Cloath tinctured with it. God reſpects more the diſpoſition of the Sacrificer, than the multitude of the Sacrifices *. The Solemn Feaſts appointed by God, were but Dung as managed by the Jews, Mal. 2. 3. The Heart is often welcome without the Body, but the Body never grateful without the Heart; The inward acts of the Spirit require nothing from without to conſtitute them good in themſelves; but the outward acts of Devotion require inward acts to render them ſavoury to God. As the Goodneſs of outward acts conſiſts not in the acts themſelves, ſo the acceptableneſs of them reſults not from the acts themſelves, but from the inward frame, animating and quickning thoſe acts, as Blood and Spirits running thro' the Veins of a Duty to make it a living Service in the ſight of God. Imperfections in Worſhip hinder not God's Acceptation of it, if the Heart ſpirited by Grace be there to make it a ſweet Savour. The ſtench of burning Fleſh and Fat in the Legal Sacrifices might render them noyſom to the outward Senſes; but God ſmelt a ſweet Savour in them, as they reſpected Chriſt. When the Heart and Spirit are offered up to God, it may be a ſavoury Duty, tho' attended with unſavoury Imperfections. But a thouſand Sacrifices without a ſtamp of Faith, a thouſand Spiritual Duties with an Habitual Carnality, are no better than ſtench with God.

* Μεῖλλον τὸ διαμένειν πρὸς τὸ τῆν ψυχὴν τῶν θυομένων ποιεῖν. Porphyr. de Abſtinentia.

The Heart muſt be purged, as well as the Temple was by our Saviour, of the Thieves that would rob God of his due Worſhip. Antiquity had ſome Temples, wherein it was a crime to bring any Gold; therefore thoſe that came to Worſhip laid their Gold aſide, before they went into the Temple. We ſhould lay aſide our worldly and trading thoughts before we addreſs to Worſhip, Iſa. 26. 9. With my Spirit within me will I ſeek thee early. Let not our Minds be gadding Abroad, and exil'd from God and themſelves. It will be thus when the deſire of our Soul is to his Name and the remembrance of him, v. 8. When he hath given ſo great and admirable a Gift, as that of his Son, in whom are all things neceſſary to Salvation, Righteouſneſs, Peace and pardon of Sin, we ſhould manage the Remembrance of his Name in Worſhip with the cloſeſt unitedneſs of Heart, and the moſt Spiritual Affections. The Motion of the Spirit is the firſt act in Religion, to this we are obliged in every act: The Devil requires the Spirit of his Votaries; ſhould God have a leſs Dedication than the Devil?

Motives to back this Exhortation.

1. Not to give God our Spirit is a great Sin. 'Tis a mockery of God, not Worſhip, Contempt, not Adoration, whatever our outward Fervency or Proteſtations may be *. Every Alienation of our Hearts from him is a real Scorn put upon him: The Acts of the Soul are real, and more the Acts of the Man than the acts of the Body; becauſe they are the acts of the choiceſt part of Man, and of that which is the firſt Spring of all bodily Motions; 'tis the λόγος ἐνδιάθετος the Internal Speech whereby we muſt ſpeak with God: To give him therefore only an external Form of Worſhip without the Life of it, is a taking his Name in vain: We mock him, when we mind not what we are ſpeaking to him, or what he is ſpeaking to us; when the motions of our Hearts are contrary to the Motions of our Tongues; when we do any thing before him ſlovenly, impudently or raſhly. As in a Lutiniſt, it is abſurd to ſing one Tune and play another; ſo it is a foul thing to tell God one thing with our Lips, and think another thing with our Hearts; 'tis a ſin like that the Apoſtle chargeth the Heathens with, Rom. 1. 28. They like not to retain God in their Knowledge; their Stomachs are ſick while they are upon any Duty, and never leave working, till they have thrown up all the ſpiritual part of Worſhip, and rid themſelves of the thoughts of God, which are as unwelcom and troubleſom Gueſts to them: When Men behave themſelves in the ſight of God, as if God were not God; they do not only defame him, but deny him, and violate the unchangeable Perfections of the Divine Nature.

* Non valet proteſtatio contra factum, is a Rule in the Civil Law.

(1.) 'T*is againſt the Majeſty of God.* When we have not awful Thoughts of that great Majeſty to whom we addreſs; when our Souls cleave not to him, when we petition him in Prayer, or when he gives out his Orders in his Word. 'Tis a contempt of the Majeſty of a Prince, if whiles he is ſpeaking to us, we liſten not to him with Reverence and Attention, but turn our backs on him, to play with one of his Hounds, or talk with a Beggar; or while we ſpeak to him, to rake in a Dunghil. Solomon adviſeth us to keep our Foot when we go to the Houſe of God *. Our Affections ſhould be ſteady, and not ſlip away again; why? (v. 2.) Becauſe God is in Heaven, &c. He is a God of Majeſty; Earthly dirty Frames are unſuitable to the God of Heaven; low ſpirits are unſuitable to the moſt high. We would not bring our mean Servants or dirty Dogs in a Princes Preſence-Chamber; yet we bring not only our worldly, but our prophane Affections into God's Preſence: We give in this caſe, thoſe Services to God, which our Governour would think unworthy of him *. The more Excellent and Glorious God is, the greater Contempt of him it is to ſuffer ſuch fooliſh Affections to be Competitors with him for our Hearts: 'Tis a ſcorn put upon him to Converſe with a Creature while we are dealing with him; but a greater to converſe in our Thoughts and Fancies with ſome ſordid Luſt, which is moſt hateful to him: And the more aggravation it attracts, in that we are to apprehend him the moſt glorious Object ſitting upon his Throne in time of VVorſhip, and our ſelves ſtanding as vile Creatures before him, ſupplicating for our Lives, and the Conveyances of Grace and Mercy to our Souls: As if a grand Mutineer, inſtead of humble begging the Pardon of his offended Prince, ſhould preſent his Petition not only ſcribbled and blotted, but beſmeared with ſome loathſom Excrement. 'Tis unbecoming the Majeſty both of God, and the VVorſhip it ſelf, to preſent him with a Picture inſtead of Subſtance, and bring a VVorld of naſty Affections in our Hearts, and ridiculous Toys in our Heads before him, and VVorſhip with indiſpoſed and heedleſs Souls.

* Eccl. 5. 1.

* Mal. 1. 8.

Mal. 1. 14. He is a great King, therefore addreſs to him with Fear and Reverence.

(2.) 'Tis againſt the Life of God. Is a dead Worſhip proportioned to a Living God? The ſeparation of heavenly Affections from our Souls before God, makes them as much a Carcaſs in his ſight, as the divorce of the Soul makes the Body a Carcaſs; VVhen the Affections are ſeparated, VVorſhip is no longer

longer Worſhip, but a dead offering, a liveleſs bulk; for the Eſſence and Spirit of Worſhip is departed: Tho' the Soul be preſent with the Body in a way of information, yet it is not preſent in a way of affection, and this is the worſt; for it is not the ſeparation of the Soul from informing, that doth ſeparate a man from God, but the removal of our affections from him. If a man pretend an application to God, and ſleep and ſnore all the time; without queſtion ſuch a one did not worſhip: In a careleſs worſhip, the heart is morally dead while the eyes are open: The heart of the Spouſe * awaked whiles her eyes ſlept, and our hearts on the contrary ſleep while our eyes awake.

* Cant. 5. 2.

Our bleſſed Saviour hath died to purge our Conſciences from dead works and frames, that we may ſerve the *living God; to ſerve God as a God of Life. David's Soul cried and fainted for God under this conſideration*: But to preſent our Bodies without our Spirits, is ſuch an uſage of God, that implies he is a dead Image, not worthy of any but a dead and heartleſs ſervice: Like one of thoſe Idols the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of *, that have eyes and ſee not, ears and hear not, no life in it: Though it be not an objective Idolatry, becauſe the worſhip is directed to the true God; yet I may call it a ſubjective Idolatry, in regard of the frame, fit only to be preſented to ſome ſenſleſs ſtock. We intimate God to be no better than an Idol, and to have no more knowledge of us, and inſight into us, than an Idol can have: If we did believe him to be the living God, we durſt not come before him with ſervices ſo unſuitable to him, and reproaches of him.

* Heb. 9. 14

* Pſal. 42. 2.

* Pſ. 115. 5.

(3.) 'Tis againſt the Infiniteneſs of God. We ſhould worſhip God with thoſe boundleſs affections which bear upon them a Shadow or Image of his Infiniteneſs; ſuch are the deſires of the Soul which know no limits, but ſtart out beyond whatſoever enjoyment the heart of man poſſeſſes. No creeping Creature was to be offered to God in Sacrifice; but ſuch as had legs to run, or wings to fly: For us to come before God with a light creeping frame, is to worſhip him with the loweſt finite affections; as though any thing, though never ſo mean or torn, might ſatisfie an Infinite Being; as though a poor ſhallow Creature could give enough to God without giving him the heart, when indeed we cannot give him a worſhip proportionable to his Infiniteneſs, did our hearts ſwell as large as Heaven in our deſires for him in every act of our duties.

(4.) 'Tis againſt the Spirituality of God. God being a Spirit, calls for a worſhip in ſpirit; to withold this from him, implies him to be ſome groſs corporeal matter: As a Spirit, he looks for the heart; a wreſtling heart in Prayer; a trembling heart in the Word*: To bring nothing but the Body when we come to a Spiritual God to beg ſpiritual benefits, to wait for ſpiritual communications, which can only be diſpenſed to us in a ſpiritual manner, is unſuitable to the Spiritual Nature of God: A meer carnal ſervice implicitely denies his ſpirituality, which requires of us higher engagements tham meer corporeal ones.

* Iſa. 66. 2.

Worſhip ſhould be rational, not an imaginative ſervice, wherein is required the activity of our nobleſt faculties; and our fancy ought to have no ſhare in it, but in ſubſerviency to the more ſpiritual part of our Soul.

(5.) 'Tis againſt the Supremacy of God. As God is one, the only Soveraign; ſo our hearts ſhould be one, cleaving wholly to him, and undivided from him: In pretending to deal with him, we acknowledge his Deity and Soveraignty; but in with-holding our choiceſt faculties and affections from him, and the ſtarting of our minds to vain Objects, we intimate their equality with God, and their right as well as his to our hearts and affections: 'Tis as if a Princeſs ſhould commit Adultery with ſome baſe Scullion, while ſhe is before her Husband; which would be a plain denial of his ſole right to her. It intimates that other things are ſuperiot to God; they are true Soveraigns that ingroſs our hearts. If a Man were addreſſing himſelf to a Prince, and ſhould in an inſtant turn his back upon him, upon a beck or nod from ſome inconſiderable perſon; is it not an evidence, that that perſon that invited him away, hath a greater Soveraignty over him, than that Prince to whom he was applying himſelf? And do we not diſcard Gods abſolute Dominion over us, when at the leaſt beck of a corrupt inclination, we can diſpoſe of our hearts to it, and alienate them from God? As they in Ezek. 33. 32. left the ſervice of God for the ſervice of their Covetouſneſs; which evidenced that they owned the Authority of ſin, more than the Authority of God: This is not to ſerve God as our Lord and Abſolute Maſter, but to make God ſerve our turn, and ſubmit his Soveraignty to the Supremacy of ſome unworthy affection. The Creature is preferred before the Creator, when the heart runs moſt upon it in time of Religious Worſhip, and our own carnal Intereſt ſwallows up the affections that are due to God: 'Tis an Idol ſet up in the heart * in his ſolemn preſence, and attracts that Devotion to it ſelf, which we only owe to our Soveraign Lord; and the more baſe and contemptible that is to which the Spirit is devoted, the more contempt there is of Gods Dominion. Judas his kiſs with a Hail Maſter, was no act of worſhip, or an owning his Maſters Authority; but a deſigning the ſatisfaction of his Covetouſneſs in the betraying of him.

* Ezek. 14. v. 4.

(6.) 'Tis againſt the Wiſdom of God. God as a God of order, has put earthly things in ſubordination to heavenly; and we by this unworthy carriage invert this order, and put heavenly things in ſubordination to earthly; in placing mean and low things in our hearts, and bringing them ſo placed into Gods preſence, which his Wiſdom at the Creation put under our feet. A ſervice without ſpiritual affections, is a Sacrifice of Fools, Eceleſ. 5. 1. which have loſt their Brains and Underſtandings: A fooliſh Spirit is very unſuitable to an infinitely wiſe God: Well may God ſay of ſuch a one, as Achiſh of David, who ſeemed mad; Why have you brought this Fellow to play the Mad-man in my preſence? Shall this Fellow come into my Houſe? 2 Sam. 21. 15.

(7.) 'Tis againſt the Omniſciency of God. To carry it fair without, and impertinently within, is as tho' God had not an all-ſeeing Eye that could pierce into the heart, and underſtand every motion of the inward faculties; as though God were eaſily cheated with an outward fawning ſervice, like an Apothecaries Box with a guilded title, that may be full of Cobwebs within: What is ſuch a carriage, but a deſign to deceive God; when with Herod we pretend to worſhip Chriſt, and intend to murder all the motions of Chriſt in our Souls? A heedleſs Spirit, an eſtrangement of our Souls, a giving the Reins to them to run out from the preſence of God to ſee every Reed ſhaken with the Wind, is to deny him to be Searcher of hearts, and the Diſcerner of ſecret thoughts; as though he could not look through us to the darkneſs and remoteneſs of our minds, but were an ignorant God, who might be put off with the worſt as well as the beſt in our Flock. If we did really believe there were a God of infinite Knowledge, who ſaw our frames, and whether we came dreſt with Wedding-garments ſuitable to the duties we are about to perform; ſhould we be ſo gariſh, and put him off with ſuch trivial ſtuff, without any reverence of his Majeſty?

(8.) 'Tis againſt the Holineſs of God. To alienate our Spirits, is to offend him while we pretend to worſhip him; though we may be mighty officious in the external part, yet our baſe and carnal affections make all our worſhip but as a heap of Dung; and who would not look upon it as an affront, to lay Dung before a Prince's Throne? Prov. 21. 27. The Sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination: How much more when he brings it with a wicked mind? A putrified Carcaſs under the Law, had not been ſo great an affront to the Holineſs of God, as a frothy unmelted heart, and a wanton fancy in a time of worſhip. God is ſo holy, that if we could offer the worſhip of Angels, and the quinteſcence of our Souls in his ſervice, it would be beneath his infinite purity: How unworthy then are they of him, when they are preſented not only without the ſenſe of our uncleanneſs, but ſullied with the fumes and exhalations of our corrupt affections, which are as ſo many Plague-ſpots upon our duties, contrary to the unſpotted Purity of the Divine Nature? Is not this an unworthy conceit of God, and injurious to his Infinite Holineſs?

(9.) 'Tis againſt the Love and Kindneſs of God. 'Tis a condeſcenſion in God to admit a piece of Earth to offer up a duty to him, when he hath Miriads of Angels to attend him in his Court and celebrate his Praiſe: To admit Man to be an Attendant on him, and a Partner with Angels, is a high favour. 'Tis not a ſingle mercy, but a heap of mercies to be admitted into the preſence of God, Pſal. 5.7. I will come into thy houſe in the multitude of thy mercies. When the bleſſed God is ſo kind as to give us acceſs to his Majeſty, do we not undervalue his kindneſs when we deal uncivilly with him, and deny him the choiceſt part of our ſelves? 'Tis a contempt of his Soveraignty, as our Spirits are due to him by nature; a contempt of his Goodneſs, as our Spirits are due to him by gratitude: How abuſive a carriage is it to make uſe of his mercy to encourage our impudence, that ſhould excite our fear and reverence? How unworthy would it be for an indigent Debtor to bring to his indulgent Creditor, an empty Purſe inſtead of Payment? When God holds out his Golden Scepter to encourage our approaches to him; ſtands ready to give us the pardon of ſin and full felicity, the beſt things he hath; is it a fit requital of his kindneſs, to give him a formal outſide only, a ſhadow of Religion; to have the heart overſwayed with other thoughts and affections; as if all his proffers were ſo contemptible, as to deſerve only a ſlight at our hands? 'Tis a contempt of the love and kindneſs of God.

(10.) 'Tis againſt the Sufficiency and Fulneſs of God. When we give God our Bodies, and the Creature our Spirits, it intimates a conceit, that there is more content to be had in the Creature than in God bleſſed for ever; that the Waters in the Ciſtern are ſweeter than thoſe in the Fountain: Is not this a practical giving God the Lye, and denying thoſe promiſes wherein he hath declared the ſatisfaction he can give to the Spirit, as he is the God of the Spirits of all fleſh?

If we did imagine the excellency and lovelineſs of God were worthy to be the ultimate Object of our affections, the heart would attend more cloſely upon him, and be terminated in him; did we believe God to be all-ſufficient, full of grace and goodneſs, a tender Father, not willing to forſake his own; willing, as well as able to ſupply their wants; the heart would not ſo lamely attend upon him, and would not upon every impertinency be diverted from him. There is much of a wrong notion of God, and a predominancy of the World above him in the heart, when we can more ſavourly reliſh the thoughts of low inferior things than heavenly, and let our Spirits upon every trifling occaſion be fugitives from him: 'Tis a Teſtimony that we make not God our chiefeſt good. If apprehenſions of his excellency did poſſeſs our Souls, they would be faſtned on him, glued to him; we ſhould not liſten to that rabble of fooliſh thoughts that ſteal our hearts ſo often from him. Were our breathings after God, as ſtrong as the pantings of the Hart after the Water-brooks, we ſhould be like that Creature not diverted in our Courſe by every Puddle. Were God the predominant ſatisfactory Object in our Eye, he would carry our whole Soul along with him.

When our Spirits readily retreat from God in Worſhip upon every giddy motion, 'tis a kind of Repentance that ever we did come near him, and implies, that there is a fuller ſatisfaction, and more attractive excellency in that which doth ſo eaſily divert us, than in that God to whoſe Worſhip we did pretend to addreſs our ſelves: 'Tis as if, when we were petitioning a Prince, we ſhould immediately turn about, and make requeſt to one of his Guard; as though ſo mean a perſon were more able to give us the Boon we want, than the Soveraign is.

2 Conſideration by way of Motive. To have our Spirits off from God in Worſhip, is a bad ſign. It was not ſo in Innocence. The heart of Adam could cleave to God; the Law of God was engraven upon him; he could apply himſelf to the fulfilling of it without any twinkling; there was no folly and vanity in his mind, no independency in his thoughts, no duty was his burden; for there was in him a proneneſs to, and delight in all the duties of Worſhip: 'Tis the Fall hath diſtempered us; and the more unweildineſs there is in our Spirits, the more carnal our affections are in Worſhip, the more evidence there is of the ſtrength of that revolted ſtate.

(1.) It argues much corruption in the heart. As by the eructations of the ſtomach, we may judge of the windineſs and foulneſs of it; ſo by the inordinate motions of our minds and hearts, we may judge of the weakneſs of its complexion. A ſtrength of ſin is evidenced by the eruptions and ebullitions of it in Worſhip, when they are more ſudden, numerous, and vigorous than the motions of grace. When the heart is apt like Tinder to catch fire from Satan, 'tis a ſign of much combuſtible matter ſuitable to his temptation. Were not corruption ſtrong, the Soul could not turn ſo eaſily from God when it is in his preſence, and hath advantageous opportunity to create a fear and awe of God in it: Such baſe fruit could not ſprout up ſo ſuddenly, were there not much ſap and juice in the root of ſin.

What communion with a living root can be evidenced without exerciſes of an inward life? That Spirit which is a Well of Living Waters in a gracious heart, will be eſpecially ſpringing up when it is before God.

(2.) It ſhews much affection to earthly things, and little to heavenly. There muſt needs be an inordinate affection to earthly things, when upon every ſlight ſolicitation we can part with God, and turn the back upon a ſervice glorious for him, and advantageous for our ſelves, to wed our hearts to ſome idle fancy that ſignifies nothing. How can we be ſaid to entertain God in our affections, when we give him not the precedency in our underſtandings, but let every trifle juſtle the ſenſe of God out of our minds? Were our hearts fully determined to ſpiritual things, ſuch vanities could not ſeat themſelves in our underſtandings, and divide our Spirits from God. Were our hearts ballanced with a love to God, the World could never ſteal our hearts ſo much from his Worſhip, but his Worſhip would draw our hearts to it.

It

It ſhews a baſe neutrality in the greateſt concernments; a halting between God and Baal; a contrariety between Affection and Conſcience, when natural Conſcience preſſes a Man to duties of Worſhip, and his other affections pull him back, draw him to carnal objects, and make him ſlight that whereby he may honour God. God argues the prophaneſs of the Jews hearts from the wickedneſs they brought into his Houſe, and acted there, Jer. 23. Tea in my houſe, that is, my Worſhip; I found their wickedneſs, ſaith the Lord. Carnality in worſhip is a kind of an Idolatrous frame; when the heart is renewed, Idols are caſt to the Moles and the Batts, Iſa. 2. 20.

(3.) It ſhews much hypocriſie to have our Spirits off from God. The Mouth ſpeaks, and the carriage pretends what the heart doth not think; there is a diſſent of the heart from the pretence of the body.

Inſtability is a ſure ſign of Hypocriſie. Double thoughts argue a double heart. The wicked are compared to Chaff *, for the uncertain and various motions of their minds, by the leaſt wind of fancy. The leaſt motion of a carnal Object diverts the Spirit from God, as the ſcent of Carrion doth the Raven from the flight it was ſet upon.

* Pſal. 1. 4.

The People of God are called God's Spouſe, and God calls himſelf their Husband; whereby is noted, the moſt intimate union of the Soul with God, and that there ought to be the higheſt love and affection to him, and faithfulneſs in his Worſhip; but when the heart doth ſtart from him in Worſhip, it is a ſign of the unſtedfaſtneſs of it with God, and a diſreliſh of any communion with him: It is as God complains of the Iſraelites, a going a whoring after our own imaginations.

As grace reſpects God as the object of Worſhip, ſo it looks moſt upon God in approaching to him. Where there is a likeneſs and love, there is a deſire of converſe and intimacy; if there be no ſpiritual entwining about God in our Worſhip, it is a ſign there is no likeneſs to him, no true ſenſe of him, no renewed Image of God in us: Every living Image will move ſtrongly to joyn it ſelf with its Original Copy, and be glad with Jacob, to ſit ſteadily in thoſe Chariots that ſhall convey him to his beloved Joſeph.

Motive 3. Conſider the danger of a Carnal Worſhip.

(1.) We loſe the Comfort of Worſhip. The Soul is a great Gainer when it offers a Spiritual Worſhip, and as great a loſer when it is unfaithful with God. Treachery and Perfidiouſneſs hinder commerce among Men; ſo doth Hypocriſie in its own nature, communion with God. God never promiſed any thing to the Carcaſs but to the Spirit of Worſhip. God hath no obligation upon him by any word of his, to reward us with himſelf, when we perform it not to himſelf: When we give an outſide Worſhip, we have only the outſide of an Ordinance: We can expect no kernel, when we give God only the ſhell: He that only licks the outſide of the Glaſs, can never be refreſhed with the rich Cordial encloſed within. A cold and lazy formality, will make God to withdraw the light of his countenance, and not ſhine with any delightful communications upon our Souls; but if we come before him with a livelineſs of affections, and ſteadineſs of heart, he will draw the veil, and cauſe his glory to diſplay it ſelf before us, An humble praying Chriſtian, and a warm affectionate Chriſtian in Worſhip, will ſoon find a God who is delighted with ſuch frames, and cannot long with-hold himſelf from the Soul: When our hearts are enflamed with love to him in Worſhip, 'tis a preparation to ſome act of love on his part, whereby he intends further to gratifie us. When John was in the Spirit on the Lords day, that is, in ſpiritual employment, and meditation, and other duties, he had that great Revelation of what ſhould happen to the Church in all Ages *; his being in the Spirit, intimates his ordinary courſe on that day, and not any extraordinary act in him, tho' it was followed with an extraordinary diſcovery of God to him: When he was thus engaged, he heard a voice behind him.

* Rev. 1. 10.

God doth not require of us Spirituality in Worſhip to advantage himſelf, but that we might be prepared to be advantaged by him. If we have a clear and well diſpoſed eye, 'tis not a benefit to the Sun, but fits us to receive benefits from his beams. Worſhip is an act that perfects our own Souls; they are then moſt widened by Spiritual frames, to receive the influence of Divine Bleſſings, as an eye moſt opened receives the fruit of the Suns light, better than the eye that is ſhut. The communications of God are more or leſs, according as our ſpiritual frames are more or leſs in our Worſhip: God will not give his Bleſſings to unſuitable hearts. What a naſty Veſſel is a carnal heart for a ſpiritual communication? The chief end of every duty enjoyned by God, is to have communion with him; and therefore it is called, a drawing near to God: 'Tis impoſſible therefore, that the outward part of any duty can anſwer the end of God in his Inſtitution. 'Tis not a bodily appearance or geſture, whereby Men can have communion with God, but by the impreſſions of the heart, and reflections of the heart upon God: Without this, all the rich ſtreams of grace will run beſides us, and the growth of the Soul be hindered and impaired. A diligent hand makes rich, ſaith the Wiſe man; a diligent heart in ſpiritual Worſhip, brings in rich Incomes to the humble and ſpiritual Soul.

(2.) It renders the Worſhip not only unacceptable, but abominable to God. It makes our Gold to become Droſs; it ſoyls our Duties, and beſpots our Souls. A carnal and unſteady frame ſhews an indifferency of Spirit at beſt; and luke-warmneſs is as ungrateful to God, as heavy and nauſeous Meat is to the ſtomach, he ſpues them out of his mouth *. As our gracious God doth over-look infirmities where intentions are good, and endeavours ſerious and ſtrong; ſo he loaths the ſervices where the frames are ſtark naught, Pſal. 66. 18. If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear my Prayer. Luke-warm and indifferent Services ſtink in the Noſtrils of God. The heart ſeems to loath God, when it ſtarts from him upon every occaſion, when it is unwilling to employ it ſelf about, and ſtick cloſe to him: And can God be pleaſed with ſuch a frame? The more of the heart and ſpirit is in any ſervice, the more real goodneſs there is in it, and the more ſavory it is to God; the leſs of the heart and ſpirit, the leſs of goodneſs, and the more nauſeous to God, who loves Righteouſneſs and Truth in the inward parts *. And therefore infinite Goodneſs and Holineſs, cannot but hate Worſhip preſented to him with deceitful, carnal and flitting affections; they muſt be more nauſeous to God, than a putrified Carcaſs can be to Man: They are the prophanings of that which ſhould be the habitation of the Spirit: They make the Spirit, the Seat of Duty, a filthy Dunghil; and are as loathſome to God, as Money-changers in the Temple were to our Saviour.

* Rev. 3. 16.

* Pſal 51. 9.

We ſee the evil of carnal frames, and the neceſſity and benefit of ſpiritual frames: For further help in this laſt, let us practiſe theſe following directions.

Direction 1. Keep up ſpiritual frames out of Worſhip. To avoid low affections, we muſt keep our hearts as much as we can in a ſettled elevation. If we admit unworthy diſpoſitions at one time, we ſhall not eaſily be rid of them at another *: As he that would not be bitten with Gnats in the Night, muſt keep his Windows ſhut in the Day; when they are once entred, 'tis not eaſie to expel them: In which reſpect, one adviſeth, to be ſuch out of worſhip as we would be in worſhip. If we mix ſpiritual affections with our worldly employments, worldly affections will not mingle themſelves ſo eaſily with our heavenly engagements. If our hearts be ſpiritual in our outward calling, they will ſcarce be carnal in our Religious Service. If we walk in the Spirit, we * Gal.5.16. ſhall not fulfil the luſts of the Fleſh *. A ſpiritual walk in the day, will hinder carnal luſtings in worſhip. The Fire was to be kept alive upon the Altar when Sacrifices were not offered, from morning till night, from night till morning, as well as in the very time of Sacrifice. A ſpiritual life and vigour out of worſhip, would render it at its ſeaſon ſweet and eaſie, and preſerve a ſpontaneity and preparedneſs to it, and make it both natural and pleaſant to us.

Any thing that doth unhinge and diſcompoſe our Spirits, is inconſiſtent with Religious Services, which are to be performed with the greateſt ſedateneſs and gravity. All irregular paſſions diſturb the ſerenity of * Eph.4. v.26,27. the Spirit, and open the door for Satan *. Saith the Apoſtle, Let not the Sun go down upon your wrath, neither give place to the Devil. Where wrath breaks the Lock, the Devil will quickly be over the Threſhold; and tho' they be allayed, yet they leave the heart ſometime after, like the Sea rowling and ſwelling after the Storm is ceaſed.

Mixture with ill company, leaves a tincture upon us in Worſhip. Ephraims allying himſelf with the Gentiles, bred an indifferency in Religion, Hoſ. 7. 8. Ephraim hath mixed himſelf with the People: Ephraim is a Cake not turn'd: It will make our hearts, and conſequently our ſervices, half Dough, as well as half bak'd: Theſe, and the like, make the holy Spirit withdraw himſelf, and then the Soul lies like a wind-bound Veſſel and can make no way. When the Sun departs from us, it carries its beams away with it; then doth Darkneſs ſpread it ſelf over the Earth, * Pſal.104. v.20. and the Beaſts of the Foreſts creep out *. When the Spirit withdraws awhile from a good Man, it carries away, (tho' not habitual, yet) much of the exciting and aſſiſting grace; and then carnal diſpoſitions perk up themſelves from the boſom of natural corruption. To be ſpiritual in Worſhip, we muſt bar the door at other times againſt that which is contrary to it: As he that would not be infected with a contagious diſeaſe, carries ſome Preſervative about with him, and inures himſelf to good ſcents.

To this end, be much in ſecret ejaculations to God, theſe are the pureſt flights of the Soul, that have more of fervor and leſs of carnality; they preſerve a livelineſs in the Spirit, and make it more fit to perform ſolemn ſtated Worſhip with greater freedom and activity: A conſtant uſe of this would make our whole lives, lives of Worſhip. As frequent ſinful acts ſtrengthen habits of ſin; ſo frequent Religious acts ſtrengthen habits of grace.

Direction 2. Excite and exerciſe particularly a love to God, and dependence on him.

Love is a commanding affection, an uniting grace; it draws all the faculties of the Soul to one Center. The Soul that loves God, when it hath to do with him, is bound to the beloved Object; it can mind nothing elſe during ſuch impreſſions. When the affection is ſet to the Worſhip of God, every thing the Soul hath will be beſtowed upon it: As David's diſpoſition was to the Temple, 1 Chron. 29. 3. Carnal frames, like the Fowls, will be lighting upon the Sacrifice, but not when it is enflam'd; tho' the ſcent of the fleſh invite them, yet the heat of the fire drives them to their diſtance. A flaming love will ſinge the Flies that endeavour to interrupt and diſturb us. The happineſs of Heaven conſiſts in a full attraction of the Soul to God, by his glorious influence upon it; There will be ſuch a diffuſion of his goodneſs throughout the Souls of the Bleſſed, as will unite the affections perfectly to him: Theſe affections which are ſcattered here, will be there gathered into one flame, moving to him, and centring in him: Therefore the more of a heavenly frame poſſeſſes our affections here, the more ſettled and uniform will our hearts be in all their motions to God, and operations about him.

Excite a dependence on him, Prov. 16. 3. Commit thy works to the Lord, and thy thoughts ſhall be eſtabliſhed. Let us go out in Gods ſtrength, and not in our own; vain is the help of Man in any thing, and vain is the help of the heart: 'Tis through God only we can do valiantly in ſpiritual concerns as well as temporal; the want of this makes but ſlight impreſſions upon the Spirit.

Direction 3. Nouriſh right conceptions of the Majeſty of God in your minds. Let us conſider, that we are drawing to God; the moſt amiable Object, the beſt of Beings, worthy of infinite honour, and highly meriting the higheſt affections we can give; a God that made the World by a Word; that upholds the great frame of Heaven and Earth; a Majeſty above the conceptions of Angels; who uſes not his power to ſtrike us to our deſerved puniſhment, but his love and bounty to allure us; a God that gave all the Creatures to ſerve us, and can in a trice make them as much our Enemies as he hath now made them our Servants. Let us view him in his greatneſs, and in his goodneſs, that our hearts may have a true value of the Worſhip of ſo great a Majeſty, and count it the moſt worthy employment with all diligence to attend upon him. When we have a fear of God, it will make our Worſhip ſerious; when we have a joy in God, it will make our Worſhip durable. Our affections will be raiſed, when we repreſent God in the moſt reverential, endearing, and obliging circumſtances. We honour the Majeſty of God, when we conſider him with due reverence according to the greatneſs and perfection of his works; and in this reverence of his Majeſty, doth Worſhip chiefly conſiſt. Low thoughts of God will make low frames in us before him: If we thought God an infinite glorious Spirit, how would our hearts be lower than our knees in his preſence? How humbly, how believingly pleading is the Pſalmiſt, when he conſiders God to be without compariſon in the Heavens; to whom none of the Sons of the mighty can be likened; when there was none like to him in ſtrength or faithfulneſs round about *? We ſhould have alſo * Pſal. 89. deep impreſſions of the Omniſcience of God; and v.6,7,8. remember we have to deal with a God that ſearcheth the heart and trieth the reins; to whom the moſt ſecret temper is as viſible, as the loudeſt words are audible; that tho' Man judges by outward expreſſions, God judges by inward affections. As the Law of God regulates the inward frames of the heart; ſo the eye of God pitches upon the inward intentions of the Soul. If God were viſibly preſent with us, ſhould we not approach to him with ſtrong affections; ſummon our Spirits to attend upon him; behave our ſelves modeſtly before him? Let us conſider, he is as really preſent with us, as if he were viſible to us; let us therefore preſerve a ſtrong ſenſe of the preſence of God. No Man but one out of his wits, when he were in the preſence of a Prince, and making a Speech to him, would break off at every period, and run after the catching of Butter-flies. Remember in all Worſhip you are before the Lord, to whom all things are open and naked.

Direction 4. Let us take heed of inordinate deſires after the World. As the World ſteals away a Mans heart from the Word, ſo it doth from all other worſhip; it chokes the Word *; it ſtifles all the ſpiri- *Mat.13.27 tual breathings after God in every duty: The edge of the Soul is blunted by it, and made too dull for ſuch ſublime exerciſes. The Apoſtles rule in Prayer, when he joyns Sobriety with watching unto Prayer, is of concern in all Worſhip, Sobriety in the purſuit and uſe of all worldly things. A Man drunk with worldly fumes cannot watch, cannot be heavenly, affectionate, ſpiritual in Service. There is a magnetick force in the Earth, to hinder our flights to Heaven: Birds, when they take their firſt flights from the Earth, have more flutterings of their Wings, than when they are mounted further in the Air, and got more without the Sphere of the Earths attractiveneſs; the Motion of their Wings is more ſteady, that you can ſcarce perceive them ſtir; they move like a Ship with a full Gale. The World is a clog upon the Soul, and a bar to ſpiritual Frames: 'Tis as hard to elevate the Heart to God in the midſt of a hurry of worldly Affairs, as it is difficult to meditate when we are near a great noiſe of Waters falling from a Precipice, or in the midſt of a Volley of Muskets. Thick claiy Affections bemire the Heart, and make it unfit for ſuch high flights it is to take in Worſhip: Therefore get your Hearts clear from worldly Thoughts and Deſires, if you would be more ſpiritual in Worſhip.

5. Let us be deeply ſenſible of our preſent wants, and the ſupplies we may meet with in Worſhip. Cold Affections to the things we would have, will grow cooler: Weakneſs of deſire for the Communications in Worſhip, will freez our Hearts at the time of Worſhip, and make way for vain and fooliſh Diverſions. A Beggar that is ready to periſh, and knows he is next door to ruine, will not ſlightly and dully beg an Alms; and will not be diverted from his importunity by every ſlight call, or the moving of an Atom in the Air. Is it Pardon we would have? Let us apprehend the blackneſs of ſin with the aggravations of it, as it reſpects God; Let us be deeply ſenſible of the want of Pardon and worth of Mercy, and get our Affections into ſuch a frame, as a condemned Man would do: Let us conſider, that as we are now at the Throne of God's Grace, we ſhall ſhortly be at the Bar of God's Juſtice; and if the Soul ſhould be forlorn there, how fixedly and earneſtly would it plead for Mercy? Let us endeavour to ſtir up the ſame Affections now, which we have ſeen ſome dying Men have, and which we ſuppoſe deſpairing Souls would have done at God's Tribunal. * We muſt be ſenſible that the Life or Death of our Souls depends upon Worſhip. Would we not be aſhamed to be ridiculous in our Carriage while we are eating; and ſhall we not be aſhamed to be cold or gariſh before God, when the Salvation of our Souls, as well as the Honour of God is concerned? If we did ſee the heaps of Sins, the Eternity of Puniſhment due to them; If we did ſee an Angry and Offended Judge; If we did ſee the Riches of Mercy, the glorious out-goings of God in the Sanctuary, the bleſſed Doles he gives out to Men when they ſpiritually attend upon him; both the one and the other would make us perform our Duties humbly, ſincerely, earneſtly and affectionately, and wait upon him with our whole Souls, to have Miſery averted and Mercy beſtowed. Let our ſenſe of this be encouraged by the Conſideration of our Saviour preſenting his Merits; With what affection doth he preſent his Merits, his Blood ſhed upon the Croſs now in Heaven? And ſhall our Hearts be cold and frozen, flitting and unſteady, when his Affections are ſo much concerned? Chriſt doth not preſent any Man's Caſe and Duties without a Senſe of his wants, and ſhall we have none of our own?

*Guli. Paris Rhetor. Divin. c. 26. p. 350.

Let me add this; Let us affect our Hearts with a Senſe of what ſupplies we have met with in former Worſhip. The delightful remembrance of what converſe we have had with God in former Worſhip, would ſpiritualize our Hearts for the preſent Worſhip. Had Peter had a view of Chriſt's Glory in the Mount, freſh in his Thoughts, he would not ſo eaſily have turned his back upon his Maſter: Nor would the Iſraelites have been at leiſure for their Idolatry, had they preſerved the ſenſe of the Majeſty of God diſcovered in his late Thunders from Mount Sinai.

6. If any thing intrudes that may choke the Worſhip, caſt it ſpeedily out. We cannot hinder Satan and our own Corruption from preſenting Coolers to us, but we may hinder the ſucceſs of them: We cannot hinder the Gnats from buzing about us, when we are in our Buſineſs, but we may prevent them from ſettling upon us. A Man that is running on a conſiderable Errand, will ſhun all unneceſſary Diſcourſe that may make him forget or loyter in his Buſineſs. What tho' there may be ſomething offered that is good in it ſelf; yet if it hath a tendency to deſpoil God of his Honour, and our ſelves of the ſpiritual intentneſs in Worſhip, ſend it away. Thoſe that weed a Field of Corn, examine not the Nature and particular Vertues of the Weeds, but conſider only how they choke the Corn, to which the native Juyce of the Soil is deſign'd. Conſider what you are about; and if any thing interpoſe that may divert you, or cool your Affections in your preſent Worſhip, caſt it out.

7. As to private Worſhip, let us lay hold of the moſt melting Opportunities and Frames. When we find our Hearts in a more than ordinary Spiritual Frame, let us look upon it as a Call from God to attend him. Such Impreſſions and Motions are God's Voice, inviting us into Communion with him in ſome particular Act of Worſhip, and promiſing us ſome ſucceſs in it. When the Pſalmiſt had a ſecret Motion to ſeek God's face, and complied with it *, the iſſue is the encouragement of his Heart, which breaks out into an Exhortation to others to be of good Courage, and wait on the Lord, v. 13, 14. Wait on the Lord, be of good Courage, and he ſhall ſtrengthen thy Heart, wait I ſay on the Lord. *Pſ. 27. 8.

* One blow will do more on the Iron when it is hot, than a hundred when it is cold. Melted Metals may be ſtampt with any impreſſion; but once hardned, will with difficulty be brought into the Figure we intend. *Reynolds.

8. Let us examine our ſelves at the end of every Act of Worſhip, and chide our ſelves for any carnality we perceive in them. Let us take a review of them, and examine the reaſon, Why art thou ſo Low and Carnal, O my Soul? As David did of his diſquietedneſs, Pſal. 42. 5. Why art thou caſt down, O my Soul, and why art thou diſquited within me? If any unworthy Frames have ſurprized us in Worſhip, let us ſeek them out after Worſhip; call them to the Bar; make an exact Scrutiny into the Cauſes of them, that we may prevent their Incurſions another time; let our Pulſes beat quick by way of Anger and Indignation againſt them: This would be a repairing what hath been amiſs; otherwiſe they may grow, and clog an after Worſhip, more than they did a former. Daily Examination is an Antidote againſt the Temptations of the following Day, and conſtant Examination of our ſelves after Duty, is a Preſervative againſt vain Encroachments in following Duties; and upon the finding them out, let us apply the Blood of Chriſt by Faith for our Cure, and draw ſtrength from the Death of Chriſt for the Conqueſt of them, and let us alſo be humbled for them. God lifts up the humble: When we are humbled for our Carnal Frames in one Duty, we ſhall find our ſelves by the Grace of God more elevated in the next.

A DISCOURSE UPON THE Eternity of GOD.

Pſalm XC. 2.

Before the Mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadſt formed the Earth and the World; even from Everlaſting to Everlaſting, thou art God.

THE Title of this Pſalm is, A Prayer; the Author Moſes. Some think not only this, but the ten following Pſalms were compoſed by him. The Title wherewith he is dignified, is, The Man of God, as alſo in Deut. 33. 1. One inſpir'd by him to be his Interpreter, and deliver his Oracles; One particularly directed by him: * One who as a Servant, did diligently employ himſelf in his Maſters Buſineſs, and acted for the Glory of God; *He was the Miniſter of the Old-Teſtament, and the Prophet the New.

* Coccei. in loc.

* Auſtin. in loc.

There are two parts of this Pſalm.

1. A Complaint of the frailty of Man's Life in general, ver. 3, 4, 5, 6. And then, A particular Complaint of the Condition of the Church, ver. 8, 9, 10.

Pareus in loc.

2. A Prayer, v. 12.

But before he ſpeaks of the ſhortneſs of Humane Life, he fortifies them by the conſideration of the Refuge they had, and ſhould find in God, ver. 1. Lord thou haſt been our dwelling place in all Generations.

We have had no ſettled abode in the Earth, ſince the time of Abraham's being called out from Ur of the Chaldees: We have had Canaan in a promiſe, we have it not yet in Poſſeſſion; We have been expoſed to the Cruelties of an oppreſſing Enemy, and the Incommodities of a deſert Wilderneſs; we have wanted the Fruits of the Earth, but not the Dews of Heaven. Thou haſt been our dwelling-place in all Generations. Abraham was under thy Conduct; Iſaac and Jacob under thy Care: Their Poſterity were multiplied by thee, and that under their Oppreſſions. Thou haſt been our Shield againſt Dangers, our Security in the times of Trouble: When we were purſued to the Red-ſea, it was not a Creature delivered us; and when we feared the pinching of our Bowels in the Deſert, it was no Creature rain'd Manna upon us. Thou haſt been our dwelling place; Thou haſt kept open Houſe for us, ſheltered us againſt Storms, and preſerved us from miſchief, as a Houſe doth an Inhabitant from Wind and Weather; and that not in one or two, but in all Generations: Some think an alluſion is here made to the Ark, to which they were to have recourſe in all Emergencies. Our refuge and defence hath not been from created things; not from the Ark, but from the God of the Ark.

Obſerve,

1. God is a perpetual Refuge and Security to his People. His Providence is not confined to one Generation; 'tis not one Age only that taſtes of his Bounty and Compaſſion: His eye never yet ſlept, nor hath he ſuffered the little Ship of his Church to be ſwallowed up, tho' it hath been toſt upon the Waves: He hath always been an Haven to preſerve us, a Houſe to ſecure us; He hath always had Compaſſions to pity us, and Power to protect us; He hath had a Face to ſhine, when the World hath had an angry Countenance to frown; * He brought Enoch, home by an extraordinary tranſlation from a brutiſh World; and when he was reſolved to reckon with Men for their brutiſh Lives, he lodged Noah, the Phœnix of the World, in an Ark, and kept him alive as a Spark in the midſt of many Waters, whereby to rekindle a Church in the World. In all Generations he is a dwelling place, to ſecure his People here, or entertain them above.

* Theod. in loc.

His Providence is not wearied, nor his Care fainting: He never wanted Will to relieve us, For he hath been our Refuge; Nor ever can want Power to ſupport us, For he is a God from Everlaſting to everlaſting. The Church never wanted a Pilot to ſteer her, and a Rock to ſhelter her, and daſh in pieces the Waves which threaten her.

2. How worthy is it to remember former Benefits, when we come to beg for new? Never were the Records of God's Mercies ſo exactly reviſed, as when his People have ſtood in need of new Editions of his Power. How neceſſary are our wants to ſtir us up to pay the Rent of Thankfulneſs in Arrear? He renders himſelf doubly unworthy of the Mercies he wants, that doth not greatefully acknowledge the Mercies he hath received. God ſcarce promiſed any deliverance to the Iſraelites, and they in their Diſtreſs ſcarce prayed for any Deliverance, but that from Ægypt was mentioned on both ſides; by God to encourage them, and by them to acknowledge their Confidence in him. The greater our Dangers, the more we ſhould call to mind God's former Kindneſs. We are not only thankfully to acknowledge the Mercies beſtow'd upon our Perſons, or in our Age, but thoſe of former times. Thou haſt been our dwelling place in all Generations.

Moſes was not living in the former Generations, yet he appropriates the former Mercies to the preſent Age. Mercies as well as Generations proceed out of the Loyns of thoſe that have gone before. All Mankind are but one Adam; the whole Church but one Body.

In the Second Verſe he backs his former Conſideration.

1. By the greatneſs of his Power in forming the World.

2. By the boundleſneſs of his Duration; [From everlaſting to everlaſting.] As thou haſt been our dwelling place, and expended upon us the ſtrength of thy Power, and Riches of thy Love; ſo we have no reaſon to doubt the Continuance on thy part, if we be not wanting on our parts: For the vaſt Mountains and fruitful Earth are the Works of thy Hands; and there is leſs Power requiſite for our relief, than there was for their Creation: And tho' ſo much ſtrength hath been upon various occaſions manifeſted, yet thy

Arm

Arm is not weakned; for from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God *.

* אל ſtrong. * Amyrald. in loc.

* Thou haſt always been God, and no time can be aſſigned as the beginning of thy Being: The Mountains are not of ſo long a ſtanding as thy ſelf; they are the Effects of thy Power, and therefore cannot be equal to thy Duration; ſince they are effects, they ſuppoſe a precedency of their Cauſe. If we would look back, we can reach no further than the beginning of the Creation, and account the Years from the firſt foundation of the World; but after that we muſt loſe our ſelves in the Abyſs of Eternity; we have no Clew to guide our thoughts; we can ſee no bounds in thy Eternity: But as for Man, he traverſeth the World a few days, and by thy order pronounced concerning all Men, returns to the Duſt, and moulders into the Grave.

By Mountains ſome underſtand Angels, as being Creatures of a more elevated Nature: By Earth, they underſtand humane Nature, the Earth being the Habitation of Men. There is no need to divert in this place, from the Letter to ſuch a Senſe. The Deſcription ſeems to be Poetical, and amounts to this; He neither began with the beginning of Time, nor will expire with the end of it *: He did not begin when he made himſelf known to our Fathers, but his Being did precede the Creation of the World, before any created Being was formed, and any time ſettled.

* Ἀναρχόν τινα καὶ ἀτελεύτητον, Theodoret in loc.

Before the Mountains were brought forth, or before they were begotten or born; the word being uſed in thoſe ſenſes in Scripture, before they ſtood up higher than the reſt of the earthy Maſs God had created. It ſeems that Mountains were not caſually caſt up by the force of the Deluge, ſoftning the ground, and driving ſeveral parcels of it together to grow up into a maſſy Body, as the Sea doth the Sand in ſeveral places, but they were at firſt formed by God.

The Eternity of God is here deſcribed.

1. In his Priority [before the World.]

2. In the extenſion of his duration. [From everlaſting to everlaſting, thou art God.] He was before the World, yet he neither began nor ends: He is not a Temporary, but an Eternal God; it takes in both parts of Eternity, what was before the Creation of the World, and what is after: Tho' the Eternity of God be one permanent ſtate without ſucceſſion, yet the Spirit of God ſuiting himſelf to the weakneſs of our conception, divides it into two parts, one paſt before the foundation of the World, another to come after the deſtruction of the World; as he did exiſt before all Ages, and as he will exiſt after all Ages.

Many Truths lie coucht in the verſe.

1. The World hath a beginning of Being. It was not from Eternity, it was once nothing; had it been of a very long duration, ſome Records would have remained of ſome memorable actions done of a longer date than any extant.

2. The World owes its Being to the creating Power of God. [Thou hadſt formed it] out of Nothing into Being, Thou, that is God; it could not ſpring into Being of it ſelf; it was nothing; it muſt have a Former.

3. God was in being before the World. The Cauſe muſt be before the Effect; that Word which gives Being muſt be before that which receives Being.

4. This Being was from Eternity. [From Everlaſting.]

5. This Being ſhall endure to Eternity. [To Everlaſting.]

6. There is but one God, one Eternal. [From everlaſting to everlaſting, thou art God.] None elſe but one hath the Property of Eternity; the Gods of the Heathen cannot lay claim to it.

Doct. God is of an eternal duration. The Eternity of God is the foundation of the ſtability of the Covenant, the great comfort of a Chriſtian. The deſign of God in Scripture, is to ſet forth his dealing with Men in the way of a Covenant. The Priority of God before all things begins the Bible: In the beginning God created. His Covenant can have no foundation, but in his duration before and after the World: And Moſes here mentions his Eternity; not only with reſpect to the Eſſence of God, but to his federal Providence: As he is the dwelling place of his People in all Generations. The duration of God for ever, is more ſpoken of in Scripture than his Eternity à parte ante, tho' that is the foundation of all the comfort we can take from his Immortality: If he had a beginning, he might have an end; and ſo all our happineſs, hope and being, would expire with him; but the Scripture ſometimes takes notice of his being without beginning, as well as without end. * Thou art from everlaſting. * Bleſſed be God from everlaſting to everlaſting: * I was ſet up from everlaſting. If his Wiſdom were from everlaſting, himſelf was from everlaſting: Whether we underſtand it of Chriſt the Son of God, or of the Eſſential Wiſdom of God, 'tis all one to the preſent purpoſe. The Wiſdom of God ſuppoſeth the Eſſence of God, as habits in Creatures ſuppoſe the being of ſome power or faculty as their Subject. The Wiſdom of God ſuppoſeth Mind and Underſtanding, Eſſence and Subſtance.

Gen. 1. 1.

Calv. in loc.

* Pſal 93. 2. * Pſ. 41. 13. * Pro. 8. 23.

The notion of Eternity is difficult, as Auſtin ſaid of Time: * If no Man will ask me the queſtion what Time is, I know well enough what it is: But if any ask me what it is, I know not how to explain it. So may I ſay of Eternity; 'tis eaſie in the word pronounced, but hardly underſtood, and more hardly expreſt; 'tis better expreſt by negative than poſitive words.

* Conſul. lib. 11. Confeſ. 15.

Tho' we cannot comprehend Eternity, yet we may comprehend that there is an Eternity; as tho' we cannot comprehend the Eſſence of God, what he is, yet we may comprehend that he is; we may underſtand the notion of his Exiſtence, tho' we cannot underſtand the infiniteneſs of his nature; Yet we may better underſtand Eternity than Infiniteneſs; we can better conceive a time with the addition of numberleſs days and years, than imagine a Being without bounds; whence the Apoſtle joyns his Eternity with his Power; His Eternal Power and Godhead; becauſe next to the Power of God apprehended in the Creature, we come neceſſarily by reaſoning to acknowledge the Eternity of God. He that hath an incomprehenſible Power, muſt needs have an Eternity of Nature: His Power is moſt ſenſible in the Creatures to the eye of Man, and his Eternity eaſily from thence deducible by the reaſon of Man.

Rom. 1. 20.

Eternity is a perpetual duration, which hath neither beginning nor end: Time hath both. Thoſe things we ſay are in time, that have beginning, grow up by degrees, have ſucceſſion of parts: Eternity is contrary to Time, and is therefore a permanent and immutable State; a perfect poſſeſſion of life without any variation: It comprehends in it ſelf all Years, all Ages, all periods of Ages: It never begins! it endures after every duration of Time, and never ceaſeth; it doth as much out-run Time, as it went before the beginning of it: Time ſuppoſeth ſomething before it, but there can be nothing before Eternity, it were not then Eternity. Time hath a continual ſucceſſion; the former time paſſeth away, and another ſucceeds; the laſt year is not this year, nor this year the next. We muſt conceive of Eternity contrary to the notion of Time; as the nature of Time conſiſts in the ſucceſſion of parts, ſo the nature of Eternity is an infinite immutable duration *. Eternity and Time differ as the Sea and Rivers; the Sea never changes place, and is always one Water; but the the Rivers glide along, and are ſwallowed up in the Sea; ſo is Time by Eternity.

* Moulin. Coo. 1. Ser. 2. p. 52.

A thing is ſaid to be eternal, or everlaſting rather in Scripture.

2. When it is of a long duration, tho' it will have an end; When it hath no meaſures of Time determined to it; ſo Circumciſion is ſaid to be in the Fleſh for an everlaſting Covenant *; not purely everlaſting, but ſo long as that adminiſtration of the Covenant ſhould endure. * Gen. 17. v. 14.

And ſo when a Servant would not leave his Maſter, but would have his ear bored; 'tis ſaid, he ſhould be a Servant for ever *; i. e. till the Jubilee, which was every fiftieth year: So the Meat-offering they were to offer, is ſaid to be Perpetual *. Canaan is ſaid to be given to Abraham for an everlaſting poſſeſſion *: When as the Jews are expelled from Canaan, which is given a Prey to the barbarous Nations. Indeed Circumciſion was not everlaſting; yet the ſubſtance of the Covenant whereof this was a ſign, viz. That God would be the God of Believers, endures for ever; and that Circumciſion of the heart, which was ſignified by Circumciſion of the fleſh, ſhall remain for ever in the Kingdom of Glory: It was not ſo much the laſting of the ſign, as of the thing ſignified by it, and the Covenant ſealed by it: The ſign had its abolition, ſo that the Apoſtle is ſo peremptory in it, that he aſſerts, that if any went about to eſtabliſh it, he excluded himſelf from a participation of Chriſt *. The Sacrifices were to be perpetual, in regard of the thing ſignified by them, viz. the death of Chriſt, which was to endure in the efficacy of it: And the Paſſover was to be for ever *, in regard of the Redemption ſignified by it, which was to be of everlaſting remembrance. Canaan was to be an everlaſting poſſeſſion, in regard of the glory of Heaven typified, to be for ever conferr'd upon the ſpiritual Seed of Abraham. * Deut. 15. v. 17. * Lev. 6. 20. * Gen. 17. 8. * Gal. 5. 2. * Exod. 12. v. 24.

3. When a thing hath no end, tho' it hath a beginning. So Angels and Souls are everlaſting; tho' their Being ſhall never ceaſe, yet there was a time when their Being began; they were nothing before they were ſomething, tho' they ſhall never be nothing again, but ſhall live in endleſs happineſs or miſery.

But that properly is eternal, that hath neither beginning nor end; And thus Eternity is a Property of God. In this Doctrine I ſhall ſhew,

1. How God is eternal, or in what reſpects Eternity is his Property.

2. That he is eternal, and muſt needs be ſo.

3. That Eternity is only proper to God, and not common to him with any Creature.

4. The Uſe.

1. How God is eternal, or in what reſpects he is ſo. Eternity is a Negative Attribute, and is a denying of God any meaſures of Time, as Immenſity is a denying of him any bounds of place; As Immenſity is the diffuſion of his Eſſence, ſo Eternity is the duration of his Eſſence: And when we ſay God is eternal, we exclude from him all poſſibility of beginning and ending, all flux and change: As the Eſſence of God cannot be bounded by any place, ſo it is not to be limited by any time; as it is his Immenſity to be every where, ſo it is his Eternity to be always *. As created things are ſaid to be ſomewhere in regard of place, and to be preſent, paſt, or future, in regard of Time, ſo the Creator in regard of Place is every where; in regard of Time is ſemper: * His duration is as endleſs as his eſſence is boundleſs; he always was, and always will be, and will no more have an End than he had a Beginning; and this is an excellency belonging to the Supream Being: * As his Eſſence comprehends all Beings, and exceeds them, and his Immenſity ſurmounts all Places; ſo his Eternity comprehends all Times, all Durations, and infinitely excels them. * Gaſſend. * Crellius de Deo cap. 18. p. 41. * Lingend. Tom. 2. p. 496.

1. God is without Beginning.

* In the Beginning God created the World: God was then before the beginning of it; and what point can be ſet wherein God began, if he were before the beginning of created things? God was without beginning, tho' all other things had Time and Beginning from him. As Unity is before all Numbers, ſo is God before all his Creatures. Abraham called upon the Name of the everlaſting God; * The eternal God: 'Tis oppoſed to the Heathen Gods, which were but of Yeſterday, new Coyn'd, and ſo new; but the Eternal God, was before the World was made. In that ſenſe it is to be underſtood, * The Myſtery which was kept ſecret ſince the World began, but now is made manifeſt; and by the Scriptures of the Prophets, according to the Command of the everlaſting God, made known to all Nations for the Obedience of Faith. The Goſpel is not preached by the Command of a new and temporary God, but of that God that was before all Ages; tho' the manifeſtation of it be in time, yet the purpoſe and reſolve of it was from Eternity. * Gen. 1. 1. * Gen. 21. v. 33. אל שלם * Rom. 16. v. 26.

If there were Decrees before the foundation of the World, there was a Decreer before the foundation of the World; before the foundation of the World he lov'd Chriſt as a Mediator: * A fore-ordination of him was before the foundation of the World; a choice of Men, & therefore a chooſer before the foundation of the World; a Grace given in Chriſt before the World began *, and therefore a Donor of that Grace. From thoſe places, ſaith Crellius, it appears that God was before the foundation of the World, but they do not aſſert an abſolute Eternity *; but to be before all Creatures, is equivalent to his Being from Eternity. Time began with the foundation of the World, but God being before Time, could have no beginning in Time: Before the beginning of the Creation, and the beginning of Time, there could be nothing but Eternity; nothing but what was uncreated, that is, nothing but what was without beginning. To be in time, is, to have a beginning; to be before all Time, is never to have a beginning, but always to be: For as between the Creator and Creatures there is no Medium; ſo between Time and Eternity, there is no Medium. 'Tis as eaſily deduced, that he that was before all Creatures is Eternal, as he that made all Creatures is God: If he had a beginning, he muſt have it from another, or from himſelf; if from another, that from whom he received his Being would be better than he, ſo more a God than he. He cannot be God, that is not Supream; he cannot be Supream, that owes his Being to the Power of another: He would not be ſaid only to have Immortality as he is, * if he had it dependent upon another; nor could he have a beginning from himſelf; if he had given beginning to himſelf, then he was once nothing, there was a time when he was not; if he was not, how could he be the Cauſe of himſelf? 'Tis impoſſible for any to give a Beginning and Being to it ſelf: If it acts, it muſt exiſt; and ſo exiſt, before it exiſted: A thing would exiſt as a Cauſe, before it exiſted as an Effect. He that is not, cannot be the Cauſe that he is; If therefore God doth exiſt, and hath not his Being from another, he muſt exiſt from Eternity: Therefore when we ſay God is of, and from himſelf, we mean not that God gave Being to himſelf; but it is negatively to be underſtood, that he hath no cauſe of Exiſtence without himſelf. * John 17. v. 24. * Eph. 1. 4. 2 Tim. 1. 9. * Coccei Sum. p. 48. Theol. Gerhard Exeges, cap. 86. 4. p. 266. * 1 Tim. 6. 16.

Whatſoever Number of Millions of Millions of Years we can imagine before the Creation of the World, yet God was infinitely before thoſe; he is therefore called the Ancient of Days *, as being before all Days and Time, and eminently containing in himſelf all Times and Ages: Tho' indeed God cannot properly be called ancient, that will teſtifie that he is decaying, and ſhortly will not be; no more than he can be called young, which would ſignifie * Dan. 7. 9.

that

that he was not long before. All created things are new and freſh; but no Creature can find out any beginning of God: 'Tis impoſſible there ſhould be any beginning of him.

2. God is without End. He always was, always is, and always will be what he is: He remains always the ſame in Being; ſo far from any change, that no ſhadow of it can touch him *: He will continue in Being, as long as he hath already enjoy'd it; and if we could add never ſo many Millions of years together, we are ſtill as far from an End, as from a Beginning; for the Lord ſhall indure for ever *: As it is impoſſible he ſhould not be, being from all Eternity; ſo it is impoſſible that he ſhould not be to all Eternity. The Scripture is moſt plentiful in Teſtimonies of this Eternity of God, à parte poſt, or after the Creation of the World: He is ſaid to live for ever. * The Earth ſhall periſh, but God ſhall endure for ever, and his years ſhall have no end. Plants and Animals grow up from ſmall beginnings; arrive to their full growth and decline again, and have always remarkable alterations in their nature; But there is no declination in God by all the Revolutions of Time: Hence ſome think the incorruptibility of the Deity was ſignified by the Shittim, or Cedar-wood, whereof the Ark was made, it being of an incorruptible nature *.

That which had no beginning of duration, can never have an end, or any interruptions in it. Since God never depended upon any, what ſhould make him ceaſe to be what eternally he hath been, or put a ſtop to the continuance of his perfections? He cannot will his own deſtruction, that is againſt univerſal nature in all things to ceaſe from Being, if they can preſerve themſelves. He cannot deſert his own Being, becauſe he cannot but love himſelf as the beſt and chiefeſt good. The reaſon that any thing decays, is either its own native weakneſs, or ſuperior Power of ſomething contrary to it: * There is no weakneſs in the nature of God that can introduce any Corruption, becauſe he is infinitely ſimple without any mixture: Nor can he be over-powered by any thing elſe; a weaker cannot hurt him, and a ſtronger than he there cannot be: Nor can he be outwitted or circumvented, becauſe of his infinite Wiſdom: As he received his Being from none, ſo he cannot be deprived of it by any: As he doth neceſſarily exiſt, ſo he doth neceſſarily always exiſt. This indeed is the Property of God; nothing ſo proper to him, as always to be. Whatſoever perfection any Being hath, if it be not eternal, it is not divine. God only is immortal *; he only is ſo by a neceſſity of nature: Angels, Souls and Bodies too, after the Reſurrection ſhall be immortal; not by nature, but by grant; they are ſubject to return to nothing, if that Word that raiſed them from nothing ſhould ſpeak them into nothing again: 'Tis as eaſie with God to ſtrip them of it, as to inveſt them with it; nay, it is impoſſible but that they ſhould periſh, if God ſhould withdraw his Power from preſerving them, which he exerted in creating them: But God is immoveably fixed in his own Being; that as none gave him his Life, ſo none can deprive him of his Life, or the leaſt particle of it; not a jot of the happineſs and life, which God infinitely poſſeſſes, can be loſt: It will be as durable to everlaſting, as it hath been poſſeſſed from everlaſting.

3. There is no Succeſſion in God. God is without ſucceſſion or change; 'tis a part or property of Eternity to be without Succeſſion; From everlaſting to everlaſting he is God, i. e. the ſame. God doth not only always remain in Being, but he always remains the ſame in that Being, * Thou art the ſame. The Being of Creatures is ſucceſſive; the Being of God is permanent, and remains intire with all its perfections, unchanged in an infinite duration: Indeed the firſt notion of Eternity is to be without beginning and end, which notes to us the duration of a Being in regard of its Exiſtence; but to have no ſucceſſion, nothing firſt or laſt, notes rather the perfection of a Being in regard of its Eſſence.

*Pſal. 102. v. 27.

The Creatures are in a perpetual Flux; ſomething is acquired, or ſomething loſt every day. A Man is the ſame in regard of Exiſtence when he is a Man, as he was when he was a Child; but there is a new ſucceſſion of quantities and qualities in him; every day he acquires ſomething till he comes to his maturity; every day he loſeth ſomething till he comes to his Period. A Man is not the ſame at night that he was in the morning; ſomething is expir'd, and ſomething is added; every day there is a change in his Age, a change in his Subſtance, a change in his Accidents: But God hath his whole Being in one and the ſame point, or moment of Eternity; He receives nothing as an Addition to what he was before; He loſeth nothing of what he was before, He is always the ſame excellency and perfection in the ſame infiniteneſs as ever; His years do not fail *, his years do not come and go as others do; there is not this day, to morrow, or yeſterday with him: as nothing is paſt or future with him in regard of Knowledge, but all things are preſent; ſo nothing is paſt or future in regard of his Eſſence; He is not in his Eſſence this day what he was not before, or will be the next day and year what he is not now *; All his perfections are moſt perfect in him every moment, before all Ages, after all Ages: As he hath his whole Eſſence undivided in every place, as well as in immenſe ſpace; ſo he hath all his Being in one moment of time, as well as in infinite intervals of time. * Some illuſtrate the difference between Eternity and Time, by the ſimilitude of a Tree, or a Rock ſtanding upon the ſide of a River, or Shore of the Sea; the Tree ſtands always the ſame and unmoved, while the waters of the River glide along at the foot; The Flux is in the River, but the Tree acquires nothing but a diverſe reſpect and relation of preſence to the various parts of the River as they flow; The waters of the River preſs on, and puſh forward one another, and what the River had this minute, it hath not the ſame the next: So are all ſublunary things in a continual Flux. And tho' the Angels have no ſubſtantial change, yet they have an accidental; for the actions of the Angels this day, are not the ſame individual actions which they performed yeſterday: But in God there is no change, He always remains the ſame.

* Of a Creature it may be ſaid, He was, or he is, or he ſhall be: Of God it cannot be ſaid, but only he is: He is what he always was; and he is what he always will be; whereas a Creature is what he was not, and will be what he is not now. As it may be ſaid of the flame of a Candle, 'tis flame; but it is not the ſame individual flame as was before, nor is it the ſame that will be preſently after; there is a continual diſſolution of it into Air, and a continual ſupply for the Generation of more; While it continues, it may be ſaid there is a flame; yet not intirely one, but in a ſucceſſion of parts: So of a Man it may be ſaid, he is in a ſucceſſion of parts; but he is not the ſame that he was, and will not be the ſame that he is: But God is the ſame without any ſucceſſion of part, and of time: Of him it may be ſaid, He is: He is no more now than he was, and he ſhall be no more hereafter than he is. * God poſſeſſes a firm and abſolute Being, always conſtant to himſelf; He ſees all things ſliding under him in a continual Variation; He beholds the Revolutions in the World without any change of his moſt glorious and immoveable Nature; All other things paſs from one ſtate to another; from their Original, to their Eclipſe and Deſtruction: But God poſſeſſes his Being in one indiviſible Point, having neither beginning, end, nor middle.

1. There is no ſucceſſion in the Knowledge of God. The variety of Succeſſions and Changes in the World, make not ſucceſſion of new Objects in the Divine Mind; for all things are preſent to him from Eternity in regard of his Knowledge, tho' they are not actually preſent in the World in regard of their Exiſtence: He doth not know one thing now, and another anon: He ſees all things at once; Known unto *Acts 15.18 *God are all things from the beginning of the World. But in their true order of Succeſſion, as they lye in the Eternal Counſel of God, to be brought forth in time. Tho' there be a Succeſſion and order of things as they are wrought, yet there is no Succeſſion in God in regard of his knowledge of them. God knows the things that ſhall be wrought, and the order of them in their being brought upon the Stage of the World; yet both the things and the order he knows by one act. Tho' all things be preſent with God, yet they are preſent in him in the order of their appearance in the World, and not ſo preſent with him as if they ſhould be wrought at once. The Death of Chriſt was to precede his Reſurrection in order of time; there is a Succeſſion in this; both at once are known by God, yet the act of his Knowledge is not exerciſed about Chriſt as dying, and riſing at the ſame time; ſo that there is Succeſſion in things, when there is no Succeſſion in Gods knowledge of them. Since God knows time, he knows all things as they are in time: He doth not know all things to be at once, tho' he knows at once what is, has been, and will be. All things are paſt, preſent, and to come in regard of their Exiſtence; but there is not paſt, preſent and to come in regard of God's *Pariſienſis Knowledge of them; * becauſe he ſees and knows not by any other, but by himſelf; He is his own Light by which he ſees, his own Glaſs wherein he ſees; beholding himſelf, he beholds all things.

2. There is no ſucceſſion in the Decrees of God. He doth not decree this now, which he decreed not before; for as his Works were known from the beginning of the World, ſo his Works were decreed from the beginning of the World; as they are known at once, ſo they are decreed at once; there is a ſucceſſion in the execution of them, firſt Grace, then Glory; but the purpoſe of God for the beſtowing of both, *Eph. 1.4. was in one and the ſame moment of Eternity. * He choſe us before the foundation of the World, that we ſhould be holy. The choice of Chriſt, and the choice of ſome in him to be holy, and to be happy, were before the foundation of the World. 'Tis by the eternal Counſel of God, all things appear in time; they appear in their order according to the Counſel and Will of God from eternity. The Redemption of the World is after the Creation of the World; but the Decree whereby the World was created, and whereby it was redeemed, was from Eternity.

4. God is his own Eternity. He is not eternal by grant, and the diſpoil of any other, but by Nature *Calov. Socinian. Exiſtentia durans. and Eſſence. *The Eternity of God, is nothing elſe but the Duration of God; and the Duration of God, is nothing elſe but his Exiſtence enduring. If Eternity were any thing diſtinct from God, and not of the Eſſence of God; then there would be ſomething which was not God, neceſſary to perfect God. As Immortality is the great Perfection of a rational Creature, ſo eternity is the choice Perfection of God, yea, the gloſs and luſtre of all others. Every Perfection would be imperfect, if it were not always a Perfection.

God is eſſentially whatſoever he is; and there is nothing in God but his Eſſence; Duration, or Continuance in being in Creatures, differs from their Being; for they might exiſt but for one inſtant; in which caſe they may be ſaid to have Being, but not Duration, becauſe all Duration includes prius, & poſterius. All Creatures may ceaſe from Being, if it be the pleaſure of God; they are not therefore durable by their Eſſence, and therefore are not their own duration, no more than they are their own Exiſtence. And tho' ſome Creatures, as Angels, and Souls may be called Everlaſting, as a perpetual Life is communicated to them by God; yet they can never be called their own Eternity; becauſe ſuch a duration is not ſimply neceſſary, nor eſſential to them, but accidental, depending upon the pleaſure of another; there is nothing in their Nature that can hinder them from loſing it, if God, from whom they received it, ſhould deſign to take it away: But as God is his own neceſſity of exiſting, ſo he is his own duration in exiſting: *As he doth neceſſarily exiſt by himſelf, * Gaſſend. ſo he will always neceſſarily exiſt by himſelf.

5. Hence all the Perfections of God are Eternal. In regard of the Divine Eternity, all things in God are Eternity, his Power, Mercy, Wiſdom, Juſtice, Knowledge. God himſelf were not Eternal, if any of his Perfections which are eſſential to him were not eternal alſo; He had not elſe been a perfect God from all eternity, and ſo his whole ſelf had not been Eternal. If any thing belonging to the Nature of a thing be wanting, it cannot be ſaid to be that thing which it ought to be. If any thing requiſite to the Nature of God had been wanting one moment, he could not have been ſaid to be an eternal God.

The ſecond thing, God is eternal. The Spirit of God in Scripture condeſcends to our Capacities in ſignifying the Eternity of God by Days and Years, which are terms belonging to time, whereby we meaſure it: * But we muſt no more conceive that *Pſ. 102.27 God is bounded, or meaſured by time, and hath ſucceſſion of Days becauſe of thoſe Expreſſions, than we can conclude him to have a Body, becauſe Members are aſcribed to him in Scripture, to help our Conceptions of his glorious Nature and Operations.

Tho' Years are aſcribed to him; yet they are ſuch as cannot be numbred, cannot be finiſhed, ſince there is no proportion between the Duration of God, and the Years of Men. *The number of his Years cannot be ſearched out; for he makes ſmall the drops of Water; they pour down Rain according to the Vapour thereof. The numbers of the drops of Rain which *Job 36.26. have fallen in all parts of the Earth ſince the Creation of the World, if ſubſtracted from the number of the Years of God, would be found a ſmall quantity, a meer nothing to the Years of God. As all the Nations in the World compar'd with God, are but as the drop of a Bucket, worſe than nothing, than vanity; So all the Ages of the World, if compared with God, amount not to ſo much as the one hundred thouſandth part of a Minute: The Minutes from the Creation may be numbred, but the Years of the duration of God being infinite, are without meaſure. Iſa. 40.15.

As one day is to the Life of Man, ſo are a thouſand Years to the Life of God *: The Holy Ghoſt expreſſeth himſelf to the capacity of Man, to give us ſome Notion of an infinite Duration, by a reſemblance ſuited to the capacity of Man. If a thouſand Years be but as a Day to the Life of God, then as a Year is to the Life of Man, ſo are three hundred ſixty five thouſand Years to the Life of God! And as ſeventy Years are to the Life of Man, ſo are twenty five Millions four hundred and fifty thouſand Years to the Life of God: Yet ſtill, ſince there is no proportion between Time and Eternity, we muſt dart our thoughts beyond all thoſe; *For Years and Days * Pſ. 90.5. measure only the duration of created Things, and of those only that are Material and Corporeal, subject to the Motion of the Heavens, which makes Days and Years.

Sometimes this Eternity is expreſt by parts, as looking backward and forward; by the differences of time, paſt, preſent and to come, * which was, and is, and is to come. Tho' this might be ſpoken of any thing in being, tho' but for an Hour; it was the laſt Minute, it is now, and it will be the next Minute; yet the Holy Ghoſt would declare ſomething proper to God, as including all parts of time; He always was, is now, and always ſhall be: It might always be ſaid of him, he was, and it may always be ſaid of him, he will be: There is no time when he began, no time when he ſhall ceaſe. It cannot be ſaid of a Creature, he always was, he always is what he was, and he always will be what he is: But God always is what he was, and always will be what he is; ſo that it is a very ſignificant Expreſſion of the Eternity of God as can be ſuited to our Capacities.

*Rev. 1. 8. Rev. 4. 8. Crellius weakens this Argument, De Deo. c. 18. p. 42.

1. His eternity is evident by the Name God gives himſelf. * And God ſaid unto Moſes, I AM THAT I AM; thus ſhalt thou ſay to the Children of Iſrael, I AM hath ſent me unto you. This is the Name whereby he is diſtinguiſhed from all Creatures; I am, is his proper Name: This Deſcription being in the Preſent Tenſe, ſhews that his Eſſence knows no paſt, nor future: If it were, he was, it would intimate he were not now what he once was; if it were, he will be, it would intimate he were not yet what he will be. But, I am; I am the only Being, the Root of all Beings; he is therefore at the greateſt diſtance from not Being, and that is Eternal. So that [is] ſignifies his Eternity, as well as his Perfection and Immutability: As I am ſpeaks the want of no Bleſſedneſs, ſo it ſpeaks the want of no Duration; and therefore the French where-ever they find this word Jehovah in the Scripture, which we tranſlate Lord, and Lord Eternal, render it the Eternal. I am always and immutably the ſame. The Eternity of God is oppoſed to the Volubility of Time, which is extended into paſt, preſent and to come. Our time is but a ſmall drop, as Sand to all the Atoms and ſmall Particles of which the world is made; but God is an unbounded Sea of Being; I am that I am, i. e. an infinite Life. I have not that now, which I had not formerly; I ſhall not afterwards have that which I have not now; I am that in every moment which I was, and will be in all moments of time; Nothing can be added to me, nothing can be detracted from me: There is nothing ſuperior to him, which can detract from him; nothing deſirable that can be added to him. * Now if there were any beginning and end of God, any ſucceſſion in him, he could not be I am: For in regard of what was paſt he would not be, in regard of what was to come he is not yet: And upon this account, a Heathen argues well, Of all Creatures it may be ſaid, they were, or they will be; but of God it cannot be ſaid any thing elſe, but eſt, God is, becauſe he fills an eternal Duration: A Creature cannot be ſaid to be, if it be not yet, nor if it be not now, but hath been *.

God only can be called, I am; all Creatures have more of not Being than Being; for every Creature was nothing from Eternity, before it was made ſomething in time; and if it be corruptible in its whole Nature, it will be nothing to Eternity after it hath been ſomething in time; and if it be not corruptible in its Nature, as the Angels; or in every part of its Nature, as Man in regard of his Soul; yet it hath not properly a Being, becauſe it is dependent upon the pleaſure of God, to continue it, or deprive it of it; and while it is, it is mutable, and all mutability is a mixture of not Being: If God therefore be properly I am, i. e. Being, it follows that he always was; for if he were not always, he muſt (as was argued before) be produced by ſome other, or by himſelf: By another he could not, then he had not been God, but a Creature; nor by himſelf, for then as producing, he muſt be before himſelf, as produced; he had been before he was: And he always will be, for being I am, having all Being in himſelf, and the fountain of all Being to every thing elſe, how can he ever have his Name changed to I am not?

2. God hath Life in himſelf, John 5. 26. The Father hath Life in himſelf: He is the living God, therefore ſtedfaſt for ever *: He hath Life by his Eſſence, not by Participation: He is a Sun to give Light and Life to all Creatures, but receives not Light or Life from any thing; & therefore he hath an unlimited Life, not a drop of Life but a fountain, not a ſpark of a limited Life, but a Life tranſcending all bounds: He hath Life in himſelf: All Creatures have their Life in him and from him. He that hath Life in himſelf doth neceſſarily exiſt, and could never be made to exiſt; for then he had not Life in himſelf, but in that which made him to exiſt, and gave him Life: What doth neceſſarily exiſt therefore, exiſts from Eternity; what hath Being of it ſelf, could never be produced in time, could not want Being one moment, becauſe it hath Being from its Eſſence without influence of any efficient Cauſe. * When God pronounced his Name, I am that I am, Angels and Men were in Being; the World had been created above two thouſand four hundred Years; Moſes to whom he then ſpeaks, was in Being; yet God only is, becauſe he only hath the fountain of Being in himſelf, but all that they were, was a rivulet from him; He hath from nothing elſe, that he doth ſubſiſt; every thing elſe hath its ſubſiſtence from him as their Root, as the Beam from the Sun, as the Rivers and Fountains from the Sea. All Life is ſeated in God, as in its proper Throne; in its moſt perfect Purity. God is Life; 'tis in him originally, radically, therefore eternally: He is a pure Act, nothing but Vigor and Act; He hath by his Nature that Life, which others have by his Grant; whence the Apoſtle ſaith *, not only that he is Immortal, but he hath Immortality in a full Poſſeſſion; Fee-ſimple, not depending upon the Will of another, but containing all things within himſelf. He that hath Life in himſelf, and is from himſelf, cannot but be: He always was, becauſe he received his Being from no other, and none can take away that Being which was not given by another *. If there were any ſpace before he did exiſt, then there were ſomething which made him to exiſt; Life would not then be in him, but in that which produced him into Being; he could not then be God, but that other which gave him Being, would be God. And to ſay, God ſprung into Being by chance, when we ſee nothing in the World that is brought forth by Chance, but hath ſome cauſe of its Exiſtence, would be vain; for ſince God is a Being, Chance which is nothing, could not bring forth ſomething; and by the ſame reaſon that he ſprung up by Chance, he might totally vaniſh by Chance. What a ſtrange Notion of a GOD would this be, ſuch a God that had no Life in himſelf, but from Chance?

Since he had life in himſelf, and that there was no cauſe of his Exiſtence; he can have no cauſe of his limitation, and can no more be determined to a time, than he can to a place. What hath life in it ſelf, hath life without bounds, and can never deſert it, nor be deprived of it: So that he lives neceſſarily, and it is abſolutely impoſſible that he ſhould not live; whereas all other things live, and move, and have their Being in him *; and as they live by his Will, ſo they can return to nothing at his Word.

*Acts 17.28

3. If God were not eternal, he were not immutable in his Nature. 'Tis contrary to the nature of Immutability to be without Eternity; for whatſoever begins, is changed in its paſſing from not Being to Being: It began to be what it was not, and if it ends, it ceaſeth to be what it was; It cannot therefore be ſaid to be God, if there were either beginning or ending, or ſucceſſion in it, Mal. 3. 6. I am the Lord, I change not, Job 37. 23. (Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out.) God argues here, ſaith Calvin, from his unchangeable nature as Jehovah, to his immutability in his purpoſe: Had he not been eternal, there had been the greateſt change from nothing to ſomething: A change of the Eſſence, is greater than a change of purpoſe. God is a Sun glittering always in the ſame glory; No growing up in Youth; no paſſing on to Age: If he were not without ſucceſſion, ſtanding in one point of Eternity, there would be a change from paſt to preſent, from preſent to future. The Eternity of God is a Shield againſt all kind of mutability. If any thing ſprang up in the Eſſence of God that was not there before, he could not be ſaid to be either an eternal, or an unchanged Subſtance.

4. God could not be an infinitely perfect Being, if he were not eternal. A finite duration is inconſiſtent with infinite perfection. Whatſoever is contracted within the limits of Time, cannot ſwallow up all perfections in it ſelf. God hath an unſearchable perfection. * Canſt thou by ſearching find out God; canſt thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? He cannot be found out, he is infinite, becauſe he is incomprehenſible: Incomprehenſibility ariſeth from an infinite perfection, which cannot be fathom'd by the ſhort lines of Man's Underſtanding: His Eſſence, in regard of its diffuſion, and in regard of its duration, is incomprehenſible as well as his action: If God therefore had beginning, he could not be infinite; if not infinite, he did not poſſeſs the higheſt perfection, becauſe a perfection might be conceived beyond it: If his Being could fail, he were not perfect: Can that deſerve the name of the higheſt perfection, which is capable of corruption and diſſolution? To be finite and limited, is the greateſt imperfection, for it conſiſts in a denial of Being. He could not be the moſt bleſſed Being, if he were not always ſo, and ſhould not for ever remain to be ſo; and whatſoever perfections he had, would be ſowred by the thoughts, that in time they would ceaſe; and ſo could not be pure perfections, becauſe not permanent; but He is bleſſed from everlaſting to everlaſting *. Had he a beginning, he could not have all perfection without limitation; he would have been limited by that which gave him beginning; that which gave him Being would be God, and not himſelf, and ſo more perfect than he: But ſince God is the moſt Sovereign perfection, than which nothing can be imagined perfecter by the moſt capacious underſtanding, He is certainly eternal; being infinite, nothing can be added to him, nothing detracted from him.

* Job 11.7.

* Pſ. 41.13.

5. God could not be Omnipotent, Almighty, if he were not Eternal. The Title of Almighty, agrees not with a nature that had a beginning; whatſoever hath a beginning was once nothing, and when it was nothing could act nothing. Where there is no Being, there is no Power; neither doth the Title of Almighty agree with a periſhing nature: He can do nothing to purpoſe, that cannot preſerve himſelf againſt the outward force and violence of Enemies, or againſt the inward cauſes of corruption and diſſolution. No account is to be made of Man, becauſe his breath is in his Noſtrils *; Could a better account be made of God, if he were of the like condition? He could not properly be Almighty, that were not always mighty: If he be Omnipotent, nothing can impair him; He that hath all power, can have no hurt *; If he doth whatſoever he pleaſeth, nothing can make him miſerable, ſince miſery conſiſts in thoſe things which happen againſt our Will. The Almightineſs and Eternity of God are link'd together: I am Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the Ending, ſaith the Lord, which was, and which is, and which is to come, the Almighty *: Almighty, becauſe Eternal, and Eternal, becauſe Almighty.

6. God would not be the firſt Cauſe of all if he were not eternal; But he is the firſt, and the laſt; the firſt cauſe of all things, the laſt end of all things *: That which is the firſt cannot begin to be, it were not then the firſt; it cannot ceaſe to be: Whatſoever is diſſolved, is diſſolved into that whereof it doth conſiſt, which was before it, and then it was not the firſt. * The World might not have been, it was once nothing; it muſt have ſome cauſe to call it out of nothing; Nothing hath no power to make it ſelf ſomething, there is a ſuperior Cauſe, by whoſe Will and Power it comes into Being, and ſo gives all the Creatures their diſtinct forms.

* Coccei Sum. Theol.

This Power cannot but be eternal; it muſt be before the World; the Founder muſt be before the Foundation *; and his Exiſtence muſt be from Eternity, or we muſt ſay nothing did exiſt from Eternity: And if there were no Being from Eternity, there could not now be any Being in Time: What we ſee, and what we are, muſt ariſe from it ſelf or ſome other; it cannot from it ſelf: If any thing made it ſelf, it had a power to make it ſelf; it then had an active Power before it had a Being; It was ſomething in regard of Power, and was nothing in regard of Exiſtence at the ſame time: Suppoſe it had a Power to produce it ſelf, this power muſt be conferred upon it by another; and ſo the power of producing it ſelf, was not from it ſelf, but from another: But if the power of Being was from it ſelf, why did it not produce it ſelf before? Why was it one moment out of Being, * if there be any exiſtence of things? 'tis neceſſary that that, which was the firſt Cauſe, ſhould exiſt from Eternity. VVhatſoever was the immediate cauſe of the VVorld, yet the firſt and chief Cauſe wherein we muſt reſt, muſt have nothing before it; if it had any thing before it, it were not the firſt; He therefore that is the firſt Cauſe muſt be without beginning, nothing muſt be before him: If he had a beginning from ſome other, he could not be the firſt Principle and Author of all things; If he be the firſt Cauſe of all things, he muſt give himſelf a beginning, or be from Eternity; He could not give himſelf a beginning; whatſoever begins in Time was nothing before, and when it was nothing it could do nothing; it could not give it ſelf any thing, for then it gave what it had not, and did what it could not. If he made himſelf in time, why did he not make himſelf before? What hindred him? It was either becauſe he could not, or becauſe he would not! If he could not, he always wanted power, and always would unleſs it were beſtowed upon him, and then he could not be ſaid to be from himſelf? If he would not make himſelf before, then he might have made himſelf when he would: How had he the power of willing and nilling without a Being? Nothing cannot will or nill, Nothing hath no faculties: So that it is neceſſary to grant ſome Eternal Being, or run into inextricable Labyrinths and Mazes. If we deny ſome Eternal Being, we muſt deny all Being; our own Being, the Being of every thing about us; unconceiveable abſurdities will ariſe.

So

So then, if God were the Cauſe of all things, He did exiſt before all things, and that from Eternity.

The third thing is, Eternity is only proper to God and not communicable *. 'Tis as great a madneſs to aſcribe Eternity to the Creature, as to deprive the Lord of the Creature of Eternity. 'Tis ſo proper to God, that when the Apoſtle would prove the Deity of Chriſt, he proves it by his Immutability and Eternity, as well as his Creating Power: * Thou art the ſame, and thy years ſhall not fail. The argument had no ſtrength, if Eternity belonged eſſentially to any but God; and therefore he is ſaid only to have Immortality *: All other things receive their Being from him, and can be deprived of their Being by him: All things depend on him, he of none: All other things are like Clothes, which would conſume if God preſerved them not. Immortality is appropriated to God, i. e. an independent Immortality. Angels and Souls have an Immortality, but by donation from God, not by their own Eſſence; dependent upon their Creator, not neceſſary in their own Nature: God might have annihilated them, after he had created them; ſo that their duration cannot properly be called an Eternity, it being extrinſical to them, and depending upon the will of their Creator, by whom they may be extinguiſh'd: It is not an abſolute and neceſſary, but a precarious Immortality. Whatſoever is not God, is Temporary: Whatſoever is Eternal, is God.

'Tis a contradiction to ſay a Creature can be Eternal: As nothing Eternal is created, ſo nothing created is Eternal. What is diſtinct from the nature of God cannot be Eternal, Eternity being the Eſſence of God. Every Creature in the notion of a Creature, ſpeaks a dependence on ſome Cauſe, and therefore cannot be Eternal. * As it is repugnant to the nature of God not to be Eternal; ſo it is repugnant to the nature of a Creature to be Eternal; for then a Creature would be equal to the Creator, and the Creator or the Cauſe, would not be before the Creature or Effect.

It would be all one to admit many Gods, as many Eternals; and all one to ſay God can be created, as to ſay a Creature can be uncreated, which is to be Eternal.

1. Creation is a producing ſomething from nothing. What was once nothing, cannot therefore be Eternal; not Being was Eternal; therefore its Being could not be Eternal, for it ſhould be then before it was, and would be ſomething when it was nothing. 'Tis the nature of a Creature to be nothing before it was created; what was nothing before it was, cannot be equal with God in an Eternity of Duration.

2. There is no Creature but is mutable, therefore not eternal. As it had a change from nothing to ſomething, ſo it may be changed from being to not being. If the Creature were not mutable it would be moſt perfect, and ſo would not be a Creature, but God; for God only is moſt perfect: 'Tis as much the Eſſence of a Creature to be mutable, as it is the Eſſence of God to be immutable: Mutability and Eternity are utterly inconſiſtent.

3. No Creature is infinite, therefore not eternal. To be infinite in Duration is all one, as to be infinite in Eſſence *: 'Tis as reaſonable to conceive a Creature immenſe, filling all places at once, as eternal, extended to all Ages; becauſe neither can be without Infiniteneſs, which is the Property of the Deity. A Creature may as well be without bounds of Place, as limitations of Time.

4. No effect of an intellectual free Agent, can be equal in duration to its Cauſe. The Production of natural Agents are as ancient often as themſelves; the Sun produceth a beam as old in Time as it ſelf; but who ever heard of a piece of wiſe Workmanſhip as old as the wiſe Artificer? God produced a Creature, not neceſſarily and naturally, as the Sun doth a Beam, but freely, as an intelligent Agent. The Sun was not neceſſary; it might be, or not be, according to the pleaſure of God. * A free act of the Will is neceſſary to precede in order of Time, as the Cauſe of ſuch effects as are purely voluntary. Thoſe Cauſes that act as ſoon as they exiſt, act naturally, neceſſarily, not freely, and cannot ceaſe from acting.

But ſuppoſe a Creature might have exiſted by the Will of God from Eternity; yet, as ſome think, it could not be ſaid abſolutely, and in its own nature, to be eternal; becauſe Eternity was not of the Eſſence of it. The Creature could not be its own duration; for tho' it were from Eternity, it might not have been from Eternity; becauſe its Exiſtence depended upon the free Will of God, who might have choſe, whether he would have created it or no.

God only is Eternal, the firſt and the laſt, the beginning and the end; who, as he ſubſiſted before any Creature had a Being, ſo he will eternally ſubſiſt if all Creatures were reduced to nothing.

IV. Uſe.

1. Information.

1. If God be of an eternal duration, then Chriſt is God: Eternity is the Property of God, but it is aſcribed to Chriſt; He is before all things *; i.e. all created things: He is therefore no Creature; and if no Creature, eternal. All things were created by him, both in Heaven and in Earth, Angels as well as Men *, whether they be Thrones or Dominions. If all things were his Creatures, then he is no Creature; if he were, all things were not created by him, or he muſt create himſelf.

He hath no difference of Time; for he is the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever *; The ſame, with the Name of God, I AM, which ſignifies his Eternity: He is no more to day than he was yeſterday, nor will be any other to morrow than he is to day; And therefore Melchiſedeck, whoſe Deſcent, Birth and Death, Father and Mother, Beginning and End of days, are not upon Record, was a Type of the Exiſtence of Chriſt without difference of Time. * Having neither Beginning of Days nor End of Life, but made like the Son of God. The ſuppreſſion of his Birth and Death, was intended by the Holy Ghoſt, as a Type of the excellency of Chriſt's Perſon, in regard of his Eternity, and the duration of his Charge in regard of his Prieſthood. As there was an appearance of an Eternity in the ſuppreſſion of the Race of Melchiſedeck, ſo there is a true Eternity in the Son of God. How could the Eternity of the Son of God be expreſt by any reſemblance ſo well, as by ſuch a ſuppreſſion of the Beginning and End of this great Perſon, different from the Cuſtom of the Spirit of God in the Old Teſtament, who often Records the Generations and Ends of holy Men; and why might not this, which was a kind of a ſhadow of Eternity, be a repreſentation of the true Eternity of Chriſt, as well as the reſtoration of Iſaac to his Father without death, is ſaid to be a figure of the Reſurrection of Chriſt after a real death? Melchiſedeck is only mentioned once (without any Record of his extraction) in his appearance to Abraham after his victory, as if he came from Heaven only for that action, and inſtantly diſappeared again, as if he had been an eternal Perſon.

And Chriſt himſelf hints his one Eternity, * I came forth from the Father, and am come into the World, again I leave the World and go to the Father. He goes to the Father as he came from the Father; He goes to the Father for everlaſting, ſo he came from the Father from everlaſting; there is the ſame duration in coming forth from the Father, as in returning to the Father. But more plainly; * He ſpeaks of

of a Glory that he had with the Father before the World was, when there was no Creature in Being; this is an actual glory, and not only in Decree: For a decreed glory Believers had, and why may not every one of them ſay the ſame words, Father glorifie me with that glory which I had with thee before the World was, if it were only a glory in decree? Nay, it may be ſaid of every Man, he was before the World was, becauſe he was ſo in decree. Chriſt ſpeaks of ſomething peculiar to him, a glory in actual poſſeſſion before the World was; glorifie me, embrace, honour me as thy Son, whereas I have now been in the eyes of the World handled diſgracefully as a Servant: If it were only in decree, why is not the like expreſſion uſed of others in Scripture as well as of Chriſt? Why did he not uſe the ſame words for his Diſciples that were then with him, who had a glory in decree? His Eternity is alſo mentioned in the Old Teſtament: * The Lord poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his way before his Works of old. If he were the work of God, he exiſted before himſelf, if he exiſted before all the VVorks of God; 'tis not ſo properly meant of the eſſential VViſdom of God, ſince the diſcourſe runs in the name of a Perſon; and ſeveral paſſages there are which belong not ſo much to the eſſential VViſdom of God, as v. 13. The evil way and the froward mouth do I hate; which belongs rather to the holineſs of God, than to the eſſential VViſdom of God, beſides it is diſtinguiſh'd from Jehovah, as poſſeſſed by him, and rejoycing before him. Yet plainer, * Out of thee, i.e. Bethlehem, ſhall he come forth to be Ruler in Iſrael, whoſe goings forth have been from of old, from everlaſting מימי עולם from the Ways of Eternity. There are two goings forth of Chriſt deſcribed, one from Bethlehem in the days of his Incarnation, and another from Eternity. The Holy Ghoſt adds after his prediction of his Incarnation, his going out from everlaſting, that none ſhould doubt of his Deity: If this going out from everlaſting were only in the purpoſe of God, it might be ſaid of David, and of every Creature. And in Iſa. 9. He is particularly called the Everlaſting, or Eternal Father: Not the Father in the Trinity, but a Father to us; yet Eternal, the Father of Eternity. As he is the mighty God, ſo he is the everlaſting Father: Can ſuch a Title be aſcribed to any, whoſe Being depends upon the VVill of another, and may be daſht out at the pleaſure of a Superior?

* Pro. 8. 22.

* Mica. 5. 2.

As the Eternity of God is the ground of all Religion, ſo the Eternity of Chriſt is the ground of the Chriſtian Religion. Could our Sins be perfectly expiated, had he not an eternal Divinity to anſwer for the offences committed againſt an eternal God? Temporary ſufferings had been of little validity, without an infiniteneſs and eternity in his Perſon to add weight to his paſſion.

2. If God be eternal, he knows all things as preſent. * All things are preſent to him in his Eternity; for this is the notion of Eternity, to be without ſucceſſion. If Eternity be one indiviſible point, and is not diffuſed into preceding and ſucceeding parts, then that which is known in it or by it, is perceived without any ſucceſſion; for knowledge is as the ſubſtance of the perſon knowing; if that hath various actions and diſtinct from it ſelf, then it underſtands things in differences of time as time preſents them to view: But ſince God's Being depends not upon the revolutions of time, ſo neither doth his Knowledge; it exceeds all motions of Years and Days, comprehends infinite ſpaces of paſt and future. God conſiders all things in his Eternity in one ſimple knowledge; as if they were now acted before him: * Known unto God are all his Works from the beginning of the World ἀπ' αἰῶνος à ſeculo; from Eternity. God's knowledge is co-eternal with him: If he knows that in time which he did not know from eternity, he would not be eternally perfect, ſince knowledge is the perfection of an intelligent nature.

* Petav.

* Act. 15. 18.

3. How bold and fooliſh is it for a mortal Creature, to cenſure the Counſels and Actions of an eternal God, or be too curious in his inquiſitions? 'Tis by the conſideration of the unſearchable number of the years of God that Elihu checks too bold enquiries: Who hath enjoyned him his way, or who can ſay, thou haſt wrought iniquity? Behold, God is great, and we know him not, neither can the number of his years be ſearched out. Eternity ſets God above our Enquiries and Cenſures. Infants of a day old are not able to underſtand the acts of wiſe and gray Heads: Shall we, that are of ſo ſhort a Being and Underſtanding as yeſterday, preſume to meaſure the motions of Eternity by our ſcanty Intellects? We that cannot foreſee an unexpected accident which falls in to blaſt a well laid deſign, and run a Ship many Leagues back from the intended Harbour; We cannot underſtand the reaſon of things we ſee done in time, the motions of the Sea, the generation of Rain, the nature of Light, the Sympathies and Antipathies of the Creatures; and ſhall we dare to cenſure the actions of an eternal God, ſo infinitely beyond our reach? The Counſels of a boundleſs Being are not to be ſcann'd by the Brain of a ſilly Worm, that hath breathed but a few minutes in the World: Since Eternity cannot be comprehended in time, 'tis not to be judged by a Creature of time; Let us remember to magnifie his Works which we behold, becauſe he is eternal, which is the exhortation of Elihu, backt by this Doctrine of God's eternity *; and not accuſe any work of him who is the Ancient of Days, or preſume to direct him, of whoſe Eternity we come infinitely ſhort. When ever therefore any unworthy notion of the Counſels and Works of God is ſuggeſted to us by Satan, or our own corrupt hearts; let us look backward to God's eternal and our own ſhort duration, and ſilence our ſelves with the ſame queſtion wherewith God put a ſtop to the reaſoning of Job; * Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth? and reprove our ſelves for our curioſity; ſince we are of ſo ſhort a ſtanding, and were nothing when the eternal God laid the firſt Stone of the World.

* Job 36. 26. compared with the 23.

* Job 36. 24.

* Job 38. 4.

4. What a folly and boldneſs is there in ſin, ſince an eternal God is offended thereby? All ſin is aggravated by God's Eternity: The blackneſs of the Heathen Idolatry was in changing the glory of the incorruptible God *, erecting reſemblances of him contrary to his Immortal nature; as if the eternal God, whoſe Life is as unlimited as Eternity, were like thoſe Creatures whoſe Beings are meaſured by the ſhort Ell of Time, which are of a corruptible nature, and daily paſſing on to Corruption: They could not really deprive God of his Glory and Immortality, but they did in Eſtimation. There is in the nature of every ſin a tendency to reduce God to a not Being. He that thinks unworthily of God, or acts unworthily towards him, doth (as much as in him lies) ſully and deſtroy theſe two perfections of his, Immutability and Eternity: 'Tis a carriage, as if he were as contemptible as a Creature that were but of yeſterday, and ſhall not remain in being to morrow. He that would put an end to God's glory by darkning it, would put an end to God's life by deſtroying it. He that ſhould love a Beaſt with as great an affection as he loves a Man, contemns a rational Nature; and he that loves a periſhing thing with the ſame affection he ſhould love an everlaſting God, contemns his Eternity; He debaſeth the duration of God below that of the World: The low valuation of God ſpeaks him in his eſteem, no better than withering Graſs, or a Gourd, which laſts for a Night; and the Creature which poſſeſſes his affection, to be a Good that laſts for ever. How fooliſh then is every ſin, that tends to deſtroy a Being that cannot deſtroy or deſert himſelf; a Being, without whoſe Eternity the Sinner himſelf could not have had the capacity of a Being, to affront him? How baſe is that which would not let the Works of God remain in their eſtabliſhed poſture? How much more baſe in not enduring the Fountain and Glory of all Beings, that would not only put an end to the Beauty of the World, but the Eternity of God?

* Rom. 1. v. 23.

5. How dreadful is it to lie under the ſtroke of an eternal God? His Eternity is as great a terror to him that hates him, as it is a comfort to him that loves him; becauſe he is the living God, an everlaſting King, *the Nations ſhall not be able to abide his Indignation. Tho' God be leaſt in their Thoughts, and is made light of in the World; yet the Thoughts of God's Eternity, when he comes to judge the World, ſhall make the Slighters of him tremble: That the Judge and Puniſher lives for ever, is the greateſt grievance to a Soul in Miſery, and adds an unconceivable weight to it, above what the infiniteneſs of God's executive Power could do without that duration: His Eternity makes the Puniſhment more dreadful than his Power; His Power makes it ſharp, but his Eternity renders it perpetual; ever to endure, is the Sting at the end of every Laſh.

*Jer. 10. 10

And how ſad is it, to think that God lays his Eternity to pawn for the Puniſhment of obſtinate Sinners, and engageth it by an Oath, that he will whet his glittering Sword, that his Hand ſhall take hold of Judgment, that he will render Vengeance to his Enemies, and a Reward to them that hate him; a Reward proportioned to the greatneſs of their Offences, and the Glory of an Eternal God? * I lift up my Hand to Heaven, and ſay, I live for ever, i. e. as ſurely as I live for ever, I will whet my glittering Sword. As none can convey good with a perpetuity, ſo none can convey evil with ſuch a laſtingneſs as God. 'Tis a great loſs to loſe a Ship richly fraught in the bottom of the Sea, never to be caſt upon the Shore; But how much greater is it, to loſe eternally a Sovereign God, which we were capable of eternally enjoying, and undergo an Evil as durable as that God we ſlighted, and were in a poſſibility of avoiding? The Miſeries of Men after this Life are not eaſed, but ſharpened by the Life and Eternity of God.

* Deu. 32. 40, 41.

The Second Uſe is of Comfort. What foundation of Comfort can we have in any of God's Attributes, were it not for his Infiniteneſs and Eternity; tho' he be Merciful, Good, Wiſe, Faithful? What ſupport could there be, if they were Perfections belonging to a corruptible God? What hopes of a Reſurrection to Happineſs can we have, or of the duration of it; if that God that promiſed it, were not Immortal to continue it, as well as powerful to effect it? His Power were not Almighty, if his Duration were not Eternal.

1. If God be eternal, his Covenant will be ſo. 'Tis founded upon the Eternity of God; the Oath whereby he confirms it, is, by his Life: Since there is none greater than himſelf, he ſwears by himſelf,* or by his own Life, which he engageth together with his Eternity for the full Performance; ſo that if he lives for ever, the Covenant ſhall not be diſannull'd, 'tis an immutable Counſel : The Immutability of his Counſel follows the Immutability of his Nature. Immutability and Eternity, go Hand in Hand together. The promiſe of Eternal Life, is as antient as God himſelf, in regard of the purpoſe of the Promiſe, or in regard of the promiſe made to Chriſt for us: Eternal Life which God promiſed before the World began. As it hath an ante-eternity, ſo it hath a poſt-eternity: Therefore the Goſpel, which is the new Covenant publiſh'd, is term'd, the *everlaſting Goſpel; which can no more be altered and periſh, than God can change and vaniſh into nothing: He can as little morally deny his Truth, as he can naturally deſert his Life. The Covenant is there repreſented in a Green Colour, to note its perpetual Verdure. The Rain-bow, the Emblem of the Covenant, about the Throne, was like to an Emrald, a Stone of a green Colour *; whereas the natural Rain-bow hath many Colours; this but one, to ſignifie its Eternity.

2. If God be eternal, he being our God in Covenant, is an eternal Good and Poſſeſſion. This God is our God for ever and ever; * He is a dwelling place in all Generations. We ſhall traverſe the World a while, and then arrive at the bleſſings Jacob wiſhed for *Joſeph; The bleſſings of the everlaſting Hills. If an Eſtate of a thouſand pound per Annum, render a Man's Life comfortable for a ſhort time, how much more may the Soul be ſwallowed up with Joy in the enjoyment of the Creator, whoſe Years never fail, who lives for ever to be enjoyed, and can keep us in life for ever to enjoy him? Death indeed will ſeize upon us by God's irreverſible Order, but the immortal Creator will make him diſgorge his Morſel, and land us in a Glorious Immortality; our Souls at the Diſſolution, and our Bodies at the Reſurrection, after which they ſhall remain for ever, and imploy the extent of that boundleſs Eternity in the fruition of the Sovereign and Eternal God: For 'tis impoſſible that the Believer, who is united to the immortal God that is from everlaſting to everlaſting, can ever periſh; for being in Conjunction with him who is an ever-flowing Fountain of Life, he cannot ſuffer him to remain in the Jaws of Death. While God is eternal, and always the ſame; 'tis not poſſible that thoſe that partake of his ſpiritual Life, ſhould not alſo partake of his Eternal. 'Tis from the conſideration of the endleſneſs of the years of God that the Church comforts her ſelf, That her *Children ſhall continue, and their Seed be eſtabliſhed for ever. And from the Eternity of God, Habakkuk, ch. 1. 12. concludes the eternity of Believers, Art not thou from everlaſting, O Lord my God, my holy One? We ſhall not dye O Lord. After they are retir'd from this World, they ſhall live for ever with God, without any change by the multitude of thoſe imaginable Years and Ages that ſhall run for ever. 'Tis that God that hath neither beginning nor end, that is our God; who hath not only Immortality in himſelf, but Immortality to give out to others. As he hath abundance of Spirit to quicken them *, ſo he hath abundance of Immortality to continue them. 'Tis only in the Conſideration of this a Man can with wiſdom ſay, Soul take thy eaſe, thou haſt Goods laid up for many Years; to ſay it of any other Poſſeſſion, is the greateſt folly in the Judgment of our Saviour *. Mortality ſhall be ſwallowed up of Immortality: Rivers of pleaſure ſhall be for evermore. Death is a Word never ſpoken there by any, never heard by any in that Poſſeſſion of Eternity; 'tis for ever put out as one of Chriſt's conquered Enemies.

The Happineſs depends upon the preſence of God, with whom Believers ſhall be for ever preſent. Happineſs cannot periſh as long as God lives: He is the firſt and the laſt; the firſt of all Delights, nothing before him; the laſt of all Pleaſures, nothing beyond him: A Paradiſe of Delights in every Point without a flaming Sword.

3. The enjoyment of God will be as freſh and glorious after many Ages, as it was at firſt. God is eternal, and Eternity knows no change; there will then be the fulleſt poſſeſſion without any decay in the

Object

Object enjoy'd. There can be nothing paſt, nothing future; Time neither adds to it, nor detracts from it: That infinite fulneſs of Perfection which flouriſheth in him now, will flouriſh eternally, without any diſcolouring of it in the leaſt by thoſe innumerable Ages that ſhall run to Eternity, much leſs any diſſpoyling him of them. He is the ſame in his endleſs Duration. * As God is, ſo will the Eternity of him be, without Succeſſion, without Diviſion: The fulneſs of Joy will be always preſent; without paſt to be thought of with regret for being gone; without future to be expected with tormenting Deſires. When we enjoy God, we enjoy him in his Eternity without any Flux; an entire Poſſeſſion of all together, without the paſſing away of Pleaſures that may be wiſhed to return, or expectation of future Joys which might be deſired to haſten. Time is Fluid, but Eternity is Stable, and after many Ages, the Joys will be as ſavoury and ſatisfying, as if they had been but that moment firſt taſted by our hungry Appetites. When the Glory of the Lord ſhall riſe upon you, it ſhall be ſo far from ever ſetting, that after millions of Years are expired, as numerous as the Sands on the Sea-ſhore, the Sun in the light of whoſe Countenance you ſhall live, ſhall be as bright as at the firſt appearance. He will be ſo far from ceaſing to flow, that he will flow as ſtrong, as full as at the firſt Communication of himſelf in Glory to the Creature. God therefore as ſitting upon his Throne of Grace, and acting according to his Covenant, is like a Jaſper-ſtone, which is of a green Colour, a Colour always delightful *; Becauſe God is always vigorous, and flouriſhing; a pure act of Life, ſparkling new and freſh Rays of Life and Light to the Creature, flouriſhing with a perpetual Spring, and contenting the moſt capacious Deſire; forming your Intereſt, Pleaſure and Satisfaction, with an infinite Variety, without any Change or Succeſſion: He will have variety to encreaſe Delights, and eternity to perpetuate them: This will be the fruit of the enjoyment of an Infinite, an Eternal God: He is not a Ciſtern but a Fountain, wherein Water is always living, and never putrifies.

* Rev. 4.3.

4. If God be eternal, Here is a ſtrong ground of Comfort againſt the Diſtreſſes of the Church, and the threats of the Churches Enemies. God's abiding for ever, is the Plea Jeremy makes for his return to his forſaken Church. * Thou, O Lord, remaineſt for ever, thy Throne from Generation to Generation. The Church is weak; created things are eaſily cut off: What prop is there, but that God that lives for ever? What tho' Jeruſalem loſt its Bulwarks, the Temple were defaced, the Land waſted; yet the God of Jeruſalem ſits upon an eternal Throne, and from everlaſting to everlaſting there is no diminution of his Power. —— The Prophet intimates in this Complaint, that it is not agreeable to God's Eternity to forget his People to whom he hath from Eternity bore good Will. In the greateſt Confuſions, the Churches Eyes are to be fixed upon the Eternity of God's Throne, where he ſits as Governour of the World: No Creature can take any comfort in this Perfection, but the Church; other Creatures depend upon God, but the Church is united to him.

*Lam. 5.20.

The firſt diſcovery of the Name I am, which ſignifies the Divine Eternity as well as Immutability, was for the comfort of the oppreſt Iſraelites in Ægypt *; It was then publiſht from the ſecret place of the Almighty, as the only ſtrong Cordial to refreſh them: It hath not yet, it ſhall not ever loſe its vertue in any of the Miſeries that have, or ſhall ſucceſſively befal the Church. 'Tis a comfort as durable as the God, whoſe Name it is: He is ſtill, I am, and the ſame to the Church, as he was then to his Iſrael. His ſpiritual Iſrael have a greater right to the Glories of it, than the carnal Iſrael could have. No oppreſſion can be greater than theirs; what was a comfort ſuited to that Diſtreſs, hath the ſame ſuitableneſs to every other Oppreſſion. It was not a temporary Name, but a Name for ever; his Memorial to all Generations, * and reacheth to the Church of the Gentiles, with whom he treats as the God of Abraham, ratifying that Covenant by the Meſſiah, which he made with Abraham, the Father of the Faithful.

* Exod. 3. 14,15.

* Ver. 15.

The Churches Enemies are not to be fear'd; they may ſpring as the Graſs, but ſoon after do wither by their own inward Principles of Decay, or are cut down by the hand of God. * They may be Inſtruments of the Anger of God, but they ſhall be ſcattered as the workers of Iniquity by the hand of the Lord, that is high for evermore, v. 8. and is engaged by his Promiſe, to preſerve a Church in the World. They may threaten, but their Breath may vaniſh, aſſoon as their Threatnings are pronounc'd: for they carry their Breath in no ſurer a place than their own Noſtrils, upon which the Eternal God can put his Hand, and ſink them with all their Rage. Do the Prophets (and Inſtructors of the Church) live for ever *? No: Shall then the Adverſaries and Diſturbers of the Church live for ever? They ſhall vaniſh as a ſhadow, their Being depends upon the Eternal God of the Faithful, and the Everlaſting Judge of the Wicked. He that inhabits Eternity, is above them that inhabit Mortality, and muſt whether they will or not, ſay to Corruption, Thou art my Father, and to the Worm, thou art my Mother, and my Siſter *. When they will act with a Confidence, as if they were living Gods, he will not be mated, but evidence himſelf to be a living God above them. Why then ſhould mortal Men be fear'd in their frowns, when an immortal God hath promiſed protection in his Word, and lives for ever to perform it?

*Zach. 1.5.

*Job 17.14.

5. Hence follows another Comfort; ſince God is eternal, He hath as much Power, as Will to be as good as his Word. His Promiſes are eſtabliſhed upon his Eternity, and this Perfection is a main ground of Truſt; * Truſt in the Lord for ever: for in the Lord Jehovah is everlaſting ſtrength: כִּי יְהוָה צוּר עֹלָמִים His Name is doubled, that Name Iah, and Jehovah, which was always the ſtrength of his People; and not a ſingle one, but the ſtrength or rock of Eternities; not a failing but an eternal Truth and Power; that as his Strength is Eternal, ſo our Truſt in him ſhould imitate his Eternity in its perpetuity; and therefore in the deſpondency of his People, as if God had forgot his Promiſes, and made no account of Them, or his Word, and were weary of doing good, he calls them to reflect on what they had heard of his Eternity, which is attended with immutability, who hath an infiniteneſs of Power to perform his Will, and an infiniteneſs of Underſtanding to judge of the right Seaſons of it. * His Wiſdom, Will, Truth, have always been, and will to Eternity be the ſame. He wants not Life, any more than Love, for ever to help us; ſince his Word is paſt, he will never fail us; ſince his Life continues, he can never be out of a capacity to relieve us; and therefore when ever we fooliſhly charge him by our diſtruſtful Thoughts, we forget his Love, which made the Promiſe, and his eternal Life, which can accompliſh it. As his Word is the bottom of our Truſt, and his Truth is the aſſurance of his ſincerity; ſo his Eternity is the aſſurance of his ability to perform. His word ſtands for ever *. A Man may be my Friend this Day, and be in another World to Morrow; and though he be never ſo ſincere in his Word, yet Death ſnaps his Life aſunder, and forbids the Execution. But as God cannot die, ſo he cannot lie; becauſe he is the Eternity of Iſrael.

* 1Sam.15. v.29. * The ſtrength of Iſrael will not lie, nor repent, נצח perpetuity or eternity of Iſrael. Eternity implies Immutability; we could have no ground for our hopes, if we knew him not to be longer liv'd than our ſelves. The Pſalmiſt beats off our hands from truſt in Men, becauſe their breath goes forth, they return to their earth, and in that day their thoughts
* Pſal.146. v.3,4. periſh *. And if the God of Jacob were like them, what happineſs could we have in making him our help? As his Soveraignty in giving precepts had not been a ſtrong ground of Obedience, without conſidering him as an eternal Law-giver, who could maintain his Rights? So his kindneſs in making the promiſes, had not been a ſtrong ground of confidence, without conſidering him as an Eternal Promiſer, whoſe
* Crellius de Deo, cap.18. p.44,45. thoughts, and whoſe life, can never periſh. * And this may be one reaſon, why the Holy Ghoſt mentions ſo often the poſt-eternity of God, and ſo little his ante-eternity; becauſe that is the ſtrongeſt foundation of our Faith, and Hope, which reſpects chiefly that which is future, and not that which is paſt; yet indeed no aſſurance of his after-Eternity can be had, if his ante-Eternity be not certain. If he had a beginning, he may have an end: And if he had a change in his nature, he might have in his Counſels: But ſince all the reſolves of God are as himſelf is, Eternal, and all the Promiſes of God are the fruits of his Counſel, therefore they cannot be chang'd: If he ſhould change them for the better, he would not have been eternally Wiſe, to know what was beſt; If for the worſe, he had not been eternally Good or Juſt. Men may break their promiſes, becauſe they are made without foreſight; but God that inhabits Eternity, foreknows all things, that ſhall be done under the Sun, as if they had been then acting before him; and nothing can intervene, or work a change in his reſolves, becauſe the leaſt circumſtances were eternally foreſeen by him. Tho' there may be variations, and changes to our ſight, the Winds may tack about, and every hour new and croſs accidents happen; yet the eternal God, who is eternally true to his word, ſits at the Helm, and the Winds and the Waves obey him. And tho' he ſhould defer his promiſe a thouſand years, yet he is not ſlack:
* 2 Pet.3. v.8,9. For he defers it but a day to his Eternity; * And who would not with comfort ſtay a day in expectation of a conſiderable advantage?

3 Uſe is for Exhortation.

1. To ſomething which concerns us in our ſelves.

2. To ſomething which concerns us with reſpect to God.

1. To ſomething which concerns us in our ſelves.

1. Let us be deeply affected with our ſins long ſince committed. Tho' they are paſt with us, they are in regard of our Gods eternity preſent with him; there is no ſucceſſion in Eternity, as there is in Time: All things are before God at once; our ſins are before him, as if committed this moment, tho' committed long ago. As he is what he is in regard of duration, ſo he knows what he knows in regard of knowledge. As he is not more than he was, nor ſhall ~~not~~ be any more than he is; ſo he always knew what he knows, and ſhall not ceaſe to know, what he now knows. As himſelf, ſo his knowledge is one indiviſible point of Eternity. He knows nothing, but what he did know from Eternity; he ſhall know no more for the future, than he now knows. Our ſins being preſent with him in his Eternity, ſhould be preſent with us in our regard of remembrance of them, and ſorrow for them. What tho' many years are laps'd, much time run out, and our iniquities almoſt blotted out of our memory? yet ſince a thouſand years are in Gods ſight, and in regard of his Eternity but as a day;
* Pſal.90.4. * A thouſand years in thy ſight are but as yeſterday, when it is paſt, and as a watch in the night; they are before him: For ſuppoſe a Man were as old as the World, above five thouſand ſix hundred years; the ſins committed five thouſand years ago; are according to that rule, but as if they were committed five days ago; ſo that ſixty two years, are but as an hour and a half, and the ſins committed forty years ſince, are as if they were committed but this preſent hour. But if we will go further, and conſider them but as a Watch of the Night, about three hours (for the Night conſiſting of twelve hours, was divided into ſet Watches) then a thouſand years are but as three hours in the ſight of God; and then ſins committed ſixty years ago, are but as if they were committed within this five minutes.

Let none of us ſet light by the Iniquities committed many years ago, and imagine that length of time can wipe out their guilt; No, let us conſider them in relation to God's eternity, and excite an inward remorſe, as if they had been but the birth of this moment.

2. Let the conſideration of God's Eternity abate our pride. This is the deſign of the Verſes following the Text, the Eternity of God being ſo ſufficient to make us underſtand our own nothingneſs, which ought to be one great end of Man, eſpecially as fall'n. The Eternity of God ſhould make us as much diſeſteem our ſelves, as the excellency of God made Job abhor himſelf *. His excellency ſhould humble us under a ſenſe of our vanity, and his Eternity under a ſenſe of the ſhortneſs of our duration. If Man compares himſelf with other Creatures, he may be too ſenſible of his greatneſs; but if he compares himſelf with God, he cannot but be ſenſible of his baſeneſs. *Job42.5,6

1. In regard of our impotence, to comprehend this Eternity of God. How little do we know? How little can we know of Gods Eternity? We cannot fully conceive it, much leſs expreſs it; we have but a brutiſh underſtanding in all thoſe things, as Agur ſaid of himſelf *. *Prov.30.7

* What is Infinite and Eternal cannot be comprehended by finite and temporary Creatures; If it could, it would not be infinite and eternal: For to know a thing, is to know the Extent and Cauſe of it; 'Tis repugnant to Eternity to be known, becauſe it hath no limits, no cauſes; the moſt ſoaring underſtanding cannot have a proportionable underſtanding of it. What diſproportion is there between a drop of Water, and the Sea, in their greatneſs and motion? Yet by a drop, we may arrive to a knowledge of the nature of the Sea, which is a Maſs of drops joyn'd together. But the longeſt duration of Times cannot make us know what Eternity is, becauſe there is no proportion between Time and Eternity. The years of God are as numberleſs as his thoughts *, and our minds as far from reckoning the one as the other. If our underſtandings are too groſs, to comprehend the Majeſty of his infinite works, they are much more too ſhort to comprehend the infiniteneſs of his Eternity. * Charron-trois vent. Livr. 1. chap.5. p.17, &c. *Pſal.40.5

2. In regard of the vaſt diſproportion of our duration to this duration of God.

1. We have more of not being than being. We were nothing from an unbegun Eternity, and we might have been nothing to an endleſs Eternity, had not God call'd us into being; and if he pleaſe, we may be nothing by as ſhort an annihilating Word, as we were ſomething by a creating Word. As it is the Prerogative of God to be, I am that I am; ſo it is the property of a Creature to be, I am not what I am; I am not by my ſelf what I am, but by the Indulgence of another. I was nothing formerly, I may be nothing again, unleſs he that is, I am, make me to ſubſiſt what I now am. Nothing is as much the Title of the Creature, as Being is the Title of God. Nothing is ſo holy as God, becauſe nothing hath Being as God. * There is none holy as the Lord, for there is none beſides thee. Mans life is an Image, a Dream, which are next to nothing; and if compar'd with God, worſe than nothing; a nullity as well as a vanity: Becauſe with God only is the fountain of Life *. The Creature is but a drop of Life from him, dependent on him. A drop of Water is a nothing, if compar'd with the vaſt conflux of Waters, and numberleſs drops in the Ocean.

*Pſal.36.9.

How unworthy is it for duſt and aſhes kneaded together in time, to ſtrut againſt the Father of Eternity? Much more unworthy for that which is nothing, worſe than nothing, to quarrel with that which is only Being, and equal himſelf with him that inhabits Eternity.

2. What Being we have, had a beginning. After an unaccountable Eternity was run out, in the very dregs of Time, a few years ago we were created, and made of the baſeſt and vileſt droſs of the World, the ſlime and duſt of the Earth; made of that, wherewith Birds build their Neſts; made of that, which creeping things make their Habitation, and Beaſts trample upon: How monſtrous is Pride in ſuch a Creature, to aſpire, as if he were the Father of Eternity, and as Eternal as God, and ſo his own Eternity?

3. What Being we have, is but of a ſhort duration in regard of our Life in this World. Our life is in a conſtant change, and flux, we remain not the ſame an intire day: Youth quickly ſucceeds Child-hood, and Age as ſpeedily treads upon the heels of Youth; there is a continual defluxion of minutes, as there is of ſands in a glaſs. He is as a Watch wound up at the beginning of his Life, and from that time is running down, till he comes to the bottom; ſome part of our Lives is cut off every day, every minute. Life is but a moment, what is paſt cannot be recalled; what is future cannot be inſured: If we enjoy this moment, we have loſt that which is paſt, and ſhall preſently loſe this by the next that is to come.

The ſhort duration of Men is ſet out in Scripture by ſuch Creatures, as ſoon diſappear. A Worm *, that can ſcarce out-live a Winter. Graſs, that withers by the Summer Sun. Life is a Flower ſoon withering *; a Vapour ſoon vaniſhing *, a Smoke ſoon diſappearing *. The ſtrongeſt Man is but compacted duſt, the Fabrick muſt moulder, the higheſt Mountain falls and comes to nought. Time gives place to Eternity; we live now, and die to morrow. Not a Man ſince the World began, ever lived a day in Gods ſight: For no Man ever lived a thouſand years. The longeſt day of any Mans life, never amounted to twenty four hours in the account of divine Eternity: A life of ſo many hundred years, with the addition he died, makes up the greateſt part of the Hiſtory of the Patriarchs *. And ſince the life of Man hath been curtail'd, if any be in the World eighty years, he ſcarce properly lives ſixty of them, ſince the fourth part of Time is at leaſt conſumed in ſleep.

*Job 14.2.

*James 4. v. 14.

*Pſ. 102.3.

*Gen. 5.

A greater difference there is between the duration of God, and that of a Creature, than between the life of one for a minute, and the life of one that ſhould live as many years as the whole Globe of Heaven and Earth, if changed into Papers, could contain Figures. And this life, tho' but of a ſhort duration, according to the period God hath determined, is eaſily cut off; the Treaſure of Life is depoſited in a brittle Veſſel: A ſmall ſtone hitting againſt Nebuchadnezars Statue, will tumble it down into a poor and naſty Grave: A Grape-ſtone, the bone of a Fiſh, a ſmall Fly in the Throat, a moiſt damp, are enough to deſtroy an earthly Eternity, and reduce it to nothing.

What a Nothing then is our ſhortneſs, if compared with Gods Eternity? Our frailty, with Gods duration? How humble then ſhould periſhing Creatures be before an Eternal God, with whom our days are as a hands breath, and our age as nothing *? The Angels that have been of as long a duration as Heaven and Earth, tremble before him, the Heavens melt at his preſence; and ſhall we that are but of yeſterday, approach a Divine Eternity with unhumbled Souls, and offer the Calves of our Lips with the pride of Devils, and ſtand upon our terms with him, without falling upon our faces, with a ſenſe that we are but duſt and aſhes, and Creatures of Time? How eaſie is it to reaſon out Mans humility, but how hard is it to reaſon Man into it?

*Pſ.39.5.

3. Let the conſideration of Gods Eternity take off our love and confidence from the World, and the things thereof. The Eternity of God reproaches a purſuit of the World, as preferring a momentary pleaſure before an everlaſting God; as tho' a temporal World could be a better ſupply, than a God whoſe years never fail. Alas! what is this Earth, Men are ſo greedy of, and will get, tho' by blood and ſweat? What is this whole Earth, if we had the entire poſſeſſion of it, if compared with the vaſt Heavens, the Seat of Angels and bleſſed Spirits? 'Tis but as an Atom to the greateſt Mountain, or as a drop of dew to the immenſe Ocean. How fooliſh is it, to prefer a drop before the Sea, or an Atom before the World? The Earth is but a point to the Sun; the Sun with its whole Orb, but a little part of the Heavens, if compared with the whole Fabrick. If a Man had the poſſeſſion of all thoſe, there could be no compariſon between thoſe that have had a beginning, and ſhall have an end, and God who is without either of them. Yet, how many are there, that make nothing of the divine Eternity, and imagine an Eternity of nothing?

1. The World hath been but of a ſhort ſtanding. 'Tis not yet ſix thouſand years ſince the foundations of it were laid; and therefore it cannot have a boundleſs excellency, as that God, who hath been from everlaſting, doth poſſeſs. If Adam had liv'd to this day, and been as abſolute Lord of his Poſterity, as he was of the other Creatures, had it been a competent object to take up his heart; had he not been a Mad-man, to have preferred this little created pleaſure before an everlaſting uncreated God? A thing that had a dependent Beginning, before that which had an independent Eternity?

2. The Beauties of the World are tranſitory and periſhing. The whole World is nothing elſe but a fluid thing, the faſhion of it is a Pageantry, paſſing away *; tho' the glories of it might be conceived greater than they are, yet they are not conſiſtent, but tranſient; There cannot be an entire enjoyment of them, becauſe they grow up, and expire every moment, and ſlip away between our fingers, while we are uſing them. Have we not heard of Gods diſperſing the greateſt Empires like Chaff before a Whirlwind, or as Smoke out of a Chimney *, which tho' it appears as a compacted Cloud, as if it would choak the Sun, is quickly ſcattered into ſeveral parts of the Air, and becomes inviſible? Nettles have often been heirs to ſtately Palaces, as God threatens Iſrael *. We cannot promiſe our ſelves over night any thing the next day. A Kingdom, with the glory of a Throne, may be cut off in a morning *. The new Wine may be taken from the mouth, when the Vintage is ripe; the devouring locuſt may ſnatch away both the hopes of that, and the Harveſt *: They are therefore things which are not, and nothing cannot be a fit object for confidence or affection.

*Joel 1.15.

*Prov.23.5 ction. * Wilt thou ſet thy eyes upon that which is not? For riches certainly make themſelves wings. They are not properly Beings, becauſe they are not ſtable, but flitting; They are not; becauſe they may not be the next moment to us what they are this; they are but Ciſterns, not Springs, and broken Ciſterns, not ſound and ſtable; no ſolidity in their ſubſtance, nor ſtability in their duration. What a fooliſh thing is it then, to prefer a tranſient felicity, a meer nullity before an eternal God? What a ſenſeleſs thing would it be in a Man, to prefer the Map of a Kingdom, which the hand of a Child can tear in pieces, before the Kingdom ſhadowed by it? How much more inexcuſable is it to value things, that are ſo far from being Eternal, that they are not ſo much as dusky reſemblances of an Eternity? Were the things of the World more glorious than they are, yet they are but as a counterfeit Sun in a Cloud, which comes ſhort of the true Sun in the Heavens both in glory and duration; and to eſteem them before God, is unconceivably baſer, than if a Man ſhould value a parti-colour'd bubble in the Air, before a durable Rock of Diamonds. The comforts of this World are as Candles that will end in a Snuff; whereas the felicity that flows from an eternal God, is like the Sun, that ſhines more and more to a perfect day.

3. They cannot therefore be fit for a Soul, which was made to have an intereſt in Gods Eternity. The Soul being of a perpetual nature, was made for the fruition of an eternal good; without ſuch a good it can never be perfect. Perfection, that noble thing, riſeth not from any thing in this World, nor is it a Title due to a Soul while in this World; 'tis then they are ſaid to be made perfect, when they arrive at that entire conjunction with the eternal God in *Heb.12.23 another life. * The Soul cannot be enobled by an acquaintance with theſe things, or eſtabliſh'd by a dependence on them, they cannot confer, what a rational nature ſhould deſire, or ſupply it with what it wants.

The Soul hath a reſemblance to God in a poſt-Eternity: Why ſhould it be drawn aſide by the blandiſhments of earthly things, to neglect its true eſtabliſhment, and lacquey after the Body, which is but the ſhadow of the Soul, and was made to follow it and ſerve it? But while it buſieth it ſelf altogether in the concerns of a periſhing Body, and ſeeks ſatisfaction in things that glide away, it becomes rather a Body than Soul, deſcends below its nature, reproacheth that God, who hath imprinted upon it an Image of his own Eternity, and loſeth the comfort of the everlaſtingneſs of its Creator. How ſhall the whole World, if our lives were as durable as that, be an happy Eternity to us, who have Souls, that ſhall ſurvive all the delights of it, which muſt fry in thoſe flames, that ſhall fire the whole frame of Nature at the general conflagration of the *2Pet.3.10 World *?

4. Therefore let us provide for an happy intereſt in the Eternity of God. Man is made for an eternal ſtate. The Soul hath ſuch a perfection in its nature, that it is fit for Eternity, and cannot diſplay all its operations but in Eternity: To an Eternity it muſt go, and live as long as God himſelf lives. Things of a ſhort duration, are not proportion'd to a Soul made for an eternal continuance; to ſee that it be a comfortable Eternity, is worth all our care. Man is a forecaſting Creature, conſiders not only the preſent, but the future too, in his proviſions for his family; and ſhall he diſgrace his nature, in caſting off all conſideration of a future eternity? Get poſſeſſion therefore of the eternal God: A portion in this life is the lot of thoſe, who ſhall be for ever * Pſ.17.14. miſerable. * But God, an everlaſting portion, is the lot of them that are deſign'd for happineſs. * God is my portion for ever. * Pſ.73.26.

Time is ſhort. * The whole time for which God deſign'd this building of the World is of a little compaſs; 'tis a Stage erected for rational Creatures to act their Parts upon for a few thouſand years; the greateſt part of which time is run out; and then ſhall Time, like a Rivulet, fall into the Sea of Eternity, from whence it ſprung. As Time is but a ſlip of Eternity, ſo it will end in Eternity; our advantages conſiſt in the preſent inſtant; what is paſt, never promiſed a return, and cannot be fetch'd back by all our Vows: What is future, we cannot promiſe our ſelves to enjoy; we may be ſnatch'd away before it comes. Every minute that paſſeth, ſpeaks the fewer remaining till the time of death. And as we are every hour further from our beginning, we are nearer our end. The Child born this day grows up, to grow nothing at laſt. In all Ages, there is but a ſtep between us and Death, as David ſaid of himſelf. * The little time that remains for the Devil till the day of Judgment, envenoms his wrath; he rageth, becauſe his time is ſhort. * The little time that remains between this moment and our death, ſhould quicken our diligence to inherit the endleſs and unchangeable Eternity of God. * 1Cor.7.29. * 1Sam.20. v.3. * Rev.12.12

5. Often meditate on the Eternity of God. The Holineſs, Power and Eternity of God, are the fundamental Articles of all Religion, upon which the whole body of it leans; His Holineſs for conformity to him, his Power and Eternity for the ſupport of Faith and Hope. The ſtrong and inceſſant cries of the four Beaſts, repreſenting that Chriſtian Church, are, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come *. Tho' his Power is intimated, yet the chiefeſt are his Holineſs, three times expreſt; and his Eternity which is repeated, v. 9. who lives for ever and ever. This ought to be the conſtant practice in the Church of the Gentiles, which this Book chiefly reſpects: The meditation of his converting Grace manifeſted to Paul, raviſht the Apoſtles heart, but not without the triumphant conſideration of his Immortality and Eternity, which are the principal parts of the Doxology. * Now unto the King eternal, immortal, inviſible, only wiſe God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. It could be no great tranſport to the Spirit, to conſider him glorious without conſidering him Immortal: The unconfinedneſs of his perfections, in regard of Time, preſents the Soul with matter of the greateſt complacency. The happineſs of our Souls depends upon his other Attributes, but the perpetuity of it upon his Eternity. Is it a comfort to view his immenſe Wiſdom, his overflowing Goodneſs, his tender Mercy, his unerring Truth? What comfort were there in any of thoſe, if it were a Wiſdom that could be baffled, a Goodneſs that could be dampt, a Mercy that can expire, and a Truth that can periſh with the Subject of it? Without Eternity, what were all his other Perfections, but as glorious, yet withering Flowers; a great, but a decaying Beauty? By a frequent meditation of Gods Eternity, we ſhould become more ſenſible of our own vanity, and the Worlds trifflingneſs: How nothing ſhould our ſelves; How nothing would all other things appear in our eyes? How coldly ſhould we deſire them? How feebly ſhould we place any truſt in them? Should we not think our ſelves worthy of contempt to dote upon a periſhing glory, to expect ſupport from an Arm of Fleſh, when there is an eternal Beauty to raviſh us, an eternal Arm to protect us? Aſaph, when he conſidered God a Portion for ever, thought nothing of the Glories of the Earth, or the Beauties of the created Heavens, worth his appetite or complacency, but God. * Beſides, an elevated frame of heart, * 1Tim.1. v.15,16,17. * Pſal.73. v.25,26.

heart, at the conſideration of God's Eternity, would batter down the ſtrong Holds and Engines of any temptation: A ſlight temptation will not know where to find and catch hold of a Soul high and hid in a meditation of it; and if it doth, there will not be wanting from hence preſervatives to reſiſt and conquer it. What tranſitory pleaſures will not the thoughts of God's Eternity ſtifle? When this work buſieth a Soul, 'tis too great to ſuffer it to deſcend, to liſten to a ſleeveleſs Errand from Hell or the World. The wanton allurements of the Fleſh will be put off with indignation. The proffers of the World will be ridiculous when they are caſt into the Ballance with the Eternity of God, which ſticking in our thoughts, we ſhall not be ſo eaſie a Prey for the Fowlers Gin.

Let us therefore often meditate upon this, but not in a bare ſpeculation without engaging our affections, and making every notion of the Divine Eternity end in a ſuitable impreſſion upon our hearts: This would be much like the Diſciples gazing upon the Heavens at the aſcenſion of their Maſter, while they forgat the practice of his Orders: * We may elſe find ſomething of the nature of God, and loſe our ſelves, not only in Eternity, but to Eternity.

*Acts 1.11.

2. And hence the ſecond part of the Exhortation is to ſomething which concerns us with a reſpect to God.

1. If God be eternal, How worthy is he of our choiceſt affections, and ſtrongeſt deſires of communion with him? Is not every thing to be valued according to the greatneſs of its Being? How then ſhould we love him, who is not only lovely in his nature, but eternally lovely, having from everlaſting all thoſe perfections centred in himſelf, which appear in time? If every thing be lovely, by how much the more it partakes of the nature of God who is the chief Good, how much more infinitely lovely is God, who is ſuperior to all other Goods, and eternally ſo? Not a God of a few minutes, months, years, or millions of years; not of the dregs of Time, or the top of Time, but of Eternity; above Time, unconceivably immenſe beyond Time: The loving him infinitely, perpetually, is an act of homage due to him for his eternal excellency: We may give him the one, ſince our Souls are immortal, tho' we cannot the other, becauſe they are finite: Since he encloſeth in himſelf all the excellencies of Heaven and Earth for ever, he ſhould have an affection, not only of Time in this World, but of Eternity in the future; and if we did not owe him a love for what we are by him, we owe him a love for what he is in himſelf; and more for what he is, than for what he is to us. He is more worthy of our affections, becauſe he is the eternal God, than becauſe he is our Creator; becauſe he is more excellent in his Nature than in his Tranſient actions: The beams of his goodneſs to us, are to direct our thoughts and affections to him; but his own eternal excellency, ought to be the ground and foundation of our affections to him. And truly, ſince nothing but God is eternal, nothing but God is worth the loving; and we do but a juſt right to our love, to pitch it upon that which can always poſſeſs us, and be poſſeſſed by us; upon an Object that cannot deceive our affection, and put it out of countenance by a diſſolution.

And if our happineſs conſiſts in being like to God, we ſhould imitate him in loving him as he loves himſelf, and as long as he loves himſelf: God cannot do more to himſelf than love himſelf; he can make no addition to his Eſſence, nor diminution from it. What ſhould we do leſs to an eternal Being, than to beſtow affections upon him, like his own to himſelf; ſince we can find nothing ſo durable as himſelf, for which we ſhould love it?

2. He only is worthy of our beſt Service. The Antient of days is to be ſerved before all that are younger than himſelf; Our beſt obedience is due to him as a God of unconfined excellency: Every thing that is excellent deſerves a veneration ſuitable to its excellency. As God is infinite, he hath right to a boundleſs ſervice; as he is eternal, he hath right to a perpetual ſervice: As Service is a debt of Juſtice upon the account of the excellency of his Nature, ſo a perpetual Service is as much a debt of Juſtice upon the account of his Eternity. If God be infinite and eternal, he merits an Honour and Comportment from his Creatures, ſuited to the unlimited perfection of his Nature, and the duration of his Being. How worthy is the Pſalmiſts reſolution? I will ſing unto the Lord as long as I live, I will ſing praiſes to my God while I have any Being *: 'Tis the uſe he makes of the endleſs duration of the Glory of God, and will extend to all other Service as well as Praiſe. To ſerve other things, or to ſerve our ſelves, is too vaſt a Service upon that which is nothing. In devoting our ſelves to God, we ſerve him that is, that was, ſo as that he never began; Is to come, ſo as that he never ſhall end; By whom all things are what they are; who hath both eternal knowledge to remember our Service, and eternal goodneſs to reward it.

* Pſal. 104. v. 33.

A DISCOURSE UPON THE Immutability of GOD.

Psalm CII. 26, 27.

They shall perish, but thou shalt endure; yea, all of them shall wax old, as a Garment; as a Vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed: But thou art the same, and thy Years shall have no end.

THIS Psalm contains a Complaint of a People press'd with great Calamity; some think of the Jewish Church in Babylon, others think the Psalmist doth here personate Mankind lying under a state of Corruption, because he wishes for the coming of the Messiah, to accomplish that Redemption promised by God, and needed by them. Indeed the Title of the Psalm is, A Prayer of the Afflicted, when he is overwhelmed, and pours out his Complaint before the Lord. Whether afflicted with the sense of Corruption, or with the sense of Oppression. And the Redemption by the Messiah, which the antient Church looked upon as the fountain of their Deliverance from a sinful or a servile Bondage, is in this Psalm spoken of: A set time appointed for the discovery of his Mercy to Zion, ver. 13. An appearance in Glory to build up Zion, ver. 16. The loosning of the Prisoner by Redemption, and them that are appointed to Death, ver. 20. The calling of the Gentiles, ver. 22. And the latter part of the Psalm, wherein are the Verses I have read, are applied to Christ, Heb. 1. Whatsoever the design of the Psalm might be, many things are intermingled that concern the Kingdom of the Messiah, and Redemption by Christ.

Some make three parts of the Psalm,

1. A Petition plainly delivered, verse 1, 2. Hear my Prayer, O Lord, and let my Cry come unto thee, &c.

2. The Petition strongly and argumentatively enforced and pleaded, v. 3. from the Misery of the Petitioner in himself, and his Reproach from his Enemies.

3. An acting of Faith in the expectation of an Answer in the general Redemption promised, verse 12, 13. But thou, O Lord, shalt endure for ever; thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion; The Heathen shall fear thy Name.

The first part is the Petition pleaded; the second part is the Petition answered in an assurance, that there should in time be a full deliverance. * The design of the Penman is, to confirm the Church in the truth of the Divine Promises; that tho' the foundations of the World should be ript up, and the Heavens clatter together, and the whole Fabrick of them be unpinn'd and fall to pieces, the firmest parts of it dissolved; yet the Church should continue in its stability, because it stands not upon the changeableness of Creatures, but is built upon the immutable Rock of the Truth of God, which is as little subject to change as his Essence.

* Pareus.

They shall perish, thou shalt change them. As he had before ascribed to God the foundation of Heaven and Earth, ver. 25. so he ascribes to God here the destruction of them: Both the beginning and end of the World are here ascertained. There is nothing indeed from the present appearance of things that can demonstrate the Cessation of the World; The Heaven and Earth stand firm; the motions of the heavenly Bodies are the same, their Beauty is not decayed: Individuals corrupt, but the Species and Kinds remain: The Successions of the Year observe their due order; but the Sin of Man renders the change of the present appearance of the World necessary, to accomplish the design of God for the glory of his Elect. The Heavens do not naturally perish, as some fancied an old Age of the World, wherein it must necessarily decay as the Bodies of Animals do; or that the parts of the Heavens are broken off by their rubbing one against another in their Motion, and falling to the Earth, are the Seeds of those things that grow up among us *. * Plin. Hist. lib. 2. ca. 3.

The Earth and Heavens. He names here the most stable parts of the World, and the most beautiful parts of the Creation; those that are freest from Corruptibility and Change, to illustrate thereby the Immutability of God; that tho' the Heavens and Earth have a Prerogative of fixedness above other parts of the World, and the Creatures that reside below; the Heavens remain the same as they were created, and the Center of the Earth retains its fixedness, and are as beautiful and fresh in their Age as they were in their Youth many Years ago, notwithstanding the change of the Elements; Fire and Water being often turned into Air, so that there may remain but little of that Air which was first created by reason of the continual Transmutation; yet this firmness of the Earth and Heavens, is not to be regarded in comparison of the unmoveableness and fixedness of the Being of God: As their Beauty comes short of the Glory of his Being, so doth their firmness come short of his stability.

Some by Heavens and Earth, understand the Creatures which reside in the Earth, and those which are in the Air, which is called Heaven often in Scripture; but the ruin and fall of these being seen every Day, had been no fit Illustration of the unchangeableness of God.

They shall perish, they shall be changed.

1. They may perish, say some; they have it not from themselves that they do ~~no~~ not perish, but from thee, who didst endue them with an incorruptible Nature; They shall perish if thou speakest the word; Thou canst with as much ease destroy them as thou didst create them: But the Psalmist speaks not of their possibility, but the certainty of their perishing.

2. They shall perish in their Qualities and Motion, not in their Substance, say others: They shall cease ceaſe from that motion which is deſigned properly for the generation and corruption of things in the Earth; but in regard of their ſubſtance and beauty they ſhall remain: As when the Strings or Wheels of a Clock or Watch are taken off, the material parts remain; tho' the motion of it, and the uſe for diſcovering the time of the day, ceaſeth. * To periſh, doth not ſignifie always a falling into nothing, an annihilation, by which both the matter and the form are deſtroyed, but a ceaſing of the preſent appearance of them; a ceaſing to be what they now are, as a Man is ſaid to periſh when he dies, whereas the better part of Man doth not ceaſe to be: The figure of the Body moulders away, and the matter of it returns to Duſt; but the Soul being Immortal ceaſeth not to act, when the Body by reaſon of the abſence of the Soul is uncapable of acting. So the Heavens ſhall periſh; the appearance they now have ſhall vaniſh, and a more glorious and incorruptible frame be erected by the power and goodneſs of God. The diſſolution of Heaven and Earth is meant by the word [periſh]; the raiſing a new frame is ſignified by the word [changed]; as if the Spirit of God would prevent any wrong meaning of the word [periſh] by alleviating the ſenſe of that, by another which ſignifies only a mutation and change; as when we change a Habit and Garment, we quit the old to receive the new.

* Coccei in loc.

[As a Garment, as a Veſture.] Thou ſhalt change them *, ἑλίξεις Thou ſhalt fold them up. The Heavens are compared to a Curtain *, and ſhall in due time be folded up as Cloaths and Curtains are. As a Garment encompaſſeth the whole body, ſo do the Heavens encircle the Earth. * Some ſay as a Garment is folded up to be laid aſide, that when there is need it may be taken again for uſe; ſo ſhalt thou fold up the Heavens like a Garment, that when they are repaired, thou mayſt again ſtretch them out about the Earth; thou ſhalt fold them up, ſo that what did appear ſhall not now appear. It may be illuſtrated by the metaphor of a Scrole or Book, which the Spirit of God uſeth, *Iſa.*34.4. Rev. 6. 14. The Heavens departed as a Scrole when it is rouled together. When a Book is rouled up or ſhut, nothing can be read in it till it be opened again; ſo the Face of the Heavens, wherein the Stars are as Letters declaring the Glory of God, ſhall be ſhut or rouled together, ſo that nothing ſhall appear till by its renovation it be opened again: As a Garment it ſhall be changed, not to be uſed in the ſame faſhion, and for the ſame uſe again. It ſeems indeed to be for the worſe; an old garment is not changed but into rags, to be put to other uſes, and afterwards thrown upon the Dunghill: But Similitudes are not to be preſſed too far; and this will not agree with the new Heavens and new Earth, phyſically ſo, as well as metaphorically ſo. 'Tis not likely the Heavens will be put to a worſe uſe than God deſigned them for in Creation: However a change as a Garment, ſpeaks not a total corruption, but an alteration of qualities; as a Garment not to be uſed in the ſame faſhion, as before. We may obſerve,

* Septuag.
*Pſ.*104.2.
* *Eſtius in Heb.*1.

1. That 'tis probable, the World ſhall not be annihilated but refin'd. It ſhall loſe its preſent form and faſhion, but not its foundation: Indeed as God raiſed it from nothing, ſo he can reduce it into nothing; yet it doth not appear that God will annihilate it, and utterly deſtroy both the matter and form of it; part ſhall be conſumed, and part purified, 2 Pet. 3. *v.*12,13. The Heavens ſhall be on fire and diſſolved, nevertheleſs we, according to his promiſe, look for a new Heaven and a new Earth. They ſhall be melted down as Gold by the Artificer, to be refined from its Droſs, and wrought into a more beautiful faſhion, that they may ſerve the deſign of God for thoſe that ſhall reſide therein; a new World wherein Righteouſneſs ſhall dwell: The Apoſtle oppoſing it thereby, to the old World wherein wickedneſs did reſide. The Heavens are to be purged, as the Veſſels that held the Sin-offering were to be purified by the fire of the Sanctuary.

God indeed will take down this Scaffold which he hath built to publiſh his Glory. As every Individual hath a certain term of its duration; ſo an end is appointed for the univerſal nature of Heaven and Earth, *Iſa.*51.6. The Heavens ſhall vaniſh like Smoke, which diſappears. As ſmoke is reſolved and attenuated into Air, not annihilated; ſo ſhall the World aſſume a new face, and have a greater clearneſs and ſplendor: As the Bodies of Men diſſolved into Duſt, ſhall have more glorious qualities at their Reſurrection: As a Veſſel of Gold is melted down to remove the batterings in it, and receive a more comely form by the Skill of the Workman.

(1.) The World was not deſtroyed by the Deluge: It was rather waſhed by water than conſumed; So it ſhall be rather refined by the laſt fire, than lie under an irrecoverable ruin.

(2.) 'Tis not likely God would liken the everlaſtingneſs of his Covenant, and the perpetuity of his ſpiritual Iſrael, to the duration of the Ordinances of the Heavens, (as he doth in Jer.21.35,36.) if they were wholly to depart from before him. Tho' that place may only tend to an aſſurance of a Church in the World while the World endures; yet it would be but ſmall comfort, if the happineſs of Believers ſhould endure no longer than the Heavens and Earth, if they were to have a total period.

(3.) Beſides, the Bodies of the Saints muſt have place for their ſupport to move in, and glorious objects ſuited to thoſe glorious ſenſes which ſhall be reſtored to them; Not in any carnal way which our Saviour rejects, when he ſaith, there is no eating, or drinking, or marrying, &c. in the other World; but whereby they may glorifie God; tho' how or in what manner their ſenſes ſhall be uſed, would be raſhneſs to determine; only ſomething is neceſſary for the corporeal ſtate of Men, that there may be an employment for their Senſes as well as their Souls.

(4.) Again, How could the Creature, the World, or any part of it, be ſaid to be delivered from the bondage of Corruption, into the glorious liberty of the Sons of God, if the whole Frame of Heaven and Earth were to be annihilated? Rom.8.21. The Apoſtle alſo ſaith, that the Creature waits with an earneſt expectation for this manifeſtation of the Sons of God, v.19. which would have no foundation, if the whole frame ſhould be reduced to nothing. What joyful expectation can there be in any of a total ruin? How ſhould the Creature be capable of partaking in this glorious liberty of the Sons of God? * As the World for the ſin of Man loſt its firſt dignity, and was curſed after the Fall, and the beauty beſtowed upon it by Creation defaced; So it ſhall recover that antient glory, when he ſhall be fully reſtored by the Reſurrection to that dignity he loſt by his firſt ſin. As Man ſhall be freed from his corruptibility to receive that glory which is prepared for him; ſo ſhall the Creatures be freed from that imperfection or corruptibility, thoſe ſtains and ſpots upon the face of them, to receive a new glory ſuited to their nature, and anſwerable to the deſign of God, when the glorious liberty of the Saints ſhall be accompliſh'd. * As when a Prince's Nuptials are ſolemnized, the whole Country eccho's with joy; ſo the inanimate Creatures, when the time of the Marriage of the Lamb is come, ſhall have a delight and pleaſure from that renovation. The Apoſtle ſets forth the whole World as a perſon groaning, and the Scripture is frequent in ſuch Metaphors; as when the Creatures are ſaid to wait upon God, and

'Tis not likely Angels are here meant, tho' they cannot but deſire it; ſince they are affected with the diſhonour and reproach God hath in the World, they cannot but long for the reſtoration of his honour, in the reſtoration of the Creature to its true end: And indeed the Angels are employed to ſerve Man in this ſinful ſtate, and cannot but in holineſs wiſh the Creature freed from his corruption: Nor is it meant of the new Creatures which have the firſt fruits of the Spirit, thoſe he brings in afterwards, groaning and waiting for the *Verſe 23. Adoption *; where he diſtinguiſheth the rational Creature from the Creature he had ſpoken of before: If he had meant the believing Creature by that Creature that deſired the liberty of the Sons of God, what need had there been of that additional diſtinction, and not only they, but we alſo who have the firſt fruits of the Spirit, groan within our ſelves? Whereby it ſeems he means ſome Creatures below rational Creatures, ſince neither Angels nor bleſſed Souls can be ſaid to travail in pain, with that diſtreſs as a Woman in travail hath, as the word ſignifies, who per- *Meſtrazat ſur. Heb. 1. form the work joyfully which God ſets them upon *. If the Creatures be ſubject to vanity by the ſin of Man, they ſhall alſo partake of a happineſs by the reſtoration of Man. The Earth hath born Thorns and Thiſtles, and venemous Beaſts; The Air hath had its Tempeſts and infectious Qualities; The Water hath cauſed its Floods and Deluges. The Creature hath been abuſed to Luxury and Intemperance, and been tyranniz'd over by Man, contrary to the end of its Creation: 'Tis convenient that ſome time ſhould be allotted for the Creature's attaining its true end, and that it may partake of the peace of Man, as it hath done of the fruits of his ſin; otherwiſe it would ſeem that ſin had prevailed more than grace, and would have had more power to deface than grace to reſtore things into their due order.

5. Again, upon what account ſhould the Pſalmiſt exhort the Heavens to rejoyce, and the Earth to be glad, when God comes to judge the World with righte- *Pſal. 96. v. 11, 12, 13 ouſneſs *; if they ſhould be annihilated and ſunk for ever into nothing? It would ſeem, ſaith Daille, to be an impertinent figure, if the Judge of the World brought them to a total deſtruction; an entire ruine could not be matter of triumph to Creatures, who naturally have that inſtinct or inclination put into them by their Creator to preſerve themſelves, and to affect their own preſervation.

6. Again, The Lord is to rejoyce in his works, Pſal. 104. 31. The glory of the Lord ſhall endure for ever; the Lord ſhall rejoyce in his works; not hath, but ſhall rejoyce in his works: In the works of Creation; which the Pſalmiſt hath enumerated, and which is the whole ſcope of the Pſalm: And he intimates that it is part of the glory of the Lord which endures for ever; that is, his manifeſtative glory, to rejoyce in his works: The Glory of the Lord muſt be underſtood with reference to the Creation he had ſpoken of before. How ſhort was that joy God had in his works after he had ſent them beautified out of his hand? How ſoon did he repent, not only that he had made Man, but was grieved at the heart alſo, that he made the other Creatures which Man's ſin had diſ- Gen. 6. 7. order'd? What joy can God have in them, ſince the Curſe upon the entrance of ſin into the World, remains upon them? If they are to be annihilated upon the full reſtoration of his Holineſs, what time will God have to rejoyce in the other works of Creation? 'Tis the joy of God to ſee all his works in their due order; every one pointing to their true end; marching together in their excellency, according to his firſt intendment in their Creation. Did God create the World to perform its end only for one day; ſcarce ſo much, if Adam fell the very firſt day of his Creation? What would have been their end, if Adam had been confirm'd in a ſtate of happineſs as the Angels were; 'tis likely will be anſwered and performed upon the compleat reſtoration of Man to that happy ſtate from whence he fell. What Artificer compiles a work by his skill but to rejoyce in it? And ſhall God have no joy from the works of his hands? Since God can only rejoyce in goodneſs, the Creatures muſt have that goodneſs reſtored to them which God pronounced them to have at the firſt Creation, and which he ordained them for, before he can again rejoyce in his works: The goodneſs of the Creatures is the glory and joy of God.

Inference 1. We may infer from hence, what a baſe and vile thing Sin is, which lays the foundation of the Worlds change. Sin brings it to decrepit Age: Sin over-turned the whole work of God *; ſo that *Gen. 3. 17. to render it uſeful to its proper end, there is a neceſſity of a kind of a new creating it: This cauſes God to fire the Earth for a purification of it from that infection and contagion brought upon it by the apoſtacy and corruption of Man: It hath ſerved ſinful Man, and therefore muſt undergo a purging flame to be fit to ſerve the holy and righteous Creator. As Sin is ſo riveted in the body of Man, that there is need of a change by death to raſe it out; ſo hath the Curſe for ſin got ſo deep into the bowels of the World, that there is need of a change by fire to refine it for its Maſters uſe. Let us look upon Sin with no other notion than as the Object of Gods hatred, the cauſe of his grief in the Creatures, and the Spring of the pain and ruine of the World.

2. How fooliſh a thing is it to ſet our hearts upon that which ſhall periſh, and be no more what it is now? The Heavens and Earth, the ſolideſt and firmeſt parts of the Creation, ſhall not continue in the poſture they are; they muſt periſh and undergo a refining change. How feeble and weak are the other parts of the Creation, the little Creatures walking upon and fluttering about the World, that are periſhing and dying every day; and we ſcarce ſee them clothed with life and beauty this day, but they wither, and are diſpoyl'd of all the next; and are ſuch frail things fit Objects for our everlaſting Spirits and Affections? Tho' the daily employment of the Heavens is the declaration of the glory of God *, yet neither this, nor their *Pſal 19. 1. harmony, order, beauty, amazing greatneſs and glory of them, ſhall preſerve them from a diſſolution and melting at the preſence of the Lord: Tho' they have remained in the ſame poſture from the Creation till this day, and are of ſo great antiquity; yet they muſt bow down to a change before the Will and Word of their Creator; and ſhall we reſt upon that which ſhall vaniſh like Smoke? Shall we take any Creature for our ſupport like Ice, that will crack under our feet, and muſt by the order of their Lord Creator deceive our hopes? Periſhing things can be no ſupport to the Soul; If we would have reſt, we muſt run to God and reſt in God. How contemptible ſhould that be to us; whoſe faſhion ſhall paſs away, which ſhall not endure long in its preſent form and appearance; contemptible as a reſt, not contemptible as the work of God; contemptible as an end, not contemptible as a means to attain our end? If theſe muſt be changed, how unworthy are other things to be the Center of our Souls, that change in our very uſing of them, and ſlide away in our very enjoyment of them?

Thou art the ſame. The Eſſence of God, with all the perfections of his nature, are pronounced the ſame, without any variation from Eternity to Eternity: So that the Text doth not only aſſert the eternal duration of God, but his Immutability in that duration: his Eternity is ſignified in that expreſſion, thou ſhalt endure; his Immutability in this, thou art the ſame *. To endure, argues indeed his Immutability as well as Eternity: For what endures, is not changed, and what is changed, doth not endure: But thou art the ſame *, doth more fully ſignifie it: He could not be the ſame, if he could be changed into any other thing than what he is; The Pſalmiſt therefore puts, not thou haſt been or ſhalt be, but thou art the ſame without any alteration; Thou art the ſame, that is, the ſame God, the ſame in Eſſence and Nature, the ſame in Will and Purpoſe; Thou doſt change all other things as thou pleaſeſt; but thou art immutable in every reſpect, and receiveſt no ſhadow of change, tho' never ſo light and ſmall. * The Pſalmiſt here alludes to the name Jehovah, I am; and doth not only aſcribe Immutability to God, but exclude every thing elſe from partaking in that perfection: All things elſe are tottering; God ſees all other things in continual motion under his feet, like Water paſſing away and no more ſeen, while he remains fixed and immoveable: His Wiſdom and Power, his Knowledge and Will, are always the ſame. His Eſſence can receive no alteration, neither by it ſelf nor by any external Cauſe; whereas other things either naturally decline to deſtruction, paſs from one term to another, till they come to their period; or ſhall at the laſt day be wrapped up, after God hath compleated his Will in them and by them; as a Man doth a Garment he intends to repair and tranſform to another uſe.

So that in the Text God as Immutable, is oppoſed to all Creatures as periſhing and changeable.

Doct. God is unchangeable in his Eſſence, Nature, and Perfections. Immutability and Eternity are linkt together; and indeed true Eternity is true Immutability, whence Eternity is defin'd by the Poſſeſſion of an immutable Life. Yet Immutability differs from Eternity in our conception: Immutability reſpects the Eſſence or Exiſtence of a thing, Eternity reſpects the duration of a Being in that State; or rather, * Immutability is the State it ſelf, Eternity is the meaſure of that State. A thing is ſaid to be changed, when it is otherwiſe now in regard of Nature, State, Will, or any Quality than it was before; when either ſomething is added to it or taken from it; when it either loſes or acquires: But now it is the eſſential property of God, not to have any acceſſion to, or diminution of his Eſſence or Attributes, but to remain entirely the ſame: He wants nothing; He loſes nothing, but doth uniformly exiſt by himſelf, without any new nature, new thoughts, new will, new purpoſe, or new place.

* This unchangeableneſs of God was anciently repreſented by the figure of a Cube, a piece of Metal or Wood framed four-ſquare; when every ſide is exactly of the ſame equality, caſt it which way you will, it will always be in the ſame poſture, becauſe it is equal to it ſelf in all its dimenſions: He was therefore ſaid to be the Center of all things, and other things the Circumference; the Center is never moved while the Circumference is; it remains immoveable in the midſt of the Circle: There is no variableneſs nor ſhadow of turning with him *. The Moon hath her Spots, ſo hath the Sun; there is a mixture of Light and Darkneſs; it hath its changes; ſometimes it is in the increaſe, ſometimes in the wane; it is always either gaining or loſing, and by the turnings and motions, either of the Heavenly Bodies or of the Earth, 'tis in its Eclipſe: by the interpoſition of the Earth between that and the Sun. The Sun alſo hath its diurnal and annual motion; it riſeth and ſets, and puts on a different Face: It doth not always ſhine with a Noon-day light; 'tis ſometimes veil'd with Clouds and Vapours; it is always going from one Tropick to another, whereby it makes various ſhadows on the Earth, and produceth the various Seaſons of the year; 'tis not always in our Hemiſphere, nor doth it always ſhine with an equal force and brightneſs in it: Such ſhadows and variations have no place in the eternal Father of Lights; He hath not the leaſt ſpot or diminution of Brightneſs; nothing can cloud him or eclipſe him. For the better underſtanding this Perfection of God,

* James 1. v. 17.

I ſhall Premiſe three things.

1. The Immutability of God is a Perfection. Immutability conſidered in it ſelf, without relation to other things, is not a Perfection. 'Tis the greateſt miſery and imperfection of the evil Angels, that they are immutable in malice againſt God: But as God is infinite in Eſſence, infinitely Good, Wiſe, Holy; ſo it is a Perfection neceſſary to his Nature, that he ſhould be immutably all this; all Excellency, Goodneſs, Wiſdom, immutably all that he is; without this he would be an imperfect Being. Are not the Angels in Heaven, who are confirmed in a holy and happy ſtate, more perfect than when they were in a poſſibility of committing evil, and becoming miſerable? Are not the Saints in Heaven, whoſe Wills by Grace do unalterably cleave to God and Goodneſs, more perfect than if they were as Adam in Paradiſe, capable of loſing their Felicity as well as preſerving it? We count a Rock, in regard of its ſtability, more excellent than the Duſt on the ground, or a Feather that is toſſed about with every wind; Is it not alſo the perfection of the Body to have a conſtant tenor of health, and the glory of a Man not to warp aſide from what is juſt and right, by the perſwaſions of any temptations?

2. Immutability is a Glory belonging to all the Attributes of God. 'Tis not a ſingle perfection of the Divine Nature, nor is it limited to particular Objects thus and thus diſpoſed. Mercy and Juſtice have their diſtinct Objects, and diſtinct Acts; Mercy is converſant about a Penitent, Juſtice converſant about an obſtinate Sinner. In our notion and conception of the Divine Perfections, his Perfections are different; The Wiſdom of God is not his Power, nor his Power his Holineſs; but Immutability is the Center wherein they all unite: There is not one Perfection but may be ſaid to be, and truly is immutable; none of them will appear ſo glorious without this Beam, this Sun of Immutability, which renders them highly excellent without the leaſt ſhadow of imperfection: How cloudy would his Bleſſedneſs be, if it were changeable? How dim his Wiſdom, if it might be obſcur'd? How feeble his Power, if it were capable to be ſickly and languiſh? How would Mercy loſe much of its luſtre, if it could change into wrath; and Juſtice much of its dread, if it could be turned into Mercy, while the object of Juſtice remains unfit for Mercy, and one that hath need of Mercy continues only fit for the Divine Fury? But unchangeableneſs is a Thread that runs through the whole Web; 'tis the enamel of all the reſt; none of them without it could look with a triumphant aſpect; His Power is unchangeable; * In the Lord Jehovah is everlaſting ſtrength; his Mercy and his Holineſs endure for ever; He never could, nor ever can look upon iniquity *: He is a Rock in the righteouſneſs of his Ways, the truth of his Word, the holineſs of his Proceedings, and the rectitude of his Nature: All are expreſt, Deut. 32. 4. He is a Rock, his work is perfect, for all his ways are Judgment; A God of Truth, and without Iniquity, juſt and right is he. All that we conſider in God is unchangeable; for his Eſſence and his Properties are the ſame, and therefore what is neceſſarily belonging to the Eſſence of God, belongs alſo to every perfection of the nature of God; none of them can receive any addition or diminution: From the unchangeableneſs of his nature, the Apoſtle, James 1.17. infers the unchangeableneſs of his holineſs; and himſelf in Mal. 3. 6. the unchangeableneſs of his counſel.

3. Unchangeableneſs doth neceſſarily pertain to the Nature of God. 'Tis of the ſame neceſſity with the rectitude of his Nature; He can no more be changeable in his Eſſence, than he can be unrighteous in his Actions. God is a neceſſary Being; He is neceſſarily what he is, and therefore is unchangeably what he is. Mutability belongs to contingency. If any perfection of his Nature could be ſeparated from him, he would ceaſe to be God: What did not poſſeſs the whole Nature of God, could not have the Eſſence of God; 'Tis reciprocated with the Nature of God. Whatſoever is immutable by Nature, is God; whatſoever is God, is immutable by Nature. Some Creatures are immutable by his Grace and Power: * God is holy, happy, wiſe, good by his Eſſence; Angels and Men are made holy, wiſe, happy, ſtrong and good, by Qualities and Graces: The Holineſs, Happineſs, and Wiſdom of Saints and Angels, as they had a beginning, ſo they are capable of increaſe and diminution, and of an end alſo; for their ſtanding is not from themſelves, or from the nature of created ſtrength, holineſs or wiſdom, which in themſelves are apt to fail, and finally to decay; but from the ſtability and confirmation they have by the Gift and Grace of God: The Heaven and Earth ſhall be changed, and after that renewal and reparation, they ſhall not be changed. Our Bodies after the Reſurrection ſhall not be changed; but for ever be made conformable to the glorious Body of Chriſt *; but this is by the powerful Grace of God: So that indeed thoſe things may be ſaid afterwards rather to be unchanged than unchangeable, becauſe they are not ſo by nature, but by Soveraign diſpenſation. As Creatures have not neceſſary Beings, ſo they have not neceſſary Immutability. Neceſſity of Being, and therefore Immutability of Being, belongs by Nature only to God; otherwiſe if there were any change in God, he would be ſometimes what he was not, and would ceaſe to be what he was; which is againſt the Nature, and indeed againſt the natural Notion of a Deity. Let us ſee then,

Firſt in what reſpects God is unchangeable.

1. God is unchangeable in his Eſſence. He is unalterably fixed in his Being, that not a Particle of it can be loſt from it, not a Mite added to it. If a Man continue in Being as long as Methuſelah, Nine hundred and Sixty nine years, yet there is not a day, nay an hour, wherein there is not ſome alteration in his ſubſtance; tho' no ſubſtantial part is wanting, yet there is an addition to him by his Food, a diminution of ſomething by his Labour; He is always making ſome acquiſition, or ſuffering ſome loſs: But in God there can be no alteration, by the acceſſion of any thing to make his ſubſtance greater or better, or by diminution to make it leſs or worſe. He who hath no Being from another, cannot but be always what he is: God is the firſt Being, an independent Being; He was not produced of himſelf, or of any other, but by Nature always hath been; and therefore cannot by himſelf, or by any other, be changed from what he is in his own nature. That which is not, may as well aſſume to it ſelf a Being, as he, who hath and is all Being, have the leaſt change from what he is. Again; becauſe he is a Spirit, he is not ſubject to thoſe mutations which are found in corporeal and bodily Natures; becauſe he is an abſolutely ſimple Spirit, not having the leaſt particle of compoſition; he is not capable of thoſe changes which may be in created Spirits.

1. If his Eſſence were mutable. God would not truly be; It could not be truly ſaid by himſelf, I am that I am *, if he were ſuch a Thing or Being at this time, and a different Being at another time. Whatſoever is changed, properly is not, becauſe it doth not remain to be what it was: That which is changed was ſomething, is ſomething, and will be ſomething; a Being remains to that thing which is changed; yet tho' it may be ſaid ſuch a thing is, yet it may be alſo ſaid ſuch a thing is not, becauſe it is not what it was in its firſt Being; 'tis not now what it was, 'tis not now what it was not; 'tis another thing than it was, it was another thing than it is; it will be another thing than what it is or was: 'Tis indeed a Being, but a different Being from what it was before. But if God were changed, it could not be ſaid of him that he is, but it might alſo be ſaid of him, that he is not; or if he were changeable, or could be changed, it might be ſaid of him he is, but he will not be what he is; or he may not be what he is, but there will be, or may be ſome difference in his Being, and ſo God would not be I am that I am; for tho' he would not ceaſe utterly to be, yet he would ceaſe to be what he was before.

* Exo. 3. 14.

2. Again; If his Eſſence were mutable, he could not be perfectly bleſſed, and fully rejoyce in himſelf. If he changed for the better, he could not have an infinite pleaſure in what he was before the change, becauſe he was not infinitely bleſſed; and the pleaſure of that ſtate could not be of a higher kind than the ſtate it ſelf, or at leaſt the apprehenſion of a happineſs in it: If he changed for the worſe, he could not have a pleaſure in it after the change; for according to the diminution of his ſtate, would be the decreaſe of his pleaſure: His pleaſure could not be infinite before the change, if he changed for the better; it could not be infinite after the change, if he changed for the worſe: If he changed for the better, he would not have had an infinite Goodneſs of Being before; and not having an infinite Goodneſs of Being, he would have a finite Goodneſs of Being; for there is no medium between finite and infinite: Then tho' the change were for the better, yet being finite before, ſomething would be ſtill wanting to make him infinitely Bleſſed; becauſe being finite, he could not change to that which is infinite; for finite and infinite are extreams ſo diſtant, that they can never paſs into one another; that is, that that which is finite ſhould become infinite, or that which is infinite ſhould become finite: So that ſuppoſing him mutable, his Eſſence in no ſtate of change, could furniſh him with an infinite peace and bleſſedneſs.

3. Again; If Gods Eſſence be changed, he either encreaſeth or diminiſheth *: Whatſoever is changed, doth either gain by receiving ſomething larger and greater than it had in it ſelf before, or gains nothing by being changed. If the former, then it receives more than it ſelf, more than it had in it ſelf before. The Divine Nature cannot be encreaſed; for whatſoever receives any thing than what it had in it ſelf before, muſt neceſſarily receive it from another, becauſe nothing can give to it ſelf that which it hath not: But God cannot receive from another what he hath not already, becauſe whatſoever other things poſſeſs, is derived from him, and therefore contained in him, as the Fountain contains the Vertue in it ſelf which it conveys to the ſtreams; ſo that God cannot gain any thing: If a thing that is changed gain nothing by that change, it loſeth ſomething of what it had before in it ſelf; and this loſs muſt be by it ſelf or ſome other. God cannot receive any loſs from any thing in himſelf; he cannot will his own diminution; that is repugnant to every Nature: He may as well will his own deſtruction as his own decreaſe; Every decreaſe is a partial deſtruction: But it is impoſſible for God to die any kind of Death, to have any reſemblance of Death, for he is Immortal, and only hath Immortality *, therefore impoſſible to be diminiſht in any particle of his Eſſence; nor can he be diminiſht by any thing in his own Nature, becauſe his infinite ſimplicity admits of nothing diſtinct from himſelf, or contrary to himſelf. All decreaſes come from ſomething contrary to the nature of that thing which doth decreaſe: Whatſoever is made leſs than it ſelf, was not truly Unum, one and ſimple, becauſe that which divides it ſelf in ſeparation was not the ſame in conjunction. Nor can he be diminiſht by any other without himſelf; becauſe nothing is ſuperior to God, nothing ſtronger than God which can oppreſs him: But whatſoever is changed, is weaker than that which changeth it, and ſinks under a Power it cannot ſucceſsfully reſiſt; weakneſs belongs not to the Deity. Nor laſtly, can God change from a State wherein he is, to another State equal to the former, as Men in ſome caſes may do; for in paſſing from one ſtate to another equal to it, ſomething muſt be parted with which he had before, that ſome other thing may accrue to him as a recompence for that loſs, to make him equal to what he was: This recompence then he had not before, tho' he had ſomething equal to it: And in this caſe it could not be ſaid by God, I am that I am, but I am equal to what I was; for in this caſe there would be a diminution and increaſe, which (as was ſhewed) cannot be in God.

* 1 Tim. 6. v. 16.

Victorinus. in petavio.

4. Again; God is of himſelf, from no other *: Natures, which are made by God, may increaſe, becauſe they began to be; they may decreaſe, becauſe they were made of nothing, and ſo tend to nothing; the condition of their original leads them to defect, and the Power of their Creator brings them to increaſe. But God hath no original, he hath no defect, becauſe he was not made of nothing; He hath no increaſe, becauſe he had no beginning: He was before all things, and therefore depends upon no other thing which by its own change can bring any change upon him. * That which is from it ſelf cannot be changed, becauſe it hath nothing before it, nothing more excellent than it ſelf; But that which is from another, as its firſt Cauſe and chief Good, may be changed by that which was its efficient Cauſe and laſt End.

* Auſtin. Fulgen. in Petavio.

* Petav. Tom. 1. p. 173.

2. God is immutable in regard of Knowledge. God hath known from all Eternity all that which he can know, ſo that nothing is hid from him; He knows not at preſent any more than he hath known from Eternity, and that which he knows now he always knows; All things are open and naked before him, Heb. 4. 13. A Man is ſaid to be changed in regard of Knowledge, when he knows that now which he did not know before, or knows that to be falſe now which he thought true before, or hath ſomething for the Object of his Underſtanding now, which he had not before: But,

1. This would be repugnant to the Wiſdom and Omniſcience which belongs to the Notion of a Deity. That cannot be God, that is not infinitely Wiſe; that cannot be infinitely Wiſe, that is either ignorant of, or miſtaken in his apprehenſion of any one thing. If God be changed in Knowledge, it muſt be for want of Wiſdom; all change of this nature in Creatures, implies this defect preceding or accompanying it: Such a thought of God, would have been unworthy of him that is only Wiſe; that hath no Mate for Wiſdom *! none Wiſe beſides himſelf: If he knew that thing this day which he knew not before, he would not be an only Wiſe Being; for a Being that did know every thing at once, might be conceived, and ſo a wiſer Being be apprehended by the mind of Man. If God underſtood a thing at one time, which he did not at another, he would be changed from Ignorance to Knowledge; As if he could not do that this day which he could do to morrow, he would be changed from Impotence to Power: He could not be always Omniſcient, becauſe there might be yet ſomething ſtill to come which he yet knows not, tho' he may know all things that are paſt. What way ſoever you ſuppoſe a change, you muſt ſuppoſe a preſent or a paſt Ignorance; If he be changed in his knowledge for the perfection of his underſtanding, he was ignorant before; If his underſtanding be impaired by the change, he is ignorant after it.

* 1 Tim. 1. v. 17.

2. If God were changeable in his Knowledge, it would make him unfit to be an Object of Truſt to any rotional Creature. His Revelations would want the due ground for entertainment, if his Underſtanding were changeable; for that might be revealed as truth now which might prove falſe hereafter, and that as falſe now which hereafter might prove true; and ſo God would be an unfit Object of Obedience in regard of his Precepts, and an unfit Object of Confidence in regard of his Promiſes: For if he be changeable in Knowledge, he is defective in Knowledge, and might promiſe that now which he would know afterwards was unfit to be promiſed, and therefore unfit to be performed: It would make him an incompetent Object of dread, in regard of his threatnings; for he might threaten that now, which he might know hereafter were not fit or juſt to be inflicted. A changeable mind and underſtanding cannot make a due and right judgment of things to be done, and things to be avoided. No wiſe Man would judge it reaſonable to truſt a weak and flitting perſon.

God muſt needs be unchangeable in his knowledge: But, as the Schoolmen ſay, that as the Sun always ſhines, ſo God always knows; as the Sun never ceaſeth to ſhine, ſo God never ceaſeth to know: Nothing can be hid from the vaſt compaſs of his Underſtanding; no more than any thing can ſhelter it ſelf without the Verge of his Power. This farther appears in that,

1. God knows by his own Eſſence. He doth not know as we do, by habits, qualities, ſpecies, whereby we may be miſtaken at one time, and rectified at another: He hath not an Underſtanding diſtinct from his Eſſence as we have; but being the moſt ſimple Being, his Underſtanding is his Eſſence; and as from the infiniteneſs of his Eſſence we conclude the infiniteneſs of his Underſtanding; ſo from the unchangeableneſs of his Eſſence, we may juſtly conclude the unchangeableneſs of his Knowledge. Since therefore God is without all compoſition, and his Underſtanding is not diſtinct from his Eſſence; what he knows, he knows by his Eſſence; and there can then be no more mutability in his knowledge, than there can be in his Eſſence; and if there were any in that, he could not be God, becauſe he would have the property of a Creature: If his Underſtanding then be his Eſſence, his Knowledge is as neceſſary, as unchangeable as his Eſſence: As his Eſſence eminently contains all perfections in it ſelf, ſo his Underſtandings comprehends all things paſt, preſent, and future, in it ſelf: If his Underſtanding and his Eſſence were not one and the ſame, he were not ſimple but compounded; if compounded, he would conſiſt of parts; if he conſiſted of parts, he would not be an independent Being, and ſo would not be God.

2. God knows all things by one intuitive act. As there is no ſucceſſion in his Being, ſo that he is one thing thing now, and another thing hereafter; ſo there is no ſucceſſion in his knowledge: He knows things that are ſucceſſive, before their exiſtence and ſucceſſion, by one ſingle act of intuition; by one caſt of his eye all things future are preſent to him in regard of his Eternity and Omnipreſence: So that tho' there is a change and variation in the things known, yet his Knowledge of them, and their ſeveral changes in nature, is invariable and unalterable. As imagine a Creature that could ſee with his eye at one glance the whole compaſs of the Heavens, by ſending out beams from his eye without receiving any ſpecies from them, he would ſee the whole Heavens uniformly; this part now in the Eaſt, then in the Weſt, without any change in his eye; for he ſees every part and every motion together; and tho' that great Body varies and whirls about, and is in continual agitation; his eye remains ſted faſt, ſuffers no change, beholds all their motions at once, and by one glance. * God knows all things from Eternity, and therefore perpetually knows them; the reaſon is, becauſe the Divine Knowledge is infinite *, and therefore comprehends all knowable Truths at once. An eternal Knowledge comprehends in it ſelf all Time, and beholds paſt and preſent in the ſame manner, and therefore his Knowledge is Immutable: By one ſimple Knowledge he conſiders the infinite ſpaces of paſt and future.

* Suarez. vol. 1. p. 137.

* Pſ. 145.5. His underſtanding is infinite.

3. Gods Knowledge and Will is the cauſe of all things and their ſucceſſions. * There can be no pretence of any changeableneſs of knowledge in God, but in this caſe, before things come to paſs, he knows that they will come to paſs; after they are come to paſs, he knows that they are paſt and ſlide away. This would be ſomething, if the ſucceſſion of things were the cauſe of the Divine Knowledge, as it is of our knowledge; but on the contrary, the Divine Knowledge and Will is the cauſe of the ſucceſſion of them: God doth not know Creatures becauſe they are, but they are becauſe he knows them. All his Works were known to him from the beginning of the World *. All his Works were not known to him, if the events of all thoſe Works were not alſo known to him; If they were not known to him, how ſhould he make them? He could not do any thing ignorantly: He made them then after he knew them, and did not know them after he made them: His knowledge of them made a change in them, their exiſtence made no change in his Knowledge: He knew them when they were to be Created, in the ſame manner that he knew them after they were Created; before they were brought into act, as well as after they were brought into act; before they were made, they were, and were not; they were in the Knowledge of God, when they were not in their own nature: God did not receive his Knowledge from their exiſtence, but his Knowledge and Will acted upon them to bring them into Being.

* Auſtin. Bradwardine.

* Acts 15.18

4. Therefore the diſtinction of paſt and future, makes no change in the Knowledge of God. When a thing is paſt, God hath no more diſtinct knowledge of it after it is paſt, than he had when it was to come; all things were in their Circumſtances of paſt, preſent, and to come, ſeen by his Underſtanding, as they were determined by his Will. * Beſides, to know a day to be paſt or future, is only to know the ſtate of that day in it ſelf, and to know its relation, to that which follows, and that which went before: This day wherein we are, if we conſider it in the ſtate wherein it was yeſterday, it was to come, it was future; but if we conſider it in that ſtate wherein it will be to morrow, we underſtand it as paſt. This in Man cannot be ſaid to be a different knowledge of the thing it ſelf, but only of the circumſtance attending a thing, and the different relation of it. As I ſee the Sun this day, I know it was up yeſterday, I know it will be up to morrow; my knowledge of the Sun is the ſame; if there be any change, it is in the Sun, not in my knowledge, only I apply my knowledge to ſuch particular circumſtances. How much more muſt the knowledge of thoſe things in God be unchangeable, who knows all thoſe ſtates, conditions and circumſtances, moſt perfectly from Eternity, wherein there is no ſucceſſion, no paſt or future, and therefore will know them for ever? He always beholds the ſame thing; he ſees indeed ſucceſſion in things, and he ſees a thing to be paſt which before was future: As from Eternity he ſaw Adam as exiſting in ſuch a time; In the firſt time he ſaw that he would be, in the following time he ſaw that he had been: But this he knew from Eternity, this he knew in the ſame manner; tho' there was a variation in Adam, yet there was no variation in Gods knowledge of him in all his ſtates; tho' Adam was not preſent to himſelf, yet in all his ſtates he was preſent to Gods Eternity.

* Gamch. 1. p. Aquin. Qu. 9. cap. 1 p. 73.

5. Conſider, that the knowledge of God, in regard of the manner of it, as well as the objects, is incomprehenſible to a finite Creature. So that tho' we cannot arrive to a full underſtanding of the manner of Gods Knowledge, yet we muſt conceive ſo of it, as to remove all imperfection from him in it: And ſince it is an imperfection to be changeable, we muſt remove that from God; the Knowledge of God about things paſt, preſent, and future, muſt be unconceivably above ours: His underſtanding is infinite, Pſal. 147.5. There is no number of it; it can no more be calculated or drawn into an account by us, than infinite ſpaces which have no bounds and limits can be meaſured by us. We can no more arrive, even in Heaven, to a comprehenſive underſtanding of the manner of his Knowledge, than of the infinite glory of his Eſſence; we may as well comprehend one as the other. This we muſt conclude, that God being not a Body, doth not ſee one thing with eyes and another thing with mind, as we do; but being a Spirit, he ſees and knows only with Mind, and his Mind is himſelf, and is as unchangeable as himſelf; and therefore as he is not now another thing than what he was, ſo he knows not any thing now in another manner than as he knew it from Eternity: He ſees all things in the Glaſs of his own Eſſence; as therefore the Glaſs doth not vary, ſo neither doth his Viſion.

3. God is unchangeable in regard of his Will and Purpoſe. A change in purpoſe is, when a Man determines to do that now, which before he determined not to do, or to do the contrary; when a Man hates that thing which he loved, or begins to love that which he before hated: When the Will is changed, a Man begins to will that which he willed not before, and ceaſeth to will that which he willed before: But whatſoever God hath decreed, is Immutable; whatſoever God hath promiſed, ſhall be accompliſh'd; The Word that goes forth of his Mouth ſhall not return to him void, but it ſhall accompliſh that which he pleaſeth *; whatſoever he purpoſeth, he will do *; His Decrees are therefore called Mountains of Braſs *; Braſs, as having ſubſtance and ſolidity; Mountains, as being immoveable, not only by any Creature, but by himſelf, becauſe they ſtand upon the Baſis of infallible Wiſdom, and are ſupported by uncontroulable Power. From this Immutability of his Will publiſh'd to Man, there could be no releaſe from the ſeverity of the Law, without ſatisfaction made by the death of a Mediator, ſince it was the unalterable Will of God that death ſhould be the Wages of Sin; and from this immutable Will it was, that the length of Time from the firſt promiſe of the Redeemer to his Miſſion, and the daily provocations of Men, altered not his purpoſe for the accompliſhment of it in the fullneſs of that time he had reſolved upon; Nor did the wickedneſs of former Ages hinder the addition of ſeveral promiſes as Buttreſſes to the firſt.

To make this out, conſider,

1. The Will of God is the ſame with his Eſſence. If God had a Will diſtinct from his Eſſence, he would not be the moſt ſimple Being. God hath not a faculty of Will diſtinct from himſelf: As his Underſtanding is nothing elſe but Deus intelligens, God underſtanding; ſo his Will is nothing elſe but Deus volens, God willing; being therefore the Eſſence of God, tho' it is conſidered according to our weakneſs as a faculty, 'tis as his Underſtanding and Wiſdom, eternal and immutable, and can no more be changed than his Eſſence; The Immutability of the Divine Counſel depends upon that of his Eſſence: He is the Lord Jehovah, therefore he is true to his Word, Mal. 3.6. Iſa. 43. 13. Yea, before the Day was, I am, He, and there is none that can deliver out of my hand. He is the ſame, immutable in his Eſſence, therefore irreſiſtable in his Power.

2. There is a concurrence of Gods Will and Underſtanding in every thing. As his Knowledge is eternal, ſo is his Purpoſe. Things created had not been known to be, had not God reſolved them to be the act of his Will; the exiſtence of any thing ſuppoſeth an act of his Will. Again, as God knows all things by one ſimple viſion of his Underſtanding, ſo he wills all things by one act of volition; therefore the Purpoſe of God in the Scripture, is not expreſt by Counſels in the Plural Number, but Counſel, ſhewing that all the Purpoſes of God are not various, but as one Will, branching it ſelf out into many acts towards the Creature; but all knit in one Root, all links of one Chain. Whatſoever is eternal, is immutable: As his Knowledge is eternal, and therefore immutable, ſo is his Will; He wills or nills nothing to be in Time, but what he willed and nilled from Eternity; if he willed in Time that to be, that he willed not from Eternity, then he would know that in Time which he knew not from Eternity: For God knows nothing future, but as his Will orders it to be future, and in time to be brought into Being.

3. There can be no Reaſon for any change in the Will of God. When Men change in their minds, it muſt be for want of foreſight, becauſe they could not foreſee all the Rubs and Bars which might ſuddenly offer themſelves; which if they had foreſeen, they would not have taken ſuch meaſures; hence Men often will that which they afterwards wiſh they had not willed, when they come to underſtand it clearer, and ſee that to be injurious to them which they thought to be good for them; or elſe the change proceeds from a natural inſtability without any juſt cauſe, and an eaſineſs to be drawn into that which is unrighteous; or elſe it proceeds from a want of power, when Men take new Counſels, becauſe they are invincibly hindred from executing the old. But none of thoſe can be in God.

1. It cannot be for want of foreſight. What can be wanting to an infinite Underſtanding? How can any unknown event defeat his Purpoſe; ſince nothing happens in the World but what he wills to effect, or wills to permit; and therefore all future events are preſent with him? Beſides, it doth not conſiſt with Gods Wiſdom to reſolve any thing, but upon the higheſt reaſon; and what is the higheſt and infinite reaſon, cannot but be unalterable in it ſelf; for there can be no Reaſon and Wiſdom higher than the higheſt. All Gods Purpoſes are not bare acts of Will, but acts of Counſel, Eph. 1. 11. He works all things according to the Counſel of his own Will; and he doth not ſay ſo much that his Will, as that his Counſel ſhall ſtand, Iſa.46.10. It ſtands becauſe it is Counſel: And the Immutability of a Promiſe is called the Immutability of his Counſel, Heb. 6. 17. as being introduced and ſettled by the moſt perfect Wiſdom, and therefore to be carried on to a full and compleat execution: His Purpoſe then cannot be changed for want of foreſight; for this would be a charge of weakneſs.

2. Nor can it proceed from a natural Inſtability of his Will, or an eaſineſs to be drawn to that which is unrighteous: If his Will ſhould not adhere to his Counſel, 'tis becauſe it is not fit to be followed, or becauſe it will not follow it; If not fit to be followed, 'tis a reflection upon his Wiſdom; if it be eſtabliſh'd, and he will not follow it, there is a contrariety in God, as there is in a fallen Creature, Will againſt Wiſdom: That cannot be in God, which he hates in a Creature, viz. the diſorder of faculties, and being out of their due place. The Righteouſneſs of God is like a great Mountain, Pſal. 36. 6. The rectitude of his Nature is as immoveable in it ſelf, as all the great Mountains in the World are by the ſtrength of Man. He is not as a Man, that he ſhould repent or lye, Numb.23.19. who often changes, out of a perverſity of Will, as well as want of Wiſdom to foreſee, or want of Ability to perform. His eternal Purpoſe muſt either be righteous or unrighteous; if righteous and holy, he would become unholy by the change, if not righteous nor holy, then he was unrighteous before the change; which way ſoever it falls, it would reflect upon the Righteouſneſs of God, which is a blaſphemous imagination. * If God did change his Purpoſe, it muſt be either for the better, then the Counſel of God was bad before; or for the worſe, then he was not Wiſe and Good before. * Maxim. Tyrius diſſert.3.30.

3. Nor can it be for want of ſtrength. Who hath power to controul him? Not all the combin'd devices and endeavours of Men can make the Counſel of God to totter, *Prov.*19.21. There are many devices in a Mans heart, nevertheleſs the Counſel of the Lord, that ſhall ſtand; that, and that only ſhall ſtand: Man hath a power to deviſe and imagine, but no power to effect and execute of himſelf. God wants no more Power to effect what he will, than he wants Underſtanding to know what is fit.

Well then, ſince God wanted not Wiſdom to frame his Decrees, nor Holineſs to regulate them, nor Power to effect them; what ſhould make him change them? Since there can be no reaſon ſuperior to his; no event unforeſeen by him; no Holineſs comparable to his; no Unrighteouſneſs found in him; no Power equal to his to put a rub in his way.

4. Tho' the Will of God be immutable, yet it is not to be underſtood ſo, as that the things themſelves ſo willed, are immutable; Nor will the Immutability of the things willed by him, follow upon the unchangeableneſs of his Will in willing them; tho' God be firm in willing them, yet he doth not will that they ſhould always be. God did not perpetually will the doing thoſe things which he once decreed to be done: He decreed that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, but he did not decree that Chriſt ſhould always ſuffer; ſo he willed the Moſaical Rites for a time, but he did not will that they ſhould always continue; He willed that they ſhould endure only for a time, and when the time came for their ceaſing, God had been mutable if he had not put an end to them, becauſe his Will had fixed ſuch a Period: So that the changing of thoſe things which he had once appointed to be practiſed, is ſo far from charging God with changeableneſs, that God would be mutable if he did not take them away, ſince he decreed as well their abolition at ſuch a time, as their continuance till ſuch a time; ſo that the removal of them was purſuant to his unchangeable Will and Decree. If God had decreed that ſuch Laws ſhould always continue, and afterwards changed that Decree, and reſolved the abrogation of of them; then indeed God had been mutable; He had reſcinded one Decree by another; He had then ſeen an error in his firſt reſolve, and there muſt be ſome weakneſs in the reaſon and wiſdom whereon it was grounded: * But it was not ſo here; for the change of thoſe Laws is ſo far from ſlurring God with any mutability, that the very change of them is no other than the Iſſue of his eternal Decree; for from Eternity he purpoſed in himſelf to change this or that diſpenſation, tho' he did decree to bring ſuch a diſpenſation into the World: The Decree it ſelf was eternal and immutable, but the thing decreed was temporary and mutable. As a Decree from Eternity doth not make the thing decreed to be eternal; ſo neither doth the Immutability of the Decree, render the thing ſo decreed to be immutable. As for Example, God decreed from all Eternity to create the World; the Eternity of this Decree did not make the World to be in Being, and actually created from Eternity; ſo God decreed immutably that the World ſo created ſhould continue for ſuch a time; The Decree is immutable if the World periſh at that time, and would not be immutable if the World did endure beyond that time that God hath fixed for the duration of it: As when a Prince orders a Mans remaining in Priſon for ſo many days; if he be prevailed with to give him a Delivery before thoſe Days, or to continue him in cuſtody for the ſame Crime after thoſe days, his Order is changed; But if he orders the delivery of him juſt at that time, till which he had before decreed that he ſhould continue in Priſon, the Purpoſe and Order of the Prince remains firm, and the change in the ſtate of the Priſoner, is the fruit of that firm and fixed reſolution: So that we muſt diſtinguiſh between the Perſon decreeing, the Decree it ſelf, and the Thing decreed. The Perſon decreeing, viz. God is in himſelf immutable, and the Decree is immutable; but the Thing decreed may be mutable; and if it were not changed according to the firſt purpoſe, it would argue the Decree it ſelf to be changed; For whiles a Man wills that this may be done now, and another thing done afterwards, the ſame Will remains; and tho' there be a change in the Effect, there is no change in the Will.

* Turretin. de ſatisfac. p.266.

5. The immutability of Gods Will doth not infringe the Liberty of it. The Liberty of Gods Will conſiſts with the neceſſity of continuing his Purpoſe. God is neceſſarily good, immutably good; yet he is freely ſo, and would not be otherwiſe than what he is. God was free in his firſt Purpoſe; and purpoſing this or that by an infallible an unerring Wiſdom, it would be a weakneſs to change the Purpoſe: But indeed the Liberty of Gods Will doth not ſeem ſo much to conſiſt in an indifferency to this or that, as in an independency on any thing without himſelf: His Will was free, becauſe it did not depend upon the Objects about which his Will was converſant. To be immutably good, is no point of Imperfection, but the height of Perfection.

4. As God is unchangeable in regard of Eſſence, Knowledge, Purpoſe; ſo he is unchangeable in regard of Place: He cannot be changed in Time, becauſe he is Eternity; ſo he cannot be changed in Place, becauſe he hath Ubiquity: He is eternal, therefore cannot be changed in Time: He is Omnipreſent, therefore cannot be changed in Place: He doth not begin to be in one Place wherein he was not before, or ceaſe to be in a Place wherein he was before. He that fills every place in Heaven and Earth, cannot change Place; He cannot leave one to poſſeſs another, that is equally in regard of his Eſſence in all; He fills Heaven and Earth, Jer. 23.24. The Heavens that are not ſubject to thoſe changes to which ſublunary Bodies are ſubject, that are not diminiſh'd in quantity or quality; yet they are always changing place in regard of their motion; no part of them doth always continue in the ſame point: But God hath no change of his Nature, becauſe he is moſt inward in every thing; He is ſubſtantially in all Spaces, real and imaginary; There is no part of the World which he doth not fill; no place can be imagined wherein he doth not exiſt. Suppoſe a Million of Worlds above and about this, encircling one another; his Eſſence would be in every part and point of thoſe Worlds; Becauſe it is indiviſible, it cannot be divided; nor can it be contained within thoſe created limits of Millions of Worlds, when the moſt ſoaring and beſt coyning fancy hath run through all Creatures, to the higheſt Sphere of the Heavens, and imagined one World after another, till it can fancy no more: None of theſe, nor all of theſe, can contain God; for the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain him, 1 Kings 8.27. He is higher than Heaven, deeper than Hell *, and poſſeſſes infinite imaginary ſpaces beyond created limits. He who hath no cauſe of Being, can have no limits of Being *: And tho' by Creation he began to be in the World; yet he did not begin to be where the World is, but was in the ſame imaginary ſpace from all Eternity; for he was always in himſelf by his own eternal Ubi.

* Job 11 8.

* Gamachæus, ut ſupra.

Therefore obſerve, that when God is ſaid to draw near to us, when we draw near to him *, 'tis not by local motion or change of place, but by ſpecial and ſpiritual influences, by exciting and ſupporting grace. As we ordinarily ſay, the Sun is come into the Houſe when yet it remains in its place and order in the Heavens, becauſe the Beams pierce through the Windows and enlighten the Room: So when God is ſaid to come down or deſcend *, 'tis not by a change of place, but a change of outward acts, when he puts forth himſelf in ways of freſh Mercy or new Judgments, in the effluxes of his Love, or the flames of his Wrath. When good Men feel the warm Beams of his Grace refreſhing them, or wicked Men feel the hot Coals of his Anger ſcorching them. Gods drawing near to us, is not ſo much his coming to us, but his drawing us to him *: As when Water-men pull a Rope that is a one end faſtened to the Shore, and the other end to the Veſſel; the Shore is immoveable, yet it ſeems to the eye to come to them, but they really move to the Shore. God is an immoveable Rock; we are floating and uncertain Creatures; while he ſeems to approach to us, he doth really make us to approach to him: He comes not to us by any change of place himſelf, but draws us to him by a change of Mind, Will, and Affections in us.

1. The Name Jehovah ſignifies this Attribute, Exod. 3. 14. I am that I am, I am hath ſent me to you. It ſignifies his Immutability as well as Eternity. I am ſignifies his Eternity; that or the ſame that I am, his Immutability: As it reſpects the Eſſence of God, it ſignifies his unchangeable Being from Eternity to Eternity; * As it reſpects the Creature, it ſignifies his conſtancy in his Counſels and Promiſes, which ſpring from no other cauſe but the unchangeableneſs of his Nature. The reaſon why Men ſtand not to their Covenant, is becauſe they are not always the ſame: I am, that is, I am the ſame, before the Creation of the World, and ſince the Creation of the World; before the entrance of Sin, and ſince the entrance of Sin; before their going into Egypt, and whiles they remain in Egypt. * The very Name Jehovah, bears according according to the Grammatical Order, a mark of Gods Unchangeableneſs; It never hath any thing added to it, nor any thing taken from it; It hath no Plural Number, no Affixes, a Cuſtom peculiar to the Eaſtern Languages; It never changes its letters as other words do. * That only is a true Being, which hath not only an eternal Exiſtence, but ſtability in it: That is not truly a Being that never remains in the ſame ſtate. All things that are changed, ceaſe to be what they were, and begin to be what they were not, and therefore cannot have the title truly applied to them they are; they are indeed, but like a River in a continual Flux, that no Man ever ſees the ſame; let his eye be fixed upon one place of it, the water he ſees, ſlides away, and that which he ſaw not, ſucceeds in its place; let him take his eye off but for the leaſt moment, and fix it there again, and he ſees not the ſame that he ſaw before. All ſenſible things are in a perpetual ſtream; that which is ſometimes this, and ſometimes that, is not, becauſe it is not always the ſame; whatſoever is changed, is ſomething now which it was not always: But of God it is ſaid, I am, which could not be if he were changeable; for it may be ſaid of him he is not, as well as he is, becauſe he is not what he was; If we ſay not of him, he was, nor he will be, but only he is; whence ſhould any change arrive? He muſt invincibly remain the ſame, of whoſe Nature, Perfections, Knowledge and Will, it cannot be ſaid it was, as if it were not now in him; or it ſhall be, as if it were not yet in him; But he is, becauſe he doth not only exiſt; but doth always exiſt the ſame. I am, that is, I receive from no other what I am in my ſelf: He depends upon no other in his Eſſence, Knowledge, Purpoſes, and therefore hath no changing Power over him.

* Petav. Theol. Dogmat. Tom. 1. cap 6. §. 7, 8.

2. If God were changeable, He could not be the moſt perfect Being. God is the moſt perfect Being, and poſſeſſes in himſelf infinite and eſſential Goodneſs, Mat. 5. 48. Your heavenly Father is perfect: If he could change from that perfection, he were not the higheſt Exemplar and Copy for us to write after. If God doth change, it muſt be either to a greater Perfection than he had before, or to a leſs, mutatio perfectiva vel amiſſiva; If he changes to acquire a Perfection he had not, then he was not before the moſt excellent Being neceſſarily; He was not what he might be; there was a defect in him, and a privation of that which is better than what he had and was; and then he was not always the beſt, and ſo was not always God; and being not always God, could never be God; for to begin to be God is againſt the Notion of God: Not to a leſs perfection than he had; that were to change to imperfection, and to loſe a perfection which he poſſeſſed before, and ceaſe to be the beſt Being; for he would loſe ſome good which he had, and acquire ſome evil which he was free from before: So that the Soveraign Perfection of God, is an Invincible Bar to any change in him; For which way ſoever you caſt it for a change, his Supream Excellency is impaired and nulled by it: For in all change, there is ſomething from which a thing is changed, and ſomething to which it is changed; ſo that on the one part, there is a loſs of what it had, and on the other part there is an acquiſition of what it had not: If to the better, he was not perfect, and ſo was not God; if to the worſe, he will not be perfect, and ſo be no longer God after that change.

If God be changed, his change muſt be voluntary or neceſſary; if voluntary, he then intends the change for the better, and choſe it to acquire a Perfection by it: The Will muſt be carried out to any thing under the notion of ſome Goodneſs in that which it deſires. Since Good is the Object of the deſire and will of the Creature, Evil cannot be the Object of the deſire and will of the Creator. And if he ſhould be changed for the worſe when he did really intend the better, it would ſpeak a defect of Wiſdom, and a miſtake of that for good which was evil and imperfect in it ſelf; and if it be for the better, it muſt be a motion or change for ſomething without himſelf; that which he deſireth is not poſſeſſed by himſelf but by ſome other: There is then ſome good without him and above him, which is the end in this change; for nothing acts but for ſome end, and that end is within it ſelf or without it ſelf; If the end for which God changes be without himſelf, then there is ſomething better than himſelf: Beſides, if he were voluntarily changed for the better, why did he not change before? If it were for want of Power, he had the imperfection of weakneſs; If for want of Knowledge of what was the beſt Good, he had the imperfection of Wiſdom, he was ignorant of his own happineſs; If he had both Wiſdom to know it and Power to effect it, it muſt be for want of Will; He then wanted that love to himſelf and his own Glory, which is neceſſary in the Supream Being: Voluntarily he could not be changed for the worſe, he could not be ſuch an Enemy to his own Glory, there is nothing but would hinder its own Imperfection and becoming worſe: Neceſſarily he could not be changed, for that neceſſity muſt ariſe from himſelf, and then the difficulties ſpoken of before will recur; or it muſt ariſe from another; He cannot be bettered by another, becauſe nothing hath any good but what it hath received from the hands of his bounty, and that without loſs to himſelf; nor made worſe; if any thing made him worſe, it would be Sin, but that cannot touch his Eſſence, or obſcure his Glory, but in the deſign and nature of the Sin it ſelf, Job 35. v. 6, 7. If thou ſinneſt, what doſt thou againſt him? Or if thy Tranſgreſſions be multiplied, what doſt thou unto him? If thou be righteous, what giveſt thou him; or what receives he at thy hand? He hath no addition by the Service of Man, no more than the Sun hath of Light by a multitude of Torches kindled on the Earth, nor any more impair by the Sins of Men, than the Light of the Sun hath by Mens ſhooting Arrows againſt it.

3. * God were not the moſt ſimple Being, if he were not immutable. There is in every thing that is mutable, a Compoſition, either eſſential or accidental; and in all changes, ſomething of the thing changed remains, and ſomething of it cealeth and is done away: As for example, in an accidental change, If a white Wall be made black, it loſes its white colour; but the Wall it ſelf, which was the Subject of that colour, remains and loſes nothing of its ſubſtance: Likewiſe in a ſubſtantial change, as when Wood is burnt, the ſubſtantial part of Wood is loſt, the earthly part is changed into Aſhes, the airy part aſcends in Smoke, the watery parts is changed into Air by the Fire: There is not an annihilation of it, but a reſolution of it into thoſe parts whereof it was compounded; and this change doth evidence, that it was compounded of ſeveral parts diſtinct from one another. If there were any change in God, 'tis by ſeparating ſomething from him, or adding ſomething to him; if by ſeparating ſomething from him, then he was compounded of ſomething diſtinct from himſelf; for if it were not diſtinct from himſelf, it could not be ſeparated from him without loſs of his Being; if by adding any thing to him, then it is a compounding of him, either ſubſtantially or accidentally.

* Gamach. in prim. part. Aquin. queſt. 9. cap. 1. part. 72.

Mutability is abſolutely inconſiſtent with Simplicity, whether the change come from an internal or external Principle. If a change be wrought by ſomething without, it ſuppoſeth either contrary or various parts in the thing ſo changed, whereof it doth conſiſt, if it be wrought by any thing within, it ſuppoſeth ſeth that the thing ſo changed doth conſiſt of one part that doth change it, and another part that is changed, and ſo it would not be a ſimple Being. If God could be changed by any thing within himſelf, all in God would not be God; his Eſſence would depend upon ſome parts, whereof ſome would be ſuperior to others: If one part were able to change or deſtroy another, that which doth change would be God, that which is changed would not be God; ſo God would be made up of a Deity and a non-Deity, and part of God would depend upon God; part would be dependent, and part would be independent; part would be mutable, part immutable: So that Mutability is againſt the notion of Gods Independency as well as his Simplicity. * God is the moſt ſimple Being; for that which is firſt in Nature, having nothing beyond it, cannot by any means be thought to be compounded; for whatſoever is ſo, depends upon the parts whereof it is compounded, and ſo is not the firſt Being: Now God being infinitely ſimple, hath nothing in himſelf which is not himſelf, and therefore cannot will any change in himſelf, he being his own Eſſence and Exiſtence.

* Ficinus Zachar. mitylen in Peta. Tom. 1. p. 169.

4. God were not eternal if he were mutable. In all change there is ſomething that periſhes, either ſubſtantially or accidentally. All change is a kind of death, or imitation of death; that which was, dies, and begins to be what it was not. The Soul of Man, tho' it ceaſeth not to be and exiſt; yet when it ceaſeth to be in quality what it was, is ſaid to die. Adam died when he changed from Integrity to Corruption, tho' both his Soul and Body were in Being *; and the Soul of a regenerate Man is ſaid to die to Sin, when it is changed from Sin to Grace *. In all change there is a reſemblance of death: So the Notion of Mutability is againſt the Eternity of God. If any thing be acquired by a change, than that which is acquired was not from Eternity, and ſo he was not wholly eternal; if any thing be loſt which was from Eternity, he is not wholly everlaſting: If he did decreaſe by the change, ſomething in him which had no beginning would have an end; if he did increaſe by that change, ſomething in him would have a beginning that might have no end *. What is changed doth not remain, and what doth not remain is not eternal. Tho' God always remains in regard of Exiſtence, he would be Immortal, and live always; yet if he ſhould ſuffer any change, he could not properly be eternal; becauſe he would not always be the ſame, and would not in every part be eternal; for all change is finiſhed in Time, one moment preceding, another moment following; but that which is before Time cannot be changed by Time. God cannot be eternally what he was; that is, he cannot have a true Eternity, if he had a new Knowledge, new Purpoſe, a new Eſſence; if he were ſometimes this, and ſometimes that, ſometimes know this, and ſometimes know that, ſometimes purpoſe this, and afterwards hath a new purpoſe, he would be partly temporary and partly eternal, not truly and univerſally eternal: He that hath any thing of newneſs, hath not properly and truly an intire Eternity. Again, by the ſame reaſon that God could in the leaſt ceaſe to be what he was, he might alſo ceaſe wholly to be; and no reaſon can be rendred, why God might not ceaſe wholly to be, as well as ceaſe to be intirely and uniformly what he was: All changeableneſs implies a corruptibility.

*Gen. 2. 17. *Rom. 6. 11

* Auſtin in Per. Tom. 1 p. 201.

5. If God were changeable, He were not Infinite and Almighty. All change ends in addition or diminution; if any thing be added, he was not Infinite before; if any thing be diminiſh'd, he is not Infinite after. All change implies bounds and limits to that which is changed; but God is infinite, His greatneſs is unſearchable *: We can add Number to Number without any end, and can conceive an infinite Number; yet the Greatneſs of God is beyond all our Conceptions: But if there could be any change in his Greatneſs for the better, it would not be unſearchable before that change; if for the worſe, it would not be unſearchable after that change: Whatſoever hath limits and is changeable, is conceivable and ſearchable; But God is not only not known, but impoſſible in his own Nature to be known and ſearched out, and therefore impoſſible to have any diminution in his Nature. All that which is changed, arrives to ſomething which is was not before, or ceaſeth in part to be what it was before.

* Pſ. 145. 3. אין חקר to end, no term.

He would not alſo be Almighty. What is Omnipotent cannot be made worſe; for to be made worſe, is in part to be corrupted: If he be made better, he was not Almighty before, ſomething of Power was wanting to him: If there ſhould be any change, it muſt proceed from himſelf or from another; if from himſelf, it would be an inability to preſerve himſelf in the perfection of his Nature; if from another, he would be inferior in Strength, Knowledge and Power, to that which changes him, either in his Nature, Knowledge or Will; in both an inability; an inability in him to continue the ſame, or an inability in him to reſiſt the Power of another.

6. The World could not be ordered and governed, but by ſome Principle or Being which were immutable. Principles are always more fixed and ſtable, than things which proceed from thoſe Principles; and this is true both in Morals and Naturals. Principles in Conſcience, whereby Men are governed, remain firmly engraven in their Minds. The Root lies firmly in the Earth, while Branches are ſhaken with the Wind. The Heavens, the cauſe of Generation, are more firm and ſtable than thoſe things which are wrought by their influence. All things in the World are moved by ſome Power and Vertue which is ſtable; and unleſs it were ſo, no Order would be obſerved in Motion, no Motion could be regularly continued. He could not be a full ſatisfaction to the infinite deſire of the Souls of his People. Nothing can truly ſatisfie the Soul of Man but Reſt; and nothing can give it reſt, but that which is perfect and immutably perfect; for elſe it would be ſubject to thoſe agitations and variations, which the Being it depends upon is ſubject to.

The Principle of all things muſt be immutable *; which is deſcribed by ſome by a Unite, the Principle of Number, wherein there is a reſemblance of Gods Unchangeableneſs. A Unite is not variable, it continues in its own Nature immutably an Unite; It never varies from it ſelf, it cannot be changed from it ſelf, but is as it were ſo omnipotent towards others, that it changes all Numbers: If you add any Number, it is the beginning of that Number, but the Unite is not encreaſed by it; a new Number ariſeth from that Addition, but the Unite ſtill remains the ſame, and adds a value to other Figures, but receives none from them.

* Fotherby Atheomaſtix. p. 308. Gerhard. loc. com.

3. The third thing to ſpeak to is,

That Immutability is proper to God, and incommunicable to any Creature. Mutability is natural to every Creature as a Creature, and Immutability is the ſole perfection of God: He only is infinite Wiſdom, able to fore-know future events; He only is infinitely powerful, able to call forth all means to effect; So that wanting neither Wiſdom to contrive, nor Strength to execute, he cannot alter his Counſel: None being above him, nothing in him contrary to him, and being defective in no Bleſſedneſs and Perfection, he cannot vary in his Eſſence and Nature: Had not Immutability as well as Eternity, been a Property ſolely pertaining to the Divine Nature, as well as creative Power and eternal Duration; the

Apoſtles

Apoſtles Argument to prove Chriſt to be God from from this perpetual ſameneſs, had come ſhort of any convincing ſtrength. Theſe words of the Text he applies to Chriſt, Heb. 1. 10, 11, 12. They ſhall be changed, but thou art the ſame. There had been no ſtrength in the reaſon, if Immutability by Nature did belong to any Creature.

The changeableneſs of all Creatures is evident;

1. Of Corporeal Creatures, it is evident to ſenſe. All Plants and Animals, as they have their duration bounded in certain limits; ſo while they do exiſt, they proceed from their riſe to their fall; they paſs through many ſenſible alterations, from one degree of Growth to another, from buds to bloſſoms, from bloſſoms to flowers and fruits; they come to their pitch that Nature hath ſet them, and return back to the ſtate from whence they ſprung; there is not a day, but they make ſome acquiſition, or ſuffer ſome loſs; they die and ſpring up every day; nothing in them more certain than their Inconſtancy: *Rom 8.20 The Creature is ſubject to vanity *. The heavenly Bodies are changing their place; the Sun every day is running his Race, and ſtays not in the ſame Point; and tho' they are not changed in their Eſſence, yet they are in their Place: Some indeed ſay there is a continual generation of Light in the Sun, as there is a loſs of Light by the caſting out its Beams, as in a Fountain there is a flowing out of the Streams, and a continual generation of ſupply: And tho' theſe heavenly Bodies have kept their ſtanding and motion from the time of their Creation; yet both the Suns ſtanding ſtill in Joſhuah's time, and its going back in Hezekiah's time, ſhew that they are changeable at the pleaſure of God.

But in Man, the change is perpetually viſible; every day there is a change from Ignorance to Knowledge, from one Will to another, from Paſſion to Paſſion, ſometimes ſad and ſometimes cheerful, ſometimes craving this, and preſently nauſeating it; his Body changes from health to ſickneſs, or from weakneſs to ſtrength; ſome alteration there is either in Body or Mind. Man, who is the nobleſt Creature, the ſubordinate end of the Creation of other things, cannot aſſure himſelf of a conſiſtency and fixedneſs in any thing the ſhort ſpace of a day, no not of a mi- * Job 7. 3. nute; all his Months are Months of vanity *; whence Pſal 35. the Pſalmiſt calls Man at the beſt eſtate, altogether vanity, a meer heap of vanity: As he contains in his Nature the Nature of all Creatures, ſo he inherits in his Nature the Vanity of all Creatures: A little World, the Center of the World, and of the Vanity * Pſal. 62. 9. of the World; yea, lighter than Vanity *; more moveable than a Feather; toſt between Paſſion and Paſſion, daily changing his end, and changing the means; An Image of nothing.

2. Spiritual Natures, as Angels; They change not in their Being, but that is from the indulgence of God: They change not in their Goodneſs, but that is not from their Nature, but Divine Grace in their confirmation; but they change in their Knowledge, they know more by Chriſt than they did by Crea- *1 Tim. 3 16 tion *; They have an addition of knowledge every day, by the providential diſpenſations of God to his *Eph. 3. 10. Church *; and the increaſe of their aſtoniſhment and love, is according to the increaſe of their Knowledge and Inſight: They cannot have a new diſcovery, without new admirations of what is diſcovered to them; There is a change in their joy, when there is *Luk 15. 10 a change in a Sinner *: They were changed in their Eſſence, when they were made ſuch glorious Spirits of nothing; Some of them were changed in their Will, when of holy they became impure: The good Angels were changed in their Underſtandings, when the Glories of God in Chriſt were preſented to their view; and all can be changed in their Eſſence again; and as they were made of nothing, ſo by the Power of God may be reduced to nothing again. So glorified Souls ſhall have an unchanged operation about God, for they ſhall behold his face without any grief or fear of loſs, without vagrant thoughts; but they can never be unchangeable in their Nature, becauſe they can never paſs from finite to infinite.

No Creature can be unchangeable in its Nature.

1. Becauſe every Creature roſe from nothing. As they roſe from nothing, ſo they tend to nothing unleſs they are preſerved by God: The Notion of a Creature ſpeaks changeableneſs; becauſe to be a Creature, is to be made ſomething of nothing, and therefore Creation is a change of nothing into ſomething: The Being of a Creature begins from change, and therefore the Eſſence of a Creature is ſubject to change: God only is uncreated, and therefore unchangeable; If he were made, he could not be immutable; for the very making is a change of not being into being. All Creatures were made good as they were the fruits of Gods Goodneſs and Power; but muſt needs be mutable, becauſe they were the extracts of nothing.

2. Becauſe every Creature depends purely upon the Will of God. They depend not upon themſelves, but upon another for their Being: As they received their Being from the Word of his Mouth, and the Arm of his Power; ſo by the ſame Word they can be cancelled into nothing, and return into as little ſignificancy as when they were nothing: He that created them by a Word, can by a Word deſtroy them, Pſal. 104. v. 29. If God ſhould take away their breath, they die and return into their Duſt. As it was in the power of the Creator that things might be, before they actually were; ſo it is in the power of the Creator that things after they are, may ceaſe to be what they are; and they are in their own Nature as reducible to nothing, as they were producible by the power of God from nothing; for there needs no more than an Act of Gods Will to null them, as there needed only an Act of Gods Will to make them. Creatures are all ſubject to a higher Cauſe: They are all reputed as nothing: He doth according to his Will in the Armies of Heaven, and among the Inhabitants of the Earth, and none can ſtay his Hand, or ſay unto him, what doſt thou *? But God is unchangeable, becauſe *Dan. 4. 35. he is the higheſt Good; none above him, all below him; all dependent on him; Himſelf upon none.

3. No Creature is abſolutely perfect. No Creature can be ſo perfect, or can ever be, but ſomething by the infinite Power of God may he added to it; for whatſoever is finite may receive greater additions, and therefore a change. No Creature you can imagine, but in your thoughts you may fancy him capable of greater perfections than you know he hath, or than really he hath: The perfections of all Creatures are ſearchable; the perfection of God is only unſearchable *, and therefore he only immutable. * Job 11. 6

God only is always the ſame: Time makes no addition to him, nor diminiſheth any thing of him; His Nature and Eſſence, his Wiſdom and Will, have always been the ſame from Eternity, and ſhall be the ſame to Eternity without any variation.

4. The fourth thing propounded, is ſome Propoſitions to clear this Unchangeableneſs of God, from any thing that ſeems contrary to it.

Firſt, There was no change in God when he began to create the World in Time. The Creation was a real change, but the change was not ſubjectively in God, but in the Creature; the Creature began to be what it was not before. Creation is conſidered as active or paſſive *; active Creation is the Will and *Gamach. in part. 1. Aquin. Qu. 9. cap. 1. p. 72. Power of God to create; this is from Eternity, becauſe God willed from Eternity to create in Time; This never had beginning, for God never began in Time time to underſtand any thing, to will any thing, or to be able to do any thing; but he always underſtood, and always willed thoſe things which he determined from Eternity to produce in Time. The Decree of God may be taken for the Act decreeing, that is eternal and the ſame; or for the Object decreed, that is in Time: So that there may be a change in the Object, but not in the Will whereby the Object doth exiſt.

1. There was no change in God by the Act of Creation, becauſe there was no new Will in him. There was no new Act of his Will which was not before. The Creation begun in Time, but the Will of Creating was from Eternity. The Work was new, but the Decree whence that new work ſprung, was as ancient as the Ancient of days: When the time of creating came, God was not made ex nolente volens, as we are; for whatſoever God willed to be now done, he willed from Eternity to be done; but he willed alſo that it ſhould not be done, till ſuch an inſtant of time, and that it ſhould not exiſt before ſuch a time. If God had willed the Creation of the World only at that time when the World was produced, and not before, then indeed God had been changeable: But tho' God ſpake that Word, which he had not ſpoke before, whereby the World was brought into act; yet he did not will that Will he willed not before. God did not create by a new Counſel, or new Will, but by that which was from Eternity, Eph. 1. 9. All things are wrought according to that purpoſe in himſelf, and according to the Counſel of his Will, v. 11. And as the holineſs of the Elect is the fruit of his eternal Will before the foundation of the World, v. 4. ſo likewiſe is the Exiſtence of things, and of thoſe perſons whom he did elect: As when an Artificer frames a Houſe, or a Temple, according to that Model he had in his mind ſome years before, there is no change in the Model in his mind, the Artificer is the ſame, tho' the Work is produced by him ſometime after he had framed that Copy of it in his own mind; but there is a change of the thing produced by him according to that Model. Or when a rich Man intends four or five years hence, if he lives, to build an Hoſpital, is there any change in his Will, when after the expiration of that time he builds and endows it? Tho' it be after his Will, yet it is the fruit of his precedent Will: So God from all Eternity did will and command that the Creatures ſhould exiſt in ſuch a part of time; and by this eternal Will, all things, whether paſt, preſent or to come, did, do, and ſhall exiſt at that point of time, which that Will did appoint for them; Not as tho' God had a new Will, when things ſtood up in Being, but only that which was prepared in his immutable Counſel and Will from Eternity, doth then appear. There can be no Inſtant fixed from Eternity, wherein it can be ſaid, God did not will the Creation of the World; For had the Will of God for the ſhorteſt moment been undetermined to the Creation of the World, and afterwards reſolved upon it, there had been a moral change in God from not willing to willing; But this there was not, for God executes nothing in Time which he had not ordained from Eternity, and appointed all the means and circumſtances whereby it ſhould be brought about. As the determination of our Saviour to ſuffer was not a new Will, but an eternal Counſel, and wrought no change in God. Acts 2. 23.

2. There is no change in God by the act of Creation, becauſe there was no new Power in God. Had God had a Will at the time of the Creation which he had not before, there had been a moral change in him; ſo had there been in him a Power only to create then and not before, there had been a phyſical change in him from weakneſs to ability. There can be no more new Power in God, than there can be a new Will in God; for his Will is his Power, and what he willeth to effect, that he doth effect: As he was unchangeably Holy, ſo he was unchangeably Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come *; which was Almighty, and is Almighty, and ever will be Almighty. The Work therefore makes no change in God, but there is a change in the thing wrought by that Power of God. Suppoſe you had a Seal engraven upon ſome Metal a hundred years old, or as old as the Creation; and you ſhould this day, ſo many Ages after the engraving of it, make an impreſſion of that Seal upon Wax; would you ſay the Engravement upon the Seal were changed, becauſe it produced that ſtamp upon the Wax now, which it did not before? No, the change is purely in the Wax, which receives a new figure or form by the impreſſion; not in the Seal, that was capable of imprinting the ſame long before. God was the ſame from Eternity, as he was when he made a Signature of himſelf upon the Creatures by Creation, and is no more changed by ſtamping them into ſeveral forms, than the Seal is changed by making impreſſion upon the Wax: As when a Houſe is enlightned by the Sun, or that which was cold is heated by it; there is a change in the Houſe from darkneſs to light, from coldneſs to heat; but is there any change in the light and heat of the Sun? There is a change in the thing enlightned or warmed by that light and heat which remains fixed and conſtant in the Sun, which was as capable in it ſelf to produce the ſame effects before, as at that inſtant when it works them: So when God is the Author of a new Work, he is not changed; becauſe he works it by an eternal Will and an eternal Power. * Rev. 4. 8.

3. Nor is there any new relation acquired by God by the Creation of the World. There was a new relation acquired by the Creature; as when a Man ſins, he hath another relation to God than he had before; he hath relation to God, as a Criminal to a Judge; But there is no change in God, but in the Malefactor. The Being of Men makes no more change in God than the Sins of Men. As a Tree is now on our right hand, and by our turning about it is on our left hand, ſometimes before us, ſometimes behind us, according to our motion near it or about it: and the turning of the Body; There is no change in the Tree, which remains firm and fixed in the Earth; but the change is wholly in the poſture of the Body; whereby the Tree may be ſaid to be before us or behind us, or on the right hand or on the left hand. * God gained no new relation of Lord or Creator by the Creation; for tho' he had created nothing to rule over, yet he had the Power to create and rule, tho' he did not create and rule: As a Man may be called a skilful Writer, tho' he does not write, becauſe he is able to do it when he pleaſes; or a Man skilful in Phyſick is called a Phyſician, tho' he doth not practiſe that Skill, or diſcover his Art in the diſtribution of Medicines; becauſe he may do it when he pleaſes, it depends upon his own Will to ſhew his Art when he has a mind to it: So the Name Creator and Lord, belongs to God from Eternity, becauſe he could create and rule, tho' he did not create and rule: But howſoever, if there were any ſuch change of relation, that God may be called Creator and Lord, after the Creation, and not before; 'tis not a change in Eſſence, nor in Knowledge, nor in Will; God gains no perfection, nor diminution by it, his Knowledge is not increaſed by it; He is no more by it than he was, and will be, if all thoſe things ceaſed; and therefore Auſtin illuſtrates it by this ſimilitude; as a piece of Money when it is given as the price of a thing, or depoſited only as a pledge for the ſecurity of a thing borrowed; the Coyn is the ſame and is not changed, tho' the relation it had as a pledge and as a price be different from one another; ſo that ſuppoſe any new relation be added, yet there is nothing happens to the Nature of God which may infer any change.

2. The ſecond Propoſition. There was no change in the Divine Nature of the Son, when he aſſumed Humane Nature. There was an Union of the two Natures, but no change of the Deity into the Humanity, or of the Humanity into the Deity; both preſerved their peculiar Properties: The Humanity was changed by a communication of excellent Gifts from the Divine Nature, not by being brought into an equality with it, for that was impoſſible that a Creature ſhould become equal to the Creator; He took the Form of a Servant, but he loſt not the Form of God, he deſpoiled not himſelf of the Perfections of the Deity; He was indeed emptied, and became of no reputation *, but he did not ceaſe to be God, tho' he was reputed to be only a Man, and a very mean one too: The Glory of his Divinity was not extinguiſh'd nor diminiſh'd, tho' it was obſcur'd and darkned under the veil of our infirmities; but there is no more change in the hiding of it, than there was in the Body of the Sun, when it is ſhadowed by the interpoſition of a Cloud; His blood, while it was pouring out from his Veins, was the blood of God *; and therefore when he was bowing the Head of his Humanity upon the Croſs, he had the Nature and Perfections of God; for had he ceaſed to be God, he had been a meer Creature, and his Sufferings would have been of as little value and ſatisfaction as the Sufferings of a Creature.

* Phil. 2. 7.

* Act. 20. 28

He could not have been a ſufficient Mediator, had he ceaſed to be God; and he had ceaſed to be God, had he loſt any one Perfection proper to the Divine Nature; and loſing none, he loſt not this of unchangeableneſs, which is none of the meaneſt belonging to the Deity: Why by his Union with the Humane Nature ſhould he loſe this, any more than he loſt his Omniſcience, which he diſcovered by his knowledge of the thoughts of Men; or his Mercy, which he manifeſted to the height in the time of his Suffering? That is truly a change, when a thing ceaſeth to be what it was before; This was not in Chriſt, he aſſumed our Nature without laying aſide his own. * When the Soul is united to the Body, doth it loſe any of thoſe perfections that are proper to its Nature? Is there any change either in the ſubſtance or qualities of it? No, but it makes a change in the Body, and of a dull Lump it makes it a living Maſs, conveys vigour and ſtrength to it; and by its power, quickens it to ſence and motion, So did the Divine Nature and Humane remain intire; there was no change of the one into the other, as Chriſt by a Miracle changed Water into Wine, or Men by Art change Sand or Aſhes into Glaſs: And when he prays for the Glory he had with God before the World was *, he prays that a Glory he had in his Deity, might ſhine forth in his Perſon as Mediator, and be evidenced in that height and ſplendor ſuitable to his dignity, which had been ſo lately darkned by his abaſement; that as he had appeared to be the Son of Man in the infirmity of the Fleſh, he might appear to be the Son of God in the glory of his Perſon, that he might appear to be the Son of God, and the Son of Man, in one Perſon.

* John 17. 5.

* Gamach. in Part. 1. Aquin. qu. 9. cap. 1.

* Again, there could be no change in this Union; for in a real change, ſomething is acquired which was not poſſeſſed before, neither formally nor eminently; But the Divinity had from Eternity before the Incarnation, all the perfections of the Humane Nature eminently in a nobler manner than they are in themſelves, and therefore could not be changed by a real Union.

3. The third Propoſition. Repentance and other Affections, aſcribed to God in Scripture, argue no change in God. We often read of God's repenting, repenting of the Good he promiſed *, and of the Evil he threatned *, or of the Work he hath wrought *.

* Jer. 18. 10
* Exod. 32. v. 14.
John 3. 10.

We muſt obſerve therefore, that,

1. Repentance is not properly in God. He is a pure Spirit, and is not capable of thoſe Paſſions, which are ſigns of weakneſs and impotence, or ſubject to thoſe regrets, we are ſubject to: Where there is a proper repentance, there is a want of foreſight, an ignorance of what would ſucceed, or a defect, in the examination of the occurrences, which might fall within conſideration: All repentance of a fact, is grounded upon a miſtake in the event, which was not foreſeen; or upon an after-knowledge of the evil of the thing which was acted by the perſon repenting: But God is ſo wiſe that he cannot err; ſo holy he cannot do evil; and his certain preſcience or fore-knowledge, ſecures him againſt any unexpected events: God doth not act but upon clear and infallible reaſon: And a change upon paſſion is accounted by all ſo great a weakneſs in Man, that none can entertain ſo unworthy a conceit of God. Where he is ſaid to repent,* he is alſo ſaid to grieve; now no proper grief can be imagined to be in God: As repentance is inconſiſtent with infallible foreſight, ſo is grief no leſs inconſiſtent with undefiled bleſſedneſs: God is bleſſed for ever *, and therefore nothing can befal him that can ſtain that bleſſedneſs; his bleſſedneſs would be impaired, and interrupted, while he is repenting, tho' he did ſoon rectifie that which is the cauſe of his repentance: God is of one mind, and who can turn him? what his Soul deſires that he doth *.

* Gen. 6. 6.

* Rom. 9 8.

* Job. 23. v. 13.

2. But God accommodates himſelf in the Scripture to our weak capacity. God hath no more of a proper repentance, than he hath of a real body; tho' he, in accommodation to our weakneſs, aſcribes to himſelf the Members of our Bodies, to ſet out to our underſtanding the greatneſs of his perfections, we muſt not conclude him a Body like us; ſo becauſe he is ſaid to have anger and repentance, we muſt not conclude him to have paſſions like us. When we cannot fully comprehend him as he is, he cloaths himſelf with our nature in his expreſſions, that we may apprehend him as we are able, and by an inſpection into our ſelves, learn ſomething of the nature of God; yet thoſe Humane ways of ſpeaking ought to be underſtood in a manner agreeable to the infinite Excellency and Majeſty of God; and are only deſigned to mark out ſomething in God, which hath a reſemblance with ſomething in us: As we cannot ſpeak to God as Gods, but as Men; ſo we cannot underſtand him ſpeaking to us as a God, unleſs he condeſcends to ſpeak to us like a Man. God therefore frames his language to our dulneſs, not to his own ſtate; and informs us by our own phraſes, what he would have us learn of his nature; as Nurſes talk broken language to young Children. In all ſuch expreſſions, therefore we muſt aſcribe the perfection we conceive in them to God, and lay the imperfection at the door of the Creature.

3. Therefore repentance in God is only a change of his outward conduct, according to his infallible foreſight and immutable Will. He changes the way of his Providential proceeding according to the carriage of the Creature, without changing his Will, which is the Rule of his Providence; when God ſpeaks of his repenting that he had made Man *; 'tis only his changing his conduct from a way of kindneſs to a way of ſeverity, and is a word ſuited to our capacities, to ſignifie his deteſtation of ſin, and his reſolution to puniſh it, after Man had made himſelf quite another thing than God had made him; It repents me, that is, I am purpoſed to deſtroy the World; as he that repents of his work throws it away: * As if a Potter caſts away the Veſſel he

* Mercer. in loc.

he had framed, it were a teſtimony, that he repented that ever he took pains about it: So the deſtruction of them ſeems to be a repentance in God that ever he made them; 'tis a change of Events, not of Counſels. Repentance in us is a grief for a former fact, and a changing of our courſe in it: Grief is not in God, * but his repentance is a willing a thing ſhould not be as it was, which Will was fixed from Eternity; for God foreſeeing Man would fall, and decreeing to permit it, he could not be ſaid to repent in time of what he did not repent from Eternity; and therefore if there were no repentance in God from Eternity, there could be none in time. But God is ſaid to repent, when he changes the diſpoſition of Affairs without himſelf; as Men when they repent, alter the courſe of their actions, ſo God alters things extra ſe, or without himſelf, but changes nothing of his own purpoſe within himſelf. It rather notes the action he is about to do, than any thing in his own nature, or any change in his eternal purpoſe. God's repenting of his kindneſs, is nothing but an inflicting of puniſhment, which the Creature by the change of his carriage hath merited: As his repenting of the evil threatned is the with-holding the puniſhment denounced, when the Creature hath humbly ſubmitted to his Authority, and acknowledged his Crime.

* Petavius Theol. Dogmat.

Or elſe we may underſtand thoſe expreſſions of joy, and grief, and repentance, to ſignifie thus much, * that the things declared to be the objects of joy, and grief, and repentance, are of that nature, that if God were capable of our paſſions, he would diſcover himſelf in ſuch caſes as we do: As when the Prophets mention the joys and applaudings of Heaven, Earth, and the Sea, they only ſignifie that the things they ſpeak of are ſo good, that if the Heavens, and the Sea, had natures capable of joy, they would expreſs it upon that occaſion in ſuch a manner as we do: So would God have joy at the obedience of Men, and grief at the unworthy carriage of Men, and repent of his kindneſs, when Men abuſe it; and repent of his puniſhment, when Men reform under his Rod, were the Majeſty of his nature capable of ſuch affections.

* Daille, in Sermon on 2 Pet. 3. 9. p. 60.

4 Propoſition. The not fulfilling of ſome predictions in Scripture, which ſeem to imply a changeableneſs of the Divine Will, do not argue any change in it. As when he reprieved Hezekiah from death, after a meſſage ſent by the Prophet Iſaiah, that he ſhould die *, and when he made an arreſt of that Judgment he had threatned by Jonah againſt Niniveh *.

* 2 Kings, 20. v. 1, 5. Iſa. 38. 1, 5. * Jon. 3. v. 4, 10.

There is not indeed the ſame reaſon of promiſes and threatnings altogether, for in promiſing the obligation lies upon God, and the right to demand, is in the party that performs the condition of the promiſe: But in threatnings, the obligation lies upon the ſinner, and God's right to puniſh is declared thereby: So that tho' God doth not puniſh, his Will is not changed; becauſe his Will was to declare the demerit of ſin, and his right to puniſh upon the Commiſſion of it; tho' he may not puniſh according to the ſtrict letter of the threatning the perſon ſinning, but relax his own Law, for the honour of his Attributes, and transfer the puniſhment from the Offender to a perſon ſubſtituted in his room; this was the caſe in the firſt threatning againſt Man, and the ſubſtituting a Surety in the place of the Malefactor.

* Rivet in Geneſ. exercita. 51. p. 213.

But the anſwer to theſe caſes is this, * that where we find predictions in Scripture declared, and yet not executed, we muſt conſider them, not as abſolute, but conditional, or as the Civil Law calls it, an interlocutory Sentence. God declared what would follow by natural Cauſes, or by the demerit of Man, not what he would abſolutely himſelf do: And in many of thoſe predictions, tho' the condition be not expreſt, yet it is to be underſtood; ſo the promiſes of God are to be underſtood with the condition of perſeverance in well doing; and threatnings with a clauſe of revocation annex'd to them, provided that Men repent: And this God lays down as a general caſe, always to be remembred as a rule for the interpreting his threatnings againſt a Nation, and the ſame reaſon will hold in threatnings againſt a particular perſon. Jer. 18. 7, 8, 9, 10. At what inſtant I ſhall ſpeak concerning a Nation and concerning a Kingdom, to pluck up, and pull down, and deſtroy it: If that Nation againſt whom I have pronounc'd, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them; and ſo when he ſpeaks of planting a Nation, if they do evil, he will repent of the good, &c. 'Tis an Univerſal Rule, by which all particular caſes of this nature are to be tried; ſo that when Man's repentance arrives, God remains firm in his firſt Will, always equal to himſelf, and it is not he that changes, but Man. For ſince the interpoſition of the Mediator, with an eye to whom God governed the World after the Fall, the right of puniſhing was taken off if Men repented, and Mercy was to flow out, if by a Converſion Men returned to their Duty, Ezek. 18. 20, 21. This, I ſay, is grounded upon God's entertaining the Mediator; for the Covenant of Works diſcovered no ſuch thing as Repentance or Pardon. Now theſe general Rules are to be the Interpreters of particular Caſes: So that predictions of good are not to be counted abſolute, if Men return to evil; nor predictions of evil, if Men be thereby reduced to a repentance of their Crimes.

So Niniveh ſhall be deſtroyed; that is, according to the general Rule, unleſs the Inhabitants repent, which they did; they manifeſted a belief of the threatning, and gave glory to God by giving credit to the Prophet: and they had a notion of this rule God lays down in the other Prophets; for they had an apprehenſion that upon their humbling themſelves, they might eſcape the threatned vengeance, and ſtop the ſhooting thoſe Arrows that were ready in the Bow *. Tho' Jonah proclaimed deſtruction without declaring any hopes of an Arreſt of Judgment, yet their natural notions of God afforded ſome natural hopes of relief, if they did their duty, and ſpurned not againſt the Prophet's meſſage; and therefore, ſaith one, God did not always expreſs this condition, becauſe it was needleſs; his own Rule revealed in Scripture was ſufficient to ſome, and the natural Notion all Men had of God's goodneſs upon their Repentance, made it not abſolutely neceſſary to declare it: And beſides, ſaith he, it is bootleſs; The expreſſing it can do but little good; ſecure ones will repent never the ſooner, but rather preſume upon their hopes of Gods forbearance, and linger out their Repentance till it be too late: And to work Men to Repentance, whom he hath purpoſed to ſpare, he threatens them with terrible Judgments; which by how much the more terrible and peremptory they are, are likely to be more effectual for the end God in his purpoſe deſigns them, viz. to humble them under a ſenſe of their demerit, and an acknowledgment of his righteous Juſtice; and therefore tho' they be abſolutely denounced, yet they are to be conditionally interpreted with a reſervation of Repentance: As for that Anſwer which one gives, that by forty days was not meant forty Natural days, but forty Prophetical days; that is, years, a day for year; and that the City was deſtroyed forty years after by the Medes: The expreſſion of God's repenting upon their Humiliation, puts a Bar to that Interpretation; God repented; that is, he did not bring the puniſhment upon 'em according to thoſe days the Prophet had expreſt; expreſt; and therefore forty natural days are to be underſtood; and if it were meant of forty years, and they were deſtroyed at the end of that term, how could God be ſaid to repent, ſince according to that, the puniſhment threatned was according to the time fixed brought upon them? And the deſtruction of it forty years after, will not be eaſily evinced, if Jonah lived in the time of Jeroboam the ſecond King of Iſrael, as he did *; And Niniveh was deſtroyed in the time of Joſiah King of Judah. But the other Anſwer is plain. God did not fulfil what he had threatned, becauſe they reformed what they had committed: When the threatning was made, they were a fit Object for Juſtice; but when they repented, they were a fit Object for a merciful Reſpite. To threaten when ſins are high, is a part of Gods Juſtice; not to execute when ſins are revok'd by Repentance, is a part of Gods goodneſs. And in the caſe of Hezekiah *, Iſaiah comes with a Meſſage from God, that he ſhould ſet his houſe in order, for he ſhall die; that is, the Diſeaſe was mortal, and no outward Applications could in their own nature reſiſt the Diſtemper. Behold, I will add to thy days fifteen years; I will heal thee: It ſeems to me to be one entire Meſſage, becauſe the latter part of it was ſo ſuddenly after the other committed to Iſaiah to be delivered to Hezekiah; for he was not gone out of the Kings Houſe, before he was ordered to return with the news of his health, by an extraordinary indulgence of God againſt the power of Nature, and force of the Diſeaſe: Behold I will add to thy Life; noting it an extraordinary thing: He was in the ſecond Court of the Kings Houſe when this word came to him *; the Kings Houſe having three Courts, ſo that he was not gone above half way out the Palace. God might ſend this Meſſage of Death, to prevent the Pride Hezekiah might ſwell with for his deliverance from Senacherib: As Paul had a Meſſenger of Satan to buffet him to prevent his lifting up *; and this good Man was ſubject to this ſin, as we find afterwards in the Caſe of the Babyloniſh Embaſſadors: And God delayed this other part of the Meſſage to humble him, and draw out his Prayer; and as ſoon as ever he found Hezekiah in this temper, he ſent Iſaiah with a comfortable meſſage of recovery: So that the Will of God was to ſignifie to him the mortality of his diſtemper, and afterwards to relieve him by a meſſage of an extraordinary Recovery.

5. Propoſition. God is not changed, when of loving to any Creatures he becomes angry with them, or of angry he becomes appeaſed. The change in theſe caſes is in the Creature; according to the alteration in the Creature, it ſtands in a various relation to God: an innocent Creature is the Object of his Kindneſs, an offending Creature is the Object of his Anger; there is a change in the diſpenſation of God, as there is a change in the Creature making himſelf capable of ſuch diſpenſations. God always acts according to the immutable nature of his Holineſs, and can no more change in his Affections to good and evil, than he can in his Eſſence. When the Devils, now fallen, ſtood as glorious Angels, they were the Objects of Gods love, becauſe holy: When they fell, they were the Objects of Gods hatred, becauſe impure; the ſame reaſon which made him love them while they were pure, made him hate them when they were criminal: The reaſon of his various diſpenſations to them was the ſame in both, as conſidered in God, his immutable holineſs; but as reſpecting the Creature, different; the nature of the Creature was changed, but the Divine holy nature of God remain'd the ſame; With the pure thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf pure, and with the froward thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf froward*: He is a refreſhing light to thoſe that obey him, and a conſuming fire to thoſe that reſiſt him. Tho' the ſame Angels were not always loved, yet the ſame reaſon that moved him to love them, moved him to hate them. It had argued a change in God, if he had loved them always, in whatſoever poſture they were towards him: It could not be counted love, but a weakneſs and impotent fondneſs; the change is in the object, not in the affection of God: For the object loved before, is not beloved now, becauſe that which was the motive of love, is not now in it: So that the Creature having a different ſtate from what it had, falls under a different affection or diſpenſation.

* Pſ. 18.26.

It had been a mutable affection in God, to love that which was not worthy of love, with the ſame love wherewith he loved that which had the greateſt reſemblance to himſelf: Had God loved the fallen Angels in that ſtate, and for that ſtate, he had hated himſelf, becauſe he had loved that which was contrary to himſelf, and the Image of his own holineſs, which made them appear before, good in his ſight. The Will of God is unchangeably ſet to love righteouſneſs and hate iniquity, and from this hatred to puniſh it: And if a righteous Creature contracts the wrath of God, or a ſinful Creature hath the communications of Gods love, it muſt be by a change in themſelves. Is the Sun changed when it hardens one thing and ſoftens another, according to the diſpoſition of the ſeveral ſubjects? Or when the Sun makes a flower more fragrant, and a dead Carcaſs more noyſome? There are divers effects, but the reaſon of that diverſity is not in the Sun, but in the ſubject; the Sun is the ſame, and produceth thoſe different effects, by the ſame quality of heat: So if an unholy Soul approach to God, God looks angrily upon him; If a holy Soul come before him, the ſame immutable perfection in God draws out his kindneſs towards him: As ſome think, the Sun would rather refreſh than ſcorch us, if our bodies were of the ſame nature and ſubſtance with that Luminary.

As the Will of God for Creating the World, was no new, but an Eternal Will, tho' it manifeſted it ſelf in time; ſo the Will of God, for the puniſhment of ſin, or the reconciliation of the Sinner, was no new Will: Tho' his wrath in time break out in the effects of it upon Sinners, and his love flows out in the effects of it upon Penitents. Chriſt by his death reconciling God to Man, did not alter the Will of God, but did what was conſonant to his Eternal Will: He came not to change his Will, but to execute his Will. *Lo I come to do thy Will, O God. And the grace of God in Chriſt, was not a new grace, but an old grace in a new appearance; the grace of God hath appeared *.

* Heb. 10.7.

* Tit. 1.11.

6. Propoſition. A change of Laws by God argues no change in God, when God abrogates ſome Laws which he had ſettled in the Church, and enacts others. I ſpake of this ſomething the laſt day: I ſhall only add this. God commanded one thing to the Jews, when the Church was in an infant ſtate; and removed thoſe Laws, when the Church came to ſome growth. The Elements of the World were ſuited to the ſtate of Children. * A Mother feeds not the Infant with the ſame Diet as ſhe doth when it is grown up. Our Saviour acquainted not his Diſciples with ſome things at one time which he did at another, becauſe they were not able to bear them; Where was the change, in Chriſts Will, or in their growth from a ſtate of weakneſs to that of ſtrength? A Phyſician preſcribes not the ſame thing to a perſon in health, as he doth to one conflicting with a diſtemper; nor the ſame thing in the beginning, as he doth in the ſtate or declination of the diſeaſe. The Phyſicians Will and Skill are the ſame, but the capacity and neceſſity of the Patient for this or that Medicine, or Method of proceeding, are not the ſame.

* Gal. 4.3.

When God changed the Ceremonial Law, there was no change in the Divine Will, but an execution of his Will; For when God commanded the obſervance of the Law, he intended not the perpetuity of it; nay, in the Prophet, he declares the ceſſation of it; he decreed to command it, but he decreed to command it only for ſuch a time; ſo that the abrogation of it was no leſs an execution of his Decree, than the eſtabliſhment of it for a ſeaſon was: The commanding of it was purſuant to his Decree for the appointing of it, and the nulling of it was purſuant to his Decree of continuing it only for ſuch a ſeaſon: So that in all this there was no change in the Will of God.

The Counſel of God ſtands ſure; what changes ſoever there are in the World, are not in God or his Will, but in the events of things, and the different relations of things to God: 'Tis in the Creature, not in the Creator. The Sun always remains of the ſame hue, and is not diſcoloured in it ſelf, becauſe it ſhines green through a green glaſs, and blue through a blue Glaſs; the different colours come from the Glaſs, not from the Sun: The change is always in the diſpoſition of the Creature, not in the Nature of God or his Will.

5. Uſe.

1. For Information.

1. If God be unchangeable in his Nature, and Immutability be a Property of God, Then Chriſt hath a Divine Nature. This in the Pſalm is applied to Chriſt in the Hebrews, Heb. 1. 11. where he joyns the citation out of this Pſalm with that out of Pſalm 45. 6, 7. Thy Throne, O God, is for ever and ever; thou haſt loved Righteouſneſs and hated Iniquity, therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the Oyl of Gladneſs above thy Fellows; and thou Lord, in the beginning haſt laid the Foundation of the Earth, &c. As the firſt muſt neceſſarily be meant of Chriſt the Mediator, and therein he is diſtinguiſh'd from God, as one anointed by him; ſo the other muſt be meant of Chriſt, whereby he is made one with God, in regard of the Creation and Diſſolution of the World, in regard of Eternity and Immutability. Both the Teſtimonies are linkt together by the Copulative [and] and thou Lord, declaring thereby that they are both to be underſtood of the ſame Perſon the Son of God: The deſign of the Chapter is to prove Chriſt to be God; and ſuch things are ſpoken of him, as could not belong to any Creature, no, not to the moſt excellent of the Angels: The ſame Perſon that is ſaid to be anointed above his Fellows, and is ſaid to lay the foundation of the Earth and Heavens, is ſaid to be the ſame; that is, the ſame in himſelf: The Prerogative of ſameneſs belongs to that Perſon, as well as Creation of Heaven and Earth.

The Socinians ſay it is ſpoken of God, and that God ſhall deſtroy the Heavens by Chriſt; if ſo, Chriſt is not a meer Creature, not created when he was Incarnate; for the ſame Perſon that ſhall change the World, did create the World; If God ſhall change the World by him, God alſo created the World by him; He was then before the World was; for how could God create the World by one that was not? That was not in Being till after the Creation of the World? The Heavens ſhall be changed, but the Perſon who is to change the Heavens, is ſaid to be the ſame, or unchangeable in the Creation, as well as the Diſſolution of the World. This ſameneſs refers to the whole Sentence.

* Placeus de deitate Chriſti.

* The Pſalm wherein the Text is, and whence this in the Hebrews is cited, is properly meant of Chriſt, and Redemption by him, and the compleating it at the laſt day, and not of the Babyloniſh Captivity; That Captivity was not ſo deplorable, as the ſtate the Pſalmiſt deſcribes: Daniel and his Companions flouriſhed in that Captivity; it could not reaſonably be ſaid of them, that their days were conſumed like Smoke, their heart withered like Graſs; that they forgot to eat their Bread *: Beſides, he complains of ſhortneſs of Life *; But none had any more reaſon to complain of that in the time of the Captivity, than before and after it, than at any other time: Their Deliverance would contribute nothing to the natural length of their lives. Beſides, when Sion ſhould be built, the Heathen ſhould fear the Name of the Lord, (that is, worſhip God) and all the Kings of the Earth his Glory. The rearing the ſecond Temple after the deliverance, did not Proſelyte the Nations, nor did the Kings of the Earth Worſhip the Glory of God; nor did God appear in ſuch Glory at the erecting the ſecond Temple: The ſecond Temple was leſs glorious than the firſt, for it wanted ſome of the Ornaments which were the Glory of the firſt; But it is ſaid of this ſtate, * That when the Lord ſhould build up Sion, he ſhould appear in his Glory; his proper Glory, and extraordinary Glory. Now that God who ſhall appear in Glory and build up Sion, is the Son of God, the Redeemer of the World; He builds up the Church, he cauſes the Nations to fear the Lord, and the Kings of the Earth his Glory; He broke down the partition Wall, and opened a door for the Entrance of the Gentiles; He ſtruck the Chains from off the Priſoners, and looſed thoſe that were appointed to death by the Curſe of the Law *: And to this Perſon is aſcribed the Creation of the World; and he is pronounced to remain the ſame in the midſt of an infinite number of changes in inferior things: And it is likely the Pſalmiſt conſiders not only the beginning of Redemption, but the compleating of it at the ſecond coming of Chriſt; for he complains of thoſe evils, which ſhall be removed by his ſecond coming, viz. The ſhortneſs of Life, Perſecutions and Reproaches, wherewith the Church is afflicted in this World; and comforts not himſelf with thoſe Attributes which are directly oppoſed to ſin, as the Mercy of God, the Covenant of God, but with thoſe that are oppoſed to Mortality and Calamities; as the unchangeableneſs and Eternity of God; and from thence infers a perpetual eſtabliſhment of Believers. * The Children of thy Servants ſhall continue, and their ſeed ſhall be eſtabliſhed before thee: So that the Pſalm it ſelf ſeems to aim in the whole diſcourſe at Chriſt, and aſſerts his Divinity, which the Apoſtle, as an Interpreter, doth fully evidence; applying it to him, and manifeſting his Deity by his Immutability as well as Eternity.

* While all other things loſe their forms, and paſs through multitudes of variations, he conſtantly remains the ſame, and ſhall be the ſame, when all the Empires of the World ſhall ſlide away, and a Period be put to the preſent motions of the Creation: And as there was no change made in his being by the Creation of things, ſo neither ſhall there be by the final alteration of things; he ſhall ſee them finiſh, as he ſaw them riſe up into Being, and be the ſame after their Ruine, as he was before their Original; he is the firſt and the laſt *.

2. Here is ground and encouragement for Worſhip. An Atheiſt will make another uſe of this: If God be immutable, why ſhould we Worſhip him, why ſhould we Pray to him; Good will come if he wills it, evil cannot be averted by all our Supplications, if he hath ordered it to fall upon us?

But certainly, ſince unchangeableneſs in knowing, and willing goodneſs, is a perfection: An adoration and admiration is due to God, upon the account of this excellence. If he be God he is to be reverenced, and the more highly reverenced, becauſe he cannot but be God.

Again, what comfort could it be to pray to a God, that like the Chamæleon changed colours every day, every moment? What encouragement could there be to lift up our eyes to one that were of one mind this day, and of another mind to morrow? Who would put up a Petition to an Earthly Prince that were ſo mutamutable, as to grant a Petition one day, and deny it another, and change his own act? But if a Prince promiſe this or that thing upon ſuch or ſuch a condition, and you know his promiſe to be as unchangeable as the Laws of the Medes and Perſians, would any Man reaſon thus? Becauſe it is unchangeable we will not ſeek to him, we will not perform the condition, upon which the fruit of the Proclamation is to be enjoyed. Who would not count ſuch an inference ridiculous? What bleſſings hath not God promiſed upon the condition of ſeeking him? Were he of an unrighteous nature, or changeable in his mind, this would be a bar to our ſeeking him, and fruſtrate our hopes: But ſince it is otherwiſe, is not this excellency of his nature the higheſt encouragement to ask of him the bleſſings he hath promiſed, and a beam from Heaven to fire our zeal in asking? If you deſire things againſt his Will, which he hath declared he will not grant; Prayer then would be an act of diſobedience, an injury to him, as well as an act of folly in it ſelf; his unchangeableneſs then might ſtifle ſuch deſires: But if we ask according to his Will, and according to our reaſonable wants, what ground have we to make ſuch a ridiculous argument? He hath willed every thing that may be for our good, if we perform the condition he hath required; and hath put it upon record, that we may know it, and regulate our deſires and ſupplications according to it: If we will not ſeek him, his Immutability cannot be a bar; but our own folly is the cauſe; and by our neglect we deſpoil him of this perfection as to us, and either imply that he is not ſincere, and means not as he ſpeaks; or that he is as changeable as the Wind, ſometimes this thing, ſometimes that, and not at all to be confided in. If we ask according to his revealed Will, the unchangeableneſs of his Nature will aſſure us of the Grant; and what a preſumption would it be in a Creature dependent upon his Sovereign, to ask that which he knows he has declared his Will againſt; ſince there is no good we can want, but he hath promiſed to give, upon our ſincere and ardent deſire for it.

God hath decreed to give this or that to Man, but conditionally, and by the means of enquiring after him, and asking for it: * Ask and you ſhall receive; as much as to ſay, you ſhall not receive unleſs you ask. When the higheſt promiſes are made, God expects they ſhould be put in ſuit: Our Saviour joyns the Promiſe and the Petition together; the Promiſe to encourage the Petition, and the Petition to enjoy the Promiſe: He doth not ſay, perhaps it ſhall be given, but it ſhall; that is, it certainly ſhall; your heavenly Father is unchangeably willing to give you thoſe things. We muſt depend upon his Immutability for the thing, and ſubmit to his Wiſdom for the time. Prayer is an acknowledgment of our dependence upon God, which dependence could have no firm foundation without unchangeableneſs. Prayer doth not deſire any change in God, but is offered to God that he would confer thoſe things which he hath immutably willed to communicate, but he willed them not without Prayer as the means of beſtowing them. The light of the Sun is ordered for our comfort, for the diſcovery of viſible things, for the ripening the fruits of the Earth; but withal, 'tis required that we uſe our faculty of ſeeing, that we employ our induſtry in ſowing and planting, and expoſe our fruits to the view of the Sun, that they may receive the influence of it. If a Man ſhuts his eyes, and complains that the Sun is changed into darkneſs, it would be ridiculous; the Sun is not changed, but we alter our ſelves; Nor is God changed in not giving us the bleſſings he hath promiſed, becauſe he hath promiſed in the way of a due addreſs to him, and opening our Souls to receive his influence; and to this, his Immutability is the greateſt encouragement.

* Ezek. 36. v. 37. Mat. 7.7.

3. This ſhews how contrary Man is to God in regard of his inconſtancy. What an infinite diſtance is there between the immutable God, and mutable Man, and how ſhould we bewail this flittingneſs in our Nature?

There is a Mutability in us as Creatures, and a Creature cannot but be mutable by Nature, otherwiſe it were not a Creature, but God. The eſtabliſhment of any Creature is from Grace and Gift; Naturally we tend to nothing, as we come from nothing: This Creature-mutability is not our ſin, yet it ſhould cauſe us to lye down under a ſenſe of our own nothingneſs, in the preſence of the Creator. The Angels as Creatures, tho' not corrupt, cover their faces before him: And the arguments God uſes to humble Job, tho' a fallen Creature, are not from his Corruption; for I do not remember that he taxed him with that; but from the greatneſs of his majeſty and excellency of his Nature declared in his Works *. And therefore Men that have no ſenſe of God, and humility before him, forget that they are Creatures as well as corrupt ones.

* Job 38. v. 39, 40, 41

How great is the diſtance between God and us, in regard of our inconſtancy in good, which is not natural to us by Creation? For the mind and affections were regular, and by the great Artificer were pointed to God as the Object of Knowledge and Love. We have the ſame faculties of Underſtanding, Will and Affection, as Adam had in Innocence; but not with the ſame Light, the ſame Bias, and the ſame Ballaſt. Man by his fall, wounded his head and heart; the wound in his head made him unſtable in the Truth, and that in his heart unſtedfaſt in his Affections: He changed himſelf from the Image of God to that of the Devil, from Innocence to Corruption; and from an ability to be ſtedfaſt, to a perpetual Inconſtancy: His Silver became Droſs, and his Wine was mixed with Water *. He changed,

* Iſa. 1. 22.

1. To inconſtancy in Truth, oppoſed to the Immutability of Knowledge in God. How are our Minds floting between Ignorance and Knowledge? Truth in us is like thoſe Ephemera, Creatures of a days continuance, ſprings up in the Morning and expires at Night. How ſoon doth that fly away from us, which we have had, not only ſome weak flaſhes of, but which we have learned, and have had ſome reliſh of? The Devil ſtood not in the Truth *, and therefore manages his Engines to make us as unſtable as himſelf: Our Minds reel, and corrupt reaſonings overſway us; like Spunges we ſuck up Water, and a light compreſſion makes us ſpout it out again. Truths are not engraven upon our hearts, but writ as in Duſt, defaced by the next puff of wind; carried about with every Wind of Doctrine, Eph. 4.14. Like a Ship without a Pilot and Sails, at the courteſie of the next Storm; or like Clouds that are Tenants to the Wind and Sun, moved by the Wind, and melted by the Sun. The Galatians were no ſooner called into the Grace of God, but they were removed from it *; Some have been reported to have menſtruam fidem, kept an Opinion for a Month; and many are like him that believed the Souls Immortality, no longer than he had Plato's Book of that Subject in his hand *: One likens ſuch to Children; they play with Truths as Children do with Babies, one while embrace them, and a little after throw them into the Dirt. How ſoon do we forget what the Truth is delivered to us, and what it repreſented us to be *? Is it not a thing to be bewailed, that Man ſhould be ſuch a Weather-cock, turned about with every breath of Wind, and ſhifting Aſpects as the Wind ſhifts Points?

2. Inconſtancy in Will and Affections oppoſed to the Immutability of Will in God. We waver between God and Baal; and while we are not only reſolving, but upon motion a little way, look back with a hankering after Sodom; Sometimes lifted up with heavenly intentions, and preſently caſt down with earthly cares; like like a Ship that by an advancing Wave ſeems to aſpire to Heaven, and the next fall of the Waves makes it ſink down to the Depths. We change purpoſes oftner than faſhions; and our reſolutions are like Letters in water, whereof no mark remains: We will be as John to day to love Chriſt, and as Judas to morrow to betray him, and by an unworthy levity, paſs into the Camp of the Enemies of God; reſolved to be as holy as Angels in the Morning, when the Evening beholds us as impure as Devils: How often do we hate what before we loved, and ſhun what before we longed for? And our reſolutions are like Veſſels of Chryſtal, which break at the firſt knock, are daſht in pieces by the next temptation. Saul reſolved not to perſecute David any more, but you ſoon find him upon his old game. Pharaoh more than once promiſed, and probably reſolved to let Iſrael go; but

* Pſ. 78. 17. to Rebellion *: And what promiſes Men make to God are often the fruit of their Paſſion, their Fear, not of their Will. The Iſraelites were ſtartled at the terrors wherewith the Law was delivered, and pro-

* 1 Kings 18. v. 39. to the ſervice of their Idols *. That which ſeems to be our pleaſure this day, is our vexation to morrow: A fear of a Judgment puts us into a religious pang, and a love to our Luſts reduceth us to a rebellious inclination: As ſoon as the danger is over, the pain is forgotten: Salvation and Damnation preſent themſelves to us, touch us, and ingender ſome weak wiſhes, which are diſſolved by the next allurements of a carnal intereſt. No hold can be taken of our promiſes, no credit is to be given to our reſolutions.

3. Inconſtancy in Practice. How much beginning in the Spirit, and ending in the Fleſh; one day in the Sanctuary, another in the Stews; clear in the Morning as the Sun, and clouded before Noon; in Heaven by an excellency of Gifts, in Hell by a courſe of Prophaneſs? Like a Flower, which ſome mention, that changes its colour three times a day; one part white, then purple, then yellow. The Spirit luſts againſt the Fleſh, and the Fleſh quickly triumphs over the Spirit. In a good Man, how often is there a Spiritual Lethargy? Tho' he doth not openly defame God, yet he doth not always glorifie him: He doth not forſake the Truth, but he doth not always make the attainment of it, and ſettlement in it his buſineſs. This levity diſcovers it ſelf in Religious Duties,
* Rom. 7. 21 when I would do good, evil is preſent with me. Never more preſent, than when we have a mind to do good, and never more preſent than when we have a mind to do the beſt and greateſt good: How hard is it to make our thoughts and affections keep their ſtand? Place them upon a good Object, and they will be friſking from it, as a Bird from one Bough, one Fruit to another. We vary poſtures according to the various objects we meet with. The courſe of the World is a very airy thing, ſuited to the uncertain motions of that Prince of the power of the Air, which
Eph. 2. 2. works in it.

This ought to be bewailed by us. Tho' we may ſtand faſt in the truth, tho' we may ſpin our reſolutions into a firm web, tho' the Spirit may triumph over the fleſh in our practice, yet we ought to bewail it, becauſe inconſtancy is our nature, and what fixedneſs we have in good is from grace. What we find practiſed by moſt Men, is natural to all *: As face anſwers to face in a glaſs, ſo doth heart to heart *; a face in the glaſs is not more like a natural face, whoſe Image it is, than one Mans heart is naturally like another.

* Lawrence of Faith, p. 262.
* Prov 27. v. 19.

1. 'Tis natural to thoſe out of the Church. Nebuchadnezzar is ſo affected with Daniel's prophetick Spirit, that he would have none accounted the true God, but the God of Daniel *. How ſoon doth this
* Dan. 2. 47. notion ſlip from him, and an Image muſt be ſet up for all to worſhip, upon pain of a moſt cruel painful death? Daniel's God is quite forgotten: The miraculous deliverance of the three Children for not worſhiping his Image, makes him ſettle a Decree to ſecure the Honour of God from the reproach of his Subjects *; yet a little while after, you have him ſtruting in his Palace, as if there were no God but himſelf.
* Dan. 3. 29.

2. 'Tis natural to thoſe in the Church. The Iſraelites were the only Church God had in the World, and a notable Example of inconſtancy. After the Miracles of Ægypt they murmured againſt God, when they ſaw Pharaoh marching with an Army at their heels. They deſired food, and ſoon nauſeated the Manna they were before fond of: When they came into Canaan, they ſometimes worſhiped God, and ſometimes Idols, not only the Idols of one Nation, but of all their Neighbours: In which regard God calls this his Heritage or ſpeckled Bird *; a Peacock
* Jer. 12. 9. ſaith Hierom, inconſtant, made up of varieties of Idolatrous colours and ceremonies.

This levity of Spirit is the root of all miſchief; it ſcatters our thoughts in the Service of God, it is the cauſe of all Revolts and Apoſtacies from him, it makes us unfit to receive the communications of God; whatſoever we hear is like words writ in ſand, ruffled out by the next gale; whatſoever is put into us is like precious liquor in a Palſie hand, ſoon ſpilt: It breeds diſtruſt of God; when we have an uncertain judgment of him, we are not like to confide in him: An uncertain judgment will be followed with a diſtruſtful heart. In fine, where it is prevalent, it is a certain ſign of ungodlineſs; to be driven with the wind like chaff, and to be ungodly, is all one, in the judgment of the holy Ghoſt, Pſal. 1. 4. The ungodly are like the chaff which the wind drive away, which ſignifies not their deſtruction, but their diſpoſition, for their deſtruction is inferred from it, ver. 5. Therefore the ungodly ſhall not ſtand in judgment.

How contrary is this to the unchangeable God, who is always the ſame, and would have us the ſame, in our religious Promiſes and Reſolutions for good?

4. If God be immutable, 'tis ſad news to thoſe that are reſolved in Wickedneſs, or careleſs of returning to that duty he requires. Sinners muſt not expect, that God will alter his will, make a breach upon his nature, and violate his own word to gratifie their luſts: No, 'tis not reaſonable God ſhould diſhonour himſelf to ſecure them, and ceaſe to be God, that they may continue to be wicked, by changing his own nature, that they may be unchanged in their vanity. God is the ſame; goodneſs is as amiable in his ſight, and ſin as abominable in his eyes now, as it was at the beginning of the World: Being the ſame God, he is the ſame Enemy to the Wicked, as the ſame Friend to the Righteous: He is the ſame in Knowledge, and cannot forget ſinful acts; He is the ſame in Will, and cannot approve of unrighteous Practices: Goodneſs cannot but be always the Object of his Love, and Wickedneſs cannot but be always the Object of his Hatred: And as his averſion to ſin is always the ſame, ſo as he hath been in his Judgments upon Sinners, the ſame he will be ſtill; for the ſame perfection of Immutability belongs to his Juſtice for the puniſhment of Sin, as to his Holineſs for his diſaffection to Sin. Tho' the Covenant of Works was changeable by the crime of Man violating it; yet it was unchangeable in regard of God's juſtice vindicating it, which is inflexible in the puniſhment of the breaches of his Law. The Law had a Preceptive part, and a Minatory part; When Man changed the obſervation of the Precept, the righteous nature of God could not null the execution of the threatning: He could not upon the account of this perfection neglect his juſt Word, and countenance the unrighteous Tranſgreſſion. Tho' there were no more rational Creatures in Being but Adam and Eve, yet God ſubjected them to that death he had aſſured them of: And from this Immutability of his Will, ariſeth the neceſſity of the ſuffering of the Son of God, for the relief of the Apoſtate Creature. His Will in the ſecond Covenant is as unchangeable, as that in the firſt, only repentance is ſettled as the condition of the ſecond, which was not indulged in the firſt; and without repentance the Sinner muſt irrevocably periſh, or God muſt change his nature: There muſt be a change in Man, there can be none in God; his Bow his bent, his Arrows are ready, if the wicked do not turn *. There is not an Atheiſt, an Hypocrite, a prophane Perſon, that ever was upon the Earth, but God's Soul abhorred him as ſuch, and the like he will abhor for ever: While any therefore continue ſo, they may ſooner expect the Heavens ſhould roul as they pleaſe, the Sun ſtand ſtill at their order, the Stars change their courſe at their beck, than that God ſhould change his nature, which is oppoſite to Prophaneſs and Vanity: Who hath hardened himſelf againſt him and hath proſpered *?

Uſe 2. Of Comfort.

The immutability of a good God, is a ſtrong ground of Conſolation. Subjects wiſh a good Prince to live for ever, as being loath to change him; but care not how ſoon they are rid of an Oppreſſor. This unchangeableneſs of God's Will, ſhews him as ready to accept any that come to him as ever he was; ſo that we may with confidence make our addreſſes to him, ſince he cannot change his affections to goodneſs. The fear of change in a friend, hinders a full reliance upon him; An aſſurance of ſtability encourages hope and confidence. This attribute is the ſtrongeſt prop for Faith in all our addreſſes; 'tis not a ſingle perfection, but the glory of all thoſe that belong to his nature; for he is unchangeable in his love, Jer.31. v.3. in his truth, Pſal.117.2. The more ſolemn Revelation of himſelf in his name Jehovah, which ſignifies chiefly his Eternity and Immutability, was to ſupport the Iſraelites faith, in expectation of a deliverance from Egypt, that he had not retracted his purpoſe, and his promiſe made to Abraham for giving Canaan to his Poſterity. * Herein is the baſis and ſtrength of all his promiſes; therefore, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, thoſe that know thy name, will put their truſt in thee *; Thoſe that are ſpiritually acquainted with thy name Jehovah, and have a true ſenſe of it upon their hearts, will put their truſt in thee. His goodneſs could not be diſtruſted, if his unchangeableneſs were well apprehended and conſidered: All diſtruſt would fly before it as darkneſs before the Sun; it only gets advantage of us, when we are not well grounded in his name; and if ever we truſted God, we have the ſame reaſon to truſt him for ever, Iſa.26. v.4. Truſt in the Lord for ever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlaſting ſtrength, or as 'tis in the Hebrew, a Rock of Ages; that is, perpetually unchangeable. We find the traces of God's immutability in the Creatures; he has by his peremptory decree, ſet bounds to the Sea; hitherto ſhalt thou come but no further, and here ſhall thy proud waves be ſtayed *. Do we fear the Sea overflowing us in this Iſland? No, becauſe of his fix'd decree: And is not his promiſe in his Word, as unchangeable as his Word concerning inanimate things, as good a ground to reſt upon?

* Job38.11.

1. The Covenant ſtands unchangeable. Mutable Creatures break their Leagues and Covenants, and ſnap them aſunder like Sampſon's Cords, when they are not accommodated to their intereſts. But an unchangeable God keeps his; the Mountains ſhall depart, and the Hills be removed, but my kindneſs ſhall not depart from thee, nor ſhall the Covenant of my peace be removed *. The Heaven and Earth ſhall ſooner fall aſunder, and the ſtrongeſt and firmeſt parts of the Creation crumble to duſt, ſooner than one Iota of my Covenant ſhall fail. It depends upon the unchangeableneſs of his Will, and the unchangeableneſs of his Word, and therefore is called the immutability of his Counſel, Heb.6.17. 'Tis the fruit of the everlaſting purpoſe of God; whence the Apoſtle links purpoſe and grace together. * A Covenant with a Nation may be changeable, becauſe it may not be built upon the eternal purpoſe of God to put his fear in the heart; but with reſpect to the Creatures obedience. Thus God choſe Jeruſalem, as the place wherein he would dwell for ever *, yet he threatens to depart from them, when they had broken Covenant with him, and the glory of the Lord went up from the midſt of the City to the Mountain on the eaſt ſide *. The Covenant of Grace doth not run, I will be your God, if you will be my people: But I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people, Hoſ.2.19, &c. I will betroth thee to me for ever, I will ſay thou art my people, and they ſhall ſay thou art my God. His everlaſting purpoſe, is to write his Laws in the hearts of the Elect. He puts a condition to his Covenant of Grace, the condition of Faith, and he reſolves to work that condition in the hearts of the Elect; and therefore Believers have two immutable Pillars for their ſupport, ſtronger than thoſe erected by Solomon at the Porch of the Temple, 1 Kings 7. 21. called Jakin and Boaz, to note the firmneſs of that building dedicated to God; theſe are Election, or the ſtanding Counſel of God, and the Covenant of grace: He will not revoke the Covenant, and blot the names of his Elect out of the Book of Life.

2. Perſeverance is aſcertained. It conſiſts not with the Majeſty of God, to call a perſon effectually to himſelf to day, to make him fit for his eternal love, to give him faith, and take away that faith to morrow; his effectual Call is the fruit of his eternal Election, and that Counſel hath no other foundation, but his conſtant and unchangeable Will; a foundation that ſtands ſure, and therefore called the foundation of God, and not of the Creature; the foundation of God ſtands ſure, the Lord knows who are his *. 'Tis not founded upon our own natural ſtrength, it may be then ſubject to change, as all the products of Nature are: The fallen Angels had created grace in their innocency, but loſt it by their fall. * Were this the foundation of the Creature, it might ſoon be ſhaken; ſince Man after his revolt can aſcribe nothing conſtant to himſelf, but his own inconſtancy: But the foundation is not in the infirmity of Nature, but the ſtrength of Grace, and of the Grace of God, who is immutable, who wants not vertue to be able, nor kindneſs to be willing to preſerve his own foundation. To what purpoſe doth our Saviour tell his Diſciples, their names were written in Heaven *, but to mark the infallible certainty of their Salvation, by an oppoſition to thoſe things which periſh, and have their names written in the Earth *, or upon the Sand, where they may be defaced? And why ſhould Chriſt order his Diſciples to rejoyce, that their names were written in Heaven, if God were changeable to blot them out again? Or why why ſhould the Apoſtle aſſure us, that tho' God had rejected the greateſt part of the Jews, he had not therefore rejected his people elected, according to his purpoſe and immutable Counſel, becauſe there are none of the Elect of God but will come to Salvation; * Rom. 11. 7 For, ſaith he, the Election hath obtained it *; that is, all thoſe that are of the Election have obtained it, and the others are hardened: Where the Seal of Sanctification is ſtampt, it is a teſtimony of God's Election, and that foundation ſhall ſtand ſure. The foundation of the Lord ſtands ſure, having this Seal, the Lord knows who are his, that is the foundation, the naming the name of Chriſt, or believing in Chriſt, * Cocceius. and departing from iniquity is the Seal. * As 'tis impoſſible, when God calls thoſe things that are not, but that they ſhould ſpring up into being and appear before him: So it is impoſſible, but that the Seed of God, by his Eternal purpoſe, ſhould be brought to a ſpiritual life; and that calling cannot be retracted; * Rom. 11. v. 29. for that gift and calling is without Repentance *. And when repentance is removed from God, in regard of ſome works, the immutability of thoſe works is declared: And the reaſon of that immutability is their pure dependance on the Eternal favour and unchangeable grace of God, * [purpos'd in himſelf] and not upon the mutability of the Creature. Hence their happineſs is not as Patents among Men, quam diu bene ſe geſſerint, ſo long as they behave themſelves well, but they have a promiſe, that they ſhall behave themſelves ſo as never wholly to depart from God, Jer. 32. 40. I will make an everlaſting Covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them to do them good, but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they ſhall not depart from me. God will not turn from them, to do them good, and promiſeth that they ſhall not turn from him for ever, or forſake him: And the bottom of it is the everlaſting Covenant, and therefore believing and ſealing, for ſecurity, are linkt together, Eph. 1. 13. And when God doth inwardly teach us his Law, he puts in a will not to depart from it: Pſal. 119. 102. I have not departed from thy Judgments; what is the reaſon? For thou haſt taught me.

* Eph. 1. v. 9, 11.

3. By this, Eternal Happineſs is enſured. This is the Inference made from the Eternity and Unchangeableneſs of God, in the verſe following the Text, verſe 28. The Children of thy Servants ſhall continue, and their Seed ſhall be eſtabliſhed before thee; This is the ſole concluſion drawn from thoſe Perfections of God ſolemnly aſſerted before. The Children which the Prophets and Apoſtles have begotten to thee, ſhall be totally delivered from the reliques of their Apoſtacy, and the puniſhment due to them, and rendred partakers of Immortality with thee, as Sons to dwell in their Fathers Houſe for ever. The Spirit begins a Spiritual Life here, to fit for an immutable Life in Glory hereafter; where Believers ſhall be placed upon a Throne that cannot be ſhaken, and poſſeſs a Crown that ſhall not be taken off their heads for ever.

3 Uſe. Of Exhortation.

1. Let a ſenſe of the changeableneſs and uncertainty of all other things beſide God, be upon us. There are as many changes as there are figures in the World. The whole faſhion of the World is a tranſient thing; * Job 10. 17. every Man may ſay as Job, * Changes and War are againſt me. Lot choſe the Plain of Sodom, becauſe it was the richer Soyl; He was but a little time there before he was taken Priſoner, and his ſubſtance made the Spoil of his Enemy; that is again reſtored; but a while after, Fire from Heaven devours his Wealth, tho' his Perſon was ſecur'd from the Judgment by a ſpecial Providence. We burn with a deſire to ſettle our ſelves; but miſtake the way, and build Caſtles in the Air, which vaniſh like bubbles of Soap in water.

And therefore,

1. Let not our thoughts dwell much upon them. Do but conſider thoſe Souls that are in the poſſeſſion of an unchangeable God, that behold his never fading Glory! Would it not be a kind of Hell to them, to have their thoughts ſtarting out to theſe things, or find any deſire in themſelves to the changeable trifles of the Earth? Nay, have we not reaſon to think, that they cover their faces with ſhame, that ever they ſhould have ſuch a weakneſs of Spirit when they were here below, as to ſpend more thoughts upon them than were neceſſary for this preſent Life; much more that they ſhould at any time value and court them above an unchangeable Good? Do they not diſdain themſelves that they ſhould ever debaſe the immutable perfections of God, as to have neglecting thoughts of him at any time, for the entertainment of ſuch a mean and inconſtant Rival?

2. Much leſs ſhould we truſt in them, or rejoyce in them. The beſt things are mutable, and things of ſuch a nature are not fit Objects of confidence. Truſt not in Riches, they have their wanes as well as increaſes; they riſe ſometimes like a Torrent, and flow in upon Men, but reſemble alſo a Torrent in as ſudden a fall and departure, and leave nothing but ſlime behind them. Truſt not in Honour; all the Honour and Applauſe in the World, is no better than an Inheritance of Wind, which the Pilot is not ſure of, but ſhifts from one corner to another, and ſtands not perpetually in the ſame point of the Heavens. How in a few Ages did the Houſe of David, a great Monarch, and a Man after God's own heart, deſcend to a mean condition, and all the glory of that Houſe ſhut up in the ſtock of a Carpenter? David's Sheep-hook was turned into a Scepter, and the Scepter, by the ſame hand of Providence, turned into a Hatchet in Joſeph his Deſcendent.

Rejoyce not immoderately in Wiſdom; That and Learning languiſh with Age. A wound in the head may impair that which is the Glory of a Man. If an Organ be out of frame, Folly may ſucceed, and all a Man's Prudence be wound up in an irrecoverable Dotage. Nebuchadnezzar was no Fool, yet by a ſudden hand of God he became not only a Fool or a mad Man, but a kind of Brute. Rejoyce not in ſtrength, that decays; and a mighty Man may live to ſee his ſtrong Arm withered, and a Graſhopper to become a Burthen *. The ſtrong Men ſhall bow themſelves, and the Grinders ſhall ceaſe becauſe they are few *. Nor rejoyce in Children; they are like Birds * v. 3. upon a Tree, that make a little chirping Muſick, and preſently fall into the Fowlers Net. Little did Job expect ſuch ſad News as the loſs of all his Progeny, at a blow, when the Meſſenger knocked at his Gate: And ſuch changes happen oftentimes, when our expectations of comfort, and a contentment in them, are at the higheſt. How often doth a ſtring crack when the Muſitian hath wound it up to a juſt height for a Tune, and all his pains and delight marr'd in a moment? Nay, all theſe things change while we are uſing them, like Ice that melts between our fingers, and Flowers that wither while we are ſmelling to them: The Apoſtle gave them a good title, when he called them uncertain riches, and thought it a ſtrong argument to diſſwade them from truſting in them *. The wealth of the Merchant depends upon * 1 Tim. 6. the Winds and Waves, and the Revenue of the Huſ- v. 17. bandman upon the Clouds; and ſince they depend upon thoſe things which are uſed to expreſs the moſt changeableneſs, they can be no fit Object for truſt. Beſides, God ſometimes kindles a Fire under all a mans Glory, which doth inſenſibly conſume it *, and while * Iſa. 10. 10. we have them, the fear of loſing them renders us not very happy in the fruition of them. We can ſcarce tell whether they are contentments or no, becauſe ſorrow follows them ſo cloſe at the heels.

'Tis not an unneceſſary Exhortation for good Men; the beſt Men have been apt to place too much truſt in them. David thought himſelf immutable in his Proſperity; and ſuch thoughts could not be without ſome immoderate Outlets of the heart to them, and Confidences in them: And Job promiſed himſelf to die in his Neſt, and multiply his days as the Sand, without any interruption *; but he was miſtaken and diſappointed.

* Job 29. v. 18, 19, &c.

Let me add this; Truſt not in Men who are as inconſtant as any thing elſe, and often change their moſt ardent affections into implacable hatred: And tho' their affections may not be changed, their power to help you may. Haman's Friends that depended on him one day, were creſt-fallen the next, when their Patron was to exchange his Chariot of State for an ignominious Gallows.

3. Prefer an immutable God before mutable Creatures. Is it not a horrible thing to ſee what we are, and what we poſſeſs, daily crumbling to duſt, and in a continual flux from us; and not ſeek out ſomething that is permanent, and always abides the ſame, for our portion? In God, or Wiſdom, which is Chriſt, there is ſubſtance *, in which reſpect he is oppoſed to all the things in the World, that are but ſhadows, that are ſhorter or longer according to the motion of the Sun; mutable alſo, by every little body that intervenes. God is ſubject to no decay within, to no force without; nothing in his own nature can change him from what he is, and there is no Power above can hinder him from being what he will to the Soul: He is an Ocean of all Perfection; He wants nothing without himſelf to render him bleſſed, which may allure him to a change: His Creatures can want nothing out of him to make them happy, whereby they may be inticed to prefer any thing before him. If we enjoy other things, 'tis by God's donation, who can as well withdraw them as beſtow them; and it is but a reaſonable, as well as a neceſſary thing, to endeavour the enjoyment of the immutable Benefactor, rather than his revocable Gifts.

* Pro. 8. 21.

If the Creatures had a ſufficient vertue in themſelves, to raviſh our thoughts and engroſs our Souls; yet when we take a proſpect of a fixed and unchangeable Being, what beauty, what ſtrength have any of thoſe things to vie with him? How can they bear up and maintain their intereſt, againſt a lively thought and ſenſe of God? All the Glory of them would fly before him like that of the Stars before the Sun: They were once nothing, they may be nothing again; as their own nature brought them not out of nothing, ſo their Nature ſecures them not from being reduced to nothing. What an unhappineſs is it, to have our affections ſet upon that which retains ſomething of its non eſſe with its eſſe, its not Being with its Being; that lives indeed, but in a continual flux, and may loſe that pleaſureableneſs to morrow which charms us to day?

2. This Doctrine will teach us Patience under ſuch Providences as declare his unchangeable Will. The rectitude of our Wills conſiſts in conformity to the Divine, as diſcovered in his Words, and manifeſted in his Providence, which are the effluxes of his immutable Will. The time of trial is appointed by his immutable Will *; 'tis not in the Power of the Sufferer's will to ſhorten it, nor in the Power of the Enemies will to lengthen it. Whatſoever doth happen, hath been decreed by God, (Eccleſ. 6. 10. That which hath been is named already) therefore to murmur, or be diſcontented, is to contend with God, who is mightier than we to maintain his own purpoſes. God doth act all things conveniently for that immutable end intended by himſelf, and according to the reaſon of his own Divine Will, in the true point of Time moſt proper for it and for us, not too ſoon or too ſlow, becauſe he is unchangeable in Knowledge and Wiſdom. God doth not act any thing barely by an immutable Will, but by an immutable Wiſdom, and an unchangeable Rule of Goodneſs; and therefore we ſhould not only acquieſce in what he works, but have a complacency in it; and by having our Wills thus knitting themſelves with the immutable Will of God, we attain ſome degree of likeneſs to him in his own Unchangeableneſs. When therefore God hath manifeſted his Will in opening his Decree to the World by his Work of Providence, we muſt ceaſe all diſputes againſt it, and with Aaron hold our peace, tho' the affliction be very ſmart: * All fleſh muſt be ſilent before God *; For whatſoever is his Counſel ſhall ſtand, and cannot be recall'd; all ſtruggling againſt it, is like a brittle Glaſs contending with a Rock; For if he cut off and ſhut up, or gather together, then who can hinder him? Job 11. 10. Nothing can help us, if he hath determined to afflict us; as nothing can hurt us, if he hath determined to ſecure us. The more clearly God hath evidenc'd this, or that to be his Will, the more ſinful is our ſtruggling againſt it. Pharaoh's ſin was the greater in keeping Iſrael, by how much the more God's Miracles had been Demonſtrations of his ſettled Will to deliver them. Let nothing ſnatch our hearts to a contradiction to him, but let us fear and give Glory to him, when the hour of Judgment, which he hath appointed, is come *; that is, comply with the unchangeable will of his Precept, the more he declares the immutable will of his Providence: We muſt not think, God muſt diſgrace his Nature, and change his Proceedings for us: Better the Creature ſhould ſuffer, than God be impair'd in any of his Perfections. If God changed his Purpoſe, he would change his Nature. Patience is the way to perform the immutable Will of God, and a means to attain a gracious Immutability for our ſelves by receiving the Promiſe. Heb. 10. 36. Ye have need of Patience, that after ye have done the Will of God, ye might receive the Promiſe.

3. This Doctrine will teach us to imitate God in this perfection, by ſtriving to be immoveable in goodneſs. God never goes back from himſelf, he finds nothing better than himſelf for which he ſhould change; and can we find any thing better than God to allure our hearts to a change from him? The Sun never declines from the Ecliptick Line, nor ſhould we from the paths of Holineſs. A ſtedfaſt obedience is encouraged by an unchangeable God to reward it, 1 Cor. 15. 58. Be ſtedfaſt and immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labour ſhall not be in vain in the Lord. Unſtedfaſtneſs is the note of an Hypocrite, Pſal. 78. 37. Stedfaſtneſs in that which is good, is the mark of a Saint, 'tis the Character of a righteous perſon to keep the truth, Iſa. 26. 2. And it is as poſitively ſaid, that he that abides not in the Doctrine of Chriſt, hath not God, 2 Epiſt. John 9. But he that doth, hath both the Father and the Son. So much of uncertainty, ſo much of nature; ſo much of firmneſs in Duty, ſo much of Grace. We can never honour God unleſs we finiſh his work; as Chriſt did not glorifie God but in finiſhing the work God gave him to do *. The nearer the World comes to an end, the more is God's immutability ſeen in his promiſes and predictions, and the more muſt our unchangeableneſs be ſeen in our obedience, Heb. 10. 23, 35. Let us hold faſt the profeſſion of our faith without wavering, and ſo much the more as you ſee the day approaching. The Chriſtian Jews were to be the more tenacious of their faith, the nearer they ſaw the day approaching, the day of Jeruſalems deſtruction propheſied of by Daniel *, which accompliſhment muſt be a great argument to eſtabliſh the Chriſtian Jews in the profeſſion of Chriſt to be the Meſſiah; becauſe the deſtruction of the City was not to be, before the cutting off the Meſſiah.

* John 17. 4

* Dan. 9. 26.

Let

Let us be therefore conſtant in our profeſſion and ſervice of God, and not ſuffer our ſelves to be driven from him by the ill uſage, or flatter'd from him by the careſſes of the World.

1. 'Tis reaſonable. If God be unchangeable in doing us good, it is reaſon we ſhould be unchangeable in doing him ſervice: If he aſſures us that he is our God, our I am, he would alſo that we ſhould be his People. His we are. If he declare himſelf conſtant in his Promiſes, he expects we ſhould be ſo in our Obedience: As a Spouſe, we ſhould be unchangeably faithful to him as a Husband: As Subjects, have an unchangeable Allegiance to him as our Prince. He would not have us faithful to him for an hour or a day, but to the death *; And it is reaſon we ſhould be his; and if we be his Children, imitate him in his conſtancy of his holy Purpoſes.

* Rev. 2. 10.

2. 'Tis our glory and intereſt. To be a Reed ſhaken with every Wind, is no commendation among Men, and 'tis leſs a ground of Praiſe with God. It was Job's glory, that he held faſt in his Integrity; * In all this Job ſinned not; In all this, which whole Cities and Kingdoms would have thought ground enough of high exclamations againſt God: And alſo againſt the temptation of his Wife, he retained his integrity, Job 2. 9. Doſt thou ſtill retain thy integrity? The Devil, who by God's permiſſion ſtript him of his Goods and Health, yet could not ſtrip him of his grace. As a Traveller, when the Wind and Snow beats in his face, wraps his Cloak more cloſely about him, to preſerve that and himſelf. Better we had never made profeſſion, than afterwards to abandon it; ſuch a withering profeſſion ſerves for no other uſe than to aggravate the crime, if any of us fly like a Coward, or revolt like a Traytor: What profit will it be to a Soldier, if he hath withſtood many aſſaults, and turn his back at laſt? If we would have God crown us with an immutable glory, we muſt crown our beginnings with a happy perſeverance, Rev. 2. 10. Be faithful to the Death, and I will give thee a Crown of life: Not as tho' this were the cauſe to merit it, but a neceſſary condition to poſſeſs it: Conſtancy in good is accompanied with an immutability of Glory.

* Job. 1. 22.

3. By an unchangeable diſpoſition to good, we ſhould begin the happineſs of Heaven upon Earth. This is the perfection of bleſſed Spirits; thoſe that are neareſt to God, as Angels and glorified Souls, they are immutable: Not indeed by Nature, but by Grace; yet not only by a neceſſity of Grace, but a liberty of Will: Grace will not let them change; and that Grace doth animate their Wills that they would not change; an immutable God fills their Underſtandings and Affections, and gives ſatisfaction to their deſires. The Saints when they were below, tried other things, and found them deficient, But now they are ſo fully ſatisfied with the beatifick Viſion, that if Satan ſhould have entrance among the Angels and Sons of God, 'tis not likely he ſhould have any influence upon them; he could not preſent to their Underſtandings any thing, that could either at the firſt glance, or upon a deliberate view, be preferrable to what they enjoy and are fixed in.

Well then, let us be immoveable in the Knowledge and Love of God. 'Tis the delight of God to ſee his Creatures reſemble him in what they are able. Let not our Affections to him be as Jonah's Gourd, growing up in one Night, and withering the next. Let us not only fight a good Fight, but do ſo till we have finiſhed our Courſe, and imitate God in an unchangeableneſs of holy Purpoſes; and to that purpoſe, examine our ſelves daily what fixedneſs we have arrived unto; And to prevent any temptation to a Revolt, let us often poſſeſs our minds with thoughts of the immutability of God's Nature and Will, which like Fire under Water, will keep a good matter boiling up in us, and make it both retain and increaſe its heat.

4. Let this Doctrine teach us to have recourſe to God, and aim at a near conjunction with him. When our Spirits begin to flag, and a cold aguiſh temper is drawing upon us, let us go to him, who can only fix our hearts, and furniſh us with a Ballaſt to render them ſtedfaſt. As he is only immutable in his Nature, ſo he is the only Principle of Immutability, as well as Being in the Creature. Without his Grace, we ſhall be as changeable in our appearances as a Camelion, and in our turnings as the Wind. When Peter truſted in himſelf, he changed to the worſe: It was his Maſters recourſe to God for him that preſerved in him a reducing Principle, which changed him again for the better, and fixed him in it *.

* Luke 22. v. 32.

It will be our Intereſt to be in conjunction with him, that moves not about with the Heavens, nor is turned by the force of Nature, nor changed by the accidents in the World; but ſits in the Heavens, moving all things by his powerful Arm, according to his infinite Skill: While we have him for our God, we have his Immutability, as well as any other Perfection of his Nature, for our advantage; The nearer we come to him, the more ſtability we ſhall have in our ſelves; the further from him, the more liable to change. The Line that is neareſt to the place where it is firſt fixed, is leaſt ſubject to motion; the further it is ſtretched from it, the weaker it is, and more liable to be ſhaken. Let us alſo affect thoſe things which are neareſt to him in this perfection; the righteouſneſs of Chriſt that ſhall never wear out, and the graces of the Spirit that ſhall never burn out; by this means, what God is infinitely by Nature, we ſhall come to be finitely immutable by Grace, as much as the capacity of a Creature can contain.

A DISCOURSE UPON God's Omnipresence.

Jeremiah XXIII. 24.

Can any hide himself in secret places, that I shall not see him, saith the Lord? Do not I fill Heaven and Earth, saith the Lord?

THE occasion of this Discourse begins verse 16. where God admonisheth the People, not to hearken to the words of the false Prophets, which spake a Vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord. They made the people vain by their insinuations of Peace, when God had proclaimed War and Calamity; and uttered the Dreams of their Phansies, and not the Visions of the Lord; and so turned the People from the expectation of the evil day which God had threatned, ver. 17. They say still unto them, that despise me, The Lord hath said, Ye shall have peace: and they say unto every one that walks after the imagination of his own heart, No evil shall come upon you. And they invalidate the Prophecies of those, whom God had sent, ver. 18. Who hath stood in the Counsel of the Lord, and hath perceived and heard his word? Who hath marked his word, and heard it? Who hath stood in the Counsel of the Lord? Are they acquainted with the Secrets of God more than we? Who have the word of the Lord, if we have not? Or, it may be a continuation of God's Admonition: Believe not those Prophets; for who of them have been acquainted with the Secrets of God? Or by what means should they learn his Counsel? No, assure your selves, a whirlwind of the Lord is gone forth in fury, even a grievous whirlwind, it shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked, ver. 19. A whirlwind shall come from Babylon, 'tis just at the door, and shall not be blown over, it shall fall with a witness upon the wicked People, and the deceiving Prophets, and sweep them together into Captivity. For v. 20. The anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have executed, and till he have performed the thoughts of his heart. My fury shall not be a childish fury that quickly languisheth, but shall accomplish whatsoever I threaten; and burn so hot, as not to be cool, till I have satisfied my vengeance; in the latter days ye shall consider it perfectly, ver. 20. when the storm shall beat upon you, you shall then know, that the Calamities shall answer the words you have heard. When the Conqueror shall waste your Grounds, demolish your Houses, and manacle your Hands, then shall you consider it, and have the wishes of Fools, that you had had your eyes in your heads before; you shall then know the falsness of your Guides, and the truth of my Prophets, and discern who stood in the Counsel of the Lord, and subscribe to the Messages, I have sent you.

Some understand this not only of the Babylonish Captivity, but refer it to the time of Christ, and the false Doctrine of Mens own Righteousness, in opposition to the Righteousness of God; understanding this verse to be partly a threatning of Wrath, which shall end in an advantage to the Jews, who shall in the latter time consider the falsness of their Notions about a legal Righteousness, and so make it a promise; they shall then know the intent of the Scripture, and in the latter days, the latter end of the World, when Time shall be near the rouling up, they shall reflect upon themselves; they shall look upon him whom they have pierced; and till these latter days, they shall be hardened, and believe nothing of Evangelical truths.

Now God denieth that he sent those Prophets, v. 21. I have not sent these Prophets, yet they ran; I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied. They have intruded themselves without a Commission from me, whatsoever their Brags are. The reason to prove it, is, v. 22. If they had stood in my Counsel, if they had been instructed, and inspired by me, they would have caused my people to hear my words; they would have regulated themselves according to my word, and have turned them from their evil way; i. e. endeavoured to shake down their false confidences of peace, and make them sensible of their false Notions of me, and my ways. Now because those false Prophets could not be so impudent as to boast, that they Prophesied in the Name of God, when they had not Commission from him, unless they had some secret Sentiment, that they and their intentions were hid from the Knowledge and Eye of God; He adds, v. 23. Am I a God at hand, and not a God afar off? Can any hide himself in secret places, that I shall not see him? Have I not the power of seeing and knowing what they do, what they design, what they think? Why should I not have such a power, since I fill Heaven and Earth by my Essence? Am I a God at hand, and not a God afar off? He excludes here the Doctrine of those that excluded the Providence of God from extending its self to the inferior things of the Earth; which error was ancient, as ancient as the time of Job, as appears by their opinion. That God's eyes were hood-wink'd and muffled by the thickness of the Clouds, and could not pierce through their dark and dense Body: * Thick clouds are a covering to him, that he seeth not.

* Job 22.14

* Some refer it to Time. Do you imagine me a God new fram'd like your Idols, beginniug a little time ago, and not existing before the foundation of the World; yea, from Eternity? A God afar off, further than your acutest understandings can reach? I am of a longer standing, and you ought to know my Majesty. But it rather refers to place, than time. Do you think I do not behold every thing in the Earth, as well as in Heaven? Am I lock'd up within the Walls of my Palace, and cannot peep out to behold the things done in the World? Or that I am so link'd to pleasure in the place of my Glory, as earthly Kings are in their Courts, that I have no mind, or leisure to take notice of the carriages of Men upon Earth? God doth not say, He was afar off, but only gives an account of the inward thoughts of their minds, or at least, of the Language expresst by their Actions.

The

The Interrogation carries in it a ſtrong Affirmation, and aſſures us more of God's care, and the folly of Men, in not conſidering it. Am I a God at hand, and not a God afar off? Can any hide himſelf in ſecret places? Heb. in Hiddeneſſes, in the deepeſt Cells: What? are you beſotted by your baſe Luſts, that you think me a God careleſs, ignorant, blind, that I can ſee nothing, but as a purblind Man, what is very near my eye? Are you ſo out of your wits, that you imagine you can deceive me? Do not all your behaviours ſpeak ſuch a Sentiment to lie ſecret in your heart, tho' not form'd into a full conception, yet teſtified by your Actions? No, you are much miſtaken, 'tis impoſſible but that I ſhould ſee and know all things, ſince I am preſent with all things, and am not at a greater diſtance from the things on Earth, than from the things in Heaven; for I fill all that vaſt Fabrick which is divided into thoſe two parts of Heaven and Earth; and he that hath ſuch an infinite Eſſence, cannot be diſtant, cannot be ignorant, nothing can be far from his eyes, ſince every thing is ſo near to his Eſſence.

So that it is an elegant Expreſſion of the Omniſcience of God, and a ſtrong Argument for it. He aſſerts, firſt the Univerſality of his Knowledge; but leſt they ſhould miſtake, and confine his preſence only to Heaven; he adds, That he fills Heaven and Earth. I do not ſee things ſo, as if I were in one place, and the things ſeen in another, as it is with Man; but whatſoever I ſee, I ſee not without my ſelf, becauſe every corner of Heaven and Earth is fill'd by me. He that fills all, muſt needs ſee and know all.

And indeed, Men that queſtion the knowledge of God, would be more convinc'd by the Doctrine of his immediate preſence with them. And this ſeems to be the deſign and manner of Arguing in this place. Nothing is remote from my knowledge, becauſe nothing is diſtant from my preſence.

I fill Heaven and Earth: He doth not ſay, I am in Heaven and Earth, but I fill Heaven and Earth, i.e. * ſay ſome, with my Knowledge; others, with my Authority, or my Power. But,

* Tum perſpicacia, tum efficacia, Grot.

1. The word filling cannot properly be referred to the act of Underſtanding and Will. A preſence by knowledge is to be granted, but to ſay ſuch a preſence fills a place, is an improper Speech. Knowledge is not enough to conſtitute a preſence.

A Man at London knows there is ſuch a City as Paris, and knows many things in it; can he be concluded therefore to be preſent in Paris, or fill any place there, or be preſent with the things he knows there? If I know any thing to be diſtant from me, how can it be preſent with me? For by knowing it to be diſtant, I know it not to be preſent. Beſides, filling Heaven and Earth, is diſtinguiſh'd here from Knowing or Seeing. His preſence is render'd as an Argument to prove his Knowledge. Now a Propoſition, and the proof of that Propoſition, are diſtinct, and not the ſame.

It cannot be imagin'd, that God ſhould prove idem per idem, as we ſay; for what would be the import of the Speech then? I know all things, I ſee all things, becauſe I know and ſee all things *. The Holy Ghoſt here accommodates himſelf to the Capacity of Men; becauſe we know that a Man ſees and knows that which is done, where he is corporally preſent; ſo he proves, that God knows all things that are done in the moſt ſecret Caverns of the heart, becauſe he is every where in Heaven and Earth, as light is every where in the Air, and Air every where in the World. Hence the Schools uſe the term repletive for the preſence of God.

* Suarez.

2. Nor by filling of Heaven and Earth, is meant his Authority and Power. It would be improperly ſaid of a King, that in regard of the Government of his Kingdom, is every where by his Authority, that he fills all the Cities and Countries of his Dominions. [I, do not I fill *?] That [I] notes the Eſſence of God, as diſtinguiſh'd according to our capacity, from the perfections pertaining to his Eſſence; and is in reaſon better referred to the ſubſtance of God, than to thoſe things we conceive as Attributes in him. Beſides, were it meant only of his Authority or Power, the Argument would not run well. I ſee all things, becauſe my Authority and Power fills Heaven and Earth. Power doth not always rightly infer knowledge, no not in a rational Agent. Many things in a Kingdom are done by the Authority of the King, that never arrive to the Knowledge of the King. Many things in us are done by the Power of our Souls, which yet we have not a diſtinct Knowledge of in our Underſtandings. There are many motions in ſleep, by the vertue of the Soul informing the Body, that we have not ſo much as a ſimple knowledge of in our minds. Knowledge is not rightly inferr'd from Power, or Power from Knowledge.

* Amyrald. de Trinitate, p. 57.

By filling Heaven and Earth is meant therefore, a filling it with his Eſſence. No place can be imagin'd, that is deprived of the preſence of God; and therefore when the Scripture any where ſpeaks of the preſence of God, it joyns Heaven and Earth together: He ſo fills them, that there is no place without him. We do not ſay a Veſſel is full, ſo long as there is any ſpace to contain more. Not a part of Heaven, nor a part of Earth, but the whole Heaven, the whole Earth, at one and the ſame time. If he were only in one part of Heaven, or one part of Earth; ay, if there were any part of Heaven, or any part of arth void of him, he could not be ſaid to fill them. I fill Heaven and Earth; not a part of me fills one place, and another part of me fills another; but I, God, fill Heaven and Earth; I am whole God, filling the Heaven; and whole God, filling the Earth. I fill Heaven, and yet fill Earth; I fill Earth, and yet fill Heaven, and fill Heaven and Earth at one and the ſame time. God fills his own works, a Heathen Philoſopher ſaith *.

* Seneca de Benefic. l. 4. cap. 8. Ipſe opus ſuum implet.

Here is then a Deſcription of God's Preſence.

1. By Power; Am I not a God afar off? A God in the extenſion of his Arm.

2. By Knowledge; Shall I not ſee them?

3. By Eſſence; as an undeniable ground for inferring the two former: I fill Heaven and Earth.

Doct. God is eſſentially every where preſent in Heaven and Earth.

If God be, he muſt be ſomewhere; that which is no where, is nothing. Since God is, he is in the World; not in one part of it; for then he were circumſcrib'd by it: if in the World, and only there, tho' it be a great ſpace, he were alſo limited. * Some therefore ſaid, God was every where, and no where. No where, i. e. not bounded by any place, nor receiving from any place any thing for his preſervation or ſuſtainment. He is every where, becauſe no Creature either Body or Spirit, can exclude the preſence of his Eſſence; for he is not only near, but in every thing; * In him we live, and move, and have our Being. Not abſent from any thing, but ſo preſent with them, that they live and move in him, and move more in God, than in the Air or Earth wherein they are; nearer to us than our fleſh to our bones, than the air to our breath; he cannot be far from them that live, and have every motion in him. The Apoſtle doth not ſay, By him, but in him, to ſhew the inwardneſs of his Preſence.

* Acts 17. 28

As Eternity is the perfection whereby he hath neither beginning nor end; Immutability is the perfection whereby he hath neither increaſe, nor diminution: ſo Immenſity or Omnipreſence, is that whereby he hath neither bounds nor limitation. As he is in all time, yet yet ſo as to be above Time; ſo is he in all places, yet ſo as to be above limitation by any place. It was a good expreſſion of a Heathen to illuſtrate this, that God is a Sphere or Circle, whoſe Center is every where, and Circumference no where. His meaning was, that the Eſſence of God was indiviſible; i.e. could not be divided. It cannot be ſaid, here and there the lines of it terminate; 'tis like a line drawn out in infinite ſpaces, that no point can be conceived where its length and breadth ends. The Sea is a vaſt Maſs of Waters; yet to that it is ſaid, Hitherto ſhalt thou go, and no further. But it cannot be ſaid of God's Eſſence, hitherto it reaches, and no further; here it is, and there it is not. 'Tis plain, that God is thus Immenſe, becauſe he is Infinite; we have Reaſon and Scripture to aſſent to it, tho' we cannot conceive it. We know that God is eternal, tho' Eternity is too great to be meaſured by the ſhort line of a created Underſtanding. We cannot conceive the Vaſtneſs and Glory of the Heavens, much leſs that which is ſo great, as to fill Heaven and Earth; yea, * not to be contained in the Heaven of Heavens.

* 1 Kings, 8. v. 27.

Things are ſaid to be preſent, or in a place.

1. Circumſcriptivè, as circumſcribed. This belongs to things that have quantity, as Bodies that are encompaſs'd by that place wherein they are; and a Body fills but one particular ſpace wherein it is, and the ſpace is commenſurate to every part of it, and every Member hath a diſtinct place. The hand is not in the ſame particular ſpace, that the foot or head is.

2. Definitivè, which belongs to Angels and Spirits, which are ſaid to be in a point, yet ſo as that they cannot be ſaid to be in another at the ſame time.

3. Repletivè, filling all places; this belongs only to God: As he is not meaſured by time, ſo he is not limited by place. A Body or Spirit, becauſe finite, fills but one ſpace; God, becauſe infinite, fills all, yet ſo as not to be contained in them, as Wine and Water is in a Veſſel. He is from the height of the Heaven, to the bottom of the Deeps, in every point of the World, and in the whole Circle of it, yet not limited by it, but beyond it.

Now this hath been acknowledged by the wiſeſt in the World.

Some indeed had other Notions of God. The more ignorant ſort of the Jews confin'd him to the Temple *. And God intimates, that they had ſuch a thought when he aſſerts his preſence in Heaven and Earth, in oppoſition to the Temple they built as his Houſe, and the place of his Reſt *: And the Idolaters among them, thought their Gods might be at a diſtance from them, which Elias intimates in the ſcoff he puts upon them *, Cry aloud, for he is a God, meaning Baal; either he is talking, or he is purſuing, or he is in a journey; and they follow his advice, and cried louder, v. 28. Whereby it is evident, they looked not on it as a mock, but as a truth. And the Syrians call'd the God of Iſrael the God of the Hills, as tho' his preſence were fixed there, and not in the Valleys *; and their own Gods in the Valleys, and not in the Mountains; they fancied every God to have a particular Dominion, and preſence in one place, and not in another; and bounded the Territories of their Gods, as they did thoſe of their Princes *. And ſome thought him tied to, and ſhut up in their Temples and Groves wherein they worſhiped him *. Some of them thought God to be confined to Heaven, and therefore ſacrificed upon the higheſt Mountains, that the ſteam might aſcend nearer Heaven, and their Praiſes be heard better in thoſe places which were neareſt to the Habitation of God: But the wiſer Jews acknowledged it; and therefore call'd God Place *, whereby they denoted his Immenſity; he was not contain'd in any place, every part of the World ſubſiſts by him: He was a place to himſelf, greater than any thing made by him. And the wiſer Heathens acknowledged it alſo.

* Plotin. Enead 6. lib. 5. cap. 4.

And there are ſome reſemblances of this in the World, tho' no Creature can fully reſemble God in any one perfection; for then it would not be a Creature, but God. But Air and Light are ſome weak reſemblances of it: Air is in all the ſpaces of the World, in the Pores of all Bodies, in the Bowels of the Earth, and extends it ſelf from the loweſt Earth to the higheſt Regions; and the Heavens themſelves are probably nothing elſe but a refin'd kind of Air; and Light diffuſeth it ſelf through the whole Air, and every part of it is truly Light, as every part of the Air is truly Air; and tho' they ſeem to be mingled together, yet they are diſtinct things, and not of the ſame Eſſence; ſo is the Eſſence of God in the whole World, not by diffuſion as Air or Light; not mixed with any Creature; but remaining diſtinct from the Eſſence of any Created Being. Now when this hath been own'd by Men inſtructed only in the School of Nature, 'tis a greater ſhame to any acquainted with the Scripture to deny it. For the underſtanding of this, there ſhall be ſome Propoſitions premis'd in general.

1. This is negatively to be underſtood. Our knowledge of God is moſt by withdrawing from him, or denying to him, in our conception, any weakneſſes or imperfections in the Creature. As the infiniteneſs of God is a denial of limitation of Being, ſo Immenſity or Omnipreſence, is a denial of limitation of place: And when we ſay, God is totus in every place, we muſt underſtand it thus, That he is not every where by parts, as Bodies are, as Air and Light are; He is every where, i. e. his Nature hath no bounds, he is not tyed to any place, as the Creature is, who when he is preſent in one place, is abſent from another. As no place can be without God, ſo no place can compaſs and contain him.

2. There is an influential Omnipreſence of God.

1. Univerſal with all Creatures. He is preſent with all things by his Authority, becauſe all things are ſubject to him: By his Power, becauſe all things are ſuſtained by him: By his Knowledge, becauſe all things are naked before him. He is preſent in the World, as a King is in all parts of his Kingdom Regally preſent: Providentially preſent with all, ſince his care extends to the meaneſt of his Creatures. His Power reacheth all, and his Knowledge pierceth all.

As every thing in the World was Created by God, ſo every thing in the World is preſerved by God; and ſince Preſervation is not wholly diſtinct from Creation, 'tis neceſſary God ſhould be preſent with every thing while he preſerves it, as well as preſent with it when he created it; Thou preſerveſt Man and Beaſt. * He upholds all things by the Word of his Power. There is a vertue ſuſtaining every Creature, that it may not fall back into that Nothing from whence it was elevated by the Power of God. All thoſe natural Vertues we call the Principles of Operation, are Fountains ſpringing from his Goodneſs and Power; all things are acted and managed by him, as well as preſerved by him; and in this ſenſe God is preſent with all Creatures; for whatſoever acts another, is preſent with that which it acts, by ſending forth ſome vertue and influence, whereby it acts: If free Agents do not only live, but move in him, and by him *, much more are the motions of other natural Agents, by a vertue communicated to them, them, and upheld in them in the time of their acting: This vertual presence of God, is evident to our sense, a presence we feel; his essential presence is evident in our reason. This influential presence may be compar'd to that of the Sun, which tho' at so great a distance from the Earth, is present in the Air and Earth by its Light, and within the Earth by its influence, in concocting those Metals which are in the Bowels of it, without being substantially in either of them. God is thus so intimate with every Creature, that there is not the least particle of any Creature, but the marks of his power and goodness are seen in it, and his goodness doth attend them, and is more swift in its effluxes, than the breaking out of Light from the Sun, which yet are more swift than can be declar'd; but to say he is in the World only by his Vertue, is to acknowledge only the effects of his Power and Wisdom in the World, that his eye sees all, his arm supports all, his goodness nourisheth all, but himself and his essence at a distance from them *? And so the Soul of Man, according to its measure, would have in some kind a more excellent manner of presence in the body, than God, according to the infiniteness of his Being with his Creatures; for that doth not only communicate Life to the Body, but is actually present with it, and spreads its whole Essence through the Body and every Member of it: All grant, that God is efficaciously in every Creek of the World; but some say, he is only substantially in Heaven.

* Zanch.

2. Limited to such Subjects that are capacitated for this or that kind of Presence. Yet it is an Omnipresence, because it is a Presence in all the Subjects capacitated for it; thus there is a special providential Presence of God with some, in assisting them when he sets them on work as his Instruments for some special Service in the World: As with Cyrus *, I will go before thee; and with Nebuchadnezzer, and Alexander, whom he protected and directed to execute his Counsels in the World; such a presence Judas and others ‖ that shall not enjoy his glorious presence, had in the working of Miracles in the World: Besides, * as there is an effective presence of God with all Creatures, because he produced them, and preserves them; so there is an objective presence of God with rational Creatures, because he offers himself to them, to be known and loved by them: He is near to wicked men in the offers of his Grace, ‖ call ye upon him while he is near: Besides, there is a gracious presence of God with his people in whom he dwells, and makes his abode, as in a Temple Consecrated to him by the Graces of the Spirit. * We will come, i.e. the Father and the Son, and make our abode with him. He is present with all by the presence of his Divinity, but only in his Saints by a presence of a gracious Efficacy; he walks in the midst of the golden Candlesticks, and hath dignify'd the congregation of his People with the Title of Jehovah Shammah, * The Lord is there: In Salem is his Tabernacle, and his dwelling place in Sion *. As he filled the Tabernacle, so he doth the Church, with the Signs of his presence; this is not the presence wherewith he fills Heaven and Earth. His Spirit is not bestowed upon all, to reside in their hearts, enlighten their minds, and bedew them with refreshing comforts: When the Apostle speaks of God's being above all, and through all; * Above all in his Majesty, through all in his Providence; he doth not appropriate that, as he doth what follows, and in you all; in you all by a special Grace; as God was specially present with Christ, by the Grace of Union, so he is specially present with his People by the Grace of Regeneration. So there are several manifestations of his presence; he hath a presence of Glory in Heaven, whereby he comforts the Saints; a presence of wrath in Hell, whereby he torments the damned; in Heaven he is a God spreading his beam of Light; in Hell, a God distributing his strokes of Justice; by the one he fills Heaven, by the other he fills Hell; by his Providence and Essence, he fills both Heaven and Earth.

3. There is an Essential presence of God in the World. He is not only every where, by his Power upholding the Creatures, by his Wisdom understanding them, but by his Essence containing them. That any thing is essentially present any where, it hath from God; God is therefore much more present every where, for he cannot give that which he hath not.

1. He is Essentially present in all places *. 'Tis as reasonable to think the Essence of God to be every where, as to be always; Immensity is as rational as Eternity; That indivisible Essence which reaches thro' all times, may as well reach thro' all places: 'Tis more excellent to be always, than to be every where; for to be always in duration is Intrinsical; to be every where is Extrinsick; if the greater belongs to God, why not the less? As all times are a moment to his Eternity, so all places are as a point to his Essence; As he is larger than all time, so he is vaster than all place: The Nations of the World are to him as the dust of the Ballance, or drop of a Bucket *. The Nations are accounted as the small Dust; The Essence of God may well be thought to be present every where, with that which is no more than a grain of Dust to him; and in all those Isles, which if put together, are a very little thing in his hand: Therefore, saith a learned Jew *, If a man were set in the highest Heavens, he would not be nearer to the Essence of God than if he were in the Center of the Earth. Why may not the presence of God in the World be as noble as that of the Soul in the Body, which is generally granted to be essentially in every part of the body of Man. Which is but a little World, and animates every Member by its actual presence, tho' it exerts not the same operation in every part *? The World is less to the Creator, than the Body to the Soul; and needs more the presence of God, than the Body needs the presence of the Soul. That glorious body of the Sun visits every part of the Habitable Earth in 24 hours by its beams; which reaches the Troughs of the lowest Vallies, as well as the Pinacles of the highest Mountains; must we not acknowledge in the Creator of this Sun an infinite greater proportion of presence? Is it not as easie with the Essence of God to over-spread the whole body of Heaven and Earth, as it is for the Sun to pierce and diffuse its self through the whole Air between it and the Earth, and send up its light also as far to the Regions above? Do we not see something like it in Sounds and Voices? Is not the same Sound of a Trumpet, or any other Musical Instrument, at the first breaking out of a Blast, in several places within such a compass, at the same time? Doth not every Ear that hears it, receive alike the whole sound of it? And fragrant Odors scented in several places at the same time, in the same manner; and the Organ proper for Smelling takes in the same, in every person within the compass of it: How far is the noise of Thunder heard alike to every Ear, in places something distant from one another? And do we daily find such a manner of presence in those things of so low a concern, and not imagine a kind of presence of God greater than all those? Is the sound of Thunder, the Voice of God, as it is call'd, every where in such a compass, and shall not the Essence of an Infinite God be much more every where? Those that would confine the Essence of God only to Heaven, and exclude it from the Earth, run into great inconveniencies. It may be demanded, whether he be in one part of the Heavens, or in the whole vast body of them? If in one part of 'em, his Essence is bounded, if he moves from that part, he is mutable, for he changes a place wherein he was, for another wherein he was not. If he be always fixed in one part of the Heavens, such a notion would render him little better than a living Statue *: If he be in the whole Heaven, why cannot his Essence possess a greater space than the whole Heavens which are so vast? How comes he to be confin'd within the compass of that, since the whole Heaven compasseth the Earth? If he be in the whole Heaven, he is in places farther distant one from another, than any part of the Earth can be from from the Heavens; ſince the Earth is like a Center in the midſt of a Circle, it muſt be nearer to every part of the Circle, than ſome parts of the Circle can be to one another: If therefore his Eſſence poſſeſſes the whole Heavens, no reaſon can be render'd why he doth not alſo poſſeſs the Earth, ſince alſo the Earth is but a little point in compariſon of the vaſtneſs of the Heavens: If therefore he be in every part of the Heavens, why not in every part of the Earth?

* Pſal. 129. v. 7,8,9. This Scripture is plain, * Whither ſhall I go from thy Spirit? Or whither ſhall I flie from thy Preſence? If I aſcend up to Heaven, thou art there? If I make my Bed in Hell, behold thou art there; if I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermoſt parts of the Sea, even there ſhall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand ſhall uphold me. If he be in Heaven, Earth, Hell, Sea, he fills all places with his Preſence; his Preſence is here aſſerted in places the moſt diſtant from one another; all the places then between Heaven and Earth are poſſeſſed by his Preſence: 'Tis not meant of his Knowledge, for that the Pſalmiſt had ſpoken of before, *v.*2,3. Thou underſtandeſt my thoughts afar off, thou art acquainted with all my ways. Beſides, Thou art there, not thy Wiſdom or Knowledge; but Thou, thy Eſſence, not only thy Vertue. For having before ſpoken of his Omniſcience, he proves that ſuch Knowledge could not be in God, unleſs he were preſent in his Eſſence in all places, ſo as to be excluded from none: He fills the depths of Hell, the extenſion of the Earth, and the heights of the Heavens. When the Scripture mentions the Power of God only, it expreſſeth it by Hand or Arm; but when it mentions the Spirit of God, and doth not intend the Third Perſon in the Trinity, it ſignifies the Nature and Eſſence of God: And ſo here, when he ſaith, Whither ſhall I go from thy Spirit? He adds exegetically, Whither ſhall I flie from thy preſence, or Heb. face? And the face of God in Scripture ſignifies the Eſſence of God*; Thou canſt not ſee my face, and my face ſhall not be ſeen; the effects of his Power, Wiſdom, Providence, are ſeen, which are his back parts, but not his face: The effects of his Power and Wiſdom are ſeen in the World, but his Eſſence is inviſible; and this the Pſalmiſt elegantly expreſſeth. Had I Wings endued with as much quickneſs as the firſt dawnings of the morning light, or the firſt darts of any Sun-beam that ſpreads its ſelf through the Hemiſphere, and paſſes many Miles in as ſhort a ſpace as I can think a Thought, I ſhould find thy preſence in all places before me, and could not flie out of the infinite compaſs of thy Eſſence.

* Exod. 33. v. 20,23.

2. He is Eſſentially preſent with all Creatures. If he be in all places, it follows that he is with all Creatures in thoſe places; as he is in Heaven, ſo he is with all Angels; as he is in Hell, ſo is he with all Devils; as he is in the Earth and Sea, he is with all Creatures inhabiting thoſe Elements: As his Eſſential preſence was the ground of the firſt Being of things by Creation, ſo it is the ground of the continued Being of things by Conſervation. As his Eſſential Preſence was the Original, ſo it is the ſupport of the exiſtence of all the Creatures. What are all thoſe magnificent expreſſions of his Creative vertue, but Teſtimonies of his Eſſential preſence at the laying the Foundation of the World*? When he meaſured the Waters in the hollow of his hand, meted out Heaven with the Span, and comprehended the duſt of the Earth in a Meaſure, and weighed the Mountains in Scales, and the Hills in a Ballance. He ſets forth the Power and Majeſty of God in the Creation and Preſervation of things, and every expreſſion teſtifies his preſence with them: The Waters that were upon the face of the Earth at firſt, were no more than a drop in the palm of a Mans hand, which in every part is touched by his hand. And thus he is equally preſent with the blackeſt Devils, as well as the brighteſt Angels; with the loweſt Duſt, as well as with the moſt ſparkling Sun. He is equally preſent with the Damned and the Bleſſed, as he is an Infinite Being, but not in regard of his Goodneſs and Grace. He is equally preſent with the good and the bad, with the ſcoffing Athenians, as well as the believing Apoſtles, in regard of his Eſſence, but not in regard of the breathing of his Divine Vertues upon them to make them like himſelf*: He is not far from every one of us; for in him we live, and move, and have our Being. The Apoſtle includes all; he tells them they ſhould ſeek the Lord; the Lord that they were to ſeek, is God eſſentially conſidered: We are indeed to ſeek the Perfections of God, that glitter in his works, but to the end that they ſhould direct us to the ſeeking of God himſelf in his own Nature and Eſſence*: And therefore what follows, In him we live, is to be underſtood not of his Power and Goodneſs, Perfections of his Nature, diſtinguiſh'd according to our manner of conception, from his Eſſence, but of the Eſſential Preſence of God with his Creatures. If he had meant it of his efficacy in preſerving us, it had not been any proof of his nearneſs to us. Who would go about to prove the body or ſubſtance of the Sun to be near us, becauſe it doth warm and enlighten us, when our ſenſe evidenceth the diſtance of it? We live in the beams of the Sun, but we cannot be ſaid to live in the Sun, which is ſo far diſtant from us. The expreſſion ſeems to be more emphatical than to intend any leſs than his Eſſential Preſence: But we live in him not only as the efficient cauſe of our Life, but as the foundation, ſuſtaining our lives and motions, as if he were like Air, diffuſed round about us. And we move in him, as Auſtin ſaith, as a Spunge in the Sea, not containing him, but being contained by him: He compaſſeth all, is incompaſs'd by none; he fills all, is comprehended by none. The Creator contains the World, the World contains not the Creator: As the hollow of the hand contains the water, the water in the hollow of the hand contains not the hand; and therefore ſome have choſe to ſay rather, That the World is in God, it lives and moves in him, than that God is in the World. If all things thus live and move in him, then he is preſent with every thing that hath Life and Motion; and as long as the Devils and Damned have life and motion, and being, ſo long is he with them; for whatſoever lives and moves, lives and moves in him.

* Iſa. 40.12.

* Acts 17.7.

* Amyrald. de Trinit.

But now this Eſſential Preſence is,

1. Without any mixture. I fill Heaven and Earth, not, I am mixed with Heaven and Earth; his Eſſence is not mixed with the Creatures; it remains intire in its ſelf. The Spunge retains the nature of a Spunge, tho' incompaſs'd by the Sea, and moving in it; and the Sea ſtill retains its own nature. God is moſt ſimple; his Eſſence therefore is not mixed with any thing. The light of the Sun is preſent with the air, but not mixed with it, it remains light, and the air remains air; the light of the Sun is diffuſed through all the Hemiſphere, it pierceth all tranſparent bodies, it ſeems to mix it ſelf with all things, yet remains unmixed and undivided; the light remains light, and the air remains air; the air is not light tho' it be enlightened. Or, take this ſimilitude; When many Candles are lighted up in a Room, the light is all together, yet not mixed with one another; every Candle hath a particular light belonging to it, which may be ſeparated in a moment, by removing one Candle from another; but if they were mixed they could not be ſeparated, at leaſt ſo eaſily. God is not formally one with the World, or with any Creature in the World by his Preſence in it: Nor can any Creature in the World, no, not the Soul of Man, or an Angel, come to be Eſſentially one with God, tho' God be Eſſentially preſent with it.

2. The Eſſential Preſence is without any diviſion of himſelf. I fill Heaven and Earth, not part in Heaven, and part in Earth; I fill one as well as the other: One part of his Eſſence is not in one place, and another part of his Eſſence in another place, he would then be changeable; for that part of his Eſſence which were now in this place, he might alter it to another, and place that part of his Eſſence which were in another ther place, to this; but he is undivided every where. As his Eternity is one indivisible point, tho' in our conception we divide it into past, present, and to come. So the whole World is as a point to him, in regard of place, as before was said; 'tis as a small dust, and grain of dust: 'Tis impossible that one part of his Essence can be separated from another, for he is not a Body, to have one part separable from another. The light of the Sun cannot be cut into parts, it cannot be shut into any place and kept there, 'tis intire in every place; shall not God, who gives the light that power, be much more present himself? Whatsoever hath parts is finite, but God is infinite, therefore hath no parts of his Essence. Besides, if there were such a division of his Being, he would not be the most simple and uncompounded Being, but would be made up of various parts; he would not be a Spirit, for parts are evidences of composition; and it could not be said that God is here or there, but only a part of God here, and a part of God there. But he fills Heaven and Earth, he is as much a God in the Earth beneath, as in Heaven above *; intirely in all places, not by scraps and fragments of his Essence.

*Deut. 4. 39

3. This Essential Presence is not by Multiplication. For that which is infinite cannot multiply it self, or make it self more or greater than it was.

4. This Essential Presence is not by extension or diffusion. As a piece of Gold may be beaten out to cover a large compass of ground; no, if God should create millions of Worlds, he would be in them all, not by stretching out his Being, but by the Infiniteness of his Being; not by a new growth of his Being, but by the same Essence he had from Eternity: Upon the same reasons mention'd before, his Simplicity and Indivisibility.

5. But totally. There is no space, not the least, wherein God is not wholly according to his Essence, and wherein his whole substance doth not exist; not a part of Heaven can be design'd wherein the Creator is not wholly; as he is in one part of Heaven, he is in every part of Heaven. Some kind of resemblance we may have from the water of the Sea, which fills the great space of the World, and is diffused thro' all; yet the Essence of Water is in every drop of Water in the Sea, as much as the whole; and the same quality of Water, tho' it comes short in quantity; and why shall we not allow God a nobler way of Presence without diffusion, as is in that? Or take this resemblance, since God likens himself to Light in the Scripture*, he covereth himself with Light; A Chrystal Globe hung up in the Air hath Light all about it, all within it, every part is pierced by it; wherever you see the Chrystal you see the Light; the light in one part of the Chrystal cannot be distinguish'd from the light in the other part; and the whole Essence of Light is in every part; and shall not God be as much present with his Creatures, as one Creature can be with another*? God is totally every where by his own simple substance.

*Psal. 104. 2
1 John. 1. 5. God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.

*Bernard.

Proposition 4. God is present beyond the World. He is within and above all places, tho' places should be infinite in number; as he was before and beyond all Time, so he is above and beyond all Place; being from Eternity before any real time, he must also be without as well as within any real space; if God were only confin'd to the World, he would be no more infinite in his Essence than the World is in quantity; as a moment cannot be conceived from Eternity, wherein God was not in Being, so a space cannot be conceived in the mind of Man, wherein God is not present; he is not contain'd in the World nor in the Heavens. * But will God indeed dwell on the Earth? Behold the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain Thee. Solomon wonders that God should appoint a Temple to be erected to him upon the Earth, when he is not contained in the vast Circuit of the Heavens; his Essence is not straitned in the limits of any Created work; he is not contained in the Heavens, i.e. in the manner that he is there; but he is there in his Essence, and therefore cannot be contain'd there in his Essence. If it should be meant only of his Power and Providence, it would conclude also for his Essence; if his Power and Providence were infinite, his Essence must be so too; for the infiniteness of his Essence is the ground of the infiniteness of his Power: It can never enter into any thought, that a finite Essence can have an infinite Power, and that an infinite Power can be without an infinite Essence; it cannot be meant of his Providence, as if Solomon should say, the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain thy Providence; for naming the Heaven of Heavens, that which encircles and bounds the other parts of the World, he could not suppose a Providence to be exercis'd where there was no object to exercise it about; as no Creature is mention'd to be beyond the uttermost Heaven, which he calls here the Heaven of Heavens: Besides, to understand it of his Providence, doth not consist with Solomon's admiration: He wonders that God, that hath so immense an Essence, should dwell in a Temple made with hands; he could not so much wonder at his Providence in those things that immediately concern his Worship. Solomon plainly asserts this of God, That he was so far from being bounded within the rich Wall of the Temple, which with so much cost he had fram'd for the Glory of his Name, that the richer Palace of the Heaven of Heavens could not contain him; 'tis true, it could not contain his Power and Wisdom, because his Wisdom could contrive other kind of Worlds, and his Power erect them: But doth the meaning of that wise King reach no farther than this? Will the Power and Wisdom of God reside on the Earth? He was too wise to ask such a question, since every object that his eyes met with in the World resolv'd him, That the Wisdom and Power of God dwelt upon the Earth, and glitter'd in every thing he had created; and Reason would assure him, That the Power that had fram'd this World, was able to frame many more; but Solomon considering the immensity of Gods Essence, wonders that God should order a House to be built for him, as if he wanted Roofs, and Coverings, and Habitation, as bodily Creatures do. Will God indeed dwell in a Temple, who hath an Essence so immense as not to be contain'd in the Heaven of Heavens? 'tis not the Heaven of Heavens that can contain Him, his substance. Here he asserts the immensity of his Essence, and his Presence not only in the Heaven, but beyond the Heavens; he that is not contain'd in the Heavens, as a Man is in a Chamber, is without, and above, and beyond the Heavens; 'tis not said they do not contain him, but it is impossible they should contain him; they cannot contain him. 'Tis impossible then but that he should be above them; he that is without the compass of the World, is not bounded by the limits of the VVorld; as his Power is not limited by the things he hath made, but can create innumerable VVorlds, so can his Essence be in innumerable Spaces; for as he hath power enough to make more VVorlds, so he hath Essence enough to fill them, and therefore cannot be confin'd to what he hath already created; innumerable VVorlds cannot be a sufficient place to contain God, he can only be a sufficient place to himself*; He that was before the VVorld and Place, and all things, was to himself a VVorld, a Place, and every thing*: He is really out of the VVorld in himself, as he was in himself before the Creation of the VVorld: As because God was before the Foundation of the VVorld, we conclude his Eternity; so because he is without the bounds of the VVorld, we conclude his Immensity, and from thence his Omnipresence. The VVorld cannot be said to contain him, since it was created by him; it cannot contain him now, who was contained by nothing before the VVorld was: As there was no place to contain him before the VVorld was, there can be no place to contain him since the VVorld was.

* 1 Kings, 8. 27.

* Petav.

* Maccov. loc. commun. c. 19. p. 153.

God might create more VVorlds circular and round as this, and those could not be so contiguous, but some spaces would be left between; as take 3 round Balls, lay them as close as you can to one another, there will be some spaces between; none would say but God would be in these spaces, as well as in the VVorld he had created, ted, tho' there were nothing real and poſitive in thoſe ſpaces: Why ſhould we then exclude God from thoſe imaginary ſpaces without the World? God might alſo create many Worlds, and ſeparate them by diſtances, that they might not touch one another, but be at a great diſtance from one another; and would not God fill them as well as he doth this? If ſo, he muſt alſo fill the ſpaces between them: For if he were in all thoſe Worlds, and not in the ſpaces between thoſe Worlds, his Eſſence would be divided; there would be gaps in it, his Eſſence would be cut into parts, and the diſtance between every part of his Eſſence would be as great as the ſpace between each World: The Eſſence of God may be conceived then well enough to be in all thoſe infinite ſpaces where he can erect new Worlds.

I ſhall give one place more to prove both theſe Propoſitions, viz. That God is Eſſentially in every part of the World, and Eſſentially above ours without the World.

*Iſa.66.1. * The Heaven is my Throne, and the Earth is my Footſtool. He is Eſſentially in every part of the World; he is in Heaven and Earth at the ſame time; as a Man is upon his Throne and his Footſtool. God deſcribes himſelf in a human ſhape, accommodated to our capacity; as if he had his head in Heaven, and his feet on Earth; doth not his Eſſence then fill all intermediate ſpaces between Heaven and Earth? As when the head of a Man is in the upper part of a Room, and his feet upon the floor, his body fills up the ſpace between the head and his feet; this is meant of the Eſſence of God; 'tis a ſimilitude drawn from Kings ſitting upon the Throne, and not their Power and Authority, but the feet of their perſons are ſupported by the Footſtool; ſo here it is not meant only of the Perfections of God, but the Eſſence of God: Beſides, God ſeems to tax them with an erroneous conceit they had, as tho' his Eſſence were in the Temple, and not in any part of the World; therefore God makes an oppoſition between Heaven and Earth, and the Temple; Where is the Houſe that you built unto me? and where is the place of my Reſt? Had he underſtood it only of his Providence, it had not been any thing againſt their miſtake; for they granted his Providence to be not only in the Temple, but in all parts of the VVorld. Where is the Houſe that you build to me? to me, not to my Power or Providence, but think to include Me within thoſe VValls.

Again, It ſhews God to be above the Heavens, if the Heavens be his Throne; he ſits upon them, and is above them as Kings are above the Thrones on which they ſit; ſo it cannot be meant of his Providence, becauſe no Creature being without the Sphere of the Heavens, there is nothing of the Power and the Providence of God viſible there; for there is nothing for him to employ his Providence about. For Providence ſuppoſeth a Creature in actual Being; It muſt be therefore meant of his Eſſence, which is above the VVorld, and in the VVorld.

And the like proof you may ſee, Job 11.7,8. 'Tis as high as heaven, what canſt thou do? deeper than Hell, what canſt thou know? the meaſure thereof is longer than the Earth, and broader than the Sea. VVhere he intends the unſearchableneſs of Gods wiſdom, but proves it by the infiniteneſs of his Eſſence, Hebr. He is the height of the Heavens, he is the top of all the Heavens; ſo that when you have begun at the loweſt part, and traced him thro' all the Creatures, you will find his Eſſence filling all the Creatures to be at the top of the VVorld, and infinitely beyond it.

5. Fifth Propoſition. This is the Property of God, incommunicable to any Creature. As no Creature can be eternal and immutable, ſo no Creature can be immenſe, becauſe it cannot be infinite; nothing can be of an innite nature, and therefore nothing of an immenſe preſence but God: It cannot be communicated to the human nature of Chriſt, tho' in Union with the Divine *: ſome indeed argue, that Chriſt, in regard of his human Nature, is every where, becauſe he ſits at the right hand of God; and the right hand of God is every where: His ſitting at the right hand of God ſignifies his Exaltation, and cannot with any reaſon be extended to ſuch a kind of arguing; The hearts of Kings are in the hand of God; are the hearts of Kings every where, becauſe God's hand is every where? The Souls of the Righteous are in the hand of God, is the Soul therefore of every Righteous Man every where in the VVorld? The right hand of God is from Eternity, is the Humanity of Chriſt therefore from Eternity, becauſe it ſits at the right hand of God? The right hand of God made the world, did the Humanity of Chriſt therefore make Heaven and Earth? The Humanity of Chriſt muſt then be confounded with his Divinity; be the ſame with it, not united to it. All Creatures are diſtinct from their Creator, and cannot inherit the Properties eſſential to his Nature; as Eternity, Immenſity, Immutability, Omnipreſence, Omniſcience; no Angel, no Soul, no Creature can be in all places at once, before they can be ſo, they muſt be Immenſe, and ſo muſt ceaſe to be Creatures, and commence God; this is impoſſible.

*Rivet. in Pſal. p. 301. Col. 2.

II Reaſons to prove God's Eſſential Preſence.

1*ſt.* Reaſon. Becauſe he is infinite. As he is infinite, he is every where; as he is ſimple, his whole Eſſence is every where; for in regard of his infiniteneſs, he hath no bounds; in regard of his ſimplicity, he hath no parts: And therefore thoſe that deny God's Omnipreſence, tho' they pretend to own him Infinite, muſt really conceive him Finite.

1. God is infinite in his Perfections. None can ſet bounds to terminate the greatneſs and excellency of God *. His greatneſs is unſearchable, Sept. οὐκ ἔστι πέρας * Pſ. 145.3. there is no end, no limitation; what hath no end is infinite; his Power is infinite *, which doth great things * Job 5.9. and unſearchable, no end of thoſe things he is able to do; His VViſdom infinite *: He underſtands all things * Pſ. 147.5. paſt, preſent, and to come; what is already made, what is poſſible to be made; his duration infinite *. The *Job 36.26. number of his Years cannot be ſearched out, ἀπέρεισιν. To make a finite thing of nothing, is an argument of an infinite Vertue; Infinite power can only extract ſomething out of the barren Womb of nothing, but all things were drawn forth by the Word of God, the Heavens and all the Hoſt of them; The Sun, Moon, Stars, the rich embelliſhments of the World appear'd in Being, at the breath of his Mouth *, the Author therefore muſt be infinite: * Pſal. 33.6. And ſince nothing is the cauſe of God, or of any Perfection in him; ſince he derives not his Being, or the leaſt ſpark of his glorious Nature, from any thing without him, he cannot be limited in any part of his nature by any thing without him; and indeed the infiniteneſs of his power, and his other perfections, is aſſerted by the Prophet, when he tells us, that the Nations are as a drop of a Bucket, or the duſt of the Ballance, and leſs than nothing and vanity *, they are all ſo in regard of his Power, * Iſa. 40. Wiſdom, &c. Conceive what a little thing a grain of v. 15. 17. duſt or ſand is, to all the duſt that may be made by the rubbiſh of a Houſe; what a little thing the heap of the rubbiſh of a Houſe, is to the vaſt heap of the rubbiſh of a whole City; ſuch a one as London; how little that alſo would be to the duſt of a whole Empire; how inconſiderable that alſo to the duſt of one quarter of the World, Europe or Aſia; how much leſs that ſtill to the duſt of the whole World; the whole World is compos'd of an unconceivable number of Atoms, and the Sea of an unconceivable number of drops; Now what a little grain of duſt is in compariſon of the duſt of the whole World; a drop of water from the Sea, to all the drops remaining in the Sea, That is the whole World to God. Conceive it ſtill leſs, a meer nothing, yet is it all leſs than this, in compariſon of God; there can be nothing more magnificently expreſſive of the infiniteneſs of God to a human conception, than this expreſſion of God himſelf in the Prophet.

In the Perfection of a Creature, ſomething ſtill may be thought greater to be added to it; But God containing all perfections in himſelf formally, if they be meer perfections; and eminently, if they be but perfections in the Creature mixed with imperfection; nothing can be thought greater, and therefore every one of them is infinite

2. If his Perfections be infinite, his Eſſence muſt be ſo. How God can have infinite Perfections, and a finite Eſſence is unconceivable by a Human or Angelical underſtanding; an infinite Power, an infinite Wiſdom, an infinite Duration, muſt needs ſpeak an infinite Eſſence; ſince the infiniteneſs of his Attributes is grounded upon the infiniteneſs of his Eſſence: To own infinite perfections in a finite Subject, is contradictory. The manner of acting by his Power, and knowing by his Wiſdom, cannot exceed the manner of being by his Eſſence. His Perfections flow from his Eſſence, and the principle muſt be of the ſame rank with what flows from it; and if we conceive his Eſſence to be the cauſe of his perfections; 'tis utterly impoſſible that an infinite effect ſhould ariſe from a finite cauſe, but indeed his perfections are his Eſſence, for tho' we conceive the Eſſence of God as the ſubject, and the Attributes of God as faculties and qualities in that ſubject according to our weak model, who cannot conceive of an infinite God without ſome manner of likeneſs to our ſelves; who find Underſtanding, and Will, and Power in us diſtinct from our ſubſtance; yet truly and really there is no diſtinction between his Eſſence and Attributes; one is inſeparable from the other; his Power and Wiſdom are his Eſſence; and therefore to maintain God infinite in the one, and finite in the other, is to make a monſtrous God, and have an unreaſonable notion of the Deity; for there would be the greateſt diſproportion in his nature, ſince there is no greater diſproportion can poſſibly be between one thing and another, than there is between finite and infinite: God muſt not only then be compounded, but have parts of the greateſt diſtance from one another in nature; but God being the moſt ſimple Being without the leaſt compoſition, both muſt be equally infinite: If then his Eſſence be not infinite, his Power and Wiſdom cannot be infinite, which is both againſt Scripture and Reaſon.

Again, how ſhould his Eſſence be finite, and his Perfections be infinite, ſince nothing out of himſelf gave them either the one or the other?

* Amyrald. de Trinitat. p. 89. * Again, either the Eſſence can be infinite, or it cannot; if it cannot, there muſt be ſome cauſe of that impoſſibility; that can be nothing without him; becauſe nothing without him can be as powerful as himſelf, much leſs too powerful for him; nothing within him can be an Enemy to his higheſt perfection; ſince he is neceſſarily what he is, he muſt be neceſſarily the moſt perfect Being, and therefore neceſſarily infinite; ſince to be ſomething infinitely, is a greater perfection than to be ſomething finitely *; if he can be infinite, he is infinite; otherwiſe he could be greater than he is, and ſo more bleſſed and more perfect than he is, which is impoſſible; for being the moſt perfect Being, to whom nothing can be added, he muſt needs be infinite.

* Deus eſt actus purus & nullam habet potentiam paſſivam.

If therefore God have an infinite Eſſence, he hath an infinite Preſence. An infinite Eſſence cannot be contained in a finite place; as thoſe things which are finite have bounded ſpace, wherein they are; ſo that which is infinite hath an unbounded ſpace; for as finiteneſs ſpeaks limitedneſs; ſo infiniteneſs ſpeaks unboundedneſs; and if we grant to God an infinite duration, there is no difficulty in acknowledging an infinite preſence: Indeed the infiniteneſs of God is a property belonging to him in regard of time and place; he is bounded by no place, and limited to no time.

Again, Infinite Eſſence may as well be every where, as infinite power reach every thing; it may as well be preſent with every Being, as infinite power in its working may be preſent with nothing to bring it into Being. Where God works by his Power he is preſent in his Eſſence; becauſe his Power and his Eſſence cannot be ſeparated; and therefore his Power, Wiſdom, Goodneſs, cannot be any where, where his Eſſence is not: His Eſſence cannot be ſever'd from his Power, nor his Power from his Eſſence; for the Power of God is nothing but God acting, and the Wiſdom of God nothing but God knowing. As the power of God is always, ſo is his Eſſence; as the power of God is every where, ſo is his Eſſence; whatſoever God is, he is always, and every where: To confine him to a place, is to meaſure his Eſſence; as to confine his actions, is to limit his power; his Eſſence being no leſs infinite than his power and his wiſdom, can be no more bounded than his power and wiſdom; but they are not ſeparable from his Eſſence, yea they are his Eſſence; if God did not fill the whole World, he would be determin'd to ſome place, and excluded from others; and ſo his ſubſtance would have bounds and limits, and then ſomething might be conceived greater than God; for we may conceive that a Creature may be made by God of ſo vaſt a greatneſs as to fill the whole World; for the power of God is able to make a body that ſhould take up the whole ſpace between Heaven and Earth, and reach to every corner of it, but nothing can be conceived by any Creature greater than God; he exceeds all things, and is exceeded by none; God therefore cannot be included in Heaven, nor included in the Earth; cannot be contained in either of them; for if we ſhould imagine them vaſter than they are, yet ſtill they would be finite; and if his Eſſence were contain'd in them, it could be no more infinite than the World which contains it; As water is not of a larger compaſs than the Veſſel which contains it. If the Eſſence of God were limited either in the Heavens or Earth, it muſt needs be finite, as the Heavens and Earth are; But there is no proportion between finite and infinite; God therefore cannot be contain'd in them: If there were an infinite body, that muſt be every where; certainly then an infinite Spirit muſt be every where: Unleſs we will account him finite, we can render no reaſon why he ſhould not be in one Creature as well as in another; if he be in Heaven, which is his Creature, why can he not be in the Earth, which is as well his Creature as the Heavens.

2 Reaſon. Becauſe of the continual operation of God in the World. This was one reaſon made the Heathen believe that there was an infinite Spirit in the vaſt body of the World, acting in every thing, and producing thoſe admirable motions which we ſee every where in Nature: The cauſe which acts in the moſt perfect manner, is alſo in the moſt perfect manner preſent with its effects.

God preſerves all, and therefore is in all. The Apoſtle thought it a good induction *; He is not far from us: For in him we live. For being as much as becauſe, ſhews that from his operation he concluded his real preſence with all: 'Tis not his vertue is not far from every one of us; but He, his ſubſtance, himſelf; for none that acknowledge a God, will deny the abſence of the vertue of God from any part of the World. He works in every thing, every thing lives and works in him; therefore he is preſent with all *: Or rather if things live, they are in God, who gives them life. If things live, God is in them, and gives 'em life: If things move, God is in them, and gives them motion: If things have any Being, God is in them, and gives them Being; if God withdraws himſelf, they preſently loſe their Being; and therefore ſome have compar'd the Creature to the impreſſion of a Seal upon the Wafer, that cannot be preſerved but by the Preſence of the Seal. As his preſence was actual with what he created, ſo his preſence is actual with what he preſerves, ſince Creation and Preſervation do ſo little differ; if God creates things by his eſſential Preſence, by the ſame he ſupports them; if his ſubſtance cannot be disjoyn'd from his preſerving power, his Power and Wiſdom cannot be ſeparated from his Eſſence; where there are the marks of the one, there is the preſence of the other; for it is by his Eſſence that he is powerful and wiſe; no Man can diſtinguiſh the one from the other in a ſimple Being: God doth not preſerve and act things by a vertue diffus'd from him. It may be demanded, whether that vertue be diſtinct from God? If it be not, 'tis then the Eſſence of God; if it be diſtinct, 'tis a Creature, and then it may be ask'd how that vertue, which preſerves other things, is preſerved it ſelf? it muſt be ultimately reſolv'd into the Eſſence of God, or elſe there muſt be a running in infinitum: or elſe, * is that vertue of God a ſubſtance or not? Is it endued with underſtanding or not? If it hath underſtanding, how doth it differ from God? If it wants underſtanding, can any imagine that the ſupport of the World, the guidance of all Creatures, the wonders of Nature can be wrought, preſerved, manag'd by a vertue that hath nothing of underſtanding in it? If it be not a ſubſtance, it can much leſs be able to produce ſuch excellent Operations, as the preſerving all the kinds of things in the World, and ordering them to perform ſuch excellent ends; this vertue is therefore God himſelf, the infinite Power and Wiſdom of God; and therefore whereſoever the effects of theſe are ſeen in the World, God is eſſentially preſent; ſome Creatures indeed act at a diſtance by a vertue diffus'd; but ſuch a manner of acting comes from a limitedneſs of Nature, that ſuch a Nature cannot be every where preſent, and extend its ſubſtance to all parts; To act by a vertue, ſpeaks the Subject finite, and it is a part of indigence: Kings act in their Kingdoms by Miniſters and Meſſengers, becauſe they cannot act otherwiſe; but God being infinitely perfect, works all things in all immediately *; Illumination, Sanctification, Grace, &c. are the immediate Works of God in the heart, and immediate Agents are preſent with what they do; 'tis an Argument of the greater Perfection of a Being, to know things immediately, which are done in ſeveral places, than to know them at the ſecond hand by Inſtruments: 'tis no leſs a Perfection to be every where, rather than to be tied to one place of action; and to act in other places by Inſtruments, for want of a Power to act immediately it ſelf: God indeed acts by means and ſecond cauſes in his providential diſpenſations in the World, but this is not out of any defect of power to work all immediately himſelf; but he thereby accommodates his way of acting to the nature of the Creature, and the order of things which he hath ſettled in the World; And when he works by means, he acts with thoſe means, in thoſe means, ſuſtains their faculties and vertues in them, concurs with them by his power; ſo that God's acting by means, doth rather ſtrengthen his Eſſential preſence than weaken it; ſince there is a neceſſary dependance of the Creatures upon the Creator, in their Being and Acting; and what they are, they are by the power of God; what they act, they act in the power of God, concurring with them; they have their Motion in him as well as their Being; and where the power of God is, his Eſſence is, becauſe they are inſeparable; and ſo this Omnipreſence ariſeth from the ſimplicity of the nature of God; the more vaſt any thing is, the leſs confin'd. All that will acknowledge God ſo great, as to be able to work all things by his Will, without an Eſſential preſence, cannot imagine him upon the ſame reaſon, ſo little as to be contain'd in, & bounded by any place.

*1 Cor. 12. v. 6.

3 Reaſon. Becauſe of his Supream Perfection.

No Perfection is wanting to God; but an unbounded Eſſence is a perfection; a limited one is an imperfection. Tho' it be a Perfection in a Man to be Wiſe, yet it is an Imperfection that his Wiſdom cannot rule all the things that concern him; tho' it be a perfection to be preſent in a place where his affairs lie, yet is it his imperfection that he cannot be preſent every where, in the midſt of all his concerns; if any Man could be ſo, it would be univerſally own'd as a prime Perfection in him above others; is that which would be a Perfection in Man, to be deny'd to God *? As that which hath life, is more perfect than that which hath not life; and that which hath ſenſe is more perfect than that which hath only life, as the Plants have; and what hath reaſon, is more perfect than that which hath only life and ſenſe, as the Beaſts have; ſo what is every where, is more perfect than that which is bounded in ſome narrow confines; if a power of motion be more excellent than to be Bed-rid; and ſwiftneſs in a Creature, be a more excellent endowment than to be ſlow and Snail like; Then to be every where without motion, is unconceivably a greater excellency than to be every where ſucceſſively by motion. God ſets forth his readineſs to help his People and puniſh his Enemies; or his Omnipreſence, by ſwiftneſs, or flying upon the Wings of the Wind *: The Wind is in every part of the Air, where it blows; it cannot be ſaid that it is in this or that point of the Air where you feel it, ſo as to exclude it from another part of the Air where you are not; it ſeems to poſſeſs all at once.

*Amyrald. de Trinitat. p. 74, 75.

* Pſ. 18. 10.

If the Divine Eſſence had any bounds of place, it would be imperfect, as well as if it had bounds of time; where any thing hath limitation, it hath ſome defect in Being; and therefore if God were confined or concluded, he would be as good as nothing in regard of infiniteneſs: Whence ſhould this reſtraint ariſe? There is no Power above him to reſtrain him to a certain ſpace; if ſo, then he would not be God, but that power which reſtrained him would be God: Not from his own nature, for the being every where, implies no contradiction to his nature; if his own Nature determin'd him to a certain place, then if he removed from that place, he would act againſt his Nature; to conceive any ſuch thing of God, is highly abſurd. It cannot be thought God ſhould voluntarily impoſe any ſuch reſtraint or confinement upon himſelf; this would be to deny himſelf a perfection he might have; if God have not this perfection, it is either becauſe it is inconſiſtent with his nature; or becauſe he cannot have it, or, becauſe he will not. The former cannot be; for if he hath impreſt upon Air and Light a reſemblance of his excellency, to diffuſe themſelves and fill ſo vaſt a ſpace; is ſuch an excellency inconſiſtent with the Creator more than the Creature? Whatſoever perfection the Creature hath, is eminently in God. * Underſtand, O ye brutiſh among the people; and ye fools when will you be wiſe? He that planted the ear, ſhall he not hear? He that formed the eye, ſhall he not ſee? He that teacheth man knowledge, ſhall not he know? By the ſame reaſon he that hath given ſuch a Power to thoſe Creatures, Air and Light, ſhall not he be much more filling all ſpaces of the World? 'Tis ſo clear a Rule, that the Pſalmiſt fixes a folly and brutiſhneſs upon thoſe that deny it; 'tis not therefore inconſiſtent with his nature, it were not then a Perfection, but an Imperfection; but whatſoever is an excellency in Creatures, cannot in a way of eminency be an imperfection in God; if it be then a Perfection, and God want it, 'tis becauſe he cannot have it; Where then is his Power? How can he be then the Fountain of his own Being? If he will not, where is his love to his own Nature and Glory? Since no Creature would deny that to it ſelf which it can have, and is an excellency to it; God therefore hath not only a Power or fitneſs to be every where, but he is actually every where.

* Pſal. 94. v. 8, 9.

4 Reaſon. Becauſe of his Immutability.

If God did not fill all the ſpaces of Heaven and Earth, but only poſſeſs one, yet it muſt be acknowledg'd that God hath a Power to move himſelf to another: It were abſurd to fix God in a part of the Heavens, like a Star in an Orb, without a power of motion to another place. If he be therefore eſſentially in Heaven, may he not be upon the Earth if he pleaſe, and transfer his Subſtance from one place to another? To ſay he cannot, is to deny him a Perfection which he hath beſtow'd upon his Creatures; the Angels his Meſſengers, are ſometimes in Heaven, ſometimes on the Earth; the Eagles, meaner Creatures, are ſometimes in the Air out of ſight, ſometimes upon the Earth. If he doth move therefore, and recede from one place, and ſettle in another, doth he not declare himſelf mutable by changing places? by being where he was not before, and in not being where he was before? He would not fill Heaven and Earth at once, but ſucceſſively; no man can be ſaid to fill a Room, that moves from one part of a Room to another; if therefore any in their imaginations, ſtake God to the Heavens, they render him leſs than his Creatures: If they allow him a power of motion from one place to another, they conceive him changeable; and in either of them they own him no greater than a finite and limited Being; limited to Heaven, if they fix him there; limited to that ſpace to which they imagine him to move.

5 Reaſon. Becauſe of his Omnipotency.

The Almightineſs of God is a Notion ſettled in the minds of all, That God can do whatſoever he pleaſes, every thing that is not againſt the purity of his Nature, and doth not imply a contradiction in its ſelf; he can therefore create Millions of Worlds greater than this; and Millions of Heavens greater than this Heaven he hath already created; If ſo, he is then in unconceivable ſpaces beyond this World, for his Eſſence is not leſs and narrower than his Power; and his Power is not to be thought of a further extent than his Eſſence; he cannot be excluded ded therefore from those vast spaces where his Power may fix those Worlds if he please; if so, 'tis no wonder that he should fill this World; and there is no reason to exclude God from the narrow space of this World, that is not contain'd in infinite spaces beyond the World. God is where soever he hath a Power to act, but he hath a power to act every where in the World, every where out of the World; he is therefore every where in the World, every where out of the World. Before this World was made, he had a Power to make it in the space where now it stands; was he not then unlimitedly where the World now is, before the World received a Being by his powerful Word? Why should he not then be in every part of the World now? Can it be thought that God, who was Immense before, should, after he had created the World, contract himself to the limits of one of his Creatures, and tie himself to a particular place of his own Creation, and be less after his Creation than he was before?

This might also be prosecuted by an Argument from his Eternity. What is eternal in duration, is immense in essence, the same reason which renders him Eternal, renders him Immense: That which proves him to be always, will prove him to be every where.

The third thing is, Propositions for the further clearing this Doctrine from any exceptions.

1. This Truth is not weakned by the expressions in Scripture, where God is said to dwell in Heaven, and in the Temple.

1. He is indeed said to sit in Heaven *, and to dwell on high *; but he is no where said to dwell only in the Heavens, as confin'd to them. 'Tis the Court of his Majestical presence, but not the Prison of his Essence. For when we are told, that the Heaven is his Throne, we are told with the same breath, that the Earth is his Footstool *. He dwells on high in regard of the excellency of his Nature; but he is in all places in regard of the diffusion of his presence. The Soul is essentially in all parts of the body, but it doth not exert the same operations in all; the more noble discoveries of it are in the Head and Heart: In the Head, where it exerciseth the chiefest senses for the enriching the understanding. In the Heart, where it vitally resides, and communicates life and motion to the rest of the body. It doth not understand with the foot or toe, tho' it be in all parts of the body it informs. And so God may be said to dwell in Heaven, in regard of the more excellent and majestick representation of himself, both to the Creatures that inhabit the place, as Angels and blessed Spirits; and also in those marks of his greatness which he hath planted there, those spiritual natures which have a nobler stamp of God upon them, and those excellent bodies, as Sun and Stars, which as so many Tapers light us to behold his glory *, and astonish the minds of Men when they gaze upon them. 'Tis his Court, where he hath the most solemn Worship from his Creatures, all his Courtiers attending there with a pure love, and glowing zeal. He reigns there in a special manner, without any opposition to his Government; 'tis therefore call'd his holy dwelling place *; The Earth hath not that title, since sin cast a stain, and a ruining curse upon it. The Earth is not his Throne, because his government is oppos'd. But Heaven is none of Satans Precinct, and the Rule of God is uncontradicted by the Inhabitants of it. 'Tis from thence also he hath given the greatest discoveries of himself: Thence he sends the Angels his Messengers, his Son upon Redemption, his Spirit for Sanctification. From Heaven his gifts drop down upon our heads, and his grace upon our hearts *. From thence the chiefest blessings of Earth descend. The motions of the Heavens fatten the Earth; and the heavenly bodies are but Stewards to the earthly comforts for Man by their influence. Heaven is the richest, vastest, most stedfast and majestick part of the visible Creation. 'Tis there where he will at last manifest himself to his People in a full conjunction of grace and glory, and be for ever open to his People in uninterrupted expressions of goodness, and discoveries of his presence, as a reward of their labour and service. And in these respects it may peculiarly be call'd his Throne. And this doth no more hinder his essential presence in all parts of the Earth, than it doth his gracious presence in all the hearts of his People. God is in Heaven, in regard of the manifestation of his glory: In Hell by the expressions of his justice: In the Earth by the discoveries of his Wisdom, Power, Patience and Compassion: In his People by the monuments of his grace, & in all in regard of his substance.

2. He is said also to dwell in the Ark and Temple. 'Tis called, Ps. 26. 8. The habitation of his house, and the place where his honour dwells; and to dwell in Jerusalem as in his holy Mountain; The Mountain of the Lord of Hosts *, in regard of publishing his Oracles, answering their Prayers, manifesting more of his goodness to the Israelites, than to any other Nation in the World, erecting his true worship among them, which was not settled in any part of the World besides; and his worship is principally intended in that Psalm. The Ark is the place where his honour dwells, the worship of God is called the glory of God; They changed the glory of God into an image made like to corruptible men *, i. e. they changed the worship of God into Idolatry; and to that also doth the place in Zechary refer.

Now because he is said to dwell in Heaven, is he essentially only there? Is he not as essentially in the Temple and Ark, as he is in Heaven, since there are as high expressions of his habitations there, as of his dwelling in Heaven? If he dwell only in Heaven, how came he to dwell in the Temple? both are asserted in Scripture, one as much as the other. If his dwelling in Heaven did not hinder his dwelling in the Ark, it could as little hinder the presence of his essence on the Earth. To dwell in Heaven, and in one part of the Earth at the same time, is all one as to dwell in all parts of Heaven, and all parts of Earth. If he were in Heaven, and in the Ark and Temple, it was the same essence in both, tho' not the same kind of manifestation of himself. If by his dwelling in Heaven be meant his whole Essence, why is it not also to be meant by his dwelling in the Ark? It was not sure part of his Essence that was in Heaven, and part of his Essence that was on Earth, his Essence would then be divided; and can it be imagined, that he would be in Heaven and the Ark at the same time, and not in the spaces between? Could his Essence be split into fragments, and a gap made in it, that two distant spaces should be fill'd by him, and all between be empty of him. So that God's being said to dwell in Heaven, and in the Temple, is so far from impairing the truth of this Doctrine, that it more confirms and evidences it.

2. Nor do the expressions of God's coming to us, or departing from us, impair this Doctrine of his Omnipresence.

God is said to hide his face from his People *; to be far from the Wicked, and the Gentiles are said to be afar off, viz. From God ‖; and upon the manifestation of Christ ‖ made near; These must not be understood of any distance or nearness of his Essence, for that is equally near to all persons and things; but of some other special way and manifestation of his Presence. Thus God is said to be in Believers by Love, as they are in him *; He that abides in love, abides in God, and God in him: He that loves is in the thing beloved; and when two love one another, they are in one another; God is in a righteous Man by a special grace, and far from the wicked in regard of such special Works; and God is said to be in a place by a special manifestation, as when he was in the Bush *; or manifesting his Glory upon Mount Sinai ‖; The Glory of the Lord abode upon Mount Sinai: God is said to hide his face, when he withdraws his comforting Presence, disturbs the repose of our hearts, flasheth Terror into our Consciences, when he puts Men under the smart of the Cross, as tho' he had ordered his Mercy utterly to depart from them; or when he doth withdraw his special assisting Providence from us in our Affairs; so he departed from Saul, when he withdrew his direction and protection from him in the concerns of his Government *; The Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, i.e. the Spirit of Government. God may be far from us in one respect, and near to us in another; far from us in regard of comfort, yet near to us in regard of support, when his essential presence continues the same; this is a necessary consequent upon the infiniteness of God, the other is an act of the Will of God;

ſo he was ſaid to forſake Chriſt, in regard of his obſcuring his Glory from his Humane Nature, and inflicting his Wrath; tho' he was near to him in regard of his Grace, and preſerved him from contracting any ſpot in his ſufferings. We do not ſay the Sun is departed out of the Heavens when it is be-miſted; it remains in the ſame part of the Heavens, paſſes on its courſe, tho' its Beams do not reach us by reaſon of the Bar between us and it: The Soul is in every part of the Body, in regard of its Subſtance, and conſtantly in it, tho' it doth not act ſo ſpritely and vigorouſly at one time as at another, in one and the ſame Member, and diſcover it ſelf ſo ſenſibly in its Operations; ſo all the various effects of God towards the Sons of Men, are but divers Operations of one and the ſame Eſſence: He is far from us, or near to us, as he is a Judge or a Benefactor; when he comes to puniſh, it notes not the approach of his Eſſence, but the ſtroke of his Juſtice; when he comes to benefit, 'tis not by a new acceſs of his Eſſence, but an effiux of his Grace; he departs from us, when he leaves us to the frowns of his Juſtice; he comes to us, when he encircles us in the Arms of his Mercy; but he was equally preſent with us in both diſpenſations, in regard of his Eſſence: And likewiſe God is ſaid to come down *, And the Lord came down to ſee the City; when he doth ſome ſignal and wonderful Works which attract the minds of Men to the acknowledgment of a Supream Power and Providence in the World, who judg'd God abſent and careleſs before.

*Gen. 11. 5.

3. Nor is the Eſſential Preſence of God with all Creatures any diſparagement to him. Since it was no diſparagement to Create the Heaven and the Earth, 'tis no diſparagement to him to fill them; if he were Eſſentially preſent with them when he created them, 'tis no diſhonour to him to be Eſſentially preſent with them, to ſupport them; if it were his glory to create them by his Eſſence, when they were nothing, can it be his diſgrace to be preſent by his Eſſence, ſince they are ſomething, and ſomething good, and very good in his Eye *? God ſaw every thing, and behold it was very good, or mighty good; all ordered to declare his Goodneſs, Wiſdom, Power, and to make him adorable to Man, and therefore took complacency in them: There is a Harmony in all things, a Combination in them for thoſe glorious Ends for which God created them; and is it a diſgrace for God to be preſent with his own Harmonious compoſition? Is it not a Muſicians Glory, to touch with his fingers the Treble, the leaſt and tendereſt ſtring, as well as the ſtrongeſt and greateſt baſe? Hath not every thing ſome Stamp of God's own Being upon it, ſince he eminently contains in himſelf the perfections of all his Works? Whatſoever hath Being, hath a Foot-ſtep of God upon it, who is all Being; every thing in the Earth is his Foot-ſtool, having a mark of his Foot upon it; all declare the Being of God, becauſe they had their Being from God; and will God account it any diſparagement to him, to be preſent with that which confirms his Being, and the glorious Perfections of his nature to his intelligent Creatures? the meaneſt things are not without their Vertues, which may boaſt God's being the Creator of them; and rank them in the midſt of his Works of Wiſdom as well as Power. Doth God debaſe himſelf to be preſent by his Eſſence, with the things he hath made, more than he doth to know them by his Eſſence? Is not the leaſt thing known by him? How? not by a faculty or act diſtinct from his Eſſence; but by his Eſſence it ſelf: How is any thing diſgraceful to the eſſential preſence of God, that is not diſgraceful to his Knowledge by his Eſſence? Beſides, would God make any thing that ſhould be an invincible reaſon to him to part with his own infiniteneſs, by a contraction of his own Eſſence into a leſs compaſs than before? it was Immenſe before, it had no bounds; and would God make a VVorld that he would be aſhamed to be preſent with, and continue it to the diminution and leſſening of himſelf, rather than annihilate it to avoid the diſparagement? This were to impeach the VViſdom of God, and caſt a blemiſh upon his infinite Underſtanding, that he knows not the conſequences of his VVork, or is well contented to be impaired in the immenſity of his own Eſſence by it. No Man thinks it a diſhonour to Light, a moſt excellent Creature, to be preſent with a Toad or Serpent; and tho' there be an infinite diſproportion between Light, a Creature, and the Father of Lights, the Creator: Yet *God being a Spirit, knows how to be with Bodies as if they were not Bodies. And being jealous of his own Honour, would not, could not do any thing that might impair it.

*Gen. 1. 31.

* Gaſſend.

4. Nor will it follow, That becauſe God is Eſſentially every where, that every thing is God. God is not every where by any conjunction, compoſition or mixture, with any thing on Earth; when Light is in every part of a Chryſtal Globe, and encircles it cloſe on every ſide, do they become one? No, the Chryſtal remains what it is, and the Light retains its own nature: God is not in us as a part of us, but as an efficient and preſerving Cauſe; 'tis not by his Eſſential Preſence, but his efficacious Preſence, that he brings any perſon into a likeneſs to his own Nature: God is ſo in his Eſſence with things, as to be diſtinct from them as a Cauſe from the Effect; as a Creator different from the Creature, preſerving their Nature, not communicating his own; his Eſſence touches all, is in conjunction with none; Finite and Infinite cannot be joyn'd, he is not far from us, therefore near to us; ſo near that we live and move in him *; Nothing is God becauſe it moves in him, any more than a Fiſh in the Sea, is the Sea, or a part of the Sea, becauſe it moves in it; Doth a Man that holds a thing in the hollow of his hand, tranſform it by that action, and make it like his hand? The Soul and Body are more ſtraitly united, than the Eſſence of God is by his Preſence with any Creature: The Soul is in the Body as a form in matter, and from their Union doth ariſe a Man; yet in this near conjunction, both Body and Soul remain diſtinct; the Soul is not the Body, nor the Body the Soul; they both have diſtinct Natures and Eſſences; the Body can never be changed into a Soul, nor the Soul into a Body; no more can God into the Creature, or the Creature into God. Fire is in heated Iron in every part of it, ſo that it ſeems to be nothing but Fire; yet is not Fire and Iron the ſame thing. But ſuch a kind of arguing againſt God's Omnipreſence, that if God were eſſentially preſent, every thing would be God, would exclude him from Heaven as well as from Earth. By the ſame reaſon, ſince they acknowledge God eſſentially in Heaven, the Heaven where he is ſhould be chang'd into the nature of God; and by arguing againſt his Preſence in Earth, upon this ground they run ſuch an inconvenience, that they muſt own him to be no where, and that which is no where is nothing. Doth the Earth become God, becauſe God is Eſſentially there, any more than the Heavens, where God is acknowledged by all to be Eſſentially preſent?

* Acts 17. 2.

Amyrald. de Trinitat. p. 99, 100.

Again, if where God is Eſſentially, that muſt be God, then if they place God in a point of the Heavens, not only that point muſt be God, but all the World; becauſe, if that point be God, becauſe God is there, then the point touched by that point muſt be God, and ſo conſequently as far as there are any points touched by one another. We live and move in God, ſo we live and move in the Air; we are no more God by that, than we are meer Air, becauſe we breathe in it, and it enters into all the pores of our body: Nay, where there was a ſtraiter Union of the Divine Nature to the Human in our Saviour, yet the Nature of both was diſtinct, and the Humanity was not chang'd into the Divinity, nor the Divinity into the Humanity.

5. Nor doth it follow, that becauſe God is every where, therefore a Creature may be worſhipt without Idolatry. Some of the Heathens who acknowledged God's Omnipreſence, abus'd it to the countenancing Idolatry; becauſe God was reſident in every thing, they thought every thing might be worſhiped; and ſome have us'd it as an Argument againſt this Doctrine; the beſt Doctrines may by Mens corruption be drawn out into unreaſonable and pernicious concluſions. Have you not met with any, that from the Doctrine of God's Free Mercy, and our Saviours ſatisfactory Death, have drawn Poyſon to feed their Luſts, and conſume their Souls; a Poyſon compos'd by their own corruption, and not offer'd by thoſe Truths.

The Apoſtle intimates to us, that ſome did, or at leaſt were ready to be more laviſh in ſinning, becauſe God was abundant in Grace *; Shall we continue in Sin, that Grace may abound? When he prevents an Objection that he thought might be made by ſome: But as to this caſe; ſince tho' God be preſent in every thing, yet every thing retains its nature, diſtinct from the nature of God; therefore it is not to have a Worſhip due to the excellency of God: As long as any thing remains a Creature, 'tis only to have the reſpect from us, which is due to it in the rank of Creatures. When a Prince is preſent with his Guard, or if he ſhould go arm in arm with a Peaſant, is therefore the Veneration and Honour due to the Prince, to be paid to the Peaſant, or any of his Guard? Would the preſence of the Prince excuſe it, or would it not rather aggravate it? He acknowledged ſuch a Perſon equal to me, by giving him my rights, even in my ſight. Tho' God dwelt in the Temple, would not the Iſraelites have been accounted guilty of Idolatry, had they Worſhiped the Images of the Cherubims, or the Ark, or the Altar, as objects of Worſhip, which were erected only as means for his Service? Is there not as much reaſon to think God was as Eſſentially preſent in the Temple, as in Heaven, ſince the ſame expreſſions are uſed of the one and the other? The Sanctuary is called the Glorious high Throne *; and he is ſaid to dwell between the Cherubims ‖, i. e. the two Cherubims that were at the two ends of the Mercy Seat, appointed by God as the two ſides of his Throne in the Sanctuary, Exod. 25. 18. Where he was to dwell, ver. 8. and meet and commune with his people, ver. 22. Could this excuſe Manaſſeh's Idolatry in bringing in a Carved Image into the Houſe of God *? Had it been a good Anſwer to the Charge, God is preſent here, and therefore every thing may be Worſhiped as God? If he be only Eſſentially in Heaven, would it not be Idolatry to direct a Worſhip to the Heavens, or any part of it as a due object, becauſe of the preſence of God there? Tho' we look up to the Heavens, where we pray and worſhip God, yet Heaven is not the object of worſhip, the Soul abſtracts God from the Creature.

6. Nor is God defil'd by being preſent with thoſe Creatures which ſeems filthy to us. Nothing is filthy in the Eye of God as his Creature; he could never elſe have pronounced all good; whatſoever is filthy to us, yet as it is a Creature, it owes it ſelf to the power of God: His Eſſence is no more defil'd by being preſent with it, than his power by producing it: No Creature is foul in it ſelf, tho' it may ſeem ſo to us: Doth not an Infant lie in a Womb of filthineſs and rottenneſs? Yet is not the power of God preſent with it, in working it curiouſly in the lower parts of the Earth? Are his eyes defil'd by ſeeing the Subſtance when it is yet imperfect? Or his hand defiled by writing every Member in his Book *? Have not the vileſt and moſt noiſome things, excellent Medicinal Vertues? How are they endued with them? How are thoſe qualities preſerved in them? By any thing without God, or no? Every Artificer looks with pleaſure upon the work he hath wrought with Art and Skill; can his Eſſence be defil'd by being preſent with them, any more than it was in giving them ſuch vertues, and preſerving them in them? God meaſures the Heaven and the Earth with his hand, is his hand defil'd by the evil influences of the Planets, or the Corporeal impurities of the Earth? Nothing can be filthy in the eye of God but Sin, ſince every thing elſe owes its Being to him. What may appear deform'd and unworthy to us, is not ſo to the Creator; he ſees Beauty where we ſee Deformity; finds goodneſs where we behold what is nauſeous to us. All Creatures being the effects of his Power, may be the objects of his preſence; Can any place be more foul than Hell, if you take it either for the Hell of the Damned, or for the Grave where there is rottenneſs? yet there he is *. When Satan appear'd before God, and God ſpake with him *, Could God contract any impurity by being preſent where that filthy Spirit was, more impure than any corporeal, noiſome, and defiling thing can be? No, God is purity to himſelf in the midſt of noiſomneſs; a Heaven to himſelf in the midſt of Hell: Who ever heard of a Sunbeam ſtain'd by ſhining upon a Quag-mire, any more than ſweetned by breaking into a Perfum'd Room *? Tho' the Light ſhines upon pure and impure things, yet it mixes not its ſelf with either of them; ſo tho' God be preſent with Devils and wicked Men, yet without any mixture, he is preſent with their Eſſence to ſuſtain it and ſupport it; not in their defection, wherein lies their defilement; and which is not a Phyſical but a Moral evil; Bodily filth can never touch an incorporeal ſubſtance. Spirits are not preſent with us in the ſame manner that one body is preſent with another; bodies can by a touch only, defile bodies; Is the glory of an Angel ſtained by being in a Coal-mine? Or could the Angel that came into the Lions Den, to deliver Daniel, be any more diſturb'd by the ſtench of the place, than he could be ſcratch'd by the Paws, or torn by the Teeth of the Beaſts? Their ſpiritual Nature ſecures them againſt any infection, when they are miniſtring Spirits to Perſecuted Believers in their naſty Priſons *. The Soul is ſtraitly united with the Body, but it is not made white or black, by the whiteneſs or blackneſs of its habitation; is it infected by the corporeal impurities of the Body, while it continually dwells in a Sea of filthy Pollution? If the Body be caſt into a Common-ſhore, is the Soul defil'd by it? Can a diſeaſed Body derive a Contagion to the Spirit that animates it? Is it not often the purer by Grace, the more the Body is infected by Nature; Hezekiah's Spirit was ſcarce ever more fervent with God, than when the Sore, which ſome think to be a Plague Sore, was upon him *; How can any corporeal filth impair the purity of the Divine Eſſence? It may as well be ſaid, that God is not preſent in Battels and fights for his People *, becauſe he would not be diſturbed by the noiſe of Cannons and claſhing of Swords, as that he is not preſent in the World, becauſe of the ill ſcents: Let us therefore conclude this with the expreſſion of a Learned Man of our own, * To deny the Omnipreſence of God, becauſe of ill ſcented places, is to meaſure God rather by the nicety of Senſe, than by the ſagacity of Reaſon.

1. Of Information.

1. Chriſt hath a divine nature. As Eternity and Immutability, two incommunicable Properties of the Divine Nature, are aſcrib'd to Chriſt; ſo alſo is this of Omnipreſence or Immenſity *. No Man hath aſcended up to Heaven, but he that came down from Heaven, even the Son of Man which is in Heaven. Not which was, but which is; He comes from Heaven by Incarnation, and remains in Heaven by his Divinity. He was, while he ſpake to Nicodemus, locally on Earth, in regard of his Humanity; but in Heaven according to his Deity, as well as upon Earth in the union of his Divine and Humane Nature. He deſcended upon Earth, but he left not Heaven; He was in the World before he came in the fleſh *. He was in the World, and the World was made by him. He was in the World, as the light that enlightens every Man that comes into the World. In the World as God, before he was in the World as Man. He was then in the World as Man, while he diſcourſed with Nicodemus; yet ſo, that he was alſo in Heaven as God. No Creature but is bounded in place, either circumſcribed as body, or determin'd as Spirit to be in one ſpace, ſo as not to be in another at the ſame time; to leave a place where they were, and poſſeſs a place where they were not. But Chriſt is ſo on Earth, that at the ſame time he is in Heaven; he is therefore infinite. To be in Heaven and Earth at the ſame moment of time, is a property ſolely belonging to the Deity, wherein no Creature can be a Partner with him. He was in the World before he came to the World, and the World was made by him *. His coming was not as the coming of Angels, that leave Heaven, and begin to be on Earth, where they were not before; but ſuch a preſence as can be aſcribed only to God, who fills Heaven and Earth. Again, If all things were made by him, then he was preſent with all things which were made: For where there is a preſence of Power, there is alſo a preſence of Eſſence; and therefore he is ſtill preſent: For the right and power of Conſervation, follows the Power of Creation.

* John 3. 13.

* John 1. 10

* John 1. 18

And according to this divine nature, he promiſeth his preſence with his Church. * There am I in the midſt of them. And ‖ I am with you alway, even to the end of the World, i.e. by his Divinity: For he had before told them, that they were not to have him always with them, i.e. according to his Humanity; but in his divine nature he is preſent with, and walks in the midſt of the golden Candleſticks. If we underſtand it of a preſence by his ſpirit in the midſt of the Church, doth it invalidate his eſſential preſence? No, he is no leſs than the Spirit whom he ſends; and therefore as little confin'd as the Spirit is, who dwells in every Believer. And this may alſo be inferr'd from *Joh.*10.30. My Father and I are one; not one by conſent, tho' that be included; but one in Power: For he ſpeaks not of their conſent, but of their joynt Power in keeping his People. Where there is a Unity of Eſſence, there is a Unity of Preſence.

*Mat.18.20 ‖Mat.28.20 Mat.26.11.

2. Here is a confirmation of the ſpiritual nature of God. If he were an Infinite body, he could not fill Heaven and Earth, but with the excluſion of all Creatures. Two bodies cannot be in the ſame ſpace; they may be near one another, but not in any of the ſame points together. A body bounded he hath not, for that would deſtroy his Immenſity; he could not then fill Heaven and Earth, becauſe a body cannot be at one and the ſame time in two different ſpaces; but God doth not fill Heaven at one time, and the Earth at another, but both at the ſame time. Beſides, a limited body cannot be ſaid to fill the whole Earth, but one particular ſpace in the Earth at a time. A body may fill the Earth with its vertue, as the Sun, but not with its ſubſtance. Nothing can be every where with a corporeal weight and maſs; but God being infinite, is not tied to any part of the World, but penetrates all, and equally acts by his infinite Power in all.

3. Here is an argument for Providence. His preſence is mention'd in the Text, in order to his government of the affairs of the World. Is he every where, to be unconcern'd with every thing? Before the World had a Being, God was preſent with himſelf; ſince the World hath a Being, he is preſent with his Creatures, to exerciſe his Wiſdom in the ordering, as he did his Power in the production of them. As the Knowledge of God is not a bare contemplation of a thing, ſo his Preſence is not a bare inſpection into a thing. Were it an idle careleſs Preſence, it were a Preſence to no purpoſe, which cannot be imagin'd of God. Infinite Power, Goodneſs, and Wiſdom, being every where preſent with his Eſſence, are never without their exerciſe. He never manifeſts any of his perfections, but the manifeſtation is full of ſome Indulgence and Benefit to his Creatures. It cannot be ſuppoſed God ſhould neglect thoſe things, wherewith he is conſtantly preſent in a way of efficiency and operation. He is not every where, without acting every where. Where-ever his Eſſence is, there is a power and vertue worthy of God every where diſpens'd. He governs by his preſence, what he made by his power; and is preſent as an Agent with all his Works. His Power and Eſſence are together, to preſerve them while he pleaſes, as his Power and his Eſſence are together to create them when he ſaw good to do it. Every Creature hath a ſtamp of God, and his preſence is neceſſary to keep the impreſſion ſtanding upon the Creature. As all things are his Works, they are the objects of his care; and the Wiſdom he employ'd in framing them, will not ſuffer him to be careleſs of them. His preſence with them, engageth him in honour not to be a negligent Governour. His Immenſity fits him for government; and where there is a fitneſs, there is an exerciſe of government, where there are objects for the exerciſe of it. He is worthy to have the Univerſal Rule of the World, he can be preſent in all places of his Empire, there is nothing can be done by any of his Subjects, but in his ſight. As his Eternity renders him King always, ſo his Immenſity renders him King every where. If he were only preſent in Heaven, it might occaſion a ſuſpicion that he minded only the things of Heaven, and had no concern for things below that vaſt Body; but if he be preſent here, his preſence hath a tendency to the government of thoſe things with which he is preſent. We are all in him as Fiſh in the Sea; and he bears all Creatures in the Womb of his Providence, and the arms of his Goodneſs. 'Tis moſt certain that his preſence with his People is far from being an idle one; for when he promiſes to be with them, he adds ſome ſpecial Cordial, as, I will be with thee, and bleſs thee *. I am with thee, and I will ſtrengthen thee; I will help thee, I will uphold thee *. Infinite goodneſs will never countenance a negligent preſence.

4. The Omniſcience of God is inferr'd from hence. If God be preſent every where, he muſt needs know what is done every where. 'Tis for this end he proclaims himſelf a God filling Heaven and Earth, in the Text. Can any hide himſelf in ſecret places, that I ſhall not ſee him, ſaith the Lord? I have heard what the Prophets ſay, that Propheſie Lyes in my Name: If I fill Heaven and Earth, the moſt ſecret thing cannot be hid from my ſight. An Intelligent Being cannot be every where preſent, and more intimate in every thing, than it can be in it ſelf; but he muſt know what is done without, what is thought within. Nothing can be obſcure to him, who is in every part of the World; in every part of his Creatures. Not a thought can ſtart up but in his ſight, who is preſent in the Souls and Minds of every thing. How eaſie is it with him, to whoſe Eſſence the World is but a point, to know and obſerve every thing done in this World, as any of us can know what is done in one point of place where we are preſent? If Light were an underſtanding Being, it would behold and know every thing done, where it diffuſeth it ſelf. God is light (as light in a Chryſtal Glaſs, all within it, all without it) and is not ignorant of what is done within and without; no ignorance can be faſtned upon him who hath an Univerſal preſence.

Hence, by the way, we may take notice of the wonderful patience of God, who bears with ſo many provocations; not from a Principle of Ignorance, for he bears with ſins that are committed near him, in his ſight; Sins that he ſees, and cannot but ſee.

5. Hence may be inferr'd the Incomprehenſibility of God. He that fills Heaven and Earth, cannot be contain'd in any thing; he fills the Underſtandings of Men, the Underſtandings of Angels, but is comprehended by neither; 'tis a raſhneſs to think to find out any bounds of God; there's no meaſuring of an infinite Being, if it were to be meaſured it were not infinite; but becauſe it is infinite, it is not to be meaſured. God ſits above the Cherubims *, above the fullneſs, above the brightneſs, not only of a humane, but a created underſtanding: Nothing is more preſent than God, yet nothing more hid; he is Light, and yet Obſcurity *; his Perfections are viſible, yet unſearchable; we know there is an infinite God, but it ſurpaſſeth the compaſs of our minds; we know there is no number ſo great, but another may be added to it; but no Man can put it in practice, without loſing himſelf in a maze of Figures. What is the reaſon we comprehend not many; nay, moſt things in the World? Partly from the Excellency of the object, and partly from the Imperfection of our underſtanding. How can we then comprehend God who exceeds all, and is exceeded by none; contains all, and is contained by none; is above our underſtanding, as well as above our ſenſe? As conſidered in himſelf infinite; as conſidered in compariſon with our underſtandings, incomprehenſible; who can with his eye meaſure the breadth, length and depth of the Sea, and at one caſt view every dimenſion of the Heavens? God is greater, and we cannot know him *; he fills the underſtanding as he fills Heaven and Earth; yet is above the underſtanding as he is above Heaven and Earth: He is known by Faith, enjoy'd by Love, but comprehended by no mind. God is not contain'd in that one Syllable, God; by it we apprehend an excellent and unlimited Nature: himſelf only underſtands himſelf, and can unveil himſelf.

6. How

6. How wonderful is God, and how nothing are Creatures! Aſcribe the Greatneſs to our God *; He is admirable in the conſideration of his Power, in the extent of his Underſtanding, and no leſs wonderful in the Immenſity of his Eſſence; That as Auſtin ſaith, he is in the World, yet not confin'd to it; he is out of the World, yet not debarr'd from it; he is above the World, yet not elevated by it; he is below the World, yet not depreſt by it; he is above all, equall'd by none; he is in all, not becauſe he needs them, but they ſtand in need of him; this as well as Eternity, makes a vaſt diſproportion between God and the Creature: The Creature is bounded by a little ſpace, and no ſpace is ſo great as to bound the Creator. By this we may take a Proſpect of our own nothingneſs; as in the conſideration of God's Holineſs we are minded of our own Impurity; and in the thoughts of his Wiſdom have a view of our own Folly; and in the meditation of his Power, have a ſenſe of our Weakneſs; ſo his Immenſity ſhould make us according to our own Nature, appear little in our own eyes. What little, little, little things are we to God? Leſs than an Atome in the Beams of the Sun; poor drops to a God that fills Heaven and Earth, and yet dare we to ſtrut againſt him, and daſh our ſelves againſt a Rock? If the conſideration of our ſelves in compariſon with others, be apt to puff us up, the conſideration of our ſelves in compariſon with God, will be ſufficient to pull us down; If we conſider him in the greatneſs of his Eſſence, there is but little more proportion between him and us, than between being and not being, than between a Drop and the Ocean. How ſhould we never think of God without a Holy Admiration of his greatneſs, and a deep ſenſe of our own littleneſs! and as the Angels cover their faces before him; with what awe ſhould creeping Worms come into his Sight! and ſince God fills Heaven and Earth with his Preſence, we ſhould fill Heaven and Earth with his Glory; for this end he Created Angels to Praiſe him in Heaven, and Men to Worſhip him on Earth, that the Places he fills with his Preſence may be filled with his Praiſe: We ſhould be ſwallow'd up in Admirations of the Immenſity of God, as Men are at the firſt ſight of the Sea, when they behold a maſs of Waters, without beholding the bounds and immenſe depth of it.

*Deut. 33. 3.

7. How much is this Attribute of God forgotten or contemned! We pretend to believe him to be preſent every where, and yet many live as if he were preſent no where.

1. 'Tis commonly forgotten, or not believ'd. All the Extravagancies of Men may be traced to the forgetfulneſs of this Attribute, as their Spring. The firſt Speech Adam ſpake in Paradiſe after his Fall, teſtified his unbelief of this *; I heard thy Voice in the Garden, and I hid my ſelf; his ear underſtood the voice of God, but his mind did not conclude the preſence of God; he thought the Trees could ſhelter him from him, whoſe Eye was preſent in the minuteſt parts of the Earth; he that thought after his Sin, that he could hide himſelf from the preſence of his Juſtice, thought before that he could hide himſelf from the preſence of his Knowledge; and being deceived in the one, he would try what would be the fruit of the other: In both he forgets, if not denies this Attribute; either corrupt Notions of God, or a ſlight belief of what in general Men aſſent unto, gives Birth to every Sin. In all Tranſgreſſions there is ſomething of Atheiſm; either denying the Being of God, or a daſh upon ſome Perfection of God; a not believing his Holineſs to hate it, his Truth that threatens, his Juſtice to puniſh it, and his Preſence to obſerve it. Tho' God be not afar off in his Eſſence, he is afar off in the apprehenſion of the Sinner *. There is no wicked man, but if he be an Atheiſt, he is a Heretick; and to gratifie his Luſt, will fanſie himſelf to be out of the preſence of his Judge: His Reaſon tells him, God is preſent with him, his Luſt preſſeth him to embrace the ſeaſon of a ſenſual Pleaſure; he will forſake his Reaſon, and prove a Heretick, that he may be an undiſturbed Sinner; and Sins doubly both in the error of his Mind, and the vileneſs of his Practice; he will conceit God with thoſe in Job *, Veil'd with thick Clouds, and not able to pierce into the lower World; as if his Preſence and Cares were confin'd to Cœleſtial things, and the Earth were too low a Sphere for his Eſſence to reach, at leaſt with any credit. 'Tis forgotten by good Men, when they fear too much the deſigns of their Enemies; Fear not, for I am with thee *. If the Preſence of God be enough to ſtrengthen againſt fear, then the prevailing of fear iſſues from our forgetfulneſs of it.

* Drexel Nicet. lib. 2 cap. 10.

* Job 22. 14.

* Iſa. 43. 5.

2. This Attribute of God's Omnipreſence is for the moſt part contemn'd. When Men will commit that in the Preſence of God which they would be afraid or aſhamed to do before the Eye of Man. Men do not practiſe that Modeſty before God, as before Men. He that would reſtrain his Tongue out of fear of mens Eye, will not reſtrain either Tongue or Hands out of fear of God's; What is the Language of this, but that God is not preſent with us, or his Preſence ought to be of leſs regard with us, and influence upon us, than that of a Creature? * Ask the Thief why he dares to ſteal? Will he not anſwer, No eye ſees him? Ask the Adulterer why he ſtrips himſelf of his Chaſtity, and invades the Rights of another? Will he not anſwer, * No eye ſees me? He diſguiſeth himſelf to be unſeen by Man, but ſlights the All-ſeeing Eye of God. If only a man know them, they are in terror of the ſhadow of death, they are Planet-ſtruck; but ſtand unſhaken at the Preſence of God. ‖ Is not this to account God as limited as Man, as ignorant, as abſenting, as if God were ſomething leſs than thoſe things which reſtrains us? 'Tis a debaſing God below a Creature. If we can forbear ſin from any awe of the preſence of Man, to whom we are equal in regard of Nature; or from the preſence of a very mean Man, to whom we are ſuperiour in regard of condition; and not forbear it becauſe we are within the ken of God; We reſpect him not only as our inferiour, but inferiour to the meaneſt Man or Child of his Creation, in whoſe ſight we would not commit the like Action. 'Tis to repreſent him as a ſleepy, negligent, or careleſs God; as tho' any thing might be concealed from him, before whom the leaſt fibres of the heart are anatomiz'd and open, who ſees as plainly Midnight as Noon-day ſins. Now this is a high aggravation of ſin: To break a King's Law in his ſight, is more bold than to violate them behind his back; as it was Haman's Offence when he lay upon Eſther's Bed, to force the Queen before the King's face. The leaſt Iniquity receives a high tincture from this. And no ſin can be little that is an affront in the face of God, and caſting the filth of the Creature before the Eyes of his Holineſs. As if a Wife ſhould commit Adultery before her Husband's face, or a Slave diſhonour his Maſter, and diſobey his Commands in his preſence. And hath it not often been thus with us? Have we not been diſloyal to God in his ſight, before his eyes, thoſe pure eyes that cannot behold Iniquity without anger and grief? * Ye did evil before my eyes. Nathan chargeth this home upon David. * Thou haſt deſpiſed the Commandment of the Lord to do evil in his ſight. And David in his Repentance, reflects upon himſelf for it, * Againſt thee, thee only have I ſinned, and done this evil in thy ſight. I obſerved not thy Preſence, I neglected thee while thy Eye was upon me. And this conſideration ſhould ſting our hearts in all our Confeſſions of our Crimes. Men will be afraid of the preſence of others, whatſoever they think in their heart. How unworthily do we deal with God, in not giving him ſo much as an Eye-ſervice, which we do Man?

Quo fugis Encelade quaſcunq; acceſſeris oras, Sub Jove ſemper eris.

8. How terrible ſhould the thoughts of this Attribute be to Sinners! How fooliſh is it, to imagine any hiding-place from the Incomprehenſible God, who fills and contains all things, and is preſent in every point of the World! When Men have ſhut the Door, and made all darkneſs within, to meditate or commit a Crime, they cannot in the moſt intricate receſſes be ſheltered from the Preſence of God. If they could ſeparate themſelves from their own ſhadows, they could not avoid his company, or be obſcured from his ſight. * Hypocrites cannot diſguiſe their Sentiments from him, he is in the moſt ſecret nook of their hearts. No Thought is hid, no Luſt is ſecret, but the Eye of God beholds this, and that, and the other. He is preſent with our heart when we imagine, with our hands when we act. We may exclude the Sun from peeping into our Solitudes, but not the Eyes of God from beholding our Actions. The eyes of the Lord are in every place beholding the evil and good *. He lies in the depths of our Souls, and ſees afar off our deſigns before we have conceived them. He is in the greateſt darkneſs, as well as the cleareſt light; in the cloſeſt thought of the mind, as well as the openeſt expreſſions. Nothing can be hid from him, no, not in the darkeſt Cells, or thickeſt Walls. He compaſſeth our path where-ever we are, * and is acquainted with all our ways. He is as much preſent with wicked Men to obſerve their ſins, as he is to deteſt them. Where he is preſent in his Eſſence, he is preſent in his Attributes: His Holineſs to hate, and his Juſtice to puniſh, if he pleaſe to ſpeak the word. 'Tis ſtrange Men ſhould not be mindful of this, when their very ſins themſelves might put them in mind of his Preſence. Whence haſt thou the power to act? Who preſerves thy Being, whereby thou art capable of committing that Evil? Is it not his Eſſential Preſence that ſuſtains us, and his Arm that ſupports us? And where can any Man flie from his Preſence? Not the vaſt Regions of Heaven could ſhelter a ſinning Angel from his Eye: How was Adam ferreted out of his hiding-places in Paradiſe? Nor can we find the depths of the Sea a ſufficient covering to us If we were with Jonah cloſeted up in the belly of a Whale; if we had the wings of the morning, as quick a motion as the light at the dawning of the day, that doth in an inſtant ſurprize and over-power the Regions of darkneſs; and could paſs to the utmoſt parts of the Earth or Hell, there we ſhould find him, there his eye would be upon us, there would his hand lay hold of us, and lead us as a Conqueror triumphing over a Captive *. Nay, if we could leap out of the compaſs of Heaven and Earth, we ſhould find as little reſerves from him. He is without the World in thoſe infinite ſpaces which the mind of Man can imagine. In regard of his Immenſity, nothing in being can be diſtant from him, whereſoever it is.

*Pſal. 139. 8, 9, 10.

2d. Uſe is for Comfort. That God is preſent every where, is as much a Comfort to a good Man, as it is a Terror to a wicked one. He is every where for his People, not only by a neceſſary perfection of his Nature, but an immenſe diffuſion of his Goodneſs. He is in all Creatures as their Preſerver, in the damned as their Terror, in his people as their Protector. He fills Hell with his Severity, Heaven with his Glory, his People with his Grace. He is with his People as Light in Darkneſs, a Fountain in a Garden, a Manna in the Ark. God is in the World as a Spring of Preſervation, in the Church as his Cabinet, a Spring of Grace and Conſolation. A Man is preſent ſometimes in his Field, but more delightfully in his Garden. A Vineyard, as it hath more of coſt, ſo more of care, and a watchful Preſence of the Owner. Iſa. 27. 3. I the Lord do keep it, viz. his Vineyard; I will water it every moment: Leſt any hurt it, I will keep it night and day. As there is a preſence of Eſſence, which is natural; ſo there is a preſence of Grace, which is fœderal; A preſence by Covenant, I will not leave thee, I will be with thee; this latter depends upon the former; for take away the Immenſity of God, and you leave no Foundation for his univerſal gracious preſence with his People in all their emergencies, in all their hearts. And therefore where he is preſent in his Eſſence, he cannot be abſent in his Grace from them that fear him. 'Tis from his filling Heaven and Earth he proves his knowledge of the deſigns of the falſe Prophets; and from the ſame Topick may as well be inferr'd the employment of his Power and Grace for his People.

1. The Omnipreſence of God is comfort in all violent Temptations. No fiery Dart can be ſo preſent with us, as God is preſent both with that and the Marksman. The moſt raging Devils cannot be ſo near us, as God is to us and them. He is preſent with his People to relieve them, and preſent with the Devil to manage him to his own holy purpoſes: So he was with Job, defeating his Enemies, and bringing him triumphantly out of thoſe preſſing Tryals. This Preſence is ſuch a Terror, that whatſoever the Devil can deſpoil us of, he muſt leave this untouch'd. He might ſcratch the Apoſtle with a Thorn, but he could not riſle him of the preſence of Divine Grace, which God promiſed him. He muſt prevail ſo far, as to make God ceaſe to be God, before he can make him to be diſtant from us: And while this cannot be, the Devils and Men can no more hinder the emanations of God to the Soul, than a Child can cut off the Rays of the Sun from imbelliſhing the Earth; 'tis no mean ſupport for a good Man, at any time buffeted by a Meſſenger of Satan, to think God ſtands near him, and beholds how ill he is us'd. It would be a ſatisfaction to a King's Favourite in the midſt of the Violence ſome Enemies might uſe to him upon a Surprize, to underſtand that the King who loves him, ſtands behind a Curtain, and through a hole ſees the Injuries he ſuffers; and were the Devil as conſidering as he is malicious, he could not but be in great fear at God's being in the Generation of the Righteous, as his Serpentine Seed is *: There were they in great fear, for God is in the generation of the Righteous.

1 Cor. 17. 7. 9.

* Prov. 3. 6.

2. The Omnipreſence of God is a comfort in ſharp afflictions. Good Men have a Comfort in this Preſence in their naſty Priſons, oppreſſing Tribunals; in the overflowing Waters, or ſcorching Flames, he is ſtill with them *; and many times by his Preſence keeps the Buſh from Conſuming, when it ſeems to be all in a Flame: In Afflictions God ſhews himſelf moſt preſent, when Friends are moſt abſent; When my Father and Mother forſake me, then the Lord ſhall take me up *, then God will ſtoop and gather me into his Protection; Hebr. ſhall gather me: Alluding to thoſe Tribes that were to bring up the Rear in the Iſraelites March, to take care that none were left behind, and expos'd to Famine or wild Beaſts, by reaſon of ſome Diſeaſe that diſenabled them to keep pace with their Brethren; He that is the Sanctuary of his People in all Calamities, is more preſent with them to ſupport them, than their Adverſaries can be preſent with them to afflict them *, A preſent help in time of Trouble; He is preſent with all things for this end; tho' his Preſence be a neceſſary Preſence, in regard of the Immenſity of his Nature; yet the end of this Preſence, in regard that it is for the good of his People, is a voluntary Preſence. 'Tis for the good of Man he is preſent in the lower World, and principally for the good of his People, for whoſe ſake he keeps up the World *; His eyes run to and fro throughout the whole Earth, to ſhew himſelf ſtrong in the behalf of them whoſe heart is perfect towards him. If he doth not deliver good Men from Afflictions, he will be ſo preſent as to manage them in them, as that his Glory ſhall iſſue from them, and their Grace be brightned by them *.

*2 Chron. 16. 9.

* Chryſoſtome.

What a Man was Paul when he was lodg'd in a Priſon, or dragged to the Courts of Judicature, when he was torn with Rods, or laden with Chains! then did he ſhew the greateſt Miracles, made the Judge tremble upon the Bench, and brake the Heart, tho' not the Priſon, of the Jaylor; ſo powerful is the Preſence of God in the preſſures of his People. This Preſence outweighs all other Comforts, and is more valuable to a Chriſtian than Barns of Corn, or Cellars of Wine can be to a Covetous Man *: It was this Preſence was David's Cordial in the mutinying of his Soldiers *. What a Comfort is this in Exile, or a forced deſertion of our Habitations! Good Men may be Baniſh'd from their Country, but never from the Preſence of their Protector; Ye cannot ſay of any corner of the Earth, or of any Dungeon in a Priſon, God is not here; if you were caſt out of your Country 1000 Miles off, you are not out of God's Precinct; his Arm is there to cheriſh the good as well as to drag out the wicked; 'tis the ſame God, the ſame Preſence in every Country, as well as the ſame Sun, Moon, and Stars; and were not God every where, yet he could not be meaner than his Creature, the Sun in the Firmament, which viſits every part of the habitable World in twenty four hours.

* 1 Sam. 30. 6.

3. The Omnipreſence of God is a Comfort in all Duties of Worſhip. He is preſent to obſerve, and preſent to accept our Petitions, and anſwer our Suits. Good Men have not only the Eſſential Preſence, which is common to all, but his Gracious Preſence; not only the Preſence that flows from his Nature, but that which flows from his Promiſe; his Eſſential Preſence makes no difference between this and that Man in regard of Spirituals, without this in conjunction with it; his Nature is the cauſe of the Preſence of his Eſſence; his Will engag'd by his Truth, is the cauſe of the Preſence of his Grace. He promis'd to meet the Iſraelites in the Place where he ſhould ſet his Name, and in all places where he doth Record it *. In all places where I Record my Name, I will come unto thee, and I will Bleſs thee; in every place where I ſhall manifeſt the ſpecial Preſence of my Divinity. In all places, hands may be lifted up, without doubting of his ability to hear; he dwells in the contrite Hearts, where-ever it is moſt in the exerciſe of Contrition; which is uſually in times of ſpecial Worſhip *, and that to revive and refreſh them. Habitation notes a ſpecial Preſence; tho' he dwell in the higheſt Heavens in the ſparklings of his Glory, he dwells alſo in the loweſt Hearts in the beams of his Grace; as none can expel him from his Dwelling in Heaven, ſo none can reject him from his Reſidence in the Heart. The Tabernacle had his peculiar Preſence fixed to it *; his Soul ſhould not abhor them as they are waſhed by Chriſt, tho' they are loathſom by Sin: In a greater diſpenſation there cannot be a leſs Preſence, ſince the Church under the New Teſtament, is called the Temple of the Lord, wherein he will both dwell and walk *; Or, I will indwell in them; as if he ſhould ſay, I will dwell in and in them; I will dwell in them by Grace, and walk in them by exciting their Graces; he will be more intimate with them than their own Souls, and converſe with them as the Living God, i. e. as a God that hath Life in himſelf, and Life to convey to them in their Converſe with him; and ſhew his Spiritual Glory among them in a greater meaſure than in the Temple; ſince that was but a heap of Stones, and the figure of the Chriſtian Church, the Myſtical Body of his Son. His Preſence is not leſs in the Subſtance than it was in the Shadow; this Preſence of God in his Ordinances, is the Glory of a Church; as the Preſence of a King is the Glory of a Court; the Defence of it too, as a Wall of Fire *; alluding to the Fire Travellers in a Wilderneſs made to fright away wild Beaſts. 'Tis not the meanneſs of the Place of Worſhip can exclude him; the ſecond Temple was not ſo magnificent as the firſt of Solomon's Erecting; and the Jews ſeem to deſpond of ſo Glorious a Preſence of God in the ſecond, as they had in the firſt; becauſe they thought it not ſo good for the Entertainment of him that inhabits Eternity; but God comforts them againſt this Conceit again and again *; Be ſtrong, Be ſtrong, Be ſtrong, I am with you; the meanneſs of the Place ſhall not hinder the grandeur of my Preſence; no matter what the Room is, ſo it be the Preſence-Chamber of the King, wherein he will favour our Suits; he can every where ſlide into our Souls with a perpetual ſweetneſs, ſince he is every where, and ſo intimate with every one that fears him: If we ſhould ſee God on Earth in his amiableneſs, as Moſes did, ſhould we not be encouraged by his Preſence, to preſent our Requeſts to him, to Eccho out our Praiſes of him? And have we not as great a ground now to do it, ſince he is as really preſent with us, as if he were viſible to us? He is in the ſame Room with us, as near to us as our Souls to our Bodies; not a word but he hears, not a motion but he ſees, not a breath but he perceives; he is through all; he is in all.

4. The Omnipreſence of God is a Comfort in all ſpecial Services. God never puts any upon a hard Task, but he makes Promiſes to encourage them and aſſiſt them; and the matter of the Promiſe is that of his Preſence; ſo he did aſſure the Prophets of Old when he ſet them difficult Tasks; and ſtrengthned Moſes againſt the Face of Pharaoh, by aſſuring him he would be with his Mouth *; and when Chriſt put his Apoſtles upon a Conteſt with the whole World, to Preach a Goſpel that would be Fooliſhneſs to the Greeks, and a Stumbling-block to the Jews; he gives them a Cordial only compos'd of his Preſence *, I will be with you; 'tis this Preſence that ſcatters by its Light the darkneſs of our Spirits; 'Tis this that is the cauſe of what is done for his Glory in the World; 'tis this that mingles its ſelf with all that is done for his Honour; 'tis this from whence ſprings all the aſſiſtance of his Creatures, mark'd out for ſpecial purpoſes.

* Exod. 4. 12.

Matth. 28. 20.

5. This Preſence is not without the ſpecial Preſence of all his Attributes. Where his Eſſence is, his Perfections are; becauſe they are one with his Eſſence; yea, they are his Eſſence, tho' they have their ſeveral degrees of manifeſtation. As in the Covenant, he makes over himſelf as our God, not a part of himſelf, but his whole Deity; ſo in promiſing of his Preſence, he means not a part of it, but the whole, the Preſence of all the Excellencies of his Nature to be manifeſted for our good. 'Tis not a piece of God is here, and another parcel there; but God in his whole Eſſence and Perfections; in his Wiſdom to guide us, his Power to protect and ſupport us, his Mercy to pity us, his Fulneſs to refreſh us, and his Goodneſs to relieve us: He is ready to ſparkle out in this or that Perfection, as the neceſſities of his People require, and his own Wiſdom directs directs for his own Honour: So that being not far from us in any Excellency of his Nature, we can quickly have recourſe to him upon any emergency; ſo that if we are miſerable, we have the Preſence of his Goodneſs; if we want direction, we have the Preſence of his Wiſdom; if we are weak, we have the Preſence of his Power; and ſhould we not rejoyce in it, as a Man doth in the Preſence of a Powerful, Wealthy, and Compaſſionate Friend?

3 USE of Exhortation.

1. Let us be much in the actual Thoughts of this Truth. How ſhould we enrich our Underſtandings with the knowledge of the Excellency of God, whereof this is none of the leaſt; nor hath leſs of Honey in its Bowels, tho' it be more Terrible to the Wicked than the Preſence of a Lion; 'tis this that makes all other Excellencies of the Divine Nature ſweet: What would Grace, Wiſdom, Power ſignifie at a diſtance from us? Let us frame in our Minds a ſtrong Idea of it; 'tis this makes ſo great a difference between the Actions of one Man and another; one maintains actual thoughts of it, another doth not; tho' all believe it as a Perfection pertaining to the infiniteneſs of his Eſſence. David, or rather a greater than David, had God always before him; there was no time, no occaſion wherein he did not ſtir up ſome lively thoughts of him *. Let us have right Notions of it; imagine not God as a great King, ſitting only in his Majeſty in Heaven; acting all by his Servants and Miniſters. This, ſaith one, * is a Childiſh and unworthy conceit of God, and may in time bring ſuch a conceiver by degrees to deny his Providence; the denyal of this Perfection is an Ax at the Root of Religion; if it be not deeply imprinted in the Mind, perſonal Religion grows faint and feeble; who would fear that God that is not imagin'd to be a Witneſs of his Actions? Who would Worſhip a God at a diſtance both from the Worſhip and Worſhipper *? Let us believe this Truth, but not with an idle Faith, as if we did not believe it; Let us know, that as whereſoever the Fiſh moves, it is in the Water; whereſoever the Bird moves, it is in the Air; ſo whereſoever we move, we are in God: As there is not a moment but we are under his Mercy; ſo there is not a moment that we are out of his Preſence: Let us therefore look upon nothing, without thinking who ſtands by, without reflecting upon him in whom it Lives, Moves, and hath its Being. When you view a Man, you fix your Eyes upon his Body, but your Mind upon that inviſible part that acts every Member by life and motion, and makes them fit for your converſe. Let us not bound our thoughts to the Creatures we ſee, but pierce through the Creature to that boundleſs God we do not ſee; we have continual remembrancers of his Preſence, the Light whereby we ſee, and the Air whereby we live, give us perpetual notices of it, and ſome weak reſemblance; why ſhould we forget it? Yea, what a ſhame is our unmindfulneſs of it, when every caſt of our Eye, every motion of our Lungs, jogs us to remember it? Light is in every part of the Air, in every part of the World, yet not mixt with any, both remain entire in their own ſubſtance. Let us not be worſe than ſome of the Heathens, who preſſed this Notion upon themſelves for the ſpiriting their Actions with Vertue, That all Places were full of God: This was the means Baſil uſed to preſcribe, upon a Queſtion was ask'd him, How ſhould we do to be ſerious? Mind God's Preſence. How ſhall we avoid diſtractions in Service? Think of God's Preſence. How ſhall we reſiſt Temptations? Oppoſe to them the Preſence of God.

* Pſal. 16. 8.

* Muſculus.

* Drexel.

Omnia Dii plena.

1. This will be a Shield againſt all Temptations. God is preſent, is enough to blunt the Weapons of Hell; this will ſecure us from a ready complyance with any baſe and vile attractives, and curb that headſtrong Principle in our Nature, that would joyn hands with them; the Thoughts of this would, like the powerful Preſence of God with the Iſraelites, take off the Wheels from the Chariots of our ſenſitive Appetites, and make them, perhaps, move ſlower, at leaſt towards a Temptation. How did Peter fling off the Temptation which had worſted him, upon a look from Chriſt? The actuated Faith of this would ſtifle the Darts of Satan; and fire us with an anger againſt his ſolicitations, as ſtrong as the Fire that inflames the Darts. Moſes his Sight of him that was inviſible, ſtrengthned him againſt the coſtly Pleaſures and Luxuries of a Prince's Court *: We are utterly ſenſeleſs of a Deity, if we are not moved with this Item from our Conſciences, God is preſent. Had our firſt Parents actually conſider'd the nearneſs of God to them, when they were Tempted to Eat of the Forbidden Fruit, they had not probably ſo eaſily been overcome by the Temptation: What Soldier would be ſo baſe as to revolt under the Eye of a tender and obliging General? Or what Man ſo negligent of himſelf, as to Rob a Houſe in the Sight of a Judge? Let us conſider, That God is as near to obſerve us, as the Devil to ſolicite us, yea, nearer; the Devil ſtands by us, but God is in us, we may have a Thought the Devil knows not, but not a Thought but God is actually preſent with, as our Souls are with the Thoughts they think; nor can any Creature attract our heart, if our minds were fixed on that inviſible Preſence that contributes to that Excellency, and ſuſtains it, and conſidered that no Creature could be ſo preſent with us as the Creator is.

* Heb. 11. 27.

2. It will be a Spur to Holy Actions. What Man would do an unworthy Action, or ſpeak an unhandſome Word in the Preſence of his Prince? The Eye of the General inflames the Spirit of a Soldier. Why did David keep God's Teſtimonies *? becauſe he conſider'd that all his ways were before him; becauſe he was perſwaded his ways were preſent with God, God's Precepts ſhould be preſent with him. The ſame was the cauſe of Job's Integrity *, Doth he not ſee my ways? To have God in our Eye is the way to be ſincere *; walk before me as in my Sight, and be thou perfect. Communion with God conſiſts chiefly in an ordering our Ways as in the Preſence of him that is Inviſible. This would make us ſpiritual, rais'd, and watchful in all our Paſſions, if we conſider'd that God is preſent with us in our Shops, in our Chambers, in our Walks, and in our Meetings, as preſent with us as with the Angels in Heaven; who, tho' they have a Preſence of Glory above us, yet have not a greater meaſure of his Eſſential Preſence than we have: What an awe had Jacob upon him when he conſider'd God was preſent in Bethel *! If God ſhould appear viſibly to us when we were alone, ſhould we not be reverent and ſerious before him? God is every where about us, he doth encompaſs us with his Preſence; ſhould not God's ſeeing, have the ſame influence upon us, as our ſeeing God? He is not more Eſſentially preſent if he ſhould ſo manifeſt himſelf to us, than when he doth not: Who would appear beſmear'd in the preſence of a great Perſon? Or not be aſham'd to be found in his Chamber in a naſty poſture, by ſome Viſitant? Would not a Man bluſh to be catched about ſome mean Action, though it were not an immoral Crime? If this Truth were impreſt upon our Spirits, we ſhould more bluſh to have our Souls daub'd with ſome loathſom Luſt, ſwarms of Sin, like Egyptian Lice and Frogs, creeping about our Heart in his Sight. If the moſt ſenſual Man be aſham'd to do a diſhoneſt

Action

Action in the ſight of a grave and holy Man, one of great Reputation for Wiſdom and Integrity; how much more ſhould we lift up our ſelves in the ways of God, who is Infinite and Immenſe, is every where, and infinitely ſuperior to Man, and more to be regarded! We could not ſeriouſly think of his Preſence, but there would paſs ſome entercourſe between us; we ſhould be putting up ſome Petition upon the ſenſe of our Indigence; or ſending up our Praiſes to him upon the ſenſe of his Bounty. The actual thoughts of the Preſence of God is the Life and Spirit of all Religion; we could not have ſluggiſh Spirits, and a careleſs watch, if we conſider'd that his Eye is upon us all the day.

3. It will quell diſtractions in Worſhip. The actual thoughts of this would eſtabliſh our thoughts, and pull them back when they begin to rove; The mind could not boldly give God the ſlip, if it had lively thoughts of it; the conſideration of this would blow off all the Froth that lies on the top of our Spirits. An Eye taken up with the preſence of one Object, is not at leiſure to be fill'd with another: He that looks intently upon the Sun, ſhall have nothing for a while but the Sun in his Eye. Oppoſe to every intruding Thought the Idea of the Divine Omnipreſence, and put it to ſilence by the awe of his Majeſty. When the Maſter is preſent, Scholars mind their Books, keep their Places, and run not over the Forms to play with one another: The Maſter's Eye keeps an Idle Servant to his Work, that otherwiſe would be gazing at every Straw, and prating to every Paſſenger. How ſoon would the remembrance of this, daſh all extravagant Fancies out of Countenance, juſt as the News of the approach of a Prince would make the Courtiers buſtle up themſelves, huddle up their vain ſports, and prepare themſelves for a Reverent Behaviour in his ſight. We ſhould not dare to give God a piece of our heart, when we apprehend him preſent with the whole; we ſhould not dare to mock one that we knew were more inwards with us than we are with our ſelves, and that beheld every motion of our Mind, as well as action of our Body.

2. Let us endeavour for the more ſpecial and influential Preſence of God. Let the Eſſential Preſence of God be the ground of our Awe, and his gracious influential Preſence the Object of our Deſire. The Heathen thought themſelves ſecure if they had their little petty Houſhold-Gods with them in their Journeys; ſuch ſeem to be the Images Rachel ſtole from her Father * to accompany her Travel with their Bleſſings; ſhe might not at that time have caſt off all reſpect to thoſe Idols, in the acknowledgment of which ſhe had been Educated from her Infancy; and they ſeem to be kept by her, till God called Jacob to Bethel, after the Rape of Dinah *, when Jacob called for the ſtrange Gods, and hid them under the Oak. The gracious Preſence of God we ſhould look after in our Actions; as Travellers that have a Charge of Money or Jewels, deſire to keep themſelves in Company that may protect them from High-way-men that would rifle them. Since we have the concerns of the Eternal Happineſs of our Souls upon our hands, we ſhould endeavour to have God's Merciful and Powerful Preſence with us in all our ways *; In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he ſhall direct thy Paths; acknowledge him before any Action, by imploring; acknowledge him after, by rendring him the Glory; acknowledge his Preſence before Worſhip, in Worſhip, after Worſhip: 'Tis this Preſence makes a kind of Heaven upon Earth, cauſeth Affliction to put off the Nature of Miſery. How much will the Preſence of the Sun out-ſhine the Stars of leſſer Comforts, and fully anſwer the want of them! The Ark of God going before us, can only make all things ſucceſsful: It was this led the Iſraelites over Jordan, and ſettled them in Canaan. Without this we ſignifie nothing, tho' we live without this, we cannot be diſtinguiſh'd for ever from Devils; his Eſſential Preſence they have, and if we have no more, we ſhall be no better. 'Tis the enlivening, fructifying preſence of the Sun, that revives the languiſhing Earth; and this only can repair our ruin'd Soul. Let it be therefore our deſire, That as he fills Heaven and Earth by his Eſſence, he may fill our Underſtandings and Wills by his Grace; that we may have another kind of Preſence with us, than Animals have in their bruiſh ſtate, or Devils in their Chains: His Eſſential Preſence maintains our Beings, but his gracious Preſence confers and continues a Happineſs.

A DISCOURSE UPON God's Knowledge.

Pſal. CXLVII. ver. v.

Great is our Lord, and of great Power: his Underſtanding is Infinite.

'TIS uncertain who was the Author of this Pſalm, and when it was Penn'd; ſome think after the return from the Babyloniſh Captivity: 'Tis a Pſalm of Praiſe, and is made up of matter of Praiſe from the beginning to the end; God's benefits to the Church, his Providence over his Creatures; the Eſſential excellency of his Nature.

The Pſalmiſt doubles his Exhortation to Praiſe God, v. 1. Praiſe ye the Lord, ſing Praiſe to our God; to praiſe him from his Dominion as Lord; from his Grace and Mercy as our God; from the Excellency of the Duty it ſelf, 'tis good, 'tis comely: ſome read it comely, ſome lovely or deſirable, from the various derivation of the Word.

Nothing doth ſo much delight a gracious Soul, as an opportunity of Celebrating the Perfections and Goodneſs of the Creator.

The higheſt Duties a Creature can render to the Creator are pleaſant and delightful in themſelves, 'tis comely. Praiſe is a Duty that affects the whole Soul.

The Praiſe of God is a decent thing; the Excellency of God's Nature deſerves it, and the Benefits of God's Grace require it.

'Tis comely when done as it ought to be, with the Heart as well as with the Voice: a Sinner Sings ill tho' his Voice be good; the Soul in it is to be elevated above Earthly things.

The firſt matter of Praiſe, is God's erecting and preſerving his Church, v. 2. The Lord doth build up Jeruſalem, he gathers together the out-caſts of Iſrael: The Walls of demoliſh'd Jeruſalem are now re-edified; God hath brought back the Captivity of Jacob, and reduced his People from their Babyloniſh Exile, and thoſe that were diſperſt into ſtrange Regions, he hath reſtor'd to their Habitations. Or it may be Prophetick of the calling of the Gentiles, and the gathering the out-caſts of the Spiritual Iſrael, that were before as without God in the World, and ſtrangers to the Covenant of Promiſe. Let God be praiſed, but eſpecially for Building up his Church, and gathering the Gentiles, before counted as *out-caſts; he gathers them in this World to the Faith, and hereafter to Glory.

* Iſa. 11. 12.

Obſ. 1. From the two firſt Verſes obſerve.

1. All People are under God's Care: but he has a particular regard to his Church. This is the Signet on his hand, as a Bracelet upon his arm; this is his Garden which he delights to dreſs; if he prunes it, it is to purge it; if he Digs about his Vine, and wounds the Branches, 'tis to make it more Beautiful with new Cluſters, and reſtore it to a fruitful Vigour.

2. All great deliverances are to be aſcrib'd to God, as the principal Author, whoſoever are the Inſtruments. The Lord doth build up Jeruſalem, he gathers together the out-caſts of Iſrael. This great deliverance from Babylon, is not to be aſcrib'd to Cyrus or Darius, or the reſt of our favourers; 'tis the Lord that doth it; we had his Promiſe for it, we have now his Performance. Let us not aſcribe that which is the effect of his Truth, only to the good Will of Men; 'tis God's act, not by Might, nor by Power, nor by Weapons of War, or ſtrength of Horſes, but by the Spirit of the Lord. He ſent Prophets to Comfort us while we were exiles; and now he hath ſtretched out his own Arm to work our Deliverance, according to his Word; blind Man looks ſo much upon Inſtruments, that he hardly takes notice of God, either in Afflictions or Mercies, and this is the cauſe that robs God of ſo much Prayer and Praiſe in the World.

Verſe 3. He heals the broken in Heart, and binds up their Wounds. He hath now reſtored thoſe who had no hope but in his Word; he hath dealt with them as a tender and skilful Chirurgeon; he hath applied his curing Plaiſters, and dropped in his Sovereign Balſams; he hath now furniſh'd our fainting hearts with refreſhing Cordials, and comforted our wounds with ſtrengthning Ligatures.

How gracious is God, that reſtores Liberty to the Captives, and Righteouſneſs to the Penitent? Man's Miſery is the fitteſt opportunity for God to make his Mercy illuſtrious in it ſelf, and moſt welcome to the Patient.

He proceeds verſe 4. Wonder not that God calls together the out-caſts, and ſingles them out from every corner, for a return; why can he not do this as well as *tell the number of the Stars, and call them all by their Names? * Ver. 4.

There are none of his People ſo deſpicable in the Eye of Man, but they are known and regarded by God; tho' they are clouded in the World, yet they are the Stars of the World; and ſhall God number the inanimate Stars in the Heavens, and make no account of his living Stars on the Earth? no, where-ever they are diſperſed, he will not forget them, however they are afflicted, he will not deſpiſe them; the Stars are ſo numerous, that they are innumerable by Man; ſome are viſible and known by Men, others lie more hid and undiſcovered in a confuſed Light, as thoſe in the Milky-way, Man cannot ſee one of them diſtinctly.

God

God knows all his People. As he can do what is above the power of Man to perform, ſo he underſtands what is above the skill of Man to diſcover; ſhall Man meaſure God by his ſcantineſs? Proud Man muſt not equal himſelf to God, nor cut God as ſhort as his own Line.

He tells the number of the Stars, and calls them all by their Names. He hath them all in his Liſt; as Generals the Names of their Soldiers in their Muſter-Roll, for they are his Hoſt, which he Marſhals in the Heavens, as Iſa. 40. 26. where you have the like Expreſſion; he knows them more diſtinctly than Man can know any thing, and ſo diſtinctly as to call them all by their Names: He knows their Names, that is, their natural offices, and influences, the different degrees of heat and light, their order and motion; and all of them, the leaſt glimmering Star as well as the moſt glaring Planet; this Man cannot do; Tell the Stars if thou be able to number them, Gen. 15. 5. ſaith God to Abraham (whom Joſephus repreſents as a great Aſtronomer) yea they cannot be numbr'd, Jer. 33. 22. and the uncertainty of the Opinions of Men, evidenceth their ignorance of their number; ſome reckoning 1022, others 1025, others 1098, others 7000, beſides thoſe that by reaſon of their mixture of Light with one another, cannot be diſtinctly diſcern'd, and others perhaps ſo high, as not to be reach'd by the Eye of Man. To impoſe Names on things, and Names according to their Natures, is both an Argument of Power and Dominion, and of Wiſdom and Underſtanding: from the impoſition of Names upon the Creatures by Adam, the Knowledge of Adam is generally concluded; and it was alſo a fruit of that Dominion God allowed him over the Creatures. Now he that Numbers and Names the Stars that ſeem to lie confus'd among one another, as well as thoſe that appear to us in an unclouded Night, may well be ſuppos'd accurately to know his People, tho' lurking in ſecret Caverns, and know thoſe that are fit to be Inſtruments of their deliverance; the one is as eaſie to him as the other; and the number of the one as diſtinctly known by him, as the multitude of the other.

For great is our Lord, and of great Power, his Underſtanding is Infinite *. He wants not Knowledge to know the objects, nor Power to effect his Will concerning them. Of great Power *. Much power, plenteous in Power; ſo the Word רב is rendred Pſal. 5. 15.*. A multitude of Power, as well as a multitude of Mercy; a Power that exceeds all Created Power and Underſtanding.

* Ver. 5.

רב חסד

His Underſtanding is infinite. You may not imagine how he can call all the Stars by Name; the multitude of viſible being ſo great, and the multitude of the inviſible being greater; but you muſt know, that as God is Almighty, ſo he is Omniſcient; and as there is no end of his Power, ſo no account can exactly be given of his Underſtanding; His Underſtanding is Infinite. No number or account of it; and ſo the ſame Words are rendred, Joel 1. 6. A Nation ſtrong, and without number: No end of his underſtanding; Syriack, no meaſure, no bounds *. His Eſſence is infinite, and ſo is his Power and Underſtanding; and vaſt is his Knowledge, that we can no more comprehend it, than we can meaſure ſpaces that are without limits, or tell the minutes or hours of Eternity. Who then can fathom that whereof there is no number, but which exceeds all, that there is no ſearching of it out *? He knows Univerſals, he knows Particulars: We muſt not take underſtanding here, as noting a Faculty, but the uſe of the underſtanding in the knowledge of things, and the Judgment in the conſideration of them, and ſo it is often uſed.

3. In his Knowledge, his Underſtanding is infinite; his Underſtanding is his Eye, and his Power is his Arm. Of his Infinite Underſtanding, I am to Diſcourſe.

Doctrine. God hath an Infinite Knowledge and Underſtanding. All Knowledge. Omnipreſence which before we ſpake of, reſpects his Eſſence; Omniſcience, reſpects his Underſtanding, according to our manner of Conception.

This is clear in Scripture; hence God is called a God of Knowledge, 1 Sam. 2. 3. The Lord is a God of Knowledge, Heb. Knowledges in the Plural Number, of all kind of Knowledge; 'tis ſpoken there to quell Man's Pride in his own reaſon and parts; what is the Knowledge of Man but a ſpark to the whole Element of Fire, a grain of Duſt, and worſe than nothing, in compariſon of the Knowledge of God, as his Eſſence is in compariſon of the Eſſence of God? All kind of Knowledge. He knows what Angels know, what Man knows, and infinitely more; he knows himſelf, his own operations, all his Creatures, the Notions and Thoughts of them; he is underſtanding above underſtanding, mind above mind, the mind of minds, the light of lights; this the Greek word Θεὸς ſignifies in the Etymology of it, of Θεάω to ſee, to contemplate; and δαίμων of δαίω ſcio. The Names of God ſignifie a nature viewing and piercing all things; and the attribution of our ſenſes to God in Scripture, as Hearing and Seeing, which are the Senſes whereby knowledge enters into us, ſignifies God's Knowledge.

1. The Notion of God's Knowledge of all things lies above the ruines of Nature; it was not obliterated by the Fall of Man. It was neceſſary offending Man was to know that he had a Creator whom he had injured, that he had a Judge to Try and Puniſh him; ſince God thought fit to keep up the World, it had been kept up to no purpoſe, had not this notion been continued alive in the minds of Men; there would not have been any practice of his Laws, no bar to the worſt of Crimes. If Men had thought they had to deal with an Ignorant Deity, there could be no practice of Religion. Who would lift up his eyes, or ſpread his hand towards Heaven, if he imagin'd his Devotion were directed to a God as blind as the Heathens imagin'd Fortune? To what boot would it be for them to make Heaven and Earth reſound with their Cries, if they had not thought God had an Eye to ſee them, and an Ear to hear them? And indeed the very notion of a God at the firſt bluſh, ſpeaks him a being endued with Underſtanding; no Man can imagine a Creator void of one of the nobleſt perfections belonging to thoſe Creatures that are the Flower and Cream of his Works.

2. Therefore all Nations acknowledge this, as well as the Exiſtence and Being of God. No Nation but had their Temples, particular Ceremonies of Worſhip, and preſented their Sacrifices, which they could not have been ſo vain as to do, without an acknowledgement of this Attribute. This notion of God's Knowledge owed not its riſe to Tradition, but to natural implantation; it was born and grew up with every rational Creature. Though the ſeveral Nations and Men of the World agreed not in one kind of Deity, or in their Sentiments of his Nature or other Perfections, ſome judging him Cloathed with a fine and pure Body; others judging him an uncompounded Spirit; ſome fixing him to a ſeat in the Heavens; others owning his Univerſal Preſence in all parts of the World; yet they all agreed in the Univerſality of his Knowledge; and their own Conſciences reflecting their Crimes, unknown to any but themſelves, would keep this notion in ſome vigour whether ther they would or no. Now this being implanted in the minds of all Men by nature, cannot be false; for nature imprints not in the minds of all Men an assent to a falsity. Nature would not pervert the reason and minds of Men: Universal notions of God are from Original, not lapsed Nature, and preserved in Mankind in order to a restoration from a lapsed State. The Heathens did acknowledge this: in all the solemn Covenants, solemniz'd with Oaths and the Invocation of the Name of God, this Attribute was suppos'd. They confest knowledge to be peculiar to the Deity; Scientia Deorum vita, saith Cicero. Some called him Νῦς, Mens, Mind, pure understanding, without any more, Ἐπόπτης, the inspector of all. As they called him Life, because he was the Author of Life? so they called him Intellectus, because he was the Author of all Knowledge and Understanding in his Creatures? And one being ask'd, Whether any Man could be hid from God? No saith he, not so much as thinking: Some call him the Eye of the World*; and the Egyptians represented God by an Eye on the top of a Scepter, because God is all Eye, and can be ignorant of nothing.

Agamemnon, Homer I. 3. v. 8. making a Covenant with Priam invocates the Sun' Ηελίος ὃς πάντ' ἐφορᾷς καὶ πάντ' ἐπακούεις.

* Gamach in 1 Pa. Aqui. Q. 14. cap. 1. p. 119. Clem. Alex. and Sroom. lib. 6.

And the same Nation made Eyes and Ears of the most excellent Metals, Consecrating them to God, and hanging them up in the midst of their Temples, in signification of God's Seeing and Hearing all things; hence they called God Light, as well as the Scripture, because all things are visible to him.

For the better understanding of this, we will inquire,

1. What kind of Knowledge or Understanding there is in God.
2. What God knows.
3. How God knows things.
4. The proof, that God knows all things.
5. The Use of all to our selves.

I. What kind of Understanding or Knowledge there is in God?

The Knowledge of God in Scripture hath various Names, according to the various relations or objects of it: In respect of present things, 'tis called Knowledge or Sight, in respect of things past, Remembrance; in respect of things future, or to come, 'tis called Fore-Knowledge or Prescience. 1 Pet. 1. 2. In regard of the Universality of the Objects, it is called Omniscience; in regard of the simple Understanding of things 'tis called Knowledge; in regard of acting and modelling the ways of acting, 'tis called Wisdom and Prudence, Eph. 1. 8. He must have Knowledge, otherwise he could not be Wise; Wisdom is the Flower of Knowledge, and Knowledge is the Root of Wisdom.

As to what this Knowledge is; if we know what Knowledge is in Man, we may apprehend what it is in God, removing all Imperfection from it, and ascribing to him the most eminent way of understanding; because we cannot comprehend God, but as he is pleased to condescend to us in his own ways of discovery; that is, under some way of similitude to his perfectest Creatures; therefore we have a notion of God by his Understanding and Will; Understanding, whereby he conceives and apprehends things; Will, whereby he extends himself in acting according to his Wisdom, and whereby he doth approve or disapprove: Yet we must not measure his Understanding by our own, or think it to be of so gross a Temper as a Created mind; that he hath Eyes of flesh, or sees or knows *as Man sees. We can no more measure his Knowledge by ours, than we can measure his Essence by our Essence: As he hath an incomprehensible Essence, to which ours is but as a drop of a Bucket; so he hath an incomprehensible Knowledge, to which ours it but as a grain of Dust, or meer Darkness: His thoughts are above our thoughts, as the Heavens are above the Earth.

* Job 10. 4.

The Knowledge of God is variously divided by the Schools, and acknowledg'd by all Divines.

1. A Knowledge visionis & simplicis intelligentiæ; the one we may call Sight, the other an Understanding; the one refers to sense, the other to the mind.

1. A Knowledge of Vision or Sight; Thus God knows himself and all things that really were, are, or shall be in time; all those things which he hath Decreed to be, tho' they are not yet actually sprung up in the World, but lie couchant in their Causes.

2. A Knowledge of Intelligence, or simple Understanding; the object of this is not things that are in being, or that shall by any Decree of God ever be existent in the World; but such things as are possible to be wrought by the Power of God, tho' they shall never in the least peep up into Being, but lie for ever wrapt up in Darkness and Nothing*. This also is a necessary knowledge to be allowed to God, because the object of this Knowledge is necessary. The possibility of more Creatures than ever were or shall be, is a conclusion that hath a necessary Truth in it; as it is necessary that the Power of God can produce more Creatures, tho' it be not necessary that it should produce more Creatures; so it is necessary that whatsoever the Power of God can work, is possible to be. And as God knows this possibility so he knows all the objects that are thus possible; and herein doth much consist the Infiniteness of his knowledge, as shall be shewn presently.

* Suarez de Deo lib. 3. cap. 4. p. 230.

These two kinds of Knowledge differ: That of Vision, is of things which God hath Decreed to be, tho' they are not yet. That of Intelligence, is of things which never shall be; yet they may be, or are possible to be, if God please to Will and Order their Being; one respects things that shall be; the other, things that may be, and are not repugnant to the nature of God to be: The Knowledge of Vision follows the Act of God's Will, and supposeth an act of God's Will before, Decreeing things to be. (If we could suppose any first or second in God's Decree, we might say God knew them as possible before he decreed them; he knew them as future because he Decreed them.) For without the Will of God Decreeing a thing to come to pass, God cannot know that it will infallibly come to pass. But the Knowledge of Intelligence stands without any Act of his Will, in order to the being of those things he knows; he knows possible things only in his Power; he knows other things both in his Power, as able to effect them; and in his Will, as determining the Being of them; such knowledge we must grant to be in God, for there is such a kind of knowledge in Man; for Man doth not only know and see what is before his Eyes in this World, but he may have a conception of many more Worlds, and many more Creatures, which he knows are possible to the Power of God.

2. Secondly, There is a speculative and practical knowledge in God.

1. A speculative knowledge is, when the truth of a thing is known without a respect to any working or practical operation. The knowledge of things possible is in God only speculative, * and some say God's knowledge of himself, is only speculative, because there is nothing for God to work in himself: And tho' he knows himself, yet this knowledge of himself doth not terminate there, but flowers into a love of himself, and delight in himself; yet this love of himself, and delight in himself, is not enough to make it a practical knowledge, because it is natural, and naturally and necessarily flows from the knowledge of himself and his own Goodness: He cannot but love himself, and delight in himself, upon the knowledge of himself. But that which is properly practice, is where there is a dominion over the action, and it is wrought not naturally and necessarily,

* Suarez de Deo lib. 3. cap. 4. p. 138.

but in a way of Freedom and Counsel. As when we see a beautiful Flower or other thing, there ariseth a delight in the mind; this no Man will call Practice, because it is a natural affection of the Will, arising from the vertue of the object, without any consideration of the Understanding in a practical manner by counselling, commanding, &c.

2. A Practical knowledge, which tends to operation and practice, and is the principle of working about things that are known; as the knowledge an Artificer hath in an Art or Mystery. This knowledge is in God: The knowledge he hath of the things he hath Decreed, is such a kind of knowledge; for it terminates in the act of Creation, which is not a natural and necessary act, as the loving himself, and delighting in himself is, but wholly free: For it was at his liberty whether he would create them or no; this is called discretion, Jer. 10. 12. He hath stretched out the heavens by his discretion. Such also is his knowledge of the things he hath created, and which are in being, for it terminates in the government of them for his own glorious ends. 'Tis by this knowledge the depths are broken up, and the clouds drop down their dew *. This is a knowledge whereby he knows the essence, qualities, and properties of what he creates and governs in order to his own Glory, and the common good of the World over which he resides; so that speculative knowledge is God's knowledge of himself and things possible; practical knowledge is his knowledge of his creatures and things governable; yet in some sort this practical knowledge is not only of things that are made, but of things which are possible, which God might make, tho' he will not: For as he knows that they can be created, so he knows how they are to be created, and how to be governed, tho' he never will create them. This is a practical knowledge: For it is not requisite to constitute a practical knowledge, actually to act, but that the knowledge in it self be referrible to action *.

* Prov. 3. 20.

* Suarez de Deo l. 3. cap. 4. p. 140.

3. There is a knowledge of approbation, as well as apprehension. This the Scripture often mentions: Words of understanding are used to signifie the acts of affection. This knowledge adds to the simple act of the understanding, the complacency and pleasure of the will; and is improperly knowledge, because it belongs to the Will, and not to the Understanding; only it is radically in the understanding, because affection implies knowledge; Men cannot approve of that which they are ignorant of. Thus knowledge is taken, Amos 3. 2. You only have I known of all the families of the Earth. And 2 Tim. 2. 19. The Lord knows who are his, that is, he loves them, he doth not only know them, but acknowledge them for his own: It notes not only an exact understanding, but a special care of them; and so is that to be understood, Gen. 1. God saw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good: That is, he saw it with an eye of approbation, as well as apprehension. This is grounded upon God's knowledge of Vision, his sight of his Creatures; for God doth not love or delight in any thing but what is actually in being, or what he hath decreed to bring into being. On the contrary also, when God doth not approve, he is said not to know, Mat. 25. 12. I know you not: And Mat. 7. 23. I never knew you: He doth not approve of their Works: 'tis not an ignorance of Understanding, but an ignorance of Will; for whiles he saith he never knew them, he testifies that he did know them, in rendring the reason of his disapproving them, because he knows all their Works: So he knows them, and doth not know them, in a different manner: He knows them so as to understand them; but he doth not know them so as to love them.

We must then ascribe an universal knowledge to God. If we deny him a speculative knowledge, or knowledge of intelligence, we destroy his Deity, we make him ignorant of his own Power: If we deny him practical knowledge, we deny our selves to be his Creatures: For as his creatures, we are the fruits of this his discretion discovered in Creation: If we deny his knowledge of Vision, we deny his governing Dominion. How can he exercise a sovereign and Uncontroulable Dominion, that is ignorant of the nature and qualities of the things he is to govern? If he had not Knowledge he could make no Revelation; he that knows not, cannot dictate; we could then have no Scripture. To deny God knowledge, is to dash out the Scripture, and demolish the Deity.

God is describ'd in Zech. 3. 9. With seven eyes, to shew his perfect Knowledge of all things, all occurrences in the World; and the Cherubims, or whatsoever is meant by the Wings, are described to be full of eyes, both before and behind *, round about them; much more is God all Eye, all Ear, all Understanding. The Sun is a natural Image of God if the Sun had an Eye, it would see; if it had an Understanding, it would know all visible things; it would see what it shines upon, and understand what it influenceth in the most obscure Powels of the Earth. Doth God excel his Creature the Sun in Excellency and Beauty, and not in Light and Understanding? Certainly more than the Sun excels an Atome or grain of Dust.

* Ezek. 1. 18.

We may yet make some representation of this Knowledge of God by a lower thing, a Picture, which seems to look upon every one, tho' there be never so great a multitude in the Room where it hangs; no Man can cast his Eye upon it, but it seems to behold him in particular, and so exactly as if there were none but him, upon whom the eye of it were fixt; and every Man finds the same cast of it; shall Art frame a thing of that nature, and shall not the God of Art and all Knowledge be much more in reality than that is in imagination? Shall not God have a far greater capacity to behold every thing in the World, which is infinitely less to him than a wide Room to Picture?

II. The second thing, What God knows? How far his understanding reaches?

1. God knows himself, and only knows himself. This is the first and original knowledge, wherein he excels all Creatures: No Man doth exactly know himself; much less doth he understand the full nature of a Spirit; much less still the Nature and Perfections of God; for what proportion can there be between a finite faculty and an infinite object? Herein consists the infiniteness of God's Knowledge, that he knows his own Essence, that he knows that which is unknowable to any else. It doth not so much consist in knowing the Creature which he hath made, as in knowing himself who was never made. 'Tis not so much infinite, because he knows all things which are in the World, or that shall be; or things that he can make, because the number of them is finite; but because he hath a perfect and comprehensive knowledge of his own infinite Perfections *. Tho' it be said that Angels see his Face, Matth. 18. 10. that sight notes rather their immediate Attendance, than their exact Knowledge; they see some signs of his Presence and Majesty, more illustrious and express than ever appear'd to Man in this Life; but the Essence of God is invisible to them, hid from them in the secret place of Eternity; none knows God but himself, 1 Cor. 2. 11. What Man knows the things of a Man save the spirit of a Man? So the things of God knows no Man but the spirit of God; the spirit of God searches the deep things of God; searcheth, that is, exactly knows, thoroughly understands, as those who have their eyes in every Chink and Crevice, to see what lies hid there; the word ſearch, notes not an Enquiry, but an exact Knowledge, ſuch as Men have of things upon a diligent ſcrutiny; as when God is ſaid to ſearch the Heart and the Reins, it doth not ſignifie a precedent Ignorance, but an exact Knowledge of the moſt intimate Corners of the Hearts of Men. As the Conceptions of Men are unknown to any but themſelves; ſo the Depths of the Divine Eſſence, Perfections and Decrees, are unknown to any but to God himſelf; he only knows what he is, and what he knows, what he can do, and what he hath Decreed to do.

1. For firſt, If God did not know himſelf, he would not be perfect. 'Tis the Perfection of a Creature to know it ſelf, much more a Perfection belonging to God. If God did not comprehend himſelf, he would want an Infinite Perfection, and ſo would ceaſe to be God, in being defective in that which intellectual Creatures in ſome meaſure poſſeſs. As God is the moſt perfect Being, ſo he muſt have the moſt perfect Underſtanding: If he did not underſtand himſelf, he would be under the greateſt Ignorance, becauſe he would be ignorant of the moſt excellent Object. Ignorance is the Imperfection of the Underſtanding; and Ignorance of ones ſelf is a greater Imperfection than ignorance of things without. If God ſhould know all things without himſelf, and not know himſelf, he would not have the moſt perfect Knowledge, becauſe he would not have the knowledge of the beſt of Objects.

2. Without the Knowledge of himſelf, he could not be bleſſed. Nothing can have any complacency in it ſelf, without the Knowledge of it ſelf. Nothing can in a rational manner enjoy it ſelf, without underſtanding it ſelf. The Bleſſedneſs of God conſiſts not in the knowledge of any thing without him, but in the knowledge of himſelf and his own Excellency, as the Principle of all things: If therefore he did not perfectly know himſelf and his own happineſs, he could not enjoy a happineſs; for to be, and not know to be, is as if a thing were not. He is God bleſſed for ever, Rom. 9. 5. And therefore for ever had a Knowledge of himſelf.

3. Without the Knowledge of himſelf, he could Create nothing. For he would be ignorant of his own Power, and his own Ability; and he that doth not know how far his Power extends, could not act: If he did not know himſelf, he could know nothing; and he that knows nothing, can do nothing: He could not know an Effect to be poſſible to him, unleſs he knew his own Power as a cauſe.

4. Without the Knowledge of himſelf, he could govern nothing. He could not without the knowledge of his own Holineſs and Righteouſneſs, preſcribe Laws to Men, nor without a knowledge of his own Nature, order himſelf a manner of Worſhip ſuitable to it.

All Worſhip muſt be congruous to the Dignity and Nature of the Object worſhipped; he muſt therefore know his own Authority, whereby Worſhip was to be enacted; his own Excellency, to which Worſhip was to be ſuited; his own Glory, to which Worſhip was to be directed. If he did not know himſelf, he did not know what to puniſh, becauſe he would not know what was contrary to himſelf: Not knowing himſelf, he would not know what was a Contempt of him, and what an Adoration of him; what was worthy of God, and what was unworthy of him. In fine, he could not know other things, unleſs he knew himſelf: Unleſs he knew his own Power, he could not know how he created things: Unleſs he knew his own Wiſdom, he could not know the beauty of his Works: Unleſs he knew his own Glory, he could not know the end of his Works: Unleſs he knew his own Holineſs, he could not know what was Evil: And unleſs he knew his own Juſtice, he could not know how to puniſh the Crimes of his offending Creatures. And therefore,

1. God knows himſelf, becauſe his Knowledge with his Will is the cauſe of all other things that can fall under his cognizance: He knows himſelf firſt, before he can know any other thing; that is, firſt according to our conceptions; for indeed God knows himſelf and all other things at once; He is the firſt Truth, and therefore is the firſt Object of his own Underſtanding. There is nothing more excellent than himſelf, and therefore nothing more known to him than himſelf. As he is all Knowledge, ſo he hath in himſelf the moſt excellent Object of Knowledge. To underſtand is properly to know ones ſelf. No Object is ſo intelligible to God as God is to himſelf; nor ſo intimately and immediately joyned with his Underſtanding as himſelf: For his Underſtanding is his Eſſence, himſelf.

2. He knows himſelf by his own Eſſence. He knows not himſelf and his own Power, by the Effect, becauſe he knows himſelf from Eternity, before there was a World, or any effect of his Power extant. 'Tis not a Knowledge by the Cauſe, for God hath no Cauſe; nor a Knowledge of himſelf by any ſpecies or any thing from without: If it were any thing from without himſelf, that muſt be created or uncreated; if uncreated, it would be God; and ſo we muſt either own many Gods, or own it to be his Eſſence, and ſo not diſtinct from himſelf: If created, then his knowledge of himſelf would depend upon a Creature; he could not then know himſelf from Eternity, but in time, becauſe nothing can be created from Eternity, but in time. God knows not himſelf by any Faculty, for there is no compoſition in God, he is not made up of parts, but is a ſimple Being; ſome therefore have called God, not intellectus, Underſtanding, becauſe that ſavours of a Faculty; but intellectio, Intellection. God is all act in the knowledge of himſelf, and his knowledge of other things.

3. God therefore knows himſelf perfectly, comprehenſively. Nothing in his own Nature is concealed from him, he reflects upon every thing that he is *. There is a poſitive comprehenſion, ſo God doth not comprehend himſelf; for what is comprehended, hath bounds; and what is comprehended by it ſelf, is finite to it ſelf: And there is a negative comprehenſion, God ſo comprehends himſelf; nothing in his own Nature is obſcure to him, unknown by him. For there is as great a perfection in the Underſtanding of God to know, as there is in the Divine Nature to be known. The Underſtanding of God, and the Nature of God, are both Infinite, and ſo equal to one another; his Underſtanding is equal to himſelf; he knows himſelf ſo well, that nothing can be known by him more perfectly, than himſelf is known to himſelf. He knows himſelf in the higheſt manner, becauſe nothing is ſo proportion'd to the Underſtanding of God as himſelf: He knows his own Eſſence, Goodneſs, Power, all his Perfections, Decrees, Intentions, Acts, the infinite capacity of his own Underſtanding, ſo that nothing of himſelf is in the dark to himſelf. And in this reſpect ſome uſe this Expreſſion, that the Infiniteneſs of God is in a manner finite to himſelf, becauſe it is comprehended by himſelf.

* Magnus.

Thus God tranſcends all Creatures; thus his Underſtanding is truly Infinite, becauſe nothing but himſelf is an infinite Object for it: What Angels may underſtand of themſelves perfectly, I know not; but no Creature in the World underſtands himſelf: Man underſtands not fully the Excellency and Parts of his own Nature: upon God's Knowledge of himſelf depends the Comfort of his People, and the

Terror

Terror of the Wicked; this is also a clear Argument for his Knowledge of all other things, without himself; he that knows himself, must needs know all other things less than himself, and which were made by himself: When the Knowledge of his own Immensity and Infiniteness is not an Object too difficult for him; the Knowledge of a finite and limited Creature in all his Actions, Thoughts, Circumstances, cannot be too hard for him. Since he knows himself who is Infinite, he cannot but know whatsoever is Finite; this is the Foundation of all his other Knowledge; the Knowledge of every thing present, past, and to come, is far less than the Knowledge of himself. He is more incomprehensible in his own Nature, than all things created, or that can be created, put together can be: If he then have a perfect comprehensive Knowledge of his own Nature, any Knowledge of all other things is less than the Knowledge of himself; this ought to be well considered by us, as the Fountain whence all his other Knowledge flows.

2. Therefore God knows all other things, whether they be possible, past, present, or future.

Whether they be things that he can do, but will never do; or whether they be things that he hath done, but are not now; things that are now in being, or things that are not now existing, that lie in the Womb of their proper and immediate Causes *; If his Understanding be Infinite, he then knows all things whatsoever that can be known, else his Understanding would have Bounds, and what hath Limits is not infinite, but finite; if he be ignorant of any one thing that is knowable, that is a bound to him, it comes with an Exception, a but, God knows all things but this, a Bar is then set to his Knowledge. If there were any thing, any particular Circumstance in the whole Creation, or Non-Creation, and possible to be known by him, and yet were unknown to him, he could not be said to be Omniscient. As he would not be Almighty, if any one thing that implyed not a repugnancy to his Nature, did transscend his Power.

* Petav. Theol. Dogm. lib. 9. 257.

1. First, all things possible. No Question but God knows what he could create, as well as what he hath created: What he would not create, as well as what he resolved to create; he knew what he would not do, before he willed to do it; this is the next thing which declares the Infiniteness of his Understanding: For as his Power is infinite, and can create innumerable Worlds and Creatures; so is his Knowledge infinite, in knowing innumerable things possible to his Power. Possibles are infinite; that is, there is no end of what God can do, and therefore no end of what God doth know; otherwise his Power would be more Infinite than his Knowledge: If he knew only what is created, there would be an end of his Understanding, because all Creatures may be numbred, but possible things cannot be reckoned up by any Creature: There is the same reason of this in Eternity; when never so many Numbers of Years are run out, there is still more to come, there still wants an end; and when Millions of Worlds are created, there is no more an end of God's Power, than of Eternity: Thus there is no end of his Understanding; that is, his Knowledge is not terminated by any thing.

This the Scripture gives us some accompt of; God knows things that are not, for he calls things that are not, as if they were, Rom 4. 17. He calls things that are not, as if they were in Being; what he calls is not unknown to him: If he knows things that are not, he knows things that may never be; as he knows things that shall be, because he Wills them; so he knows things that might be, because he is able to effect them: He knew that the Inhabitants of Kelah would betray David to Saul, if he remained in that place, 1 Sam. 23. 11. He knew what they would do upon that occasion, tho' it was never done; as he knew what was in their Power and in their Wills, so he must needs know what is within the compass of his own Power: As he can permit more than he doth permit; so he knows what he can permit, and what upon that Permission would be done by his Creatures; so God knew the possibility of the Tyrians Repentance, if they had the same Means, heard the same Truths, and beheld the Miracles which were offer'd to the Ears, and presented to the Eyes of the Jews, Matth. 11. 21.

This must needs be so, because,

1. Man knows things that are possible to him, tho' he will never effect them. A Carpenter knows a House in the model he hath of it in his Head, tho' he never build a House according to that model: A Watchmaker hath the frame of a Watch in his Mind, which he will never work with his Instruments: Man knows what he could do, tho' he never intends to do it. * As the Understanding of Man hath a Vertue, that where it sees one Man, it may imagine Thousands of Men of the same shape, stature, form, parts; yea taller, more vigorous, spritely, intelligent than the Man he sees; because it is possible such a Number may be. Shall not the Understanding of God much more know what he is able to effect, since the Understanding of Man can know what he is never able to produce, yet may be produced by God, viz. That he who produced this Man which I see, can produce a Thousand exactly like him? If the Divine Understanding did not know infinite things, but were confin'd to a certain Number; it may be demanded whether God can understand any thing farther than that Number, or whether he cannot? If he can, then he doth actually understand all those things which he hath a Power to understand: Otherwise there would be an increase of God's Knowledge, if it were actually now, and not before, and so he would be more perfect than he was before; if he cannot understand them, then he cannot understand what a human Mind can understand; for our Understandings can multiply Numbers in infinitum; and there is no Number so great, but a Man can still add to it: We must suppose the Divine Understanding more excellent in Knowledge. God knows all that a Man can imagine, tho' it never were, nor never shall be; he must needs know whatsoever is in the Power of Man to imagine or think, because God concurs to the support of the Faculty in that Imagination, and tho' it may be replied, an Atheist may imagine that there is no God; a Man may imagine that God can Lye, or that he can be destroy'd: doth God know therefore that he is not? Or that he can Lye, or cease to be? No, he knows he cannot! his Knowledge extends to things possible, not to things impossible to himself; he knows it as imaginable by man, not as possible in it self, because 'tis utterly impossible, and repugnant to the Nature of God, since he eminently contains in himself all things possible, past, present, and to come; he cannot know himself without knowing them.

* Ficin de immort. lib. 2. cap. 10.

Gamach.

2. God knowing his own Power, knows whatsoever is in his Power to effect. If he knows not all things possible, he could not know the extent of his own Power, and so would not know himself, as a Cause sufficient for more things than he hath created: How can he comprehend himself, who comprehends not all effluxes of things possible that may come from him and be wrought by him? How can he know himself as a Cause, if he know not the Objects and Works which he is able to produce *? Since the Power of God extends to numberless things, his Knowledge alſo extends to numberleſs objects; as if a Unite could ſee the numbers it could produce, it would ſee Infinite numbers; for a Unite is, as it were, all number. God knowing the fruitfulneſs of his own Vertue, knows a numberleſs multitude of things which he can do, more than have been done, or ſhall be done by him; he therefore knows innumerable Worlds, innumerable Angels, with higher Perfections than any of them which he hath Created, have: So that if the World ſhould laſt many Millions of Years, God knows that he can every Day create another World more capacious than this; and having created an unconceivable Number, he knows he could ſtill create more: So that he beholds infinite Worlds, infinite Numbers of Men and other Creatures in himſelf, infinite kinds of things, infinite Species and Individuals, under thoſe kinds, even as many as he can create, if his Will did order and determine it; for not being ignorant of his own Power, he cannot be ignorant of the Effects wherein it may diſplay and diſcover it ſelf. A comprehenſive Knowledge of his own Power, doth neceſſarily include the Objects of that Power; ſo he knows whatſoever he could effect, and whatſoever he could permit, if he pleaſed to do it.

* Ficin: de immort. lib. 2 cap. 10.

If God could not underſtand more than he hath created, he could not create more than he hath created: For it cannot be conceiv'd how he can create any thing that he is ignorant of; what he doth not know, he cannot do: He muſt know alſo the extent of his own goodneſs, and how far any thing is capable to partake of it: ſo much therefore as any detract from the Knowledge of God, they detract from his Power.

3. 'Tis further evident that God knows all poſſible things, becauſe he knew thoſe things which he has created, before they were created, when they were yet in a poſſibility. If God knew things before they were created, he knew them when they were in a poſſibility, and not in actual reality. 'Tis abſurd to imagine that his Underſtanding did lacquey after the Creatures, and draw knowledge from them after they were created. 'Tis abſurd to think that God did create, before he knew what he could or would create. If he knew thoſe things he did create when they were poſſible, he muſt know all things which he can create, and therefore all things that are poſſible.

To conclude this, We muſt conſider that this Knowledge is of another kind than his knowledge of things that are or ſhall be. He ſees poſſible things as poſſible, not as things that ever are or ſhall be. If he ſaw them as exiſting or future, and they ſhall never be, this knowledge would be falſe, there would be a deceit in it, which cannot be. He knows thoſe things not in themſelves, becauſe they are not, nor in their cauſes becauſe they ſhall never be: he knows them in his own Power, not in his Will: He underſtands them as able to produce them, not as willing to effect them. Things poſſible he knows only in his Power, things future he knows both in his Power and his Will, as he is both able and determin'd in his own good pleaſure to give being to them. Thoſe that ſhall never come to paſs, he knows only in himſelf, as a ſufficient cauſe; thoſe things that ſhall come into being, he knows in himſelf as the efficient cauſe, and alſo in their immediate ſecond cauſes.

This ſhould teach us to ſpend our thoughts in the admirations of the excellency of God, and the divine Knowledge; his Underſtanding is infinite.

2. God knows all things paſt. This is an argument uſed by God himſelf to elevate his Excellency above all the commonly adored Idols, Iſa. 41. 22. Let them ſhew the former things, what they be, that we may conſider them, and know the latter end of them. He knows them as if they were now preſent, and not paſt: for indeed in his Eternity there is nothing paſt or future to his knowledge. This is called remembrance in Scripture, as when God remembred Rachel's Prayer for a Child, Gen. 30 22. and he is ſaid to put tears into his bottle, and write them in his Book of Accompts, which ſignifies the exact and unerring knowledge in God of the minute circumſtances paſt in the World; and this knowledge is called a book of remembrance, Mal. 3. 16. ſignifying the perpetual preſence of things paſt, before him. There are two elegant expreſſions ſignifying the certainty and perpetuity of God's knowledge of ſins paſt. Job 14. 17. My tranſgreſſion is ſealed up in a bag, and thou ſoweſt up my iniquity. A Metaphor taken from Men that put up in a Bag the Money they would charily keep, tye the Bag, ſow up the holes, and bind it hard that nothing may fall out; or a Veſſel wherein they reſerve Liquors, and daub it with Pitch and glutinous ſtuff, that nothing may leak out, but be ſafely kept till the time of uſe. Or elſe, as ſome think, from the Bags Attorneys carry with them, full of Writings, when they are to manage a Cauſe againſt a Perſon. Thus we find God often in Scripture calling to Mens minds their paſt actions, upbraiding them with their ingratitude, wherein he teſtifies his remembrance of his own paſt benefits, and their Crimes. His knowledge in this regard hath ſomething of infinity in it, ſince tho' the ſins of all Men that have been in the World are finite in regard of number, yet when the ſins of one Man in thoughts, words, and deeds, are numberleſs in his own account, and perhaps in the account of any creature, the ſins of all the vaſt numbers of Men that have been, or ſhall be, are much more numberleſs, it cannot be leſs than infinite knowledge that can make a collection of them, and take a ſurvey of them all at once.

If paſt things had not been known by God, how could Moſes have been acquainted with the Original of things? How could he have declared the former Tranſactions, wherein all Hiſtories are ſilent but the Scripture? How could he know the cauſe of Man's preſent Miſery ſo many Ages after, wherewith all Philoſophy was unacquainted? How could he have writ the order of the Creation, the particulars of the ſin of Adam, the circumſtances of Cain's Murder, the private Speech of Lamech to his Wives, if God had not revealed them? And how could a Revelation be made, if things paſt were forgotten by him? Do we not remember many things done among Men, as well as by our ſelves, and reſerve the forms of divers things in our minds, which riſe as occaſions are preſented to draw them forth? And ſhall not God much more, who hath no cloud of darkneſs upon his Underſtanding? A Man that makes a curious Picture, hath the form of it in his mind before he made it; and if the Fire burn it; the form of it in his mind is not deſtroyed by the Fire, but retained in it. God's Memory is no leſs perfect than his Underſtanding: If he did not know things paſt, he could not be a righteous Governour, or exerciſe any judicial act in a righteous manner; he could not diſpenſe Rewards and Puniſhments according to his promiſes and threatnings, if things that were paſt could be forgotten by him; he could not require that which is paſt *, if he did not remember that which is paſt.

* Eccleſ. 3. 15.

And tho' God be ſaid to forget in Scripture, and not to know his People, and his People pray to him to remember them, as if he had forgotten them *: This is improperly aſcrib'd to God *. As God is ſaid to repent, when he changes things according to his Counſel beyond the expectation of Men; ſo he is ſaid to forget, when he deferrs the making good his Promiſe to the Godly, or his Threatnings to the Wicked;

* Pſal. 119 49.
* Brad-ward.

Wicked; this is not a defect of Memory belonging to his mind, but an act of his Will: When he is said to remember his Covenant, 'tis to Will Grace according to his Covenant; when he is said to forget his Covenant, 'tis to intercept the influences of it, whereby to punish the Sin of his People; and when he is said not to know his People, 'tis not an absolute forgetfulness of them, but withdrawing from them the Testimonies of his Kindness, and clouding the Signs of his Favour; so God in Pardoning is said to forget Sin, not that he ceaseth to know it, but ceaseth to punish it: 'Tis not to be meant of a simple forgetfulness, or a lapse of his Memory, but of a Judicial Forgetfulness; so when his People in Scripture Pray, Lord Remember thy Word unto thy Servant; no more is to be understood, but Lord fulfil thy Word and Promise to thy Servant.

3. He knows things Present. Heb. 4. 13. All things are naked and opened unto the Eyes of him with whom we have to do; This is grounded upon the Knowledge of himself; 'tis not so difficult to know all Creatures exactly, as to know himself, because they are finite, but himself is infinite; he knows his own Power, and therefore every thing through which his Omnipotence is diffus'd, all the acts and objects of it; not the least thing that is the Birth of his Power, can be conceal'd from him; he knows his own Goodness, and therefore every object upon which the warm beams of his Goodness strike; he therefore knows distinctly the properties of every Creature, because every Property in them is a Ray of his Goodness; he is not only the efficient, but the exemplary cause; therefore as he knows all that his Power hath wrought, as he is the efficient, so he knows them in himself as the pattern: As a Carpenter can give an account of every part and passage in a House he hath built, by consulting the Model in his own mind, whereby he built it. He looked upon all things after he had made them, and pronounc'd them good, Gen. 1. 3. full of a natural goodness he had endowed them with; he did not ignorantly pronounce them so, and call them good, whether he knew them or not; and therefore he knows them in particular, as he knew them all in their first Presence. Is there any reason he should be ignorant of every thing now present in the World, or that any thing that derives an Existence from him as a free Cause, should be concealed from him? If he did not know things present in their Particularities, many things would be known by Man, yea by Beasts, which the infinite God were ignorant of; and if he did not know all things present, but only some; 'tis possible for the most Blessed God to be deceived and be miserable: Ignorance is a Calamity to the Understanding: He could not prescribe Laws to his Creatures, unless he knew their Natures, to which those Laws were to be suted; no, not natural Ordinances to the Sun, Moon, and Heavenly Bodies, and inanimate Creatures, unless he knew the Vigour and Vertue in them, to execute those Ordinances; for to prescribe Laws above the nature of things, is inconsistent with the Wisdom of Government; he must know how far they were able to obey; whether the Laws were suted to their Ability; And for his rational Creatures, Whether the Punishments annext to the Law, were proper, and suted to the Transgression of the Creature.

1. First, He knows all Creatures from the highest to the lowest, the least as well as the greatest. He knows
* Job 38. 41. the Ravens and their *young ones; *the Drops of Rain and Dew which he hath begotten, every Bird in the * Job 38. 29. Air, as well as any Man doth what he hath in a Cage at home, Psal. 50. 11. I know all the Fowls in the Mountains, and the wild Beasts in the Field; which some read creeping things. The Clouds are numbred in his Wisdom, Job 28. 37. every Worm in the Earth, every drop of Rain that falls upon the Ground, the Flakes of Snow, and the Knots of Hail, the Sands upon the Sea-shoar, the Hairs upon the Head; 'tis no more absurd to imagine that God knows them, than that God made them; they are all the Effects of his Power, as well as the Stars, which he calls by their Names, as well as the most glorious Angel and blessed Spirit; he knows them as well as if there were none but them in particular for him to know; the least things were framed by his Art as well as the greatest; the least things partake of his Goodness as well as the greatest; he knows his own Arts, and his own Goodness, and therefore all the Stamps and Impressions of them upon all his Creatures; he knows the immediate Causes of the least, and therefore the Effects of those Causes. Since his Knowledge is infinite, it must extend to those things which are at the greatest Distance from him, to those which approach neareſt to not Being; since he did not want Power to create, he cannot want Understanding to know every thing he hath created, the Dispositions, Qualities, and Vertues of the minutest Creature.

Nor is the Understanding of God embas'd, and suffers a Diminution by the Knowledge of the vilest and most inconsiderable things: Is it not an Imperfection to be ignorant of the Nature of any thing? and can God have such a defect in his most perfect Understanding? Is the Understanding of Man of an impurer Alloy by knowing the Nature of the rankest Poysons; by understanding a Fly, or a small Insect, or by considering the Deformity of a Toad? Is it not generally counted a note of a dignified Mind, to be able to Discourse of the Nature of them? Was Solomon, who knew all from the Cedar to the Hyssop, debas'd by so Rich a Present of Wisdom from his Creator? Is any Glass defil'd by presenting a deformed Image? Is there any thing more vile than the Imaginations, which are only Evil, and continually? doth not the Mind of Man descend to the Mud of the Earth, play the Adulterer or Idolater with mean Objects, suck in the most unclean things? Yet God knows these in all their Circumstances, in every Appearance, inside and outside. Is there any thing viler than some Thoughts of Men? than some Actions of Men? their unclean Beds, and Gluttonous Vomiting, and Luciferian Pride? Yet do not these fall under the Eye of God, in all their Nakedness? The Second Person's taking Human Nature, tho' it obscur'd, yet it did not disparage the Deity; or bring any Disgrace to it: Is Gold the worse for being formed into the Image of a Fly? doth it not still retain the nobleness of the Metal? When Men are despis'd for descending to the Knowledge of mean and vile things, 'tis because they neglect the Knowledge of the greater; and Sin in their Inquiries after lesser things, with a neglect of that which concerns more the Honour of God, and the Happiness of themselves; to be ambitious of such a Knowledge, and careless of that of more Concern, is criminal and contemptible. But God knows the greatest as well as the least; mean things are not known by him to exclude the Knowledge of the greater; nor are vile things govern'd by him to exclude the Order of the better. The Deformity of Objects known by God doth not deform him, nor defile him; he doth not view them without himself, but within himself, wherein all things in their Ideas are Beautiful and Comely: Our Knowledge of a deformed thing, is not a deforming of our Understanding, but is beautiful in the Knowledge, tho' it be not in the Object; nor is there any fear that the Understanding of God should become material by knowing material things, any more than our Understandings lose their Spirituality by knowing the Nature of Bodies; 'tis to be obſerved therefore, that only thoſe Senſes of Men, as ſeeing, hearing, ſmelling, which have thoſe Qualities for their Objects that come neareſt the Nature of ſpiritual things, as Light, Sounds, fragrant Odours, are aſcrib'd to God in Scripture; not Touching or Taſting, which are Senſes that are not exercis'd without a more immediate Commerce with groſs Matter; and the Reaſon may be, becauſe we ſhould have no groſs Thoughts of God, as if he were a Body, and made of Matter, like the things he knows.

2. As he knows all Creatures, ſo God knows all the Actions of Creatures. He counts in particular all the Ways of Men. Doth he not ſee all my Ways, and count all my Steps? Job 31. 4. He tells their Wandrings, as if one by one, Pſal. 56. 8. His Eyes are upon all the Ways of Man, and he ſees all his Goings, Job 34. 21. A Metaphor taken from Men, when they look wiſtly, with fixed Eyes upon a thing, to view it in every Circumſtance, whence it comes, whither it goes, to obſerve every little Motion of it. God's Eye is not a wandring, but a fixed Eye; and the Ways of Man are not only before his Eyes, but he doth exactly ponder them *; as one that will not be ignorant of the leaſt Mite in them, but weigh and examine them by the Standard of his Law; he may as well know the Motions of our Members, as the Hairs of our Heads; the ſmalleſt Actions before they be, whether Civil, Natural, or Religious, fall under his Cognizance; what meaner than a Man carrying a Pitcher? yet our Saviour foretells it, Luke 22. 10. God knows not only what Men do, but what they would have done, had he not reſtrained them; what Abimilech would have done to Sarah, had not God put a Bar in his way, Gen. 20. 6. What a Man that is taken away in his Youth, would have done, had he lived to a riper Age; yea he knows the moſt ſecret Words as well as Actions; the Words ſpoken by the King of Iſrael in his Bed-Chamber, were revealed to Eliſha, 2 Kings 6. 12. And indeed how can any Action of Man be conceal'd from God? Can we view the various Actions of a Heap of Ants, or a Hive of Bees in a Glaſs, without turning our Eyes; and ſhall not God behold the Actions of all Men in the World, which are leſs than Bees or Ants in his Sight, and more viſible to him than an Ant-Hill or Bee-Hive can be to the acuteſt Eye of Man?

* Prov. 5. 21.

3. As God knows all the Actions of Creatures, ſo he knows all the Thoughts of Creatures. The Thoughts are the moſt cloſeted acts of Man, hid from Men and Angels, unleſs diſclos'd by ſome outward Expreſſions; but God deſcends into the depths and abyſſes of the Soul, diſcerns the moſt inward contrivances; nothing is impenetrable to him, the Sun doth not ſo much enlighten the Earth, as God underſtands the Heart; all thoughts are as viſible to him, as Flies and Motes enclos'd in a body of tranſparent Cryſtal; this Man naturally allows to God. Men often ſpeak to God by the motions of their Minds and ſecret Ejaculations, which they would not do, if it were not naturally implanted in them, that God knows all their inward motions; the Scripture is plain and poſitive in this, He tries the Heart and the Reins, Pſal. 7. 9. as men by the uſe of Fire diſcern the droſſie and purer parts of Metals: The ſecret intentions and aims, the moſt lurking affections ſeated in the Reins; he knows that which no Man, no Angel is able to know; which a Man himſelf knows not, nor makes any particular reflection upon; yea, he weighs the Spirit, Prov. 16. 2. he exactly numbers all the devices and inclinations of men, as men do every Piece of Coin they tell out of a heap. He diſcerns the thoughts and intents of the heart, Heb. 4. 12. all that is in the Mind, all that is in the Affections, every ſtirring and purpoſe; ſo that not one thought can be with-held from him, Job 42. 2. yea, Hell and Deſtruction are before him, much more then the Hearts of the Children of men, Prov. 15. 11. he works all things in the Bowels of the Earth, and brings forth all things out of that Treaſure, ſay ſome: But more naturally, God knows the whole ſtate of the dead, all the receptacles and Graves of their Bodies, all the Bodies of men conſumed by the Earth, or devoured by living Creatures; things that ſeem to be out of all Being: He knows the Thoughts of the Devils and Damned Creatures, whom he hath caſt out of his care for ever, into the Arms of his Juſtice, never more to caſt a delightful glance towards them; not a Secret in any Soul in Hell, (which he hath no need to know, becauſe he ſhall not judge them by any of the Thoughts they now have, ſince they were condemned to Puniſhment) is hid from him; much more is he acquainted with the Thoughts of living men, the Counſels of whoſe hearts are yet to be manifeſted, in order to their Tryal and Cenſure; yea, he knows them before they ſpring up into actual being, Pſal. 139. 2. Thou underſtandeſt my Thoughts afar off; my Thoughts, that is, every Thought; tho' innumerable Thoughts paſs through me in a day, and that in the Source and Fountain, when it is yet in the Womb, before it is our Thought; if he knows them before their Exiſtence, before they can properly be called ours; much more doth he know them when they actually ſpring up in us; he knows the tendency of them, where the Bird will light when it is in its flight; he knows them exactly, he is therefore called a diſcerner or criticizer of the Heart, Heb. 4. 12. As a Critick diſcerns every Letter, Point, and Stop; he is more intimate with us than our Souls with our Bodies, and hath more the Poſſeſſion of us than we have of our ſelves; he knows them by an inſpection into the heart, not by the Mediation of ſecond cauſes, by the looks or geſtures of men, as men may diſcern the Thoughts of one another.

1. God diſcerns all good motions of the Mind and Will. Theſe he puts into men, and needs muſt God know his own act; he knew the Son of Jeroboam to have ſome good thing in him towards the Lord God of Iſrael, 1 Kings 14. 13. and the Integrity of David and Hezekiah; the freeſt motions of the Will and Affections to him, Lord, thou knoweſt that I love thee, ſaith Peter, John 21. 17. Love can be no more reſtrain'd, than the Will it ſelf can. A man may make another to grieve and deſire, but none can force another to Love.

2. God diſcerns all the evil motions of the Mind and Will. Every imagination of the heart, Gen 6. 5. the vanity of mens thoughts, Pſal. 94. 11. their inward darkneſs and diſguiſes: No wonder that God who faſhion'd the heart, ſhould underſtand the motions of it, Pſal. 33. 13. 15. He looks from Heaven, and beholds all the Children of men: He faſhioneth their hearts alike, and conſiders all their Works. Doth any man make a Watch, and yet be ignorant of its motion? Did God fling away the Key to this ſecret Cabinet, when he framed it, and put off the power of unlocking it when he pleaſed? He did not ſurely frame it in ſuch a poſture, as that any thing in it ſhould be hid from his Eye; he did not faſhion it to be Privileged from his Government; which would follow, if he were ignorant of what was Minted and Coined in it.

He could not be a Judge to puniſh men, if the inward frames and principles of mens Actions were concealed from him; an outward Action may glitter to an outward Eye, yet the ſecret ſpring be a deſire of Applauſe, and not the Fear and Love of God.

If

If the inward frames of the heart did lie covered from him in the ſecret receſſes of the heart, thoſe plauſible Acts, which in regard of their Principles would merit a Puniſhment, would meet with a Reward; and God ſhould beſtow Happineſs where he had denounced Miſery. As without the knowledge of what is juſt, he could not be a Wiſe Law-giver; ſo without the Knowledge of what is inwardly committed, he could not be a Righteous Judge; Acts that are rotten in the ſpring, might be judged good by the fair colour and appearance.

This is the glory of God at the laſt day, to manifeſt the ſecrets of all hearts, 1 Cor. 4. 5. And the Prophet Jeremiah links the Power of Judging, and the Prerogative of Trying the Hearts, together, Jer. 11. 20. But thou, O Lord of Hoſts, that judgeſt Righteouſly, that tryeſt the Reins and the Heart. And Jer. 17. 10. I the Lord ſearch the Heart, I try the Reins; to what end? even to give every man according to his way, and according to the fruit of his doings. And indeed his binding up the whole Law with that Command of not coveting, evidenceth that he will Judge men by the inward affections and frames of their hearts. Again, God ſuſtains the mind of man in every act of thinking: In him we have not only the Principle of Life, but every motion, the motion of our Minds as well as of our Members: In him we live and move, &c. Acts 17. 28. Since he ſupports the vigour of the faculty in every act, can he be ignorant of thoſe acts which ſpring from the faculty, to which he doth at that inſtant communicate Power and Ability?

Now this knowledge of the Thoughts of men is,

1. An incommunicable Property, belonging only to the Divine Underſtanding. Creatures indeed may know the thoughts of others by Divine Revelation, but not by themſelves; no Creature hath a Key immediately to open the minds of Men, and ſee all that lodgeth there; no Creature can Fathom the heart by the Line of Created Knowledge *. Devils may have a conjectural Knowledge, and may gueſs at them by the acquaintance they have with the Diſpoſition and Conſtitution of men, and the Images they behold in their Fancies; and by ſome marks which an inward Imagination may ſtamp upon the Brain, Blood, Animal Spirits, Face, &c. But the knowing the Thoughts meerly as Thought, without any Impreſſion by it, is a Royalty God appropriates to himſelf, as the main Secret of his Government, and a Perfection declarative of his Deity, as much as any elſe, Jer. 17. 9, 10. The heart of man is deſperately wicked, who can know it? Yes, there is one, and but one, I the Lord ſearch the Heart, I try the Reins. Man looks on the outward appearance, but the Lord looks upon the Heart, 1 Sam. 16. 7. where God is diſtinguiſh'd by this Perfection from all men whatſoever; others may know by Revelation, as Eliſha did, what was in Gehazi's heart, 2 Kings 5. 26. But God knows a man more than any man knows himſelf: What Perſon upon Earth underſtands the windings and turnings of his own heart, what reſerves it will have, what contrivances, what inclinations? All which God knows exactly.

* Daille Serm. Part 1. p. 230.

2. God acquires no new Knowledge of the thoughts and heart, by the Diſcovery of them in the Actions. He would then be but equal in this part of Knowledge to his Creature; no Man or Angel but may thus arrive to the Knowledge of them, God were then excluded from an abſolute Dominion over the prime Work of his lower Creation, he would have made a Creature ſuperiour in this reſpect to himſelf, upon whoſe Will to diſcover, his knowledge of their inward Intentions ſhould depend; and therefore when God is ſaid to ſearch the Heart, we muſt not underſtand it as if God were ignorant before, and was fain to make an exact ſcrutiny and enquiry, before he attained what he deſired to know; but God condeſcends to our Capacity in the expreſſion of his own Knowledge, ſignifying that his Knowledge is as compleat as any man's Knowledge can be, of the deſigns of others, after he hath ſifted them by a ſtrict and through Examination, and wrung out a Diſcovery of their Intentions; that he knows them as perfectly as if he had put them upon the Rack, and forced them to make a Diſcovery of their ſecret Plottings. Nor muſt we underſtand that in Gen. 22. 12. where God ſaith, after Abraham had ſtretched out his hand to Sacrifice his Son, Now I know that thou feareſt God, as though God was ignorant of Abraham's gracious diſpoſition to him; did Abraham's drawing his Knife, furniſh God with a new Knowledge? No, God knew Abraham's pious Inclinations before, Gen. 18. 19. I know him that he will command his Children after him, &c. Knowledge is ſometimes taken for Approbation; then the ſenſe will be, now I approve this Fact as a Teſtimony of thy fear of me; ſince thy Affection to thy Iſaac is extinguiſh'd by the more powerful flame of Affection to my Will and Command; I now accept thee, and count thee a meet ſubject of my choiceſt Benefits; or now I know, that is, I have made known and manifeſted the Faith of Abraham to himſelf, [illegible] to the World. Thus Paul uſes the word know, 1 Cor. 2. 2. I have determined to know nothing; that is, to declare and teach nothing, to make known nothing but Chriſt crucified; or elſe, now I know, that is, I have an Evidence and Experiment in this Noble Fact, that thou feareſt me. God often condeſcends to our Capacity in ſpeaking of himſelf after the manner of Men, as if he had (as men do) known the inward Affections of others by their outward Actions.

4. God knows all the Evils and Sins of Creatures.

1. God knows all Sin. This follows upon the other. If he knows all the Actions and Thoughts of Creatures, he knows alſo all the Sinfulneſs in thoſe Acts and Thoughts: This Zophar infers from God's puniſhing Men, Job 11. 11. for he knows vain man, he ſees his wickedneſs alſo; he knows every Man, and ſees the wickedneſs of every Man: He looks down from Heaven, and beholds not only the filthy Perſons, but what is filthy in them *, all Nations in the World, and every Man of every Nation, none of their Iniquity is hid from his Eyes; He ſearches Jeruſalem with Candles, Jer. 16. 17. God follows Sinners ſtep by ſtep, with his Eye, and will not leave ſearching out till he hath taken them; a Metaphor taken from one that ſearches all Chinks with a Candle, that nothing can be hid from him. He knows it diſtinctly in all the parts of it, how an Adulterer riſes out of his Bed to commit Uncleanneſs, what contrivances he had, what ſteps he took, every circumſtance in the whole progreſs; not only evil in the bulk, but every one of the blacker ſpots upon it, which may moſt aggravate it. If he did not know Evil, how could he permit it, order it, puniſh it, or pardon it? Doth he permit he knows not what? Order to his own holy ends what he is ignorant of? Puniſh or Pardon that which he is uncertain whether it be a Crime or no? Cleanſe me, ſaith David, from my ſecret faults, Pſal. 19. 12. ſecret in regard of others, ſecret in regard of himſelf; how could God cleanſe him from that whereof he was ignorant? He knows Sins before they are committed, much more when they are in act; he foreknew the Idolatry and Apoſtacy of the Jews, what Gods they would ſerve, in what meaſure they would provoke him, and violate his Covenant *; he knew Judas his Sin long before Judas his actual exiſtence, fore-telling it in the Pſalms; and Chriſt predicts it before he acted it. He ſees Sins future in his own permitting permitting Will, he ſees Sins preſent in his own ſupporting Act. As he knows things poſſible to himſelf, becauſe he knows his own Power; ſo he knows things practicable by the Creature, becauſe he knows the Power and Principles of the Creature *. This Sentiment of God is naturally writ in the fears of Sinners, upon Lightning, Thunder, or ſome Prodigious Operation of God in the World; what is the Langugae of them, but that he ſees their Deeds, hears their Words, knows the inward ſinfulneſs of their Hearts; that he doth not only behold them as a meer Spectator, but conſiders them as a juſt Judge. And the Poets ſay, that the Sins of Men leapt into Heaven, and were writ in Parchments of Jupiter *, Scelus in terram geritur, in cælo ſcribitur: Sin is acted on Earth, and recorded in Heaven. God indeed doth not behold Evil with the approving Eye, he knows it not with a Practical Knowledge to be the Author of it, but with a ſpeculative Knowledge, ſo as to underſtand the ſinfulneſs of it; or a knowledge ſimplicis intellegentiæ, of ſimple intelligence, as he permits them, not poſitively wills them; he knows them not with a knowledge of aſſent to them, but diſſent from them. Evil pertains to a diſſenting act of the Mind, and an averſive act of the Will; and what tho' evil formally taken, hath no diſtinct Conception, becauſe it is a privation; a Defect hath no Being, and all knowledge is by the apprehenſion of ſome Being; would not this lie as ſtrongly againſt our own knowledge of Sin? Sin is a privation of the rectitude due to an act; and who doubts Man's Knowledge of Sin? by his knowing the act, he knows the deficiency of the Act; the ſubject of evil hath a Being, and ſo hath a conception in the Mind; that which hath no Being cannot be known by it ſelf, or in it ſelf, but will it follow that it cannot be known by its contrary? as we know darkneſs to be a privation of Light, and folly to be a privation of Wiſdom. God knows all good by himſelf, becauſe he is the Sovereign good; Is it ſtrange then, that he ſhould know all evil, ſince all evil is in ſome natural good?

* Pſal. 14. 2, 3.

* Deut 31. 20, 21.

* Ἐν Διὸς ἐλπὶς Cruſ. Antho. dec. 1. cap. 395. p. 161.

2. The manner of God's knowing Evil, is not ſo eaſily known. And indeed, as we cannot comprehend the Eſſence of God, tho' it is eaſily intelligible that there is ſuch a Being; ſo we can as little comprehend the manner of God's Knowledge, tho' we cannot but conclude him to be an intelligent Being, a pure Underſtanding, knowing all things: As God hath a higher manner of Being than his Creatures, ſo he hath another and higher manner of Knowing; and we can as little comprehend the manner of his Knowing, as we can the manner of his Being. But as to the manner.

Doth not God know his own Law, and ſhall he not know how much any action comes ſhort of his Rule? He cannot know his own Rule without knowing all the deviations from it. He knows his own Holineſs, and ſhall he not ſee how any action is contrary to the Holineſs of his own Nature? Doth not God know every thing that is true? and is it not true that this or that is evil? and ſhall God be ignorant of any Truth? How doth God know that he cannot Lye, but by knowing his own Veracity? How doth God know that he cannot Die, but by knowing his own Immutability? and by knowing thoſe, he knows what a Lye is, he knows what Death is; ſo if Sin never had been, if no Creature had ever been, God would have known what Sin was, becauſe he knows his own Holineſs; becauſe he knew what Law was fit to be appointed to his Creatures if he ſhould Create them, and that that Law might be tranſgreſt by them. God knows all good, all goodneſs in himſelf; he therefore hath a foundation in himſelf to know all that comes ſhort of that goodneſs, that is oppoſite to that Holineſs: As if Light were capable of Underſtanding, it would know Darkneſs only by knowing it ſelf; by knowing it ſelf, it would know what is contrary to it ſelf. God knows all Created goodneſs which he hath planted in the Creature; he knows then all defects from this goodneſs, what Perfection an act is deprived of; what is oppoſite to that goodneſs, and that is evil. As we know Sickneſs by Health, Diſcord by Harmony, Blindneſs by Sight, becauſe it is a privation of Sight; whoſoever knows one contrary knows the other; God knows unrighteouſneſs by the Idea which he hath of Righteouſneſs, and ſees an act deprived of that rectitude and goodneſs which ought to be in it; he knows evil becauſe he knows the cauſes whence evil proceeds *. A Painter knows a Picture of his own framing, and if any one daſhes any baſe Colour upon it, ſhall not he alſo know that? God by his Hand painted all Creatures, impreſt upon Man the fair ſtamp and colour of his own Image; the Devil defiles it, Man daubs it; Doth not God, that knows his own Work, know how this Piece is become different from his Work? Doth not God, that knows his Creatures goodneſs, which himſelf was the Fountain of, know the change of this goodneſs? Yea, he knew before, that the Devil would ſow Tares where he had ſown Wheat; and therefore that Controverſie of ſome in the Schools, Whether God knew evil by its oppoſition to Created or Uncreated goodneſs, is needleſs. We may ſay God knows Sin as it is oppoſite to Created goodneſs, yet he knows it radically by his own goodneſs, becauſe he knows the goodneſs he hath communicated to the Creature by his own Eſſential goodneſs in himſelf. To conclude this head.

* Cuſan. p. 245.

The knowledge of Sin doth not beſpot the Holineſs of God's Nature; for the bare knowledge of a Crime doth not infect the Mind of Man with the Filth and Pollution of that Crime; for then every Man that knows an act of Murder committed by another, would by that bare knowledge be tainted with his Sin; yea and a Judge that condemns a Malefactor, may as well Condemn himſelf, if this were ſo: The Knowledge of Sins infects not the underſtanding that knows them, but only the Will that approves them. 'Tis no diſcredit to us to know evil, in order to paſs a right Judgment upon it; ſo neither can it be to God.

4. God knows all future things, all things to come. The differences of time cannot hinder a knowledge of all things by him, who is before time, above time, that is not meaſured by Hours, or Days, or Years; If God did not know them, the hindrance muſt be in himſelf, or in the things themſelves, becauſe they are things to come: Not in himſelf; If it did, it muſt ariſe from ſome impotency in his own nature, and ſo we render him weak; or from an unwillingneſs to know, and ſo we render him lazy, and an Enemy to his own Perfection; for ſimply conſidered, the knowedge of more things is a greater Perfection than the Knowledge of a few; and if the knowledge of a thing includes ſomething of Perfection, the ignorance of a thing includes ſomething of Imperfection: The knowledge of future things is a greater Perfection than not to know them, and is accounted among Men a great part of Wiſdom, which they call fore-ſight; 'tis then ſurely a greater Perfection in God to know future things than to be ignorant of them. And would God rather have ſomething of imperfection than be poſſeſſor of all Perfection? Nor doth the hindrance lie in the things themſelves, becauſe their futurition depends upon his Will; for as nothing can actually be without his Will, giving it exiſtence; ſo nothing can be future without his Will, deſigning the futurity of it.

Certainly

Certainly if God knows all things possible, which he will not do, he must know all things future, which he is not only able, but resolved to do, or resolved to permit. God's perfect knowledge of himself, that is, of his own Infinite Power and concluding Will, necessarily includes a fore-knowledge of what he is able to do, and what he will do.

Again, if God doth not know future things, there was a time when God was ignorant of most things in the World; for before the Deluge he was more ignorant than after; the more things were done in the World, the more Knowledge did accrue to God, and so the more Perfection; then the Understanding of God was not perfect from Eternity, but in Time; nay, is not perfect yet, if he be ignorant of those things which are still to come to pass; he must tarry for a Perfection, he wants till those futurities come to be in act, till those things which are to come, cease to be future, and begin to be present. Either God knows them, or desires to know them; if he desires to know them, and doth not, there is something wanting to him; all desire speaks an absence of the Object desired, and a sentiment of want in the Person desiring: If he doth not desire to know them, nay, if he doth not actually know them, it destroys all Providence, all his Government of Affairs; for his Providence hath a concatenation of means with a prospect of something that is future: As in Joseph's Case, who was put into the Pit, and sold to the Egyptians in order to his future Advancement, and the preservation both of his Father and his envious Brethren. If God did not know all the future Inclinations and Actions of Men, something might have been done by the Will of Potiphar, or by the Free-will of Pharaoh, whereby Joseph might have been cut short of his Advancement, and so God have been interrupted in the track and method of his designed Providences. He that hath decreed to Govern Man for that end he hath design'd him, knows all the means before, whereby he will govern him; and therefore hath a distinct and certain knowledge of all things; for a confused knowledge is an imperfection in Government; 'tis in this the Infiniteness of his Understanding is more seen than in knowing things past or present; his Eyes are as a Flame of fire, Rev. 1. 14. in regard of the penetrating Vertue of them into things impenetrable by any else.

To make it further appear, That God knows all things future, Consider;

1. First, Every thing which is the Object of God's Knowledge without himself, was once only future. There was a moment when nothing was in Being but himself; he knew nothing actually past, because nothing was past; nothing actually present, because nothing had any existence but himself, therefore only what was future; and why not every thing that is future now, as well as only what was future, and to come to pass just at the beginning of the Creation? God indeed knows every thing as present, but the things themselves known by him were not present, but future; the whole Creation was once future, or else it was from Eternity; if it begun in time, it was once future in it self, else it could never have begun to be: Did not God know what would be created by him, before it was created by him*? Did he create he knew not what, and knew not before, what he should create? Was he ignorant before he acted, and in his acting, what his Operation would tend to? Or did he not know the Nature of things, and the Ends of them, till he had produced them, and saw them in being? Creatures then did not arise from his Knowledge, but his Knowledge from them; he did not then Will that his Creatures should be, or he had then Willed what he knew not, and knew not what he Willed; they therefore must be known before they were made, and not known because they were made; he knew them to make them, and he did not make them to know them. By the same reason he knew what Creatures should be before they were, he knows still what Creatures shall be before they are *; for all things that are, were in God, not really in their own Nature, but in him as a cause; so the Earth and Heavens were in him, as a Model is in the Mind of a Workman, which is in his Mind and Soul, before it be brought forth into outward act. Bradwar. lib. 3 cap. 14.

* Petavius changed.

2. The Predictions of future things evidence this. There is not a Prophecy of any thing to come, but is a spark of his fore-knowledge, and bears Witness to the Truth of this Assertion, in the punctual accomplishment of it; this is a thing challenged by God, as his own peculiar, wherein he surmounts all the Idols that Man's Inventions have Goded in the World, Isa. 41. 21, 22. Let them bring forth (speaking of the Idols) and shew us what shall happen, or declare us things to come: Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that you are Gods. Such a fore-knowledge of things to come, is here ascribed to God by God himself, as a distinction of him from all false Gods; such a knowledge, that if any could prove that they were possessors of it, he would acknowledge them Gods as well as himself; that we may know that you are Gods: He puts his Deity to stand or fall upon this account, and this should be the point, which should decide the controversie, whether he or the Heathen Idols were the true God; the dispute is managed by this medium. He that knows things to come, is God; I know things to come, ergo, I am God. The Idols know not things to come, therefore they are not Gods. God submits the Being of his Deity to this Tryal. If God knew things to come, no more than the Heathen Idols, which were either Devils or men, he would be in his own account, no more a God than Devils or men; no more a God than the Pagan Idols he doth scoff at for this defect. If the Heathen Idols were to be stript of their Deity for want of this fore-knowledge of things to come, would not the true God also fall from the same excellency, if he were defective in Knowledge? He would in his own judgment no more deserve the Title and Character of a God than they. How could he reproach them for that, if it were wanting in himself? It cannot be understood of future things in their causes, when the effects necessarily arise from such causes, as Light from the Sun, and Heat from the Fire; many of these men know; more of them, Angels and Devils know; if God therefore had not a higher and farther Knowledge than this, he would not by this be proved to be God, any more than Angels and Devils, who know necessary effects in their causes. The Devils indeed did predict some things in the Heathen Oracles; but God is differenced from them here by the infiniteness of his Knowledge, in being able to predict things to come that they knew not, or things in their particularities, things that depended on the liberty of mans Will, which the Devils could lay no claim to a certain knowledge of. Were it only a conjectural knowledge that is here meant, the Devils might answer, they can conjecture, and so their Deity were as good as Gods; for tho God might know more things, and conjecture nearer to what would be, yet still it would be but conjectural, and therefore not a higher kind of Knowledge than what the Devils might challenge. How much then is God beholden to the Socinians for denying the knowledge of all future things to him, upon which here he puts the trial of his Deity? God asserts his knowledge of things to come, as a manifest evidence of his Godhead; those that deny therefore the Argument that proves it, deny the conclusion too;

too; for this will neceſſarily follow, that if he be God becauſe he knows future things, then he that doth not know future things is not God; and if God knows not future things but only by conjecture, then there is no God; becauſe a certain knowledge, ſo as infallibly to predict things to come, is an inſeparable Perfection of the Deity: It was therefore well ſaid of Auſtin, that it was as high a madneſs to deny God to be, as to deny him the foreknowledge of things to come.

Pacuvius ſaid, Siqui quæ eventura ſunt providet, æqui pari.

The whole Prophetick part of Scripture declares this Perfection of God; every Prophets Candle was lighted at this Torch, they could not have this foreknowledge of themſelves: Why might not many other Men have the ſame inſight, if it were by Nature? it muſt be from ſome ſuperior Agent; and all Nations owned Prophecy as a Beam from God, a fruit of Divine Illumination: Prophecy muſt be totally expunged if this be denied; for the ſubjects of Prophecy are things future; and no Man is properly a Prophet, but in Prediction; now prediction is nothing but fore-telling, and things fore-told are not yet come; and the fore-telling of them, ſuppoſeth them not to be yet, but that they ſhall be in time; ſeveral ſuch Predictions we have in Scripture, the event whereof hath been certain. The Years of Famine in Egypt fore-told that he would order ſecond cauſes for bringing that Judgment upon them; the Captivity of his People in Babylon, the calling of the Gentiles, the rejection of the Jews. Daniel's Revelation of Nebuchadnezzer's Dream, that Prince refers to God as the revealer of Secrets, Dan. 2. 47. By the ſame reaſon that he knows one thing future by himſelf, and by the infiniteneſs of his Knowledge before any cauſes of them appear, he doth know all things future.

3. Some future things are known by Men, and we muſt allow God a greater Knowledge than any Creature. Future things in their Cauſes may be known by Angels and Men, (as I ſaid before) whoſoever knows neceſſary cauſes and the efficacy of them, may foretel the effects; and when he ſees the meeting and concurrence of ſeveral cauſes together, he may preſage what the conſequent effect will be of ſuch a concurrence: So Phyſicians foretel the Progreſs of a Diſeaſe, the increaſe or diminution of it by natural Signs; and Aſtronomers foretel Eclipſes by their obſervation of the motion of Heavenly Bodies, many Years before they happen , can they be hid from God, with whom are the reaſons of all things? An expert Gardner by knowing the Root in the depth of Winter, can tell what Flowers and what Fruit it will bear, and the Month when they will peep out their heads; and ſhall not God much more, that knows the Principles of all his Creatures, and is exactly privy to all their natures and qualities, know what they will be, and what operations ſhall be from thoſe Principles? Now if God did know things only in their cauſes, his Knowledge would not be more excellent than the Knowledge of Angels and Men, tho' he might know more than they of the things that will come to paſs, from every cauſe ſingly, and from the concurrence of many. Now as God is more excellent in being than his Creature; ſo he is more excellent in the objects of his Knowledge and the manner of his Knowledge; well then, ſhall a certain knowledge of ſomething future, and a conjectural knowledge of many things, be found among Men; and ſhall a determinate and infallible knowledge of things to come, be found no where, in no Being? If the conjecture of things future ſavours of ignorance, and God knows them only by conjecture, there is then no ſuch thing in Being as a perfect intelligent Being, and ſo no God.

* Cuſanus. * Fuller's Piſgab l. 2. p. 281.

4. God knows his own Decree and Will, and therefore muſt needs know all future things. If any thing be future, or to come to paſs, it muſt be from it ſelf, or from God; not from it ſelf, then it would be independent and abſolute; if it hath its futurity from God, then God muſt know what he hath decreed to come to paſs; thoſe things that are future in neceſſary cauſes, God muſt know, becauſe he willed them to be cauſes of ſuch effects; he therefore knows them, becauſe he knows what he willed: The knowledge of God cannot ariſe from the things themſelves, for then the knowledge of God would have a cauſe without him; and Knowledge, which is an eminent Perfection, would be conferred upon him by his Creatures. But as God ſees things poſſible in the Glaſs of his own Power, ſo he ſees things future in the Glaſs of his own Will; in his effecting Will, if he hath Decreed to produce them; in his permitting Will, as he hath Decreed to ſuffer them and diſpoſe of them: Nothing can paſs out of the rank of things meerly poſſible into the order of things future, before ſome Act of God's Will hath paſſed for its futurition *.

'Tis not from the infiniteneſs of his own Nature ſimply conſidered, that God knows things to be future; for as things are not future becauſe God is infinite (for then all poſſible things ſhould be future) ſo neither is any thing known to be future only becauſe God is infinite, but becauſe God hath Decreed it; his declaration of things to come, is founded upon his appointment of things to come *. In Iſa. 44. 7. it is ſaid, and who, as I, ſhall call and declare it, ſince I appointed the ancient people and the things that are coming *? Nothing is created or ordered in the World, but what God Decreed to be Created and Ordered. God knows his own Decrees, and therefore all things which he hath decreed to exiſt in time; not the minuteſt part of the World could have exiſted without his Will, not an action can be done without his Will; as Life the Principle, ſo Motion the fruit of that Life, is by and from God; as he decreed Life to this or that thing, ſo he decreed motion as the effect of Life, and decreed to exert his Power in concurring with them, for producing effects natural from ſuch cauſes; for without ſuch a concourſe they could not have acted any thing, or produced any thing; and therefore as for natural things, which we call neceſſary cauſes, God foreſeeing them all particularly in his own Decree, foreſaw alſo all effects which muſt neceſſarily flow from them, becauſe ſuch cauſes cannot but act when they are furniſht with all things neceſſary for action: He knows his own Decrees, and therefore neceſſarily knows what he hath Decreed, or elſe we muſt ſay things comes to paſs whether God will or no; or, that he Wills he knows not what; but this cannot be, for known unto God are all his Works from the beginning of the World, Acts 15. 18. Now this neceſſarily flows from that Principle firſt laid down, That God knows himſelf, ſince nothing is future without God's Will: if God did not know future things, he would not know his own Will; for as things poſſible could not be known by him, unleſs he knew the fulneſs of his own Power; ſo things future could not be known by his Underſtanding, unleſs he knew the reſolves of his own Will.

Thus the Knowledge of God differs from the knowledge of Men; God's Knowledge of his Works precedes his Works, Man's knowledge of God's works follows his works; juſt as an Artificer's knowledge of a Watch, Inſtrument, or Engine, which he would make, is before his making of it; he knows the motions of it, and the reaſon of thoſe motions before it is made, becauſe he knows what he hath determin'd to Work; he knows not thoſe motions from the conſideration of them after they were made, as the Spectator doth, who who by viewing the Instrument after it is made, gains a knowledge from the sight and consideration of it, till he understands the reason of the whole; so we know things from the consideration of them after we see them in being, and therefore we know not future things: But God's Knowledge doth not arise from things because they are, but because he wills them to be, and therefore he knows every thing that shall be, because it cannot be without his Will, as the Creator and Maintainer of all things; knowing his own substance he knows all his Works.

5. If God did not know all future things, he would be mutable in his Knowledge.

If he did not know all things that ever were or are to be, there would be upon the appearance of every new object, an addition of Light to his Understanding, and therefore such a Change in him, as every new knowledge causes in the mind of a Man, or as the Sun works in the World upon its rising every Morning, scattering the darkness that was upon the Face of the Earth; if he did not know them before they came, he would gain a Knowledge by them when they came to pass, which he had not before they were effected; his Knowledge would be new according to the newness of the objects, and multiplied according to the multitude of the objects. If God did not know things to come as perfectly as he knew things present and past, but knew those certainly, and the others doubtfully and conjecturally, he would suffer some Change, and acquire some perfection in his Knowledge, when those future things should cease to be future, and become present; for he would know it more perfectly when it were present, than he did when it was future, and so there would be a Change from Imperfection to a Perfection; but God is every way immutable.

Besides, that Perfection would not arise from the Nature of God, but from the Existence and Presence of the thing; but who will affirm that God acquires any Perfection of Knowledge from his Creatures, any more than he doth of Being? He would not then have had that Knowledge, and consequently that Perfection from Eternity, as he had when he created the World, and will not have a full Perfection of the Knowledge of his Creature till the end of the World, nor of Immortal Souls, which will certainly act as well as live to Eternity; and so God never was, nor ever will be perfect in Knowledge; for when you have conceived Millions of Years, wherein Angels and Souls live and act, there is still more coming than you can conceive, wherein they will act. And if God be always changing to Eternity, from Ignorance to Knowledge, as those acts come to be exerted by his Creatures, he will not be perfect in Knowledge, no not to Eternity, but will always be changing from one degree of Knowledge to another; a very unworthy Conceit to entertain of the most Blessed, Perfect, and Infinite God!

Hence then it follows that,

1. God foreknows all his Creatures. All kinds which he determin'd to make, all particulars that should spring out of every Species, the time when they should come forth of the Womb, the manner how, In thy Book all Members were written, Psal. 139. 16. Members is not in the Hebr. whence some refer all, to all living Creatures whatsoever, and all the parts of them which God did foresee; he knew the numbers of Creatures with all their parts, they were written in the Book of his fore-knowledge; the duration of them, how long they shall remain in Being, and act upon the Stage; he knows their strength, the links of one cause with another, and what will follow in all their Circumstances, and the series, and combination of effects with their causes.

The duration of every thing is fore-known, because determin'd, Job 14. 5. Seeing his Days are determin'd, the number of his Months are with thee; thou hast appointed his Bounds that he cannot pass; bounds are fixed, beyond which none shall reach; he speaks of Days and Months, not of Years, to give us notice of God's particular fore-knowledge of every thing, of every Day, Month, Year, Hour of a Man's Life.

2. All the acts of his Creatures are foreknown by him. All natural acts because he knows their causes; voluntary acts I shall speak of afterwards.

3. This foreknowledge was certain. For it is an unworthy notion of God to ascribe to him a conjectural Knowledge; if there were only a conjectural Knowledge, he could but conjecturally foretell any thing; and then it is possible the events of things might be contrary to his Predictions. It would appear then that God were deceived and mistaken, and then there could be no rule of trying things whether they were from God or no; for the Rule God sets down to discern his Words from the Words of false Prophets, is the event and certain accomplishment of what is Predicted. Deut. 18. 21. To that question, How shall we know whether God hath spoken or no? He answers, that if the thing doth not come to pass, the Lord hath not spoken. If his Knowledge of future things were not certain, there were no stability in this Rule, it would fall to the ground: We never yet find God deceiv'd in any Prediction, but the event did answer his fore-Revelation; his fore-Knowledge therefore is certain and infallible. We cannot make God uncertain in his Knowledge, but we must conceive him fluctuating and wavering in his Will; but if his Will be not Yea and Nay, but Yea, his Knowledge is certain, because he doth certainly Will and Resolve.

4. This foreknowledge was from Eternity. Seeing he knows things possible in his Power, and things future in his Will; if his Power and Resolves were from Eternity, his Knowledge must be so too; or else we must make him ignorant of his own Power, and ignorant of his own Will from Eternity; and consequently not from Eternity Blessed and Perfect. His knowledge of possible things must run Parallel with his Power, and his Knowledge of future things run Parallel with his Will. If he Willed from Eternity, he knew from Eternity what he Willed; but that he did Will from Eternity, we must grant, unless we would render him changeable, and conceive him to be made in time of not Willing, Willing. The Knowledge God hath in time, was always one and the same, because his Understanding is his proper Essence, as perfect as his Essence, and of an immutable Nature.

* And indeed the actual existence of a thing is not simply necessary to its being perfectly known; we may see a thing that is past out of Being, when it doth not actually exist; and a Carpenter may know the House he is to Build, before it be built, by the model of it in his own mind; much more we may conceive the same of God whose Decrees were before the Foundation of the World*; and to be before time was, and to be from Eternity, hath no difference. As God in his Being exceeds all beginning of time, so doth his Knowledge all motions of time.

* Eph. 1. 3. and in other places.

5. *God foreknows all things as present with him from Eternity. As he knows mutable things with an immutable and firm Knowledge, so he knows future things with a present Knowledge; not that the things which are produced in time, were actually and really present with him in their own Beings from Eternity; for then they could not be produced in time; had they a real existence, then they would not be Creatures, but God; and had they actual Being, then they could not be future, for future ſpeaks a thing to come that is not yet: If things had been actually preſent with him, and yet future, they had been made before they were made, and had a being before they had a Being; but they were all preſent to his Knowledge as if they were in actual being, becauſe the reaſon of all things that were to be made, was preſent with him.

* The reaſon of the Will of God that they ſhall be, was equally Eternal with him, wherein he ſaw what, and when, and how he would Create things, how he would govern them, to what ends he would direct them. Thus all things are preſent to God's Knowledge, tho' in their own nature they may be paſt or future, not in eſſe reali, but in eſſe intelligibili, ob-

*Hornbeck jectively; not actually preſent *; for as the unchangableneſs and infiniteneſs of God's Knowledge of changeable and finite things, doth not make the things he knows immutable and infinite, ſo neither doth the Eternity of his Knowledge, make them actually preſent with him from Eternity; but all things are preſent to his Underſtanding, becauſe he hath at once a view of all ſucceſſions of times; and his knowledge of future things is as perfect as of preſent things, or what is paſt; 'tis not a certain knowledge of preſent things, and an uncertain knowledge of future; but his knowledge of one is as certain and unerring as his knowledge of the other;

The Eye of God at once runs through the whole Circle of Time; as the Eye of Man upon a Tower ſees all the Paſſengers at once, tho' ſome be paſt, ſome under the Tower, ſome coming at a farther diſtance: God ſaith Job, looks to the end of the Earth, and ſees under the whole Heaven, Job 28. 24. The Knowledge of God is expreſt by ſight in Scripture, and futurity to God is the ſame thing as diſtance to us; we can with a Perſpective-glaſs make things that are a far off, appear as if they were near; and the Sun, ſo many Thouſand Miles diſtant from us, to appear as if it were at the end of the Glaſs; Why ſhould then future things be at ſo great a diſtance from God's Knowledge, when things ſo far from us may be made to approach ſo near to us?

God conſiders all things in his own ſimple Knowledge, as if they were now acted; and therefore ſome have choſen to call the knowledge of things to come, not preſcience or fore-knowledge, but Knowledge, becauſe God ſees all things in one inſtant, ſa- cienti â nullarum deficientis inſtantiâ *. Upon this account things that are to come, are ſet down in Scripture as preſent, and ſometimes as paſt, Iſa. 9. 6. Unto us a Child is Born, tho' not yet born; ſo of the Sufferings of Chriſt, Iſa 53. 4. &c. He hath born our griefs, he was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, he was taken from Priſon, &c. not ſhall be; and Pſal. 22. 18. They part my Garments among them, as if it were preſent; all to expreſs the certainty of God's fore-knowledge, as if things were actually preſent before him.

* Boet. conſolat. lib. 5. proſ. 6.

6. This is proper to God, and incommunicable to any Creature. Nothing but what is Eternal can know all things that are to come: Suppoſe a Creature might know things that are to come, after he is in being; he cannot know things ſimply as future, becauſe there were things future before he was in Being. The Devils know not Mens Hearts, therefore cannot foretel their actions with any certainty; they may indeed have a knowledge of ſome things to come, but it is only conjectural, and often miſtaken; as the Devil was in his Predictions among the Heathen, and in his preſage of Job's Curſing God to his Face upon his preſſing Calamities, Job 1. 11. Sometimes indeed they have a certain knowledge of ſome things future by the Revelation of God, when he uſes them as Inſtruments of his Vengeance, or for the Trial of his People, as in the Caſe of Job, when he gave him a Commiſſion to ſtrip him of his Goods; or as the Angels have, when he uſes them as Inſtruments of the deliverance of his People.

7. Tho' this be certain, that God foreknows all things and actions; yet the manner of his knowing all things before they come, is not ſo eaſily reſolved. We muſt not therefore deny this Perfection in God, becauſe we underſtand not the manner how he hath the knowledge of all things: It were unworthy for us to own no more of God than we can perfectly conceive of him; we ſhould then own no more of him than that he doth exiſt. Canſt thou, ſaith Job, by ſearching, find out God? Canſt thou find out the Almighty unto Perfection? Job 11. 7. Do we not ſee things unknown to inferior Creatures, to be known to our ſelves? Irrational Creatures do not apprehend the nature of a Man, nor what we conceive of them when we look upon them; nor do we know what they fancy of us when they look wiſtly upon us; for ought as I know, we underſtand as little the manner of their imaginations, as they do of ours; and ſhall we aſcribe a darkneſs in God as to future things, becauſe we are ignorant of them, and of the manner how he ſhould know them *? Shall we doubt whether God doth certainly know thoſe things which we only conjecture? As our Power is not the Meaſure of the Power of God, ſo neither is our Knowledge the Judge of the Knowledge of God, no better nor ſo well as an irrational nature can be the Judge of our Reaſon: Do we perfectly know the manner how we know? Shall we therefore deny that we know any thing? We know we have ſuch a faculty which we call Underſtanding, but doth any Man certainly know what it is? And becauſe he doth not, ſhall he deny that which is plain and evident to him? Becauſe we cannot aſcertain our ſelves of the cauſes of the ebbing and flowing of the Sea, of the manner how Minerals are ingendred in the Earth, ſhall we therefore deny that which our eyes convince us of?

* Ficinus in Procl. cap. 19.

And this will be a preparation to the laſt thing.

5. God knows all future contingencies, that is, God knows all things that ſhall accidentally happen, or as we ſay, by Chance; and he knows all the free motions of Mens Wills that ſhall be to the end of the World.

If all things be open to him, Heb. 4. 13. Then all contingencies are, for they are in the number of things; and as, according to Chriſt's Speech, thoſe things that are impoſſible to Man, are poſſible to God; ſo thoſe things which are unknown to Man, are known to God, becauſe of the infinite fulneſs and perfection of the Divine Underſtanding.

Let us ſee what a Contingent is.

That is contingent which we commonly call accidental, as when a Tile falls ſuddenly upon a mans head as he is walking in the Street; or when one letting off a Muſket at random, ſhoots another he did not intend to hit; ſuch was that Arrow whereby Ahab was killed, ſhot by a Soldier at a venture *, this 1 Kings 22. 39. ſome call a mixt contingent, made up partly of neceſſity, and partly of acci-dent; 'tis neceſſary the

Bullet,

Bullet, when sent out of the Gun, or Arrow out of the Bow, should fly and light some where, but it is an accident that it hits this or that man, that was never intended by the Archer. Other things, as voluntary actions, are purely contingents, and have nothing of necessity in them; all free actions that depend upon the Will of man, whether to do, or not to do, are of this nature, because they depend not upon a necessary cause, as burning doth upon the Fire, moistning upon Water, or as descent or falling down is necessary to a heavy body; for those cannot in their own nature do otherwise; but the other actions depend upon a free Agent, able to turn to this or that point and determine himself as he pleases.

Now we must know, that what is accidental in regard of the Creature, is not so in regard of God, the manner of Ahab's Death was accidental, in regard the hand by which he was slain, but not in regard of God who foretold his Death, and foreknew the Shot, and directed the Arrow. God was not uncertain before of the manner of his fall, nor hovered over the Battel to watch for an opportunity to accomplish his own Prediction; what may be or not be, in regard of us, is certain in regard of God; to imagin that what is accidental to us, is so to God, is to measure God by our short line. how many events following upon the results of Princes in their Counsels, seem to persons ignorant of those Counsels to be a hap-hazard, yet were not contingencies to the Prince and his assistants, but foreseen by him as certainly to issue so as they do, which they knew before would be the fruit of such causes and instruments they would knit together? That may be necessary in regard of Gods foreknowledge, which is meerly accidental in regard of the natural disposition of the immediate causes which do actually produce it; Contingent in its own nature, and in regard of us; but fixed in the Knowledge of God: *Zanch. *One illustrates it by this similitude: A Master sends two Servants to one and the same place, two several ways, unknown to one another, they meet at the place which their Master had appointed them; their meeting is accidental to them, one knows not of the other, but it was foreseen by the Master that they should so meet, and that in regard of them it would seem a meer accident, till they came to explain the business to one another: Both the necessity of their meeting in regard of their Masters Order, and the accidentalness of it in regard of themselves, were in both their circumstances foreknown by the Master that employ'd them.

For the clearing of this, take it in this method.

1. 'Tis an unworthy conceit of God in any to exclude him from the knowledge of these things.

1. It will be a strange contracting of him, to allow him no greater a Knowledge than we have our selves.

Contingencies are known to us when they come into Act, and pass from Futurity to Reality; and when they are present to us, we can order our Affairs accordingly; shall we allow God no greater a measure of Knowledge than we have, and make him as blind as our selves, not to see things of that nature before they come to pass? Shall God know them no more? Shall we imagine God knows no otherwise than we know? and that he doth, like us, stand gazing with Admiration at Events? Man can conjecture many things; is it fit to ascribe the same uncertainty to God, as though he, as well as we, could have no assurance till the issue appear in the view of all? If God doth not certainly foreknow them, he doth but conjecture them; but a conjectural Knowledge is by no means to be fastened on God; for that is not Knowledge, but guess, and destroys a Deity by making him subject to mistake; for he that only guesseth, may guess wrong; so that this is to make God like our selves, and strip him of an universally acknowledged Perfection of Omniscience. A conjectural Knowledge, saith one *, is as unworthy of God, as the Creature is unworthy of Omniscience? 'Tis certain Man hath a Liberty to act many things this or that way as he pleases; to walk to this or that quarter, to speak or not to speak, to do this or that thing, or not to do it; which way a Man will certainly determine himself, is unknown before to any Creature, yea often at the present to himself, for he may be in suspence; but shall we imagine this future Determination of himself is conceal'd from God? Those that deny God's foreknowledge in such Cases, must either say, that God hath an opinion that a Man will resolve rather this way than that; but then if a Man by his Liberty determine himself contrary to the Opinion of God, is not God then deceived? and what rational Creature can own him for a God, that can be deceived in any thing? or else they must say, that God is at uncertainty, and suspends his Opinion without determining it any way; then he cannot know free Acts till they are done; he would then depend upon the Creature for his Information; his Knowledge would be every Instant encreased, as things, he knew not before, came into act; and since there are every minute an innumerable multitude of various Imaginations in the Minds of Men, there would be every minute an accession of new Kowledge to God, which he had not before; besides, this Knowledge would be mutable according the Wavering and Weather-cock Resolutions of Men, one while standing to this Point, another while to that, if he depended upon the Creatures Determination for his Knowledge. * Scotus.

2. If the free Acts of Men were unknown before to God, no Man can see how there can be any Government of the World by him. Such Contingencies may happen, and such Resolves of Men's Free-Wills unknown to God, as may perplex his Affairs, and put him upon new Counsels and Methods for attaining those Ends which he settled at the first Creation of things; if things happen, which God knows not of before, this must be the Consequence; where there is no Fore-sight, there is no Providence; things may happen so sudden, if God be ignorant of them, that they may give a check to his Intentions and Scheme of Government, and put him upon changing the model of it. How often doth a small intervening Circumstance unforeseen by Man, dash in pieces a long meditated and well-formed Design? To govern necessary Causes, as Sun and Stars, whose Effects are natural and constant in themselves, is easie to be imagin'd; but how to govern the World, that consists of so many Men of Free-Will, able to determine themselves to this or that, and which have no constancy in themselves, as the Sun and Stars have, cannot be imagind, unless we will allow in God as great a certainty of Foreknowledge of the Designs and Actions of Men, as there is Inconstancy in their Resolves: God must be altering the Methods of his Government every day, every Hour, every Minute, according to the Determinations of Men, which are so various and changable in the whole compass of the World in the space of one Minute; he must wait to see what the Counsels of Men will be, before he could settle his own Methods of Government; and so must govern the World according to their mutability, and not according to any certainty in himself. But his counsel is stable in the midst of multitudes of free devices in the Heart of Man, Prov. 19. 21. and knowing them all before, Orders them to be subservient to his own stable Counsel. If he cannot know what to Morrow will bring forth in the Mind of a Man,

how

how can he certainly ſettle his own Determination of Governing him? his Decrees and Reſolves muſt be Temporal, and ariſe pro re nata, and he muſt alway be in Council what he ſhould do upon every change of Men's Minds. This is an unworthy Conceit of the Infinite Majeſty of Heaven to make his Government depend upon the Reſolves of Men, rather than their Reſolves upon the Deſign of God.

2. 'Tis therefore certain, that God doth foreknow the free and voluntary Acts of Man. How could he elſe order his People to ask of him things to come, in order to their Deliverance, ſuch things as depended upon the Will of Man, if he foreknew not the Motions of their Will? Iſa. 45. 11.

3. Actions good or indifferent depending upon the Liberty of Man's Will as much as any whatſoever. Several of theſe he hath foretold: Not only a Perſon to build up Jeruſalem was predicted by him, but the Name of that Perſon, Cyrus, Iſa. 44. 28. What is more contingent, or is more the effect of the Liberty of Man's Will than the Names of their Children? Was not the Deſtruction of the Babyloniſh Empire foretold, which Cyrus undertook, not by any Compulſion, but by a free Inclination and Reſolve of his own Will? And was not the Diſmiſſion of the Jews into their own Country, a voluntary Act in that Conqueror? If you conſider the Liberty of Man's Will, might not Cyrus as well have continued their Yoke, as have ſtruck off their Chains, and kept them Captive as well as diſmiſt them? Had it not been for his own Intereſt, rather to have ſtrengthned the Fetters of ſo turbulent a People, who being tenacious of their Religion and Laws, different from that profeſt by the whole World, were like to make diſturbances more when they were linkt in a body in their own Country, than when they were tranſplanted and ſcatter'd into the ſeveral parts of his Empire? It was in the Power of Cyrus, (take him as a Man) to chuſe one or the other; his Intereſt invited him to continue their Captivity, rather than grant their Deliverance; yet God knew that he would willingly do this rather than the other; he knew this which depended upon the Will of Cyrus; and why may not an infinite God foreknow the free Acts of all Men, as well as of one? If the Liberty of Cyrus's Will was no hinderance to God's certain and infallible foreknowledge of it, how can the contingency of any other thing be a hinderance to him? for there is the ſame Reaſon of one and all; and his Government extends to every Village, every Family, every Perſon, as well as to Kingdoms and Nations.

So God foretold by his Prophet, not only the Deſtruction of Jeroboam's Altar, but the Name of the Perſon that ſhould be the Inſtrument of it, 1 Kings 13. 2. and this about Three hundred Years before Joſiah's Birth. 'Tis a wonder that none of the Pious Kings of Judah in Deteſtation of Idolatry, and hopes to recover again the Kingdom of Iſrael, had in all that ſpace named one of their Sons by that Name of Joſiah, in hopes that that Prophecy ſhould be accompliſht by him: That Manaſſeh only ſhould do this, who was the greateſt Imitator of Jeroboam's Idolatry among all the Jewiſh Kings, and indeed went beyond them; and had no mind to deſtroy in another Kingdom what he propagated in his own. What is freer than the Impoſition of a Name, yet this he foreknew, and this Joſiah was Manaſſes's Son, 2 Kings 21. 26. Was there any thing more voluntary than for Pharaoh to Honour the Butler by reſtoring him to his place, and puniſh the Baker by hanging him on a Gibbet? yet this was foretold, Gen. 40, 8. And were not all the voluntary Acts of Men, which were the means of Joſeph's Advancement, foreknown by God, as well as his Exaltation, which was the end he aimed at by thoſe Means? Many of theſe may be reckon'd up.

Can all the free Acts of Man ſurmount the infinite Capacity of the Divine Underſtanding? If God ſingles out one voluntary Action in Man, as contingent as any, and lying among a vaſt Number of other Deſigns and Reſolutions, both antecedent and ſubſequent; why ſhould he not know the whole maſs of Mens Thoughts and Actions, and pierce into all that the Liberty of Man's Will can effect? Why ſhould he not know every Grain, as well as one that lies in the midſt of many of the ſame kind?

And ſince the Scripture gives ſo large an Account of Contingents, predicted by God; no Man can certainly prove that any thing is un-foreknown to him. 'Tis as reaſonable to think he knows every contingent; as that he knows ſome that lie as much hid from the Eye of any Creature, ſince there is no more difficulty to an infinite Underſtanding to know all, than to know ſome*. Indeed, if we deny God's foreknowledge of the voluntary Actions of Men, we muſt ſtrike our ſelves off from the belief of Scripture Predictions, that yet remain unaccompliſht, and will be brought about by the voluntary Engagements of Men, as the ruin of Antichriſt, &c. If God foreknows not the ſecret Motions of Man's Will, how can he foretel them? If we ſtrip him of this Perfection of Preſcience, why ſhould we believe a Word of Scripture-Predictions? all the Credit of the Word of God is torn up by the Roots. If God were uncertain of ſuch Events, how can we reconcile God's Declaration of them to his Truth; and his demanding our Belief of them, to his Goodneſs? Were it good and righteous in God to urge us to the Belief of that he were uncertain of himſelf? How could he be True in Predicting things he were not ſure of? Or Good in requiring Credit to be given to that which might be falſe? This would neceſſarily follow, if God did not foreknow the Motions of Mens Wills, whereby many of his Predictions were fulfilled, and ſome remain yet to be accompliſht.

* The Stoicks that thought their Souls to be ſome particle of God Ἀποσπάσματα, pieces pull'd off from him, did conclude from thence that he knew all the Motions of their Souls as his own mover, as things coherent with him. Arrian Epicte. lib. 1. chap. 14. p. 60.

2. God foreknows the voluntary ſinful Motions of Mens Wills.

1. God hath foretold ſeveral of them, Were not all the minute ſinful Circumſtances about the Death of our Bleſſed Redeemer, as the piercing him, giving him Gall to drink, foretold, as well as the not breaking his Bones, and parting his Garments? What were thoſe but the free Actions of Men, which they did willingly without any conſtraint? And thoſe foretold by David, Iſaiah, and other Prophets, ſome above a thouſand, ſome eight hundred, and ſome more, ſome fewer Years, before they came to paſs; and Events punctually anſwered the Prophecies. Many ſinful Acts of Men, which depended upon their Free-Will, have been foretold: The Egyptians voluntary oppreſſing Iſrael, Gen. 15. 13. Pharaoh's hardening his heart againſt the Voice of Moſes, Exod 3. 19. That Iſaiah's Meſſage would be in vain to the People, Iſa. 6. 9. that the Iſraelites would be rebellious after Moſes his Death, and turn Idolaters, Deut. 31. 16. Judas his betraying of our Saviour, a voluntary Action, John 6. ult. he was not forced to do what he did, for he had ſome kind of Repentance for it; and not Violence, but voluntarineſs falls under Repentance.

2. His Truth hath depended upon this fore-ſight. Let us conſider that in Gen. 5. 16. but the fourth Generation they ſhall come hither again; that is, the Poſterity of Abraham ſhall come into Canaan; for the iniquity of the

Vid. Rivet in loc. exer. 86. p. 379.

the Amorites *is not yet full. God makes a Promiſe to Abraham, of giving his Poſterity the Land of Canaan, not preſently, but in the Fourth Generation; if the Truth of God be infallible in the performance of his Promiſe, his Underſtanding is as infallible in the foreſight of the Amorites ſin; the fulneſs of their iniquity was to precede the Iſraelites Poſſeſſion. Did the Truth of God depend upon an uncertainty? did he make the Promiſe hand over head (as we ſay)? How could he with any Wiſdom and Truth aſſure Iſrael of the Poſſeſſion of the Land in the Fourth Generation, if he had not been ſure that the Amorites would fill up the meaſure of their Iniquities by that time? If Abraham had been a Socinian, to deny God's Knowledge of the free acts of Men, had he not had a fine excuſe for unbelief? What would his reply have been to God? Alas, Lord, this is not a Promiſe to be relied upon, the Amorites iniquity depends upon the acts of their Free-Will, and ſuch thou canſt have no Knowledge of; thou canſt ſee no more than a likelihood of their iniquity being full, and therefore there is but a likelihood of thy performing thy Promiſe, and not a certainty: Would not this be judged not only a ſawcy, but a Blaſphemous Anſwer? And upon theſe Principles the Truth of the moſt faithful God had been daſht to uncertainty and a peradventure.

3. God provided a remedy for Man's Sin, and therefore foreſaw the entrance of it into the World by the fall of Adam. He had a Decree before the Foundation of the World, to manifeſt his Wiſdom in the Goſpel by Jeſus Chriſt, an Eternal purpoſe in Jeſus Chriſt, Eph. 3. 11. And a Decree of Election paſt before the Foundation of the World; a ſeparation of ſome to redemption, and forgiveneſs of Sin in the Blood of Chriſt, in whom they were from Eternity choſen, as well as in time accepted in Chriſt, Eph. 1. 4, 6, 7. which is called a purpoſe in himſelf, v. 9. had not Sin entred, there had been no occaſion for the Death of the Son of God, it being every where in Scripture laid upon that ſcore; a Decree for the ſhedding of Blood, ſuppoſed a Decree for the Permiſſion of Sin, and a certain foreknowledge of God, that it would be committed by Man. An uncertainty of foreknowledge, and a fixedneſs of purpoſe, are not conſiſtent in a wiſe Man, much leſs in the only Wiſe God. God's purpoſe to manifeſt his Wiſdom to Men and Angels in this way, might have been defeated, had God had only a conjectural foreknowledge of the fall of Man; and all thoſe ſolemn purpoſes of diſplaying his Perfections in thoſe Methods had been to no purpoſe*; the Proviſion of a remedy ſuppoſed a certainty of the Diſeaſe: If a Sparrow fall not to the ground without the Will of God, how much leſs could ſuch a Deplorable ruin fall upon Mankind, without God's Will permitting it, and his knowledge foreſeeing it?

* Mareſ. cont. Volkel. lib. 1. cap. 24. p. 343.

'Tis not hard to conceive how God might foreknow it*; he indeed decreed to Create Man in an excellent State; the goodneſs of God could not but furniſh him with a Power to ſtand; yet in his Wiſdom he might foreſee, that the Devil would be envious to Man's Happineſs, and would out of Envy attempt his ſubverſion. As God knew of what temper the faculties were he had endued Man with, and how far they were able to endure the aſſaults of a Temptation; ſo he alſo foreknew the grand ſubtility of Satan, how he would lay his Mine, and to what Point he would drive his Temptation; how he would propoſe and manage it, and direct his Battery againſt the ſenſitive Appetite, and aſſault the weakeſt part of the Fort; might he not foreſee that the efficacy of the Temptation would exceed the meaſure of the reſiſtance? cannot God know how far the Malice of Satan would extend, what Shots he would according to his nature uſe, how high he would charge his Temptation without his powerful reſtraint, as well as an Engineer judge how many ſhots of a Cannon will make a breach in a Town, and how many Casks of Powder will blow up a Fortreſs, who never yet built the one nor founded the other; We may eaſily conclude God could not be deceived in the Judgment of the iſſue and event, ſince he knew how far he would let Satan looſe, how far he would permit Man to act; and ſince he dives to the bottom of the nature of all things, he foreſaw that Adam was endued with an ability to ſtand; as he foreſaw that Benhadad might naturally recover of his Diſeaſe; but he foreſaw alſo that Adam would ſink under the allurements of the Temptation, as he foreſaw that Hazael would not let Benhadad live, 2 Kings 8. 10.

* Amyrald. de Prædeſtin. cap. 6.

Now ſince the whole Race of Mankind lies in Corruption, and is ſubject to the power of the Devil, 1 John 3. 18. may not God that knows that Corruption in every Man's nature, and the force of every Man's ſpirit, and what every particular nature will encline him to upon ſuch objects propoſed to him, and what the reaſons of the Temptation will be, know alſo the iſſues? is there any difficulty in God's foreknowing this, ſince Man knowing the nature of one he is well acquainted with, can conclude what ſentiments he will have, and how he will behave himſelf upon preſenting this or that object to him.

If a Man that underſtands the diſpoſition of his Child or Servant, knows before what he will do upon ſuch an occaſion; may not God much more, who knows the inclinations of all his Creatures, and from Eternity run with his Eyes over all the works he intended? Our Wills are in the number of cauſes; and ſince God knows our Wills, as cauſes, better than we do our ſelves, why ſhould he be ignorant of the effects.

God determines to give Grace to ſuch a Man; not to give it to another, but leave him to himſelf, and ſuffer ſuch Temptations to aſſault him; now God knowing the Corruption of Man in the whole maſs, and in every part of it; is it not eaſie for him to foreknow what the future actions of the Will will be, when the Tinder and Fire meet together, and how ſuch a Man will determine himſelf both as to the ſubſtance and manner of the action? It is not eaſie for him to know, how a corrupted Temper and a Temptation will ſuit? God is exactly privy to all the gall in the hearts of Men, and what Principles they will have, before they have a Being. He knows their thoughts afar off, Pſal. 139. 2. as far off as Eternity, as ſome explain the words, and thoughts are as voluntary as any thing; he knows the power and inclinations of Men in the order of ſecond cauſes; he underſtands the corruption of Men, as well as the Poyſon of Dragons, and the Venom of Aſps; this is laid up in ſtore with him and ſealed among his Treaſures, Deut 32. 33, 34. Among the Treaſures of his foreknowledge, ſay ſome.

What was the cruelty of Hazael, but a free act? yet God knew the frame of his heart, and what acts of Murder and Oppreſſion would ſpring from that bitter Fountain, before Hazael had conceived them in himſelf, 2 Kings 8. 12. as a Man that knows the Mineral through which Waters paſs, may know what reliſh they will have before they appear above the Earth; ſo our Saviour knew how Peter would deny him; he knew what quantity of Powder would ſerve for ſuch a Battery; in what meaſure he would let looſe Satan, how far he would leave the Reins in Peter's Hands, and then the iſſue might eaſily be known; and ſo in every act of Man, God knows in his own Will what meaſure of Grace he will give, to determine the Will to good, and what meaſure of Grace he will withdraw from ſuch a Perſon, or not give to him, and conſequently, how far ſuch a Perſon will fall or not. God knows the inclinations of the Creature; he knows his own Permiſſions, what degrees of Grace he will either allow him, or keep from him, according to which will be the degree of his Sin. This may in ſome meaſure help our conceptions in this, tho', as was ſaid before, the manner of God's foreknowledge is not ſo eaſily explicable.

3. God's foreknowledge of Man's voluntary actions doth not neceſſitate the Will of Man. The foreknowledge of God is not deceived, nor the liberty of Man's Will diminiſh'd. I ſhall not trouble you with any School diſtinctions, but be as plain as I can, laying down ſeveral Propoſitions in this caſe.

Propoſition I. 'Tis certain all neceſſity doth not take away liberty. Indeed a compulſive neceſſity takes away liberty; but a neceſſity of immutability removes not liberty from God; why ſhould then a neceſſity of Infallibility in God remove liberty from the Creature? God did neceſſarily create the World, becauſe he Decreed it; yet freely, becauſe his Will from Eternity ſtood to it; he freely Decreed it, and freely Created it; as the Apoſtle ſaith in regard of God's Decrees, who hath been his Counſellor? Rom. 11. 34. ſo in regard of his actions I may ſay, who hath been his compeller? he freely decreed, and he freely created. Jeſus Chriſt neceſſarily took our fleſh, becauſe he had covenanted with God ſo to do, yet he acted freely and voluntarily according to that Covenant, otherwiſe his Death had not been efficacious for us. A good Man doth naturally, neceſſarily love his Children, yet voluntarily: 'Tis part of the happineſs of the Bleſſed, to love God unchangeably, yet freely, for it would not be their happineſs if it were done by compulſion. What is done by force, cannot be called felicity, becauſe there is no delight or complacency in it; and tho' the Bleſſed love God freely, yet if there were a poſſibility of change, it would not be their Happineſs, their Bleſſedneſs would be dampt by their fear of falling from this Love, and conſequently from their nearneſs to God, in whom their happineſs conſiſts: God foreknows that they will Love him for ever; but are they therefore compell'd for ever to love him? If there were ſuch a kind of conſtraint, Heaven would be rendered burdenſome to them, and ſo no Heaven.

Again, God's foreknowledge of what he will do, doth not neceſſitate him to do: he foreknew that he would Create a World, yet he freely created a World. God's foreknowledge doth not neceſſitate himſelf, why ſhould it neceſſitate us more than himſelf? We may inſtance in our ſelves: When we Will a thing, we neceſſarily uſe our faculty of Will; and when we freely Will any thing, 'tis neceſſary that we freely Will; but this neceſſity doth not exclude but include liberty; or more plainly, when a Man writes or ſpeaks, whilſt he writes or ſpeaks, thoſe actions are neceſſary, becauſe to ſpeak and be ſilent, to write and not to write at the ſame time, are impoſſible; yet our writing or ſpeaking doth not take away the power, not to write or to be ſilent at that time if a Man would be ſo; for he might have choſe whether he would have ſpoke or writ. So there is a neceſſity of ſuch actions of Man which God foreſees; that is, a neceſſity of infallibility, becauſe God cannot be deceived; but not a coactive neceſſity, as if they were compelled by God to act thus or thus.

2. No Man can ſay in any of his voluntary actions that he ever found any force upon him. When any of us have done any thing according to our Wills, can we ſay we could not have done the contray to it? were we determin'd to it in our own intrinſick nature, or did we not determine our ſelves? Did we not act either according to our reaſon, or according to outward allurements; did we find any thing without us or within us, that did force our Wills to the embracing this or that? Whatever action you do, you do it becauſe you judge it fit to be done; or becauſe you will do it. What tho' God foreſaw that you would do ſo, and that you would do this or that, did you feel any force upon you? Did you not act according to your nature? God foreſees that you will Eat or Walk at ſuch a time; do you find any thing that moves you to Eat, but your own Appetite? or to Walk, but your own Reaſon and Will? If Preſcience had impos'd any neceſſity upon Man, ſhould we not probably have found ſome kind of Plea from it in the Mouth of Adam? he knew as much as any Man ever ſince knew of the nature of God, as diſcoverable in Creation; he could not in Innocence fancy an ignorant God, a God that knew nothing of future things; he could not be ſo ignorant of his own action, but he muſt have perceived a force upon his Will, had there been any; had he thought that God's Preſcience impos'd any neceſſity upon him, he would not have omitted the Plea, eſpecially when he was ſo daring as to charge the Providence of God in the Gift of the Woman to him, to be the cauſe of his Crime, Gen. 3. 12. How came his Poſterity to invent new charges againſt God, which their Father Adam never thought of, who had more knowledge than all of them? He could find no cauſe of his Sin but the liberty of his own Will; he charges it not upon any neceſſity from the Devil or any neceſſity from God; nor doth he alledge the Gift of the Woman as a neceſſary cauſe of his Sin, but on occaſion of it, by giving the Fruit to him. Judas knew that our Saviour did foreknow his Treachery, for he had told him of it in the hearing of his Diſciples, John 13. 21, 26. yet he never charg'd the neceſſity of his Crime upon the foreknowledge of his Maſter; if Judas had not done it freely; he had no Reaſon to repent of it; his Repentance juſtifies Chriſt from impoſing any neceſſity upon him by that foreknowledge. No Man acts any thing, but he can give an account of the motives of his action; he cannot father it upon a blind neceſſity; the Will cannot be compelled, for then it would ceaſe to be Will: God doth not root up the foundations of Nature, or change the order of it, and make Men unable to act like Men, that is, as free Agents. God foreknows the actions of irrational Creatures, this concludes no violence upon their Nature; for we find their actions to be according to their nature, and ſpontaneous.

3. God's foreknowledge is not (ſimply conſidered) the cauſe of any thing. It puts nothing into things, but only beholds them as preſent, and ariſing from their proper cauſes: The knowledge of God is not the Principle of things, or the cauſe of their Exiſtence, but directive of the action; nothing is becauſe God Knows it, but becauſe God Wills it, either poſitively or permiſſively; God knows all things poſſible, yet becauſe God knows them, they are not brought into actual exiſtence, but remain ſtill only as things poſſible; Knowledge only apprehends a thing, but acts nothing; 'tis the rule of acting, but not the cauſe of acting; the Will is the immediate Principle, and the Power the immediate cauſe; to know a thing, is not to do a thing, for then we may be ſaid to do every thing that we know; but every Man knows thoſe things which he never did, nor never will do; Knowledge in it ſelf is an apprehenſion of a thing, and is not the cauſe of it. A Spectator of a thing is not the cauſe of that thing which he ſees, that is, he is not the Cauſe of it as he beholds it: We ſee a Man Write, we know before that he will Write at ſuch a time; but this Foreknowledge is not the Cauſe of his Writing. We ſee a Man Walk, but our Viſion of him brings no neceſſity of Walking upon him; he was free to Walk, or not to walk*. We foreknow that Death will ſeize upon all Men, we foreknow that the Seaſons of the Year will ſucceed one another; yet is not our Foreknowledge the cauſe of this Succeſſion of Spring after Winter, or of the Death of all Men, or any Man: We ſee one Man fighting with another, our Sight is not the cauſe of that conteſt, but ſome Quarrel among themſelves exciting their own Paſſions. As the Knowledge of preſent things impoſeth no neceſſity upon them while they are acting and preſent; ſo the Knowledge of future things impoſeth no neceſſity upon them while they are coming. We are certain there will be Men in the World to Morrow, and that the Sea will ebb and flow; but is this Knowledge of ours the Cauſe that thoſe things will be ſo; I know that the Sun will riſe to Morrow, 'tis true that it ſhall riſe; but 'tis not true, that my Foreknowledge makes it to riſe. If a Phyſician Prognoſticates upon ſeeing the Intemperances and Debaucheries of Men, that they will fall into ſuch a Diſtemper, is his Prognoſtication any cauſe of their Diſeaſe, or of the Sharpneſs of any Symptoms attending it? The Prophet foretold the Cruelty of Hazael, before he committed it; but who will ſay that the Prophet was the cauſe of his Commiſſion of that Evil? And thus the Foreknowledge of God takes not away the Liberty of Man's Will, no more than a Foreknowledge that we have of any Man's Actions, takes away his Liberty: We may upon our Knowledge of the Temper of a Man, certainly foreknow, that if he falls into ſuch Company, and get among his Cups, he will be Drunk; but is this Foreknowledge the cauſe that he is Drunk? no, the cauſe is the Liberty of his own Will, and not reſiſting the Temptation. God purpoſes to leave ſuch a Man to himſelf and his own Ways; and Man being ſo left, God foreknows what will be done by him according to that corrupt Nature which is in him; though the Decree of God of leaving a Man to the Liberty of his own Will be certain, yet the Liberty of Man's Will as thus left, is the cauſe of all the Extravagancies he doth commit. Suppoſe Adam had ſtood, would not God certainly have foreſeen that he would have ſtood? Yet it would have been concluded that Adam had ſtood, not by any neceſſity of God's Foreknowledge, but by the Liberty of his own Will: Why ſhould then the Foreknowledge of God add more neceſſity to his falling than to his ſtanding? * And though it be ſaid ſometimes in Scripture, that ſuch a thing was done that the Scripture might be fulfilled, as John 12. 38. that the ſaying of Eſaias might be fulfilled, Lord who hath believed our Report? The Word That, doth not infer that the Prediction of the Prophet was the cauſe of the Jews unbelief, but infers this, that the Prediction was manifeſted to be true by their Unbelief, and the Event anſwered the Prediction; this Prediction was not the cauſe of their Sin, but their foreſeen Sin was the cauſe of this Prediction; and ſo the Particle That, is taken, Pſal. 51. 6. Againſt thee, thee only have I ſinned, that thou mighteſt be juſtified, &c. The juſtifying God, was not the end and intent of the Sin, but the event of it upon his Acknowledgment.

that

* Rawley of the World, lib. 1. cap. 1. ſect. 12.

* Rivet. in Iſa. 53. 1. p. 16.

4. God foreknows things, becauſe they will come to paſs; but things are not future, becauſe God knows them. Foreknowledge preſuppoſeth the Object which is foreknown; a thing that is to come to paſs, is the Object of the Divine Knowledge, but not the Cauſe of the Act of Divine Knowledge; and though the Foreknowledge of God doth in Eternity precede the actual Preſence of a thing which is foreſeen as future; yet the future thing in regard of its Futurity, is as Eternal as the Foreknowledge of God: As the Voice is uttered before it be heard, and a thing is viſible before it be ſeen, and a thing knowable before it be known. But how comes it to be knowable to God? It muſt be anſwered, either in the Power of God as a thing poſſible, or in the Will of God as a thing future, he firſt willed, and then knew what he willed; he knew what he willed to effect, and he knew what he willed to permit; as he willed the Death of Chriſt by a determinate Counſel, and willed the Permiſſion of the Jews Sin, and the ordering of the Malice of their Nature to that end, Acts 2. 22. God decrees to make a rational Creature, and to govern him by a Law; God decrees not to hinder this rational Creature from tranſgreſſing his Law; and God foreſees that what he would not hinder, would come to paſs. Man did not Sin becauſe God foreſaw him; but God foreſaw him to Sin, becauſe Man would Sin. If Adam and other Men would have acted otherwiſe, God would have foreknown that they would have acted well; God foreſaw our Actions becauſe they would ſo come to paſs by the motion of our Free-Will, which he would permit, which he would concur with, which he would order to his own holy and glorious Ends, for the manifeſtation of the Perfection of his Nature. If I ſee a Man lie in a Sink, no neceſſity is inferred upon him from my Sight to lie in that filthy Place, but there is a neceſſity inferr'd by him that lies there, that I ſhould ſee him in that Condition if I paſs by, and caſt my Eye that way.

5. God did not only foreknow our Actions, but the manner of our Actions. That is, he did not only know that we would do ſuch Actions, but that we would do them freely; he foreſaw that the Will would freely determine it ſelf to this or that; the Knowledge of God takes not away the Nature of things; though God knows poſſible things, yet they remain in the Nature of Poſſibility; and though God knows contingent things, yet they remain in the Nature of Contingencies; and though God knows free Agents, yet they remain in the Nature of Liberty. God did not foreknow the Actions of Man, as neceſſary, but as free; ſo that Liberty is rather eſtabliſhed by this Foreknowledge, than removed: God did not foreknow that Adam had not a Power to ſtand, or that any Man hath not a Power to omit ſuch a ſinful Action, but that he would not omit it. Man hath a Power to do otherwiſe than that which God foreknows he will do: Adam was not determin'd by any inward neceſſity to Fall, nor any Man by any inward neceſſity to commit this or that particular Sin; but God foreſaw that he would Fall, and Fall freely; for he ſaw the whole Circle of Means and Cauſes, whereby ſuch and ſuch Actions ſhould be produced; and can be no more ignorant of the Motions of our Wills, and the manner of them, than an Artificer can be ignorant of the Motions of his Watch, and how far the Spring will let down the String in the ſpace of an Hour; he ſees all Cauſes leading to ſuch Events in their whole order, and how the Free-Will of Man will comply with this, or refuſe that; he changes not the manner of the Creature's Operation, whatſoever it be.

6. But what if the Foreknowledge of God, and the Liberty of the Will, cannot be fully reconciled? ſhall we therefore deny a Perfection in God to ſupport a Liberty in our ſelves? Shall we rather faſten Ignorance upon God, and accuſe him of Blindneſs, to maintain our Liberty? That God doth foreknow every thing, and yet that there is Liberty in the rational Creature, are both certain; but how fully to reconcile them, may ſurmount the Underſtanding of Man. Some Truths the Diſciples were not capable of bearing in the Days of Chriſt; and ſeveral Truths our Underſtandings cannot reach as long as the World doth laſt; yet in the mean time we muſt on the one hand take heed of conceiving God ignorant, and on the other hand of imagining the Creature neceſſitated; the one will render God imperfect, and the other will ſeem to render him unjuſt, in puniſhing Man for that Sin which he could not avoid, but was brought into by a fatal Neceſſity. God is ſufficient to render a Reaſon of his own Proceedings, and clear up all at the Day of Judgment; 'tis a part of Man's Curioſity, ſince the Fall, to be prying into God's Secrets, things too high for him; whereby he ſinges his own Wings, and confounds his own Underſtanding. 'Tis a curſed Affectation that runs in the Blood of Adam's Poſterity, to know as God, though our firſt Father ſmarted and ruin'd his Poſterity in that Attempt; the Ways and Knowledge of God are as much above our thoughts and Conceptions, as the Heavens are above the Earth, Iſa. 55. 9. * and ſo ſublime, that we cannot comprehend them in their true and juſt Greatneſs; his Deſigns are ſo myſterious, and the Ways of his Conduct ſo profound, that it is not poſſible to dive into them: The force of our Underſtandings is below his infinite Wiſdom, and therefore we ſhould adore him with an humble Aſtoniſhment, and cry out with the Apoſtle, Rom. 11. 33. Oh the depth of the Riches of the Wiſdom and Knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his Judgments! and his Ways paſt finding out! whenever we meet with Depths that we cannot fathom, let us remember that he is God, and we his Creatures, and not be guilty of ſo great Extravagance, as to think that a Subject can pierce into all the Secrets of a Prince, or a Work underſtand all the Operations of the Artificer. Let us only reſolve not to faſten any thing on God that is unworthy of the Perfection of his Nature, and diſhonourable to the Glory of his Majeſty; nor imagine that we can ever ſtep out of the Rank of Creatures to the Glory of the Deity, to underſtand fully every thing in his Nature.

Daille Melang. part. 1. p. 712. 725.

So much for the ſecond general, What God knows.

III. The third is, How God knows all things? As it is neceſſary we ſhould conceive God to be an Underſtanding Being, elſe he could not be God; ſo we muſt conceive his Underſtanding to be infinitely more pure and perfect than ours in the Act of it, elſe we liken him to our ſelves, and debaſe him as low as his Foot-ſtool. * As among Creatures there are Degrees of Being and Perfection; Plants above Earth and Sand, becauſe they have a Power of growth; Beaſts above Plants, becauſe to their Power of growth, there is an addition of Excellency of Senſe; rational Creatures above Beaſts, becauſe to Senſe there is added the Dignity of Reaſon: The Underſtanding of Man is more noble than all the vegetative Power of Plants, or the ſenſitive Power of Beaſts: God therefore muſt be infinitely more excellent in his Underſtanding, and therefore in the manner of it. As Man differs from a Beaſt in regard of his Knowledge; ſo doth God alſo from Man, in regard of his Knowledge. As God therefore is in Being and Perfection, infinitely more above a Man than a Man is above a Beaſt, the manner of his Knowledge muſt be infinitely more above a Man's Knowledge, than the Knowledge of a Man is above that of a Beaſt; our Underſtandings can claſp an Object in a moment, that is at a great diſtance from our Sence; our Eye by one elevated Motion can view the Heavens; the manner of God's Underſtanding muſt be unconceivably above our glimmerings; as the manner of his Being is infinitely more perfect than all Beings, ſo muſt the manner of his Underſtanding be infinitely more perfect than all created Underſtandings. * Indeed the manner of God's Knowledge can no more be known by us, than his Eſſence can be known by us; and the ſame incapacity in Man, which renders him unable to comprehend the Being of God, renders him as unable to comprehend the manner of God's Underſtanding: As there is a vaſt diſtance between the Eſſence of God, and our Beings, ſo there is between the Thoughts of God and our Thoughts; the Heavens are not ſo much higher than the Earth, as the Thoughts of God are above the thoughts of men, yea, and of the higheſt Angel, Iſa. 55. 8, 9. Yet tho' we know not the manner of God's Knowledge, we know that he knows; as tho' we know not the infiniteneſs of God, yet we know that he is infinite. 'Tis God's ſole Prerogative to know himſelf, what he is; and it is equally his Prerogative to know how he knows; the manner of God's Knowledge therefore muſt be conſidered by us, as free from thoſe Imperfections our Knowledge is encumbred with.

* Maimonides More Nevochim. part. 3. c. 20. p. 391, 392, 393.

In general, God doth neceſſarily know all things; he is neceſſarily Omnipreſent, becauſe of the immenſity of his Eſſence; ſo he is neceſſarily Omniſcient, becauſe of the infiniteneſs of his Underſtanding. 'Tis no more at the Liberty of his Will, whether he will know all things; than whether he will be able to create all things; 'tis no more at the Liberty of his Will, whether he will be Omniſcient, than whether he will be Holy; he can as little be ignorant, as he can be impure; he knows not all things, becauſe he will know them, but becauſe it is Eſſential to his Nature to know them.

In particular.

Propoſition I. God knows by his own Eſſence; that is, He ſees the Nature of things in the Ideas of his own Mind, and the Events of things in the Decrees of his own Will; he knows them not by viewing the things, but by viewing himſelf; his own Eſſence is the Mirrour and Book, wherein he beholds all things that he doth ordain, diſpoſe and execute; and ſo he knows all things in the firſt and Original Cauſe; which is no other than his own Eſſence Willing, and his own Eſſence executing what he Wills; he knows them in his Power, as the Phyſical Principle; in his Will, as the moral Principle of things, as ſome ſpeak.

He borrows not the Knowledge of Creatures from the Creatures, nor depends upon them for means of Underſtanding, as we poor Worms do, who are beholden to the Objects abroad to aſſiſt us with Images of things, and to our Senſes to convey them into our Minds; God would then acquire a Perfection from thoſe things which are below himſelf, and an Excellency from thoſe things that are vile; his Knowledge would not precede the Being of the Creatures, but the Creatures would be before the Act of his Knowledge. If he underſtood by Images drawn from the Creatures, as we do, there would be ſomething in God which is not God, viz. the Images of things drawn from outward Objects: God would then depend upon Creatures for that which is more noble than a bare Being; for to be Underſtanding, is more excellent than barely to be. Beſides, if God's Knowledge of his Creatures were derived from the Creatures by the Impreſſion of any thing upon him, as there is upon us, he could not know from Eternity, becauſe from Eternity there was no actual Exiſtence of any thing but himſelf; and therefore there could not be any Images ſhot out from any thing, becauſe there was not any thing in Being but God; as there is no Principle of Being to any thing but by his Eſſence; ſo there is no Principle of the Knowledge of any thing by himſelf but but his Eſſence: If the knowledge of God were diſtinct from his Eſſence, his Knowledge were not Eternal, becauſe there is nothing Eternal but his Eſſence.

His underſtanding is not a faculty in him as it is in us, but the ſame with his Eſſence, becauſe of the ſimplicity of his nature; God is not made up of various parts, one diſtinct from another as we are, and therefore doth not underſtand by a part of himſelf, but by himſef; ſo that to be, and to underſtand is the ſame with God; his Eſſence is not one thing, and the power whereby he underſtands, another; he would then be compounded, and not be the moſt ſimple Being. This alſo is neceſſary for the Perfection of God; for the more perfect and noble the way and manner of knowing is, the more perfect and noble is the knowledge. The perfection of knowledge depends upon the excellency of the medium whereby we know. As a knowledge by reaſon, is a more noble way of knowing than knowledge by ſenſe; ſo 'tis more excellent for God to know by his Eſſence, than by any thing without him, any thing mixt with him; the firſt would render him dependant, and the other would demoliſh his ſimplicity.

Again, the natures of all things are contained in God; not formally; for then the nature of the Creatures would be God: But eminently; he that planted the ear, ſhall he not hear, he that formed the eye, ſhall he not ſee? Pſal. 94. 9. He hath in himſelf eminently the Beauty, Perfection, Life and Vigour of all Creatures; he created nothing contrary to himſelf, but every thing with ſome foot-ſteps of himſelf in them; he could not have pronounced them good, as he did, had there been any thing in them contrary to his own goodneſs; and therefore as his Eſſence primarily repreſents it ſelf, ſo it repreſents the Creatures, and makes them known to him. As the Eſſence of God is eminently all things, ſo by underſtanding his Eſſence, he eminently underſtands all things. And therefore he hath not one knowledge of himſelf, and another knowledge of the Creatures; but by knowing himſelf, as the original and exemplary cauſe of all things, he cannot be ignorant of any Creature which he is the cauſe of; ſo that he knows all things, not by an underſtanding of them, but by an underſtanding of himſelf; by underſtanding his own Power as the efficient of them, his own Will as the order of them, his own Goodneſs as the adorner and beautifier of them, his own Wiſdom as the diſpoſer of them, and his own Holineſs, to which many of their actions are contrary.

Dionyſ.

Kendal against Goodwin of Foreknowledge.*

*As he ſees all things poſſible in his own Power, becauſe he is able to produce them; ſo he ſees all things future in his own Will; decreeing to effect them, if they be good; or Decreeing to permit them, if they be evil. In this Glaſs he ſees what he will give Being to, and what he will ſuffer to fall into a deficiency, without looking out of himſelf, or borrowing Knowledge from his Creatures; he knows all things in himſelf. And thus his Knowledge is more noble and of a higher elevation than ours, or the knowledge of any Creature can be; he knows all things by one comprehenſion of the cauſes in himſelf.

Propoſition II. God knows all things by one act of intuition. This the Schools call an intuitive knowledge. This follows upon the other; for if he know by his own Eſſence, he knows all things by one act, there would be otherwiſe a diviſion in his Eſſence, a firſt and a laſt, a nearneſs and a diſtance. As what he made, he made by one word; ſo what he ſees, he pierceth into by one glance from Eternity to Eternity: As he wills all things by one act of his Will, ſo he knows all things by one act of his Underſtanding: He knows not ſome things diſcurſively from other things, nor knows one thing ſucceſſively after another. As by one act he imparts Eſſence to things; ſo by one act he knows the Nature of things.

1. He doth not know by Diſcourſe, as we do. That is, By deducing one thing from another, and from common notions drawing out other rational concluſions, and arguing one thing from another, and ſpringing up various conſequences from ſome Principle aſſented to; but God ſtands in no need of reaſonings; the making inferences and abſtracting things, would be ſtains in the infinite Perfection of God; here would be a mixture of knowledge and ignorance; while he knew the Principle, he would not know the conſequence and concluſion, till he had actually deduc'd it; one thing would be known after another, and ſo he would have an ignorance, and then a knowledge; and there would be different conceptions in God, and knowledge would be multiplyed according to the multitude of Objects; as it is in humane underſtandings. But God knows all things before they did exiſt, and never was ignorant of them, Acts 15. 18. Known unto God are all his Works from the beginning of the World. He therefore knows them all at once; the knowledge of one thing was not before another, nor depended upon another, as it doth in the way of humane reaſoning. *Tho' indeed ſome make a vertual Diſcourſe in God that is, tho' God hath a ſimple knowledge, yet it doth vertually contain a Diſcourſe by the flowing of one knowledge from another; as from the knowledge of his own Power, he knows what things are poſſible to be made by him; and from the knowledge of himſelf, he paſſes to the knowledge of the Creatures; but this is only according to our conception, and becauſe of our weakneſs they are apprehended as two diſtinct acts in God, one of which is the reaſon of another: As we ſay that one Attribute is the reaſon of another; as his Mercy, may be ſaid to be the reaſon of his Patience; and his Omnipreſence, to be the reaſon of the knowledge of preſent things done in the World. God indeed by one ſimple act, knows himſelf and the Creatures; but when that Act whereby he knows himſelf, is conceived by us to paſs to the knowledge of the Creatures, we muſt not underſtand it to be a new Act, diſtinct from the other; but the ſame act upon different Terms or Objects, ſuch an order is in our underſtandings and conceptions, not in God's.

* Suarez. vol. 1. de Deo, lib. 3. cap. 2. p. 133, 134.

2. Nor doth he know ſucceſſively, as we do. That is, not by drops, one thing after another. This follows from the former; a knowledge of all things without Diſcourſe, is a knowledge without Succeſſion.* The knowledge of one thing is not in God before another, one act of Knowledge doth not forego another; in regard of the objects, one thing is before another, one Year before another, one Generation of Men before another, one is the cauſe, the other is the effect: In the Creatures there is ſuch a Succeſſion, and God knows there will be ſuch a Succeſſion; but there is no ſuch order in God's Knowledge; for he knows all thoſe Succeſſions by one glance, without any Succeſſion of knowledge in himſelf.

* Gamach in Aquin. q. 14. cap. 1 p. 119.

Man in his view of things, muſt turn ſometimes his Body, ſometimes only his Eyes; he cannot ſee all the Contents of a Letter at once, and tho' he beholds all the Lines in the Page of a Book at once, and a whole Country in a Map, yet to know what is contain'd in them, he muſt turn his Eye from word to word, and line to line, and ſo ſpin out one thing after another by ſeveral acts and motions. We behold a great part of the Sea at once*, but not all the dimenſions of it; for to know the length of the Sea we move our Eyes one way; to ſee the breadth of it, we turn our Eyes another way; to behold the depth of it, we have another motion of them And when we caſt our Eyes up to Heaven, we ſeem to receive in at an inſtant the whole extent of the Hemiſphere; yet there is but one Object the Eye can attentively pitch upon, and we cannot diſtinctly view what we ſee in a lump, without various motions of our Eyes, which is not done without ſucceſſion of Time *. And certainly the Underſtanding of Angels is bounded, according to the meaſure of their Beings; ſo that it cannot extend it ſelf at one time, to a quantity of Objects, to make a diſtinct application of them, but the Objects muſt preſent themſelves one by one: But God is all Eye, all Underſtanding; as there is no ſucceſſion in his Eſſence, ſo there is none in his Knowledge; his underſtanding in the nature, and in the act, is infinite, as it is in the Text. He therefore ſees Eternally and Univerſally, all things, by one act, without any motion, much leſs various motions; the various changes of things, in their ſubſtance, qualities, places, and relations, withdraw not any thing from his Eye, nor bring any new thing to his knowledge; he doth not upon conſideration of preſent things turn his mind from paſt; or when he beholds future things, turn his mind from preſent; but he ſees them not one after another, but all at once and all together; the whole Circle of his own Counſels, and all the various lines drawn forth from the Center of his Will, to the circumference of his Creatures; Juſt as if a Man were able in one moment to read a whole Library; or, as if you ſhould imagine a tranſparent Chryſtal Globe, hung up in the midſt of a Room, and ſo framed as to take in the Images of all things in the Room, the Fret-work in the Cieling, the In-laid parts of the Floor, and the particular parts of the Tapeſtry about it, the Eye of a Man would behold all the Beauty of the Room at once in it. As the Sun by one light and heat frames ſenſible things; ſo God by one ſimple act knows all things: As he knows mutable things by an immutable knowledge, bodily things by a ſpiritual knowledge; ſo he knows many things by one knowledge, Heb. 4. 13. All things are open and naked to him, more than any one thing can be to us; and therefore he views all things at once, as well as we can behold and contemplate one thing alone. As he is the Father of Lights, a God of infinite Underſtanding, there is no variableneſs in his mind, nor any ſhadow of turning of his Eye, as there is of ours, to behold various things, James 1. 17. His Knowledge being Eternal, includes all times; there is nothing paſt or future with him, and therefore he beholds all things by one and the ſame manner of Knowledge, and comprehends all knowable things by one act, and in one moment.

* Amyrant morale chreſti. Tom. 3. p. 137.

This muſt needs be ſo,

1. Becauſe of the eminency of God. God is above all, and therefore cannot but ſee the motions of all. He that ſits in a Theater, or at the top of a place, ſees all things, all perſons, by one aſpect he comprehends the whole Circle of the Place; whereas he that ſits below, when he looks before, he cannot ſee things behind; God being above all, about all, in all, ſees at once the motions of all. The whole World in the Eye of God, is leſs than a Point that divides one Sentence from another in a Book; as a Cypher, a grain of Duſt, Iſa. 40. 15. So little a thing can be ſeen by Man at once; and all things being as little in the Eye of God, are ſeen at once by him. As all time is but a moment to his Eternity; ſo all things are but as a point to the immenſity of his Knowledge, which he can behold with more eaſe than we can move or turn our eye.

2. Becauſe all the Perfections of Knowing, are united in God. * As particular ſenſes are divided in Man, by one he ſees, by another he hears, by another he ſmells, yet all thoſe are united in one common ſenſe, and this common ſenſe apprehends all; ſo the various and diſtinct ways of knowledge in the Creatures, are all eminently united in God. A Man when he ſees a grain of Wheat, underſtands at once all things that can in time proceed from that Seed; ſo God by beholding his own Vertue and Power, beholds all things which ſhall in time be unfolded by him. We have a ſhadow of this way of knowledge in our own Underſtanding; the ſenſe only perceives a thing preſent, and one Object only proper and ſutable to it; as the Eye ſees Colour, the Ear hears Sounds; we ſee this and that Man, one time this, another minute that; but the underſtanding abſtracts a notion of the common nature of Man, and frames a conception of that nature wherein all Men agree; and ſo in a manner beholds and underſtands all Men at once, by underſtanding the common nature of Man, which is a degree of knowledge above the ſenſe and fancy; we may then conceive an infinite vaſter Perfection in the Underſtanding of God. As to know, is ſimply better than not to know at all; ſo to know by one act comprehenſive, is a greater Perfection than to know by divided acts, by ſucceſſion to receive information, and to have an increaſe or decreaſe of knowledge, to be like a Bucket, always deſcending into the Well, and fetching Water from thence. 'Tis a Man's weakneſs that he is fixed on one object only at a time; 'Tis God's Perfection that he can behold all at once, and is fixed upon one no more than upon another.

* Cuſan p. 646.

Propoſition III. God knows all things independently. This is Eſſential to an infinite Underſtanding. He receives not his knowledge from any thing without him, he hath no Tutor to inſtruct him, or Book to inform him; who hath been his Counſellor? ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 40. 13. He hath no need of the Counſels of others, nor of the inſtructions of others. This follows upon the firſt and ſecond Propoſitions; if he knows things by his Eſſence, then as his Eſſence is independent from the Creatures, ſo is his knowledge; he borrows not any images from the Creature, hath no ſpecies or pictures of things in his underſtanding, as we have; no Beams from the Creature ſtrike upon him, to enlighten him, but beams from him upon the World; the Earth ſends not light to the Sun, but the Sun to the Earth.

Our knowledge indeed depends upon the Object; but all created Objects depend upon God's Knowledge and Will: We could not know Creatures, unleſs they were; but Creatures could not be, unleſs God knew them. As nothing that he Wills is the cauſe of his Will; ſo nothing that he Knows is the cauſe of his Knowledge, he did not make things to know them, but he knows them to make them; Who will imagine, that the mark of the Foot in the Duſt, is the cauſe that the Foot ſtands in this or that particular Place?

If his knowledge did depend upon the things, then the exiſtence of things did precede God's knowledge of them; to ſay that they are the cauſe of God's Knowledge, is to ſay, that God was not the cauſe of their Being; and if he did Create them, it was effected by a blind and ignorant Power, he created he knew not what, till he had produced it. If he be beholden for his Knowledge to the Creatures he hath made, he had then no knowledge of them before he made them. If his knowledge were dependant upon them, it could not be Eternal, but muſt have a beginning when the Creatures had a beginning, and be of no longer a date than ſince the Nature of things was in actual exiſtence; for whatſoever is a cauſe of knowledge, doth precede the knowledge it cauſes, either in order of Time, or order of Nature; Temporal things therefore cannot be the cauſe of that knowledge which is Eternal.

Eternal. His Works could not be foreknown to him, if his Knowledge commenc'd with the exiſtence of his Works, if he knew them before he made them, he could not derive a Knowledge from them after they were made. He made all things in Wiſdom, Pſal. 104. 24. How can this be imagin'd, if the things known were the cauſe of his Knowledge, and ſo before his knowledge, and therefore before his action *? God would not then be the firſt in the order of knowing Agents, becauſe he would not act by Knowledge, but act before he knew, and know after he had acted, and ſo the Creature which he made, would be before the act of his Underſtanding, whereby he knew what he made.

Acts 15. 18.

* Bradwardin, lib. 1. cap. 15.

Again, ſince Knowledge is a Perfection, if God's knowledge of the Creatures depended upon the Creatures, he would derive an Excellency from them, they would derive no Excellency from any Idea in the Divine Mind; he would not be infinitely perfect in himſelf; if his Perfection in knowledge were gained from any thing without himſelf and below himſelf, he would not be ſufficient of himſelf, but be under an Indigence, which wanted a ſupply from the things he had made; and could not be eternally perfect till he had created, and ſeen the Effects of his own Power, Goodneſs, and Wiſdom, to render him more wiſe and knowing in Time than he was from Eternity; Who can fancy ſuch a God as this, without deſtroying the Deity he pretends to adore? For if his Underſtanding be perfected by ſomething without him, why may not his Eſſence be perfected by ſomething without him; that as he was made knowing by ſomething without him, he might be made God by ſomething without him?

How could his Underſtanding be infinite, if it depended upon a finite Object, as upon a Cauſe? Is the Majeſty of God to be debas'd to a Mendicant condition, to ſeek for a ſupply from things inferior to himſelf? Is it to be imagin'd that a Fool, a Toad, a Fly ſhould be aſſiſtant to the Knowledge of God? That the moſt noble Being ſhould be perfected by things ſo vile, that the ſupream cauſe of all things ſhould receive any addition of Knowledge, and be determin'd in his Underſtanding by the Notion of things ſo mean? To conclude this Particular, all things depend upon his knowledge, his knowledge depends upon nothing, but is as independent as himſelf, and his own Eſſence.

Propoſition IV. God knows all things diſtinctly. His Underſtanding is infinite in regard of clearneſs; God is light, and in him is no darkneſs at all, John 1. 5. He ſees not through a Miſt or Cloud; there's no Blemiſh in his Underſtanding, no Mote or Beam in his Eye, to render any thing obſcure to him. Man diſcerns the ſurface and outſide of things, little or nothing of the Eſſence of things; we ſee the nobleſt things, but as in a glaſs darkly, 1 Cor. 13. 12. The too great nearneſs, as well as the too great diſtance of a thing, hinders our ſight; the ſmallneſs of a mote eſcapes our Eye, and ſo our Knowledge; alſo the weakneſs of our Underſtanding is troubled with the multitude of things, and cannot know many things but confuſedly. But God knows the Forms and Eſſence of things, every Circumſtance; nothing is ſo deep, but he ſees to the bottom; he ſees the maſs, and ſees the motes of Beings; his Underſtanding being infinite, is not offended with a multitude of things, or diſtracted with the variety of them; he diſcerns every thing infinitely more clearly and perfectly than Adam or Solomon could any one thing in the Circle of their knowledge: What knowledge they had, was from him; he hath therefore infinitely a more perfect knowledge than they were capable in their Natures to receive a communication of. All things are open to him, Heb. 4. 13. The leaſt fibre in its nakedneſs and diſtinct frame, is tranſparent to him; as by the help of Glaſſes, the Mouth, Feet, Hands of a ſmall Inſect, are viſible to a Man, which ſeem to the Eye, without that aſſiſtance, one entire piece, not diverſified into parts. All the Cauſes, Qualities, Natures, Properties of things are open to him, he brings out the Hoſt of Heaven by number, and calleth them by Names, Iſa. 40. 26. He numbers the Hairs of our heads; what more diſtinct than Number? Thus God beholds things in every Unity, which makes up the heap: He knows, and none elſe can, every thing in its true and intimate cauſes, in its original and intermediate cauſes; in himſelf, as the cauſe of every Particular of their Being, every Property in their Being.

Knowledge by the cauſes is the moſt noble and perfect Knowledge, and moſt ſuited to the Infinite Excellency of the Divine Being; he created all things, and ordered them to an univerſal and particular end; he therefore knows the Eſſential Properties of every thing, every activity of their Nature, all their fitneſs for thoſe diſtinct Ends, to which he orders them, and for which he governs and diſpoſeth them; and underſtands their darkeſt and moſt hidden qualities, infinitely clearer than any Eye can behold the clear Beams of the Sun. He knows all things as he made them; he made them diſtinctly, and therefore knows them diſtinctly, and that every individual; therefore God is ſaid, Gen. 1. 31. To ſee every thing that he hath made; he took a review of every particular Creature he had made, and upon his view pronounced it good: To pronounce that good, which was not exactly known in every Creek, in every Mite of its Nature, had not conſiſted with his veracity; for every one that ſpeaks Truth ignorantly, that knows not that he ſpeaks Truth, is a Liar in ſpeaking that which is true. God knows every act of his own Will, whether it be poſitive or permiſſive, and therefore every effect of his Will. We muſt needs aſcribe to God a perfect Knowledge; but a confuſed Knowledge cannot challenge that Title. To know things only in a heap, is unworthy of the Divine Perfection; for if God knows his own ends in the Creation of things, he knows diſtinctly the means whereby he will bring them to thoſe ends for which he hath appointed them: No Wiſe Man intends an end, without a knowledge of the means conducing to that end; an ignorance then of any thing in the World, which falls under the nature of a means to a Divine end (and there is nothing in the World but doth,) would be inconſiſtent with the Perfection of God; it would aſcribe to him a blind Providence in the World. As there can be nothing imperfect in his Being and Eſſence, ſo there can be nothing imperfect in his Underſtanding and Knowledge; and therefore not a confus'd Knowledge, which is an Imperfection. Darkneſs and Light are both alike to him, Pſal. 139. 12. He ſees diſtinctly into the one, as well as the other; what is Darkneſs to us, is not ſo to him.

Propoſition V. God knows all things infallibly. His Underſtanding is infinite, in regard of certainty; every Tittle of what he knows, is as far from failing, as what he ſpeaks; our Saviour affirms the one, Mat. 5. 18. And there is the ſame reaſon of the certainty of one as well as the other; his Eſſence is the meaſure of his Knowledge; whence it is as impoſſible that God ſhould be miſtaken in the knowledge of the leaſt thing in the World, as it is that he ſhould be miſtaken in his own Eſſence; for knowing himſelf himſelf comprehenſively, he muſt know all other things infallibly. Since he is eſſentially Omniſcient, he is no more capable of Error in his Underſtanding, than of Imperfection in his Eſſence; his Counſels are as unerring as his Eſſence is perfect, and his Knowledge as infallible as his Eſſence is free from defect.

Again, ſince God knows all things with a knowledge of Viſion, becauſe he Wills them; his Knowledge muſt be as infallible as his Purpoſe; now his Purpoſe will certainly be effected; what he hath thought ſhall come to paſs, and what he hath purpoſed ſhall ſtand, Iſa. 14. 24. His Counſel ſhall ſtand, and he will do all his pleaſure, Iſa. 46. 10. There may be interruptions of Nature, the Foundations of it may be out of courſe, but there can be no bar upon the Author of Nature; he hath an infinite Power to carry on and perfect the reſolves of his own Will; he can effect what he pleaſes by a Word. Speech is one of the leaſt motions; yet when God ſaid, let there be Light, there was Light, ariſing from Darkneſs. No Reaſon can be given why God knows a thing to be, but becauſe he infallibly Wills it to be.

* Suarez. Vol. 2. p. 228.

Again, * The Schools make this difference between the knowledge of the good and bad Angels, that the good are never deceived; for that is repugnant to their Bleſſed State; for deceit is an evil and an imperfection, inconſiſtent with that perfect Bleſſedneſs the good Angels are poſſeſſed of; and would it not much more be a ſtain upon the Bleſſedneſs of that God that is bleſſed for ever, to be ſubject to deceit? His Knowledge therefore is not an Opinion, for an Opinion is uncertain; a Man knows not what to think, but leans to one part of the Queſtion propos'd, rather than to the other. If things did not come to paſs therefore as God knows them, his knowledge would be imperfect; and ſince he knows by his Eſſence, his Eſſence alſo would be imperfect, if God were expos'd to any Deceit in his knowledge; he knows by himſelf, who is the higheſt Truth; and therefore it is impoſſible he ſhould err in his Underſtanding.

Propoſition VI. God knows immutably. His Underſtanding elſe could not be infinite; every thing and every Act that is mutable, is finite, it hath its Bounds; for there is a Term from which it changeth, and a Term to which it changes. * There is a change in the Underſtanding when we gain the Knowledge of a thing, which was unknown to us before; or when we actually conſider a thing which we did not know before, though we had the Principles of the Knowledge of it; or, when we know that diſtinctly, which we before knew confuſedly. None of theſe can be aſcribed to God, without a manifeſt Diſparagement of his Infiniteneſs: Our Knowledge indeed is alway arriving to us or flowing from us; we paſs from one Degree to another, from worſe to better, or from better to worſe; but God loſes nothing by the Ages that are run, nor will gain any thing by the Ages that are to come. If there were a Variation in the Knowledge of God, by the daily and hourly Changes in the World, he would grow wiſer than he was, he was not then perfectly wiſe before. A Change in the Objects known, infers not any change in the Underſtanding exerciſed about them; the Wheel moves round, the Spokes that are loweſt are preſently higheſt, and preſently return to be low again; but the Eye that beholds them, changes not with the Motion of the Wheels. God's Knowledge admits no more of encreaſe or decreaſe, than his Eſſence doth; ſince God knows by his Eſſence, and the Eſſence of God is God himſelf, his Knowledge muſt be void of any change. The Knowledge of poſſible things ariſing from the Knowledge of his own Power cannot be changed, unleſs his Power be changed, and God become weak and impotent; the Knowledge of future things cannot be chang'd, becauſe that Knowledge ariſeth from his Will, which is irreverſible, the Counſel of the Lord that ſhall ſtand, Prov. 19. 21. So that if God can never decay into Weakneſs, and never turn to Inconſtancy, there can be no variation of his Knowledge. He knows what he can do, and he knows what he will do, and both theſe being immutable, his Knowledge muſt conſequently be ſo too. It was not neceſſary that this or that Creature ſhould be, and therefore it was not neceſſary that God ſhould know this or that Creature with a Knowledge of Viſion; but after the Will of God had determin'd the Exiſtence of this or that Creature, his Knowledge being then determin'd to this or that Object, did neceſſarily continue unchangeable. God therefore knows no more now, than he did before; and at the end of the World he ſhall know no more than he doth now; and from Eternity he knows no leſs than he doth now, and ſhall do to Eternity. Though things paſs into Being and out of Being, the Knowledge of God doth not vary with them, for he knows them as well before they were, as when they are; and knows them as well when they are paſt, as when they are preſent.

* Tileni Syntagma Part 1. Diſp. 13. Theſ. 13.

Propoſition VII. God knows all things perpetually, i. e. in Act. Since he knows by his Eſſence, he always knows, becauſe his Eſſence never ceaſeth, but is a pure Act; ſo that he doth not know only in Habit, but in Act. Men that have the Knowledge of ſome Art or Science, have it always in Habit, though when they are aſleep they have it not in Act; A Muſician hath the Habit of Muſick, but doth not ſo much as think of it when his Senſes are bound up. But God is an unſleepy Eye *, he never ſlumbers nor ſleeps; he never ſlumbers, in regard of his Providence, and therefore never ſlumbers in regard of his Knowledge. He knows not himſelf, nor any other Creature more perfectly at one time than at another; he is perpetually in the Act of knowing, as the Sun is in the Act of ſhining; the Sun never ceas'd to ſhine in one or other part of the World, ſince it was firſt fixed in the Heavens; nor God to be in the Act of Knowledge, ſince he was God; and therefore ſince he always was, and always will be God, he always was, and always will be in the Act of Knowledge; always knowing his own Eſſence, he muſt alway actually know what hath been gone and ceas'd from Being, and what ſhall come and ariſe into Being. As a Watchmaker knows what Watch he intends to make; and after he hath made it, though it be broken to Pieces or conſumed by the Fire, he ſtill knows it, becauſe he knows the Copy of it in his own Mind. Some therefore in regard of this perpetual Act of the Divine Knowledge, have called God not Intellectus, but the Intellection of Intellections; we have no proper Engliſh Word to expreſs the Act of the Underſtanding; as his Power is co-eternal with him, ſo his Knowledge; all times paſt, preſent and to come, are embrac'd in the Boſom of his Underſtanding; he fixed all things in their Seaſons, that nothing new comes to him, nothing old paſſes from him *. What is done in a Thouſand Years, is as actually preſent with his Knowledge, as what is done in one Day, or in one Watch in the Night, is with ours: Since a Thouſand Years are no more to God than a Day, or a Watch in the Night is to us, Pſal. 90. 4. God is in the higheſt degree of Being, and therefore in the higheſt degree of Underſtanding. Knowledge is one of the moſt perfect Acts in any Creature. God therefore hath all all actual, as well as Eſſential and Habitual Knowledge, his Underſtanding is infinite.

* Dimit.

IV. The fourth general, is Reaſons to prove this.

Reaſ. 1. God muſt know what any Creature knows, and more than any Creature knows. There is nothing done in the World, but is known by ſome Creature or other; every Action is at leaſt known by the Perſon that Acts, and therefore known by the Creator, who cannot be exceeded by any of the Creatures, or all of them together; and every Creature is known by him, ſince every Creature is made by him. * And as God works all things by an infinite Power, ſo he knows all things by an infinite Underſtanding.

* Gerhard.

* Gamach in 1. part. Aquin. q. 14. cap. 1. pag. 118, 119.

1. The Perfection of God requires this. * All Perfections that include no Eſſential Defect, are formally in God; but Knowledge includes no Eſſential Defect in it ſelf, therefore it is in God. Knowledge in it ſelf, is deſirable, and an Excellency; Ignorance is a Defect; 'tis impoſſible that the leaſt Grain of Defect can be found in the moſt perfect Being. Since God is Wiſe, he muſt be Knowing; for Wiſdom muſt have Knowledge for the Baſis of it, A Creature can no more be wiſe without Knowledge, than he can be active without Strength. Now God is only Wiſe, Rom. 16. 27. And therefore only knowing in the higheſt degree of Knowledge, incomprehenſibly beyond all Degrees of Knowledge, becauſe infinite.

Again, the more Spiritual any thing is, the more Underſtanding it is. The dull Body underſtands nothing; Senſe perceives, but the Underſtanding Faculty is ſeated in the Soul, which is of a ſpiritual Nature, which knows things that are preſent, remembers things that are paſt, foreſees many things to come. What is the Property of a ſpiritual Nature, muſt be in a moſt eminent manner, in the ſupream Spirit of the World, that is, in the higheſt degree of Spirituality, and moſt remote from any matter.

Again, nothing can enjoy other things, but by ſome kind of underſtanding them; God hath the higheſt enjoyment of himſelf, of all things he hath created, of all the Glory that accrues to him by them; nothing of Perfection and Bleſſedneſs can be wanting to him. Felicity doth not conſiſt with Ignorance, and all imperfect Knowledge is a degree of Ignorance? God therefore doth perfectly know himſelf, and all things from whence he deſigns any Glory to himſelf. The moſt noble manner of acting muſt be aſcribed to God, as being the moſt noble and excellent Being; to act by Knowledge, is the moſt excellent manner of acting; God hath therefore, not only Knowledge, but the moſt excellent manner of Knowledge; for as it is better to know than to be ignorant, ſo it is better to know in the moſt excellent manner, than to have a mean and low kind of Knowledge; his Knowledge therefore muſt be every way as perfect as his Eſſence, infinite as well as that. An infinite Nature muſt have an infinite Knowledge: A God ignorant of any thing, cannot be counted infinite, for he is not infinite to whom any degree of Perfection is wanting.

2. All the knowledge in any Creature is from God. And you muſt allow God a greater and more perfect knowledge than any Creature hath, yea, than all Creatures have. All the drops of knowledge any Creature hath, come from God; and all the knowledge in every Creature, that ever was, is, or ſhall be in the whole Maſs, was derived from him. If all thoſe ſeveral Drops in particular Creatures, were collected into one Spirit, into one Creature, it would be an unconceivable knowledge, yet ſtill lower than what the Author of all that knowledge hath; for God cannot give more knowledge than he hath himſelf; nor is the Creature capable of receiving ſo much knowledge as God hath. As the Creature is uncapable of receiving ſo much Power as God hath, for then it would be Almighty; ſo it is uncapable of receiving ſo much knowledge as God hath, for then it would be God. Nothing can be made by God equal to him in any thing; if any thing could be made as knowing as God, it would be eternal as God, it would be the cauſe of all things as God. The Knowledge that we poor Worms have, is an Argument God uſes for the aſſerting the greatneſs of his own knowledge, Pſal. 94. 10. He teaches man knowledge, ſhall he not know? Man hath here Knowledge aſcribed to him, the Author of this knowledge is God, he furniſh'd him with it, and therefore doth in a higher manner poſſeſs it; and much more than can fall under the comprehenſion of any Creature; as the Sun enlightens all things, but hath more Light in it ſelf than it darts upon the Earth or the Heavens; and ſhall not God eminently contain all that knowledge he imparts to the Creatures, and infinitely more exact and comprehenſive?

3. The Accuſations of Conſcience, evidence God's knowledge of all Actions of all his Creatures. Doth not Conſcience check for the moſt ſecret Sins, to which none are privy but a man's ſelf; the whole World beſide being ignorant of his Crime? Do not the fears of another Judge gall the heart? If a Judgment above him be fear'd, an Underſtanding above him diſcerning their Secrets is confeſs'd by thoſe fears; whence can thoſe horrors ariſe, if there be not a Superiour that underſtands and records the Crime? What Perfection of the Divine Being can this relate unto, but Omniſcience? What other Attribute is to be feared, if God were defective in this?

The condemnation of us by our own Hearts, when none in the World can condemn us, renders it legible, that there is one greater than our hearts, in reſpect of Knowledge, who knows all things, 1 John 3. 20. Conſcience would be a vain Principle, and ſtingleſs without this; it would be an eaſie matter to ſilence all its Accuſations, and mockingly laugh in the face of its ſevereſt frowns. What need any trouble themſelves, if none knows their Crimes but themſelves? Conceal'd Sins, gnawing the Conſcience, are Arguments of God's Omniſcience of all preſent and paſt Actions.

4. God is the firſt cauſe of every thing, every Creature in his Production. Since all Creatures, from the higheſt Angel to the loweſt Worm, exiſt by the Power of God; if God underſtands his own Power and Excellency, nothing can be hid from him, that was brought forth by that Power, as well as nothing can be unknown to him, that that Power is able to produce. * If God knows nothing beſides himſelf, he may then believe there is nothing beſides himſelf; we ſhall then fancy a God miſerably miſtaken: If he knows nothing beſides himſelf, then things were not Created by him, or not underſtandingly and voluntarily Created, but drop'd from him before he was aware. To think that the firſt cauſe of all ſhould be ignorant of thoſe things he is the cauſe of, is to make him not a voluntary, but natural Agent, and therefore neceſſary; and then that the Creature came from him as Light from the Sun, and Moiſture from the Water; this would be an abſurd Opinion of the World's Creation; if God be a voluntary Agent, as he is, he muſt be an intelligent Agent. The Faculty of Will is not in any Creature, without that of Underſtanding alſo: If God be an intelligent Agent, his knowledge muſt extend as far as his operation, and every object of his operation, unleſs we imagine God hath loſt his Memory, mory, in that long Tract of time ſince the firſt Creation of them. An Artificer cannot be ignorant of his own Work; If God knows himſelf, he knows himſelf to be a Cauſe; how can he know himſelf to be a Cauſe, unleſs he know the Effects he is the cauſe of? One relation implies another; a Man cannot know himſelf to be a Father, unleſs he hath a Child, becauſe it is a name of relation, and in the Notion of it refers to another. The name of cauſe is a name of relation, and implies an effect; If God therefore know himſelf in all his Perfections, as the Cauſe of things, he muſt know all his acts, what his Wiſdom contriv'd, what his Counſel determin'd, and what his Power effected. The knowledge of God is to be ſuppos'd in a free determination of himſelf; and that knowledge muſt be perfect, both of the object, act, and all the circumſtances of it. How can his Will freely produce any thing that was not firſt known in his Underſtanding? From this the Prophet argues the underſtanding of God, and the unſearchableneſs of it, becauſe he is the Creator of the ends of the Earth, Iſa. 40. 28. and the ſame reaſon David gives of God's Knowledge of him, and of every thing he did, and that afar off, becauſe he was formed by him, Pſal. 139. 2, 15, 16. As the perfect making of things only belongs to God; ſo doth the perfect knowledge of things; 'tis abſurd to think, that God ſhould be ignorant of what he hath given Being to; that he ſhould not know all the Creatures and their qualities, the Plants and their vertues; as that a Man ſhould not know the Letters that are formed by him in Writing. Every thing bears in it ſelf the mark of God's Perfections; and ſhall not God know the repreſentation of his own vertue?

* Bradwar-din. p. 6.

5. Without this Knowledge, God could no more be the Governour, than he could be the Creator of the World. Knowledge is the Baſis of Providence; to Know things, is before the Government of things, a practical knowledge cannot be without a theoretical knowledge. Nothing could be directed to its proper end, without the knowledge of the nature of it, and its ſuitableneſs to anſwer that end for which it is intended. As every thing, even the minuteſt, falls under the conduct of God, ſo every thing falls under the knowledge of God. A Blind Coach-man is not able to hold the Reins of his Horſes, and direct them in right Paths: Since the Providence of God is about particulars, his Knowledge muſt be about particulars; he could not elſe govern them in particular; nor could all things be ſaid to depend upon him in their Being and Operations. Providence depends upon the knowledge of God, and the exerciſe of it upon the Goodneſs of God; it cannot be without Underſtanding and Will; Underſtanding to know what is convenient, and Will to perform it. When our Saviour therefore ſpeaks of Providence, he intimates theſe two, in a ſpecial manner, Your Heavenly Father knows that you have need of theſe things, Matt. 6. 32. and goodneſs, in Luke 11. 13. The reaſon of Providence is ſo joyned with Omniſcience, that they cannot be ſeparated: What a kind of God would he be that were ignorant of thoſe things that were governed by him? The aſcribing this Perfection to him, aſſerts his Providence; for it is as eaſie for one that knows all things, to look over the whole World, if writ with Monoſyllables, in every little particular of it; as it is with a Man to take a view of one Letter in an Alphabet.

* Sa'und Tit. 84. much changed.

* Again if God were not Omniſcient, how could he reward the Good, and puniſh the Evil? the works of Men are either rewardable or puniſhable; not only according to their outward circumſtances, but inward Principles and Ends, and the degrees of Venom lurking in the Heart. The exact diſcerning of theſe, without a poſſibility to be deceived, is neceſſary to paſs a right and infallible Judgment upon them, and proportion the cenſure and puniſhment to the Crime: Without ſuch a Knowledge and Diſcerning, Men would not have their due; nay, a Judgment juſt for the matter, would be unjuſt in the manner, becauſe unjuſtly paſt, without an underſtanding of the merit of the Cauſe. 'Tis neceſſary therefore that the Supream Judge of the World ſhould not be thought to be blindfold, when he diſtributes his Rewards and Puniſhments, and muffle his Face when he paſſes his Sentence. 'Tis neceſſary to aſcribe to him the knowledge of mens thoughts and intentions; the ſecret wills and aims; the hidden works of Darkneſs in every Man's Conſcience, becauſe every Man's work is to be meaſured by the Will and inward Frame. 'Tis neceſſary that he ſhould perpetually retain all thoſe things in the indelible and plain Records of his Memory, that there may not be any work without a juſt proportion of what is due to it. This is the glory of God to diſcover the ſecrets of all Hearts at laſt, as 1 Cor. 4. 5. the Lord ſhall bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the Counſels of all Hearts, and then ſhall every Man have praiſe of God. This knowledge fits him to be a Judge; the reaſon why the ungodly ſhall not ſtand in Judgment, is becauſe God knows their ways, which is implyed in his knowing the way of the righteous *. * Pſal. 1. 5, 6.

I now proceed to the Uſe.

USE the firſt, is of information or inſtruction. If God hath all Knowledge; then,

I. Jeſus Chriſt is not a meer Creature. The two Titles of Wonderful Counſellor and Mighty God, are given him in conjunction, Iſa. 9. 6. not only the Angel of the Covenant, as he is called, Malach. 3. 1. or the Executor of his Counſels, but a Counſellor, in conjunction with him in Counſel as well as Power: This Title is ſuperior to any Title given to any of the Prophets in regard of their Predictions; and therefore I ſhould take it rather as the note of his perfect underſtanding, than of his perfect teaching and diſcovering; as Calvin doth: He is not only the Revealer of what he knows, ſo were the Prophets according to their meaſures; but the Counſellor of what he revealed, having a perfect underſtanding of all the Counſels of God, as being intereſted in them, as the Mighty God. He calls himſelf by the peculiar Title of God, and declares that he will manifeſt himſelf by this Prerogative to all the Churches, Rev. 2. 23. And all the Churches ſhall know that I am he, which ſearches the Reins and Hearts, the moſt hidden Operations of the Minds of Men that lie locked up from the view of all the World beſides. And this was no new thing to him, after his Aſcenſion; for the ſame Perfection he had in the time of his earthly Fleſh, Luke 6. 8. he knew their Thoughts; his Eyes are therefore compar'd, Cant. 5. 12. to Doves Eyes, which are clear and quick; and to a flame of fire, Rev. 1. 14. not only heat to conſume his Enemies, but Light to diſcern their contrivances againſt the Church; he pierceth, by his knowledge, into all parts, as fire pierceth into the cloſeſt particle of Iron, and ſeparates between the moſt united parts of Metals; and ſome tell us, he is called a Roe, from the perſpicacity of his Sight, as well as from the ſwiftneſs of his Motion.

1. He hath a perfect Knowledge of the Father; he knows the Father, and none elſe knows the Father; Angels know God, Men know God, but Chriſt in a peculiar manner knows the Father; no Man knows the Son but the Father; neither knows any Man the Father; ſave the Son, Matt. 11. 27. he knows ſo, as that he learns not from any other; he doth perfectly comprehend him, which is beyond the reach of any Creature, with the addition of all the Divine Vertue;

Vertue; not becauſe of any incapacity in God to reveal, but the incapacity of the Creature to receive; finite is uncapable of being made infinite, and therefore incapable of comprehending infinite; ſo that Chriſt cannot be Deus factus, made of a Creature a God, to comprehend God; for then of finite he would become infinite, which is a contradiction. As the Spirit is God, becauſe he ſearches the deep things of God, 1 Cor. 2. 10. that is, comprehends them *, as the Spirit of a Man doth the things of a Man (now the Spirit of Man underſtands what it Thinks, and what it Wills) ſo the Spirit of God underſtands what is in the Underſtanding of God, and what is in the Will of God. He hath an abſolute knowledge aſcrib'd to him, and ſuch as could not be aſcrib'd to any thing but a Divinity: Now if the Spirit knows the deep things of God, and takes from Chriſt what he ſhews to us of him, John 16. 15. he cannot be ignorant of thoſe things himſelf; he muſt know the depths of God that affords us that Spirit, that is not ignorant of any of the Counſels of the Father's Will; ſince he comprehends the Father, and the Father him, he is in himſelf infinite; for God whoſe Eſſence is infinite, is infinitely knowable; but no created underſtanding can infinitely know God. The infiniteneſs of the object hinders it from being underſtood by any thing that is not infinite. Though a Creature ſhould underſtand all the works of God, yet it cannot be therefore ſaid to underſtand God himſelf: As tho' I may underſtand all the volitions and motions of my Soul, yet it doth not follow that therefore I underſtand the whole nature and ſubſtance of my Soul; or if a Man underſtood all the effects of the Sun, that therefore he underſtands fully the nature of the Sun. But Chriſt knows the Father, he lay in the Boſom of the Father, was in the greateſt intimacy with him, John 1. 18. and from this intimacy with him, he ſaw him and knew him; ſo he knows God as much as he is knowable; and therefore knows him perfectly as the Father knows himſelf by a comprehenſive Viſion; this is the knowledge of God wherein properly the infiniteneſs of his underſtanding appears: And our Saviour uſes ſuch expreſſions which manifeſt his Knowledge to be above all created Knowledge, and ſuch a manner of knowledge of the Father, as the Father hath of him.

* Petav. Theo. dogmat. Tom. 1. p. 467, &c.

2. Chriſt knows all Creatures. That knowledge which comprehends God, comprehends all Created things as they are in God; 'tis a knowledge that ſinks to the depths of his Will, and therefore extends to all the acts of his Will in Creation and Providence; by knowing the Father he knows all things that are contained in the Vertue, Power and Will of God; whatſoever the Father doth, that the Son doth, John 5. 19. As the Father therefore knows all things he is the cauſe of, ſo doth the Son know all things he is the worker of; as the perfect making of all things belongs to both, ſo doth the perfect knowledge of all things belong to both; where the action is the ſame, the knowledge is the ſame. Now the Father did not Create one thing, and Chriſt another; but all things were Created by him, and for him: all things both in Heaven and Earth, Col. 1. 16. As he knows himſelf the cauſe of all things, and the end of all things, he cannot be ignorant of all things that were effected by him, and are referred to him; he knows all Creatures in God, as he knows the Eſſence of God, and knows all Creatures in themſelves, as he Knows his own acts and the fruits of his Power; thoſe things muſt be in his Knowledge that were in his Power, all the Treaſures of the Wiſdom and Knowledge of God are hid in him, Col. 2. 3. Now it is not the Wiſdom of God to know in part, and be in part ignorant. He cannot be ignorant of any thing, ſince there is nothing but what was made by him, John 1. 3. and ſince it is leſs to know than Create; for we know many things which we cannot make. If he be the Creator, he cannot but be the diſcerner of what he made; this is a part of Wiſdom belonging to an Artificer to know the nature and quality of what he makes. Since he cannot be ignorant of what he furniſht with Being, and with various endowments, he muſt know them not only univerſally, but particularly. Petav. Theolo. Dogmat. Tom. 1. P. 467.

3. Chriſt knows the hearts and affections of Men. Peter ſcruples not to aſcribe to him this knowledge, among the knowledge of all other things, John 21. 17. Lord thou knoweſt all things, thou knoweſt that I love thee. From Chriſt's knowledge of all things, he concludes his knowledge of the inward frames and diſpoſitions of Men. To ſearch the Heart, is the ſole Prerogative of God, 1 Kings 8. 39. For thou, even thou only knoweſt the hearts of all the Children of Men: Shall we take (only) here with a limitation, as ſome that are no Friends to the Deity of Chriſt would, and ſay, God only knows the hearts of Men from himſelf, and by his own infinite vertue? Why may we not take (only) in other places with a limitation, and make nonſence of it, as Pſal. 86. 10. Thou art God alone. Is it to be underſtood, that God is God alone from himſelf, but other Gods may be made by him, and ſo there may be numberleſs infinites? I s God is God alone, ſo that none can be God but himſelf; ſo he alone knows all the hearts of all the Children of Men, and none but he can know them; this knowledge is from his nature. * The reaſon why God knows the hearts of Men, is rendred in the Scripture double, becauſe he created them, and becauſe he is preſent every where, Pſal. 33. 13, 15. theſe two are by the Confeſſion of Chriſtians and Pagans univerſally received as the proper Characters of Divinity, whereby the Deity is diſtinguiſh'd from all Creatures. Now when Chriſt aſcribes this to himſelf, and that with ſuch an Emphaſis, that nothing greater than that could be urg'd, as he doth, Rev. 2. 23. we muſt conclude that he is of the ſame Eſſence with God, one with him in his Nature, as well as one with him in his Attributes. God only knows the hearts of the Children of Men; there is the unity of God: Chriſt ſearches the Hearts and Reins; there is a diſtinction of perſons in an oneneſs of Eſſence; he knows the hearts of all Men, not only of thoſe that were with him in the time of the Fleſh, that have been and ſhall be, ſince his Aſcenſion; but of thoſe that lived and died before his coming, becauſe he is to be the Judge of all that lived before his humiliaon on Earth, as well as after his exaltation in Heaven. It pertains to him as a Judge, to know diſtinctly the merits of the Cauſe of which he is to judge; and this excellency of ſearching the hearts is mention'd by himſelf with relation to his judicial Proceeding, I will give to every one of you according to your Works. And tho' a Creature may know what is in a Man's heart, if it be revealed to him, yet ſuch a knowledge is a knowledge only by report, not by inſpection; yet this latter is aſcrib'd to Chriſt, John 2. 24, 25. he knew all Men, and needed not that any ſhould teſtify of Man, for he knew what was in Man; he looked into their hearts. The Evangeliſt to allay the amazement of Men at his relation of our Saviour's knowledge of the inward falſity of thoſe that made a ſplendid Profeſſion of him; doth not ſay, the Father revealed it to him; but intimates it to be an unſeparable Property of his nature. No covering was ſo thick as to bound his Eye; no pretence ſo glittering as to impoſe upon his underſtanding. Thoſe that made a Profeſſion of him, and could not be diſcerned by the Eye of Man from his faithfulleſt Attendants, were in their inſide known to him plainer plainer than their outſide was to others; and therefore he committed not himſelf to them, tho' they ſeemed to be perſwaded to a real belief in his name, becauſe of the Power of his Miracles; and were touched with an admiration of him, as ſome great Prophet, and perhaps declared him to be the Meſſiah, ver. 23.

* Placeus de deitate Chriſti.

4. He had a foreknowledge of the particular inclinations of men, before thoſe diſtinct inclinations were in actual Being in them. This is plainly aſſerted, John 6. 64. But there are ſome of you that believe not, for Jeſus knew from the beginning who they were that believed not, and who ſhould betray him. When Chriſt aſſured them from the knowledge of the hearts of his followers, that ſome of them were void of that Faith they profeſs'd: The Evangeliſt, to ſtop their Amazement, that Chriſt ſhould have ſuch a Power and Vertue; adds, that he knew from the beginning, that he had not only a preſent knowledge, but a foreknowledge of every ones inclination; he knew not only now and then what was in the Hearts of his Diſciples, but from the beginning of any ones giving up their Names to him; he knew whether it were a pretence, or ſincere, he knew who ſhould betray him, and there was no Man's inward Affection but was foreſeen by him. * From the beginning, whether we underſtand it from the beginning of the World, as when Chriſt ſaith concerning Divorces, from the beginning it was not ſo, that is, from the beginning of the World, from the beginning of the Law of Nature; or from the beginning of their attending him; as it is taken, Luke 1. 2. he had a certain preſcience of the inward diſpoſitions of mens hearts, and their ſucceeding Sentiments; he foreknew the treacherous heart of Judas in the midſt of his ſplendid Profeſſion, and diſcern'd his reſolution in the root, and his thought in the confus'd Chaos of his Natural Corruption; he knew how it would ſpring up, before it did ſpring up, before Judas had any diſtinct and formal conception of it himſelf, or before there was any actual preparation to a reſolve. Peter's denyal was not unknown to him, when Peter had a preſent Reſolution, and no queſtion ſpake it in the preſent ſincerity of his Soul, never to forſake him; he foreknew what would be the reſult of that Poiſon which lurk'd in Peter's Nature, before Peter himſelf imagin'd any thing of it; he diſcern'd Peter's Apoſtatizing heart, when Peter reſolved the contrary; our Saviour's Prediction was accompliſh'd, and Peter's valiant Reſolution languiſh'd into Cowardice.

* ἐξ ἀρχῆς

Shall we then conclude our Bleſſed Saviour a Creature, who perfectly and only knew the Father, who knew all Creatures, who had all the Treaſures of Wiſdom and Knowledge, who knew the inward motions of mens hearts by his own Vertue, and had not only a preſent Knowledge, but a Preſcience of them.

Inform. II. The ſecond Inſtruction from this Poſition, That God hath an infinite Knowledge and Underſtanding. Then there is a Providence exercis'd by God in the World, and that about every thing. As Providence infers Omniſcience as the guide of it; ſo Omniſcience infers Providence as the end of it. What Exerciſe would there be of this Attribute, but in the Government of the World? To this infinite Perfection refers, Jer. 17. 10. I the Lord ſearch the Heart, I try the Reins, to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings. He ſearches the heart to reward, he rewards every Man according to the rewardableneſs of his actions; his Government therefore extends to every Man in the World; there is no heart but he ſearches, therefore no heart but he governs; to what purpoſe elſe would be this Knowledge of all his Creatures? For a meer Contemplation of them? No, What pleaſure can that be to God, who knows himſelf, who is infinitely more excellent than all his Creatures? Doth he know them, to neglect all care of them? This muſt be either out of Sloth, but how incompatible is Lazineſs to a pure and infinite Activity? Or out of Majeſty, but 'tis no leſs for the glory of his Majeſty to conduct them, than it was for the glory of his Power to erect them into Being; he that counts nothing unworthy of his Arms to make, nothing unworthy of his Underſtanding to know; why ſhould he count any thing unworthy of his Wiſdom to govern? If he knows them, to neglect them, it muſt be becauſe he hath no Will to it, or no Goodneſs for it: Either of theſe would be a ſtain upon God; to want Goodneſs is to be Evil, and to want Will is to be negligent and ſcornful, which are inconſiſtent with an Infinite, Active Goodneſs. Doth a Father neglect providing for the wants of the Family which he knows? Or a Phyſician the cure of that Diſeaſe he underſtands? God is Omniſcient, he therefore ſees all things; he is good, he doth not therefore neglect any thing, but conducts it to the end he appointed it. There is nothing ſo little that can eſcape his Knowledge, and therefore nothing ſo little but falls under his Providence; nothing ſo ſublime, as to be above his Underſtanding; and therefore nothing can be without the compaſs of his Conduct; nothing can eſcape his Eye, and therefore nothing can eſcape his Care; nothing is known by him in vain, as nothing was made by him in vain; there muſt be acknowledg'd therefore ſome end of this knowledge of all his Creatures.

Inſtruct. III. Hence then will follow the certainty of a Day of Judgment. To what purpoſe can we imagine this Attribute of Omniſcience ſo often declared and urged in Scripture to our conſideration, but in order to a government of our Practice, and a future Tryal? Every Perfection of the Divine Nature hath ſent out brighter Rays in the World, than this of his Infinite Knowledge; his Power hath been ſeen in the Being of the World, and his Wiſdom in the Order and Harmony of the Creatures; his Grace and Mercy hath been plentifully poured out in the Miſſion of a Redeemer; and his Juſtice hath been elevated by the Dying-Groans of the Son of God upon the Croſs. But hath his Omniſcience yet met with a Glory proportionable to that of his other Perfections? All the Attributes of God that have appeared in ſome beautiful glimmerings in the World, wait for a more full manifeſtation in Glory, as the Creatures do for the manifeſtation of the Sons of God, Rom. 8. 19. But eſpecially this, ſince it hath been leſs evidenced than others, and as much or more abuſed than any; it expects therefore a publick righting in the Eye of the World. There have been indeed ſome few ſparks of this Perfection ſenſibly ſtruck out now and then in the World, in ſome horrors of Conſcience, which have made men become their own Accuſers of unknown Crimes, in bringing out hidden Wickedneſs to a publick view, by various Providences. This hath alſo been the deſign of ſprinklings of Judgments upon ſeveral Generations, as Pſal. 90. 8. We are conſumed by thy Anger, and by thy Wrath we are troubled, thou haſt ſet our Iniquities before thee, and our ſecret Sins in the light of thy Countenance. The word עלומנו ſignifies Youth, as well as ſecret, i. e. Sins committed long ago, and that with ſecrecy. By this he hath manifeſted, that ſecret Sins are not hid from his Eye: Tho' inward Terrors and outward Judgments have been let looſe to worry men into a belief of this, yet the Corruptions of men would ſtill keep a contrary Notion in their Minds, that God hath forgotten, that he hides his face face from Tranſgreſſion, and will not regard their Impiety, Pſal. 10. 11. There muſt therefore be a time of Tryal for the publick demonſtration of this Excellency, that it may receive its due Honour by a full Teſtimony, that no ſecrecy can be a ſhelter from it. As his Juſtice, which conſiſts in giving every one his due, could not be Glorified, unleſs men were called to an Account for their Actions; ſo neither would his Omniſcience appear in its illuſtrious Colours, without ſuch a manifeſtation of the ſecret motions of mens hearts, and of Villanies done under Lock and Key, when none were conſcious to them, but the committers of them. Now the laſt Judgment is the time appointed for the opening of the Books, Dan. 7. 10. The Book of God's Records, and Conſcience the counter-part, were never fully opened and read before, only now and then ſome Pages turn'd to, in particular Judgments; and out of thoſe Books ſhall men be judged according to their Works, Rev. 20. 12. Then ſhall the defaced Sins be brought with all their circumſtances to every man's Memory; the Counſels of mens hearts fled far from their preſent remembrance; all the habitual knowledge they had of their own actions, ſhall by God's knowledge of them be excited to an actual review; and their works not only made manifeſt to themſelves, but notorious to the World: All the Words, Thoughts, Deeds of Men ſhall be brought forth into the light of their own minds, by the infinite Light of God's Underſtanding reflecting on them. His Knowledge renders him an unerring Witneſs, as well as his Juſtice a ſwift Witneſs, Mal. 3. 5. a ſwift Witneſs, becauſe he ſhall without any Circuit, or length of Speech, convince their Conſciences by an inward illumination of them, to take notice of the blackneſs and deformity of their hearts and works. In all Judgments God is ſomewhat known to be the ſearcher of hearts; the time of Judgment is the time of his remembrance, Hoſ. 8. 13. Now will he remember their iniquity, and viſit their ſins; but the great inſtant, or now, of the full glorifying it, is the grand day of Account. This Attribute muſt have a time for its full Diſcovery; and no time can be fit for it, but a time of a General Reckoning. Juſtice cannot be exercis'd without Omniſcience; for as Juſtice is a giving to every one his due, ſo there muſt be knowledge to diſcern what is due to every Man; the ſearching the heart is in order to the rewarding the works.

4. This Perfection in God, gives us ground to believe a Reſurrection. Who can think this too hard for his Power, ſince not the leaſt Atome of the Duſt of our Bodies can eſcape his Knowledge? An infinite Underſtanding comprehends every Mite of a departed Carkaſs; this will not appear impoſſible nor irrational to any upon a ſerious conſideration of this Excellency in God: The Body is periſhed, the matter of it hath been ſince clothed with different forms and figures; part of it hath been made the body of a Worm, part of it returned to the Duſt that hath been blown away by the Wind, part of it hath been concocted in the Bodies of Cannibals, Fiſh, ravenous Beaſts; the Spirits have evaporated into Air, part of the Blood melted into Water; what then, is the matter of the Body annihilated? Is that wholly periſhed? No, the Foundation remains, tho' it hath put on variety of forms; the Body of Abel, the firſt Man that died, nor the Body of Adam, are not to this day reduc'd to nothing; indeed the quantity and the quality of thoſe Bodies have been loſt by various changes they have paſt through ſince their diſſolution; but the matter or ſubſtance of them remains entire, and is not capable to be deſtroy'd by all thoſe transforming alterations, in ſo long a Revolution of Time.

The Body of a Man in his Infancy and his old Age, if it were Methuſelah's, is the ſame in the Foundation in thoſe multitude of Years; tho' the quantity of it be alter'd; the quality different, tho' the colour and other things be changed in it; the matter of this Body remains the ſame among all the alterations after Death. And can it be ſo mixed with other Natures and Creatures, as that it is paſt finding out by an Infinite Underſtanding? Can any Particle of this matter eſcape the Eye of him that makes and beholds all thoſe various Alterations, and where every Mite of the ſubſtance of thoſe Bodies is particularly lodged; ſo as that he cannot compact it together again for a habitation of that Soul, that many a Year before fled from it? * Since the Knowledge of God is infinite, and his Providence extenſive over the leaſt as well as the greateſt parts of the World; he muſt needs know the leaſt as well as the greateſt of his Creatures in their Beginning, Progreſs, and Diſſolution; all the forms through which the Bodies of all Creatures roul, the particular inſtants of time, and the particular place when and where thoſe changes are made, they are all preſent with him; and therefore when the Revolution of time allotted by him for the reunion of Souls and Deceaſed Bodies is come, it cannot be doubted but out of the Treaſures of his Knowledge he can call forth every part of the matter of the Bodies of Men, from the firſt to the laſt Man that expired, and ſtrip it of all thoſe forms and figures, which it ſhall then have, to compact it to be a Lodging for that Soul which before it entertain'd; and tho' the Bodies of Men have been devour'd by Wild Beaſts in the Earth, and Fiſh in the Sea, and been lodg'd in the Stomachs of Barbarous Men-eaters, the matter is not loſt. There is but little of the Food we take, that is turned into the ſubſtance of our own Bodies; that which is not proper for nouriſhment, which is the greateſt part, is ſeparated, and concocted, and rejected; whatſoever Objections are made, are anſwered by this Attribute. Nothing hinders a God of Infinite Knowledge from diſcerning every Particle of the matter, whereſoever it is diſpos'd; and ſince he hath an Eye to diſcern, and a Hand to recollect and unite, what difficulty is there in believing this Article of the Chriſtian Faith? He that queſtions this reveal'd Truth of the Reſurrection of the Body, muſt queſtion God's Omniſcience as well as his Omnipotence and Power.

* Daillé Serm. 15. p. 21, 22, 23, 24.

5. What ſemblance of Reaſon is there to expect a juſtification in the ſight of God by any thing in our ſelves? Is there any Action done by any of us, but upon a ſcrutiny we may find flaws and deficiency in it? What then? ſhall not this Perfection of God diſcern them? The Motes that eſcape our Eyes cannot eſcape his, 1 John 3. 20. God is greater than our hearts, and knows all things; ſo that it is in vain for any Man to flatter himſelf with the Rectitude of any Work, or enter into any Debate with him who can bring a Thouſand Articles againſt us, out of his own Infinite Records unknown to us, and unanſwerable by us. If Conſcience, a Repreſentative or Counterpart of God's Omniſcience in our own Boſoms, find nothing done by us, but in a Copy ſhort of the Original, and beholds, if not blurs, yet Imperfections in the beſt actions, God muſt much more diſcern them; we never knew a Copy equally exact with the Original: If our own Conſcience be as a Thouſand Witneſſes, the Knowledge of God is as Millions of Witneſſes againſt us: If our Corruption be ſo great, and our Holineſs ſo low in our own Eyes, how much greater muſt the one, and how much meaner muſt the other appear in the Eyes of God? God hath an unerring Eye to ſee, as well as an unſpotted Holineſs to hate, and an unbribable Juſtice to puniſh; he wants no more Underſtanding to know the ſhortneſs of our Actions, than he doth Holineſs to enact, and Power to execute his Laws: Nay, ſuppoſe we could recollect many Actions, wherein there were no ſpot viſible to us, the conſideration of this Attribute ſhould ſcare us from reſting upon any or all of them; ſince it is the Lord that by a piercing Eye ſees and judges according to the heart, and not according to appearance. The leaſt crookedneſs of a Stick, not ſenſible to an acute Eye, yet will appear when laid to the Line; and the impurity of a Counterfeit Metal be manifeſt when applyed to the Touch-ſtone; ſo will the beſt Action of any meer Man in the World, when it comes to be meaſur'd in God's Knowledge by the ſtrait Line of his Law.

Let every Man therefore, as Paul, though he ſhould know nothing by himſelf, think not himſelf therefore juſtified; Since it is the Lord, who is of an infinite Underſtanding, that Judgeth, 1 Cor. 4. 4. A Man may be juſtified in his own ſight, but not any living Man can be juſtified in the ſight of God, Pſal. 143. 2. in his Sight, whoſe Eye pierceth into our unknown ſecrets and frames: It was therefore well anſwered of a good Man upon his Death-bed, being askt What he was afraid of? I have labour'd (ſaith he) with all my Strength to obſerve the commands of God; but ſince I am a Man, I am ignorant whether my works are acceptable to God, ſince God Judges in one manner, and I in another manner. Let the conſideration therefore of this Attribute, make us joyn with Job in his Reſolution, Job 9. 21. tho' we were perfect, yet would we not know our own Souls. I would not ſtand up to Plead any of my Vertues before God. Let us therefore look after another Righteouſneſs, wherein the exact Eye of the Divine Omniſcience, we are ſure, can diſcern no ſtain or crookedneſs.

6. What honourable and adoring Thoughts ought we to have of God for this Perfection? Do we not honour a Man that is able to Predict; Do we not think it a great part of Wiſdom? Have not all Nations regarded ſuch a faculty, as a character and a mark of Divinity? There is ſomething more raviſhing in the knowledge of future things, both to the Perſon that knows them, and the Perſon that hears them, than there is in any other kind of knowledge; whence the greateſt Prophets have been accounted in the greateſt veneration, and Men have thought it a way to glory to Divine and Predict: Hence it was that the Devils and Pagan Oracles gained ſo much Credit; upon this Foundation were they eſtabliſhed, and the Enemies of Mankind owned for a true God; I ſay, from the Prediction of future things, tho' their Oracles were often ambiguous, many times falſe; yet thoſe poor Heathens framed many ingenious excuſes, to free their Adored Gods from the charge of falſity and impoſture: And ſhall we not adore the true God, the God of Iſrael, the God bleſſed for ever, for this incommunicable Property, whereby he flies above the Wings of the Wind, the Underſtandings of Men and Cherubims?

* Sa'lund Theol. natural. Tit. 84. ſomewhat changed.

* Conſider how great it is to know the Thoughts, and Intentions, and Works of one Man, from the beginning to the end of his Life; to foreknow all theſe before the Being of this Man, when he was lodged afar off in the Loyns of his Anceſtors, yea of Adam; how much greater is it to foreknow and know the Thoughts and Works of Three or Four Men, of a whole Village or Neighbourhood? 'Tis greater ſtill to know the imaginations and actions of ſuch a multitude of Men as are contained in London, Paris, or Conſtantinople; how much greater ſtill to know the intentions and practices, the clandeſtine contrivances of ſo many Millions, that have, do, or ſhall ſwarm in all quarters of the World, every perſon of them having Millions of Thoughts, Deſires, Deſigns, Affections and Actions!

Let this Attribute then make the bleſſed God honourable in our Eyes, and adorable in all our Affections; ſpecially ſince it is an Excellency which hath ſo lately diſcovered it ſelf, in bringing to Light the hidden things of darkneſs, in opening, and in part confounding the wicked Devices of Bloody Men. Eſpecially let us adore God for it, and admire it in God, ſince it is ſo neceſſary a Perfection, that without it the goodneſs of God had been impotent, and could not have relieved us; for what help can a diſtreſſed perſon expect from a Man of the ſweeteſt diſpoſition, and the ſtrongeſt arm, if the Eyes which ſhould diſcover the danger, and direct the defence and reſcue, were cloſed up by blindneſs and darkneſs? Adore God for this wonderful Perfection.

7. In the conſideration of this excellent Attribute, what low thoughts ſhould we have of our own knowledge, and how humble ought we to be before God? There's nothing Man is more apt to be proud of than his Knowledge; 'tis a Perfection he glories in; but if our own Knowledge of the little outſide and barks of things, puffs us up, the conſideration of the infiniteneſs of God's Knowledge ſhould abate the Tumour: As our Beings are nothing in regard to the infiniteneſs of his Eſſence, ſo our Knowledge is nothing in regard of the vaſtneſs of his Underſtanding: We have a ſpark of Being, but nothing to the heat of the Sun: We have a drop of Knowledge, but nothing to the Divine Ocean. What a vain thing is it for a ſhallow Brook to boaſt of its Streams before a Sea, whoſe depths are unfathomable? As it is a vanity to brag of our Strength when we remember the Power of God; and of our Prudence, when we glance upon the Wiſdom of God; ſo 'tis no leſs a vanity to boaſt of our Knowledge, when we think of the Underſtanding and Knowledge of God.

* Paſcal p. 170.

How hard is it for us to know any thing *? too much noiſe deafs us, and too much light dazels us, too much diſtance alienates the object from us, and too much nearneſs bars up our ſight from beholding it: When we think our ſelves to be near the knowledge of a thing, as a Ship to the Haven, a puff of Wind blows us away, and the object which we deſired to know, eternally flies from us; we burn with a deſire of knowledge, and yet are oppreſt with the darkneſs of ignorance; we ſpend our days more in dark Egypt, than in enlightened Goſhen. In what narrow bounds is all the knowledge of the moſt intelligent perſons included? * How few underſtand the exact Harmony of their own bodies, the nature of the life they have in common with other Animals? who underſtands the nature of his own Faculties, how he Knows, and how he Wills, how the Underſtanding propoſeth, and how the Will embraceth, how his ſpiritual Soul is united to his material Body, what the nature is of the operation of our Spirits? nay, who underſtands the nature of his own Body the offices of his Senſes, the motion of his Members, how they come to obey the command of the Will, and a Thouſand other things? What a vain, weak, and ignorant thing is Man, when compar'd with God? Yet there is not a greater pride to be found among Devils, than among ignorant Men with a little, very little flaſhy Knowledge. Ignorant Man is as proud, as if he knew as God!

* Amyrant. de Præ-deſt. p. 116, 117 ſomewhat changed.

As the conſideration of God's Omniſcience ſhould render him honourable in our eyes, ſo it ſhould render us vile in our own. God, becauſe of his knowledge, is ſo far from diſdaining his Creatures, that his Omniſcience is a Miniſter to his Goodneſs: No knowledge that we are poſſeſs'd of, ſhould make us ſwell with too high a conceit of our ſelves, and a diſdain of others. We have infinitely more of ignorance rance than knowledge. Let us therefore remember in all our thoughts of God, that he is God, and we are Men; and therefore ought to be humble, as becomes Men, and ignorant and fooliſh Men to be; as weak Creatures ſhould lie low before an Almighty God, and impure Creatures before a Holy God, falſe Creatures before a Faithful God, finite Creatures before an infinite God; ſo ſhould ignorant Creatures before an All-Knowing God. All God's Attributes teach admiring thoughts of God, and low thoughts of our ſelves.

8. It may inform us, how much this Attribute is injured in the World. The firſt error after Adam's eating the forbidden Fruit, was the denyal of this, as well as the Omnipreſence of God, Gen. 3. 10. I heard thy voice in the Garden, and I hid my ſelf; as if the thickneſs of the Trees could ſcreen him from the eye of his Creator. And after Cain's Murder; this is the firſt Perfection he affronts, Gen. 4. 9 Where is Abel thy Brother, ſaith God? how roundly doth he anſwer, I know not? As if God were as weak as Man, to be put off with a Lye: Man doth as naturally hate this Perfection, as much as he cannot naturally but acknowledge it; he wiſhes God ſtript of this eminency, that he might be incapable to be an inſpector of his Crimes, and a ſearcher of the Cloſets of his heart: In wiſhing him deprived of this, there is a hatred of God himſelf; for it is a loathing an Eſſential Property of God, without which he would be a pitiful Governour of the World. What a kind of God ſhould that be, of a Sinner's wiſhing, that had wanted Eyes to ſee a Crime, and Righteouſneſs to puniſh it? The want of the conſideration of this Attribute, is the cauſe of all Sin in the World, Hoſ. 7. 2. They conſider not in their hearts that I remember all their Wickedneſs? they ſpeak not to their hearts, nor make any reflection upon the infiniteneſs of my Knowledge; 'tis a high contempt of God, as if he were an Idol, a ſenſeleſs Stock or Stone; in all evil practices this is denied: We know God ſees all things, yet we live and walk as if he knew nothing: We call him Omniſcient, and live as if he were ignorant; we ſay he is all eye, yet act as if he were wholly blind.

In particular, this Attribute is injured, By invading the peculiar rights of it, by preſuming on it, and by a practical denyal of it.

1. By invading the peculiar rights of it.

1. By invocation of Creatures. Praying to Saints, by the Romaniſts, is a diſparagement to this Divine Excellency; he that knows all things, is only fit to have the Petitions of Men preſented to him; Prayer ſuppoſeth an Omniſcient Being, as the object of it; no other Being but God ought to have that honour acknowledged to it; no Underſtanding but his, is infinite; no other Preſence but his, is every where; to implore any deceaſed Creature for a ſupply of our wants, is to own in them a Property of the Deity; and make them Deities that were but Men; and increaſe their glory by a diminution of God's Honour, in aſcribing that Perfection to Creatures which belongs only to God. Alas! they are ſo far from underſtanding the deſires of our Souls, that they know not the words of our Lips: 'Tis againſt reaſon to addreſs our ſupplications to them that neither underſtand us, nor diſcern us, Iſa. 63. 16. Abraham is ignorant of us, and Iſrael acknowledges us not. The Jews never called upon Abraham, tho' the Covenant was made with him for the whole Seed; not one departed Saint for the whole Four Thouſand Years between the Creation of the World, and the coming of Chriſt, was ever prayed to by the Iſraelites; or ever imagin'd to have a ſhare in God's Omniſcience; ſo that to pray to St. Peter, St. Paul, much leſs to St. Roch, St. Swithen, St. Martin, St. Francis, &c. is ſuch a Superſtition that hath no footing in the Scripture. * Daille Melang. part. 2. p. 560, 561.

* To deſire the Prayers of the Living, with whom we have a Communion, who can underſtand and grant our deſires, is founded upon a mutual Charity; but to implore perſons that are abſent, at a great diſtance from us, with whom we have not, nor know how to have any Commerce, ſuppoſeth them in their departure to have put off Humanity, and commenc'd God's, and endued with ſome part of the Divinity to underſtand our Petitions; we are indeed to cheriſh their Memories, conſider their Examples, imitate their Graces, and obſerve their Doctrines; we are to follow them as Saints, but not elevate them as God's, in aſcribing to them ſuch a knowledge which is only the neceſſary right of their and our common Creator: As the invocation of Saints mingles them with Chriſt in the exerciſe of his Office, ſo it ſets them equal with God in the Throne of his Omniſcience. As if they had as much credit with God, as Chriſt, in a way of Mediation; and as much knowledge of Mens Affairs, as God himſelf. Omniſcience is peculiar to God, and incommunicable to any Creature; 'tis the foundation of all Religion, and therefore one of the choiceſt acts of it, viz. Prayer and Invocation. To direct our Vows and Petitions to any elſe, is to invade the peculiarity of this Perfection in God, and to rank ſome Creatures in a Partnerſhip with him in it.

2. This Attribute is injured by curioſity of Knowledge, Eſpecially of future things which God hath not diſcovered in natural cauſes, or ſupernatural Revelation. 'Tis a common error of Mens Spirits to aſpire to know what God would have hidden, and to pry into Divine Secrets; and many Men are more willing to remain without the knowledge of thoſe things which may with a little induſtry be attained, than be diveſted of the curioſity of enquiring into thoſe things which are above their reach; 'tis hence that ſome have laid aſide the Study of the common remedies of Nature, to find out the Philoſopher's Stone; * Amyrant. Moral. Tom. 3. p. 75, &c. which ſcarce any ever yet attempted, but ſunk in the Enterpriſe.* From this inclination to know the moſt abſtruſe and difficult things it is, that the horrors of Magick, and the vanities of Aſtrology have ſprung, whereby Men have thought to find in a commerce with Devils, and the Juriſdiction of the Stars, the events of their Lives, and the diſpoſal of States and Kingdoms. Hence alſo aroſe thoſe multitudes of ways of Divination invented among the Heathen, and practiſed too commonly in theſe Ages of the World. This is an invaſion of God's Prerogative, to whom ſecret things belong, Deut. 29. 29. Secret things belong unto the Lord our God, but revealed things belong to us and our Children. 'Tis an intolerable boldneſs to attempt to fathom thoſe, the Knowledge whereof God hath reſerved to himſelf; and to ſearch that which God will have to ſurpaſs our Underſtandings; whereby we more truly envy God a knowledge ſuperior to our own, than we in Adam imagin'd that he envyed us. Ambition is the greateſt cauſe of this, Ambition to be accounted ſome great thing among Men, by reaſon of a Knowledge eſtrang'd from the common maſs of Mankind; but more eſpecially that ſoaring Pride to be equal with God, which lurks in our nature ever ſince the Fall of our Firſt Parents: This is not yet laid aſide by Man, though it was the firſt thing that embroyl'd the World with the Wrath of God. Some think a curioſity of Knowledge was the Cauſe of the fall of the Devils; I am ſure it was the Foyl of Adam, and is yet the Crime of his Poſterity; had he been contented to know what God had furniſht him with, neither he nor his Poſterity had ſmarted under the Venom of the Serpent's Breath.

All

All curious and bold enquiries into things not revealed, are an attempt upon the Throne of God; and are both ſinful and pernicious, like to glaring upon the Sun, where inſtead of a greater acuteneſs, we meet with blindneſs, and too dearly buy our Ignorance in attempting a ſuperfluous knowledge. As God's Knowledge is deſtin'd to the Government of the World, ſo ſhould ours be to the advantage of the World, and not degenerate into vain Speculations.

3. This Attribute is injur'd by ſwearing by Creatures: To ſwear by the Name of God in a Righteous Cauſe, * when we are Lawfully called to it by a Superior Power, or for the neceſſary deciſion of ſome Controverſie, for the ends of Charity and Juſtice, is an act of Religion, and a part of Worſhip, founded upon, and directed to the honour of this Attribute; by it we acknowledge the glory of his Infallible Knowledge of all things; but to Swear by falſe Gods, or by any Creature, is Blaſphemous; it ſets the Creature in the place of God, and inveſts it in that which is the peculiar Honour of the Divinity; for when any ſwear truly, they intend the invocation of an Infallible Witneſs, and the bringing an undoubted Teſtimony for what they do aſſert; while any therefore ſwear by a Creature, or a falſe God, they profeſs that that Creature, or that which they eſteem to be a God, is an Infallible Witneſs, which to be, is only the Right of God; they attribute to the Creature that which is the Property of God alone, to know the Heart, and to be a Witneſs whether they ſpeak true or no; and this was accounted by all Nations the true Deſign of an Oath. As to ſwear falſely, is a plain denial of the All-knowledge of God; ſo to ſwear by any Creature, is to ſet the Creature upon the Throne of God, in aſcribing that Perfection to the Creature, which Soveraignly belongs to the Creator; for it is not in the Power of any to Witneſs to the truth of the heart, but of him that is the ſearcher of hearts.

* Cajetan. Sum. p. 190.

4. We Sin againſt this Attribute by cenſuring the hearts of others. An open Crime indeed falls under our Cognizance, and therefore under our Judgment; for whatſoever falls under the Authority of Man to be puniſhed, falls under the Judgment of Man to be cenſured, as an act contrary to the Law of God; yet when a cenſure is built upon the evil of the act which is obvious to the view, if we take a ſtep farther to judge the heart and ſtate, we leave the revealed Rule of the Law, and ambitiouſly erect a Tribunal equal with God's; and uſurp a Judicial Power, pertaining only to the Supream Governour of the World; and conſequently pretend to be poſſeſs'd of this Perfection of Omniſcience, which is neceſſary to render him capable of the exerciſe of that Soveraign Authority. For it is in reſpect of his Dominion, that God hath the Supream Right to Judge; and in reſpect of his Knowledge, that he hath an incommunicable Capacity to Judge.

In an action that is doubtful, the good or evil whereof depends only upon God's determination, and wherein much of the Judgment depends upon the diſcerning the intention of the Agent, we cannot Judge any Man without a manifeſt Invaſion of God's peculiar Right; ſuch actions are to be Tryed by God's Knowledge, not by our ſurmiſes; God only is the Maſter in ſuch caſes, to whom a Perſon ſtands or falls, Rom. 14. 4. Till the true Principle and Ends of an action be known by the confeſſion of the Party acting it, a true Judgment of it is not in our Power. Principles and Ends lie deep and hid from us; and it is intolerable Pride to pretend to have a joynt Key with God to open that Cabinet which he hath reſerved to himſelf.

Beſides the violation of the Rule of Charity in miſconſtruing actions which may be great and generous in their Root and Principle, we invade God's Right, as if our ungrounded Imaginations and Conjectures were in Joynt-Commiſſion with this Soveraign Perfection; and thereby we become Uſurping Judges of evil thoughts, James 2. 4. 'Tis therefore a boldneſs worthy to be puniſhed by the Judge, to aſſume to our ſelves the Capacity and Authority of him, who is the only Judge. For as the Execution of the Divine Law, for the inward violation of it belongs only to God, ſo is the Right of Judging a Prerogative belonging only to his Omniſcience; his Right is therefore invaded, if we pretend to a knowledge of it. This Humour of Men the Apoſtle checks, when he ſaith, 1 Cor. 4. 5. He that judgeth me is the Lord, therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will manifeſt the Counſels of all hearts. 'Tis not the time yet for God to erect the Tribunal for the Tryal of mens hearts, and the Principles of their Actions: He hath reſerv'd the glorious diſcovery of this Attribute for another ſeaſon; We muſt not therefore preſume to Judge of the Counſels of mens hearts, till God hath reveal'd them by opening the Treaſuries of his own Knowledge. Much leſs are we to judge any Man's final Condition. Manaſſeh may Sacrifice to Devils, and unconverted Paul tear the Church in pieces; but God had Mercy on them, and called them. The Action may be cenſur'd, not the State, for we know not whom God may call. In Cenſuring Men, we may doubly imitate the Devil, in a falſe Accuſation of the Brethren, as well as in an ambitious Uſurpation of the Rights of God.

2. This Perfection is injured, by preſuming upon it, or making an ill uſe of it. As in the neglect of Prayer for the ſupply of mens wants, becauſe God knows them already; ſo that that which is an encouragement to Prayer, they make the reaſon of reſtraining it before God. Prayer is not to adminiſter Knowledge to God, but to acknowledge this admirable Perfection of the Divine Nature. If God did not know, there were indeed no uſe of Prayer, it would be as vain a thing to ſend up our Prayers to Heaven, as to implore the ſenſeleſs Statue or Picture of a Prince for a Protection. We Pray becauſe God knows, for though he know our wants with a knowledge of Viſion, yet he will not know them with a knowledge of ſupply, till he be ſought unto. All the Excellencies of God are ground of Adoration; and this Excellency is the ground of that part of Worſhip we call Prayer. If God be to be Worſhipped, he is to be called upon; Invocations of his Name in our Neceſſities is a chief act of Worſhip; whence the Temple, the Place of Solemn Worſhip, was not called the Houſe of Sacrifice, but the Houſe of Prayer.

* Mat. 6. 32, 33. * Mat. 7. 11.

Prayer was not appointed for God's Information, as if he were ignorant, but for the expreſſion of our deſires; not to furniſh him with a knowledge of what we want, but to manifeſt to him by ſome Rational Sign convenient to our Nature, our ſenſe of that want, which he knows by himſelf. So that Prayer is not deſign'd to acquaint God with our wants, but to expreſs the deſire of a Remedy of our wants. God knows our wants, but hath not made Promiſes barely to our wants, but to our asking: That his Omniſcience in hearing, as well as his ſufficiency in ſupplying, may have a ſenſible Honour in our acknowledgments and receipts. 'Tis therefore an ill uſe of this Excellency of God to neglect Prayer to him as needleſs, becauſe he knows already.

3. This Perfection of God is wrong'd, by a practical denial of it. 'Tis the Language of every Sin, and and so God takes it when he comes to reckon with Men for their Impieties. Upon this he charges the greatness of the iniquity of Israel, the overflowing of Blood in the Land, and the perverseness of the City; They say the Lord hath forsaken the Earth, and the Lord sees not *: They deny his Eyes to see, and his Resolution to punish.

* Ezek. 9. 9.

1. It will appear, in forbearing Sin from a sense of Man's knowledge, not of Gods. Open Impieties are restrain'd because of the Eye of Man; but secret Sins are not checked because of the Eye of God. Wickedness is committed in Darkness, that is restrained in Light; as if darkness were as great a clog to God's Eyes as it is to ours; as though his Eyes were muffled with the Curtains of the Night *. This it is likely was at the root of Jonah's flight, he might have some secret thought, that his Master's Eye could not follow him, as though the close Hatches of a Ship could secure him from the Knowledge of God, as well as the sides of the Ship could from the dashing of the Waves. What lies most upon the Conscience when it is graciously wounded, is least regarded, or contemned when it is basely inclin'd. David's heart smote him not only for his Sin in the gross, but as particularly circumstantiated by the commission of it in the sight of God, Psal. 51. 4. Against thee, thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight. None knew the reason of Uriah's Death but my self, and because others knew it not, I neglected any regard to this Divine Eye. When Jacob's Sons used their Brother Joseph so barbarously, they took care to hide it from their Father; but cast away all thoughts of God, from whom it could not be conceal'd.

* Job 22. 14.

Doth not the presence of a Child bridle a Man, from the act of a long'd for Sin, when the Eye of God is of no force to restrain him? As if God's Knowledge were of less value than the sight of a little Boy or Girl, as if a Child only could see, and God were blind. He that will forbear an unworthy action for fear of an Informer, will not forbear it for God; as if God's Omniscience, were not as full an Intelligencer to him, as Man can be an Informer to a Magistrate. As we acknowledge the power of Men seeing us, when we are ashamed to commit a filthy action in their view; so we disown the power of God seeing us, when we regard not what we do before the light of his Eyes. Secret Sins are more against God than open: Open Sins are against the Law, secret Sins are against the Law, and this prime Perfection of his Nature. The Majesty of God is not only violated, but the Omniscience of God disown'd, who is the only Witness; We must in all of them, either imagine him to be without Eyes to behold us, or without an Arm of Justice to punish us. And often it is, I believe, in such cases, that if any thoughts of God's Knowledge strike upon Men, they quickly damp them, lest they should begin to know what they fear, and fear that they might not eat their pleasant sinful Morsels.

2. It appears, in partial Confessions of Sin before God. As by a free, full, and ingenuous Confession, we offer a due Glory to this Attribute, so by a feigned and curtail'd Confession we deny him the honour of it: For though by any Confession we in part own him to be a Sovereign and Judge, yet by a half and pared acknowledgement, we own him to be no more than a Humane and Ignorant one. Achan's full Confession gave God the glory of his Omniscience, manifested in the discovery of his secret Crime. And Joshua said to Achan, My Son give glory to the Lord God of Israel, and make Confession unto him. And so, Psal. 50. 23. Who so offereth praise glorifieth me, or confession, as the word signifieth, in which sence I would rather take it, referring to this Attribute, which God seems to tax Sinners with the denial of, Verse 21. telling them that he would open the Records of their Sins before them, and indict them particularly for every one. If therefore you would glorifie this Attribute, which shall one Day break open your Consciences, offer to me a sincere Confession. When David speaks of the happiness of a pardon'd Man, * he adds, in whose Spirit there is no guile, not meaning a sincerity in general, but that ingenuity in Confessing. To excuse or extenuate Sin, is to deny God the knowledge of the depths of our deceitful hearts: When we will mince it rather than aggravate it? lay it upon the inducements of others, when it was the free act of our own Wills, study shifts to deceive our Judge, this is to speak lyes of him, as the expression is, Hos. 7. 13: As though he were a God easie to be cheated, and knew no more than we are willing to declare. What did Saul's transferring his Sin from himself to the people, * but charge God with a defect in this Attribute? When Man could not be like God in his Knowledge, he would fansie a God like to him in his ignorance; and imagine a possibility of hiding himself from his knowledge, and all Men tread more or less in their Father's steps, and are fruitful to divise distinctions to disguise Errors in Doctrine, and excuses to palliate Errors in Practice: This Crime Job removes from himself, when he speaks of several acts of his sincerity; If I cover'd my transgression as Adam, by hiding my iniquity in my Bosom, I hid not any of my Sins in my own Conscience, but acknowledg'd God a Witness to them, and gave him the glory of his knowledge by a free Confession. I did not conceal it from God as Adam did, or as Men ordinarily do; as if God could understand no more of their secret Crimes, than they will let him, and had no more sense of their Faults, than they would furnish him with. As the first rise of Confession is the owning of this Attribute (for the Justice of God would not scare Men, nor the Holiness of God awe them without a sense of his knowledge of their iniquities) so to drop out some fragments of Confession, discover some Sins, and conceal others, is a plain denial of the extensiveness of the Divine Knowledge.

* Josh. 7. 19.

* Psal. 32. 1, 2. Camero. p. 89. col. 1

* 1 Sam. 15. 15.

* Job 31. 33.

3. It is discover'd, by putting God off with an outside Worship. Men are often flatterers of God, and think to bend him by formal glavering Devotions, without the concurrence of their hearts, as though he could not pierce into the darkness of the Mind, but did as little know us as one man knows another. There are such things as feigned Lips *, a contradiction between the Heart and the Tongue, a clamour in the Voice, and scoffing in the Soul; a crying, to God, thou art my Father, the Guide of my Youth, and yet speaking and doing evil to the utmost of our Power *. As if God could be impos'd upon by fawning pretences; and like old Isaac, take Jacob for Esau, and be cozen'd by the smell of his Garments: As if he could not discern the Negro Heart under an Angel's Garb. Thus Ephraim, the Ten Tribes, apostatized from the true Religion, would go with their Flocks and their Herds to seek the Lord *, would Sacrifice multitudes of Sheep and Heifers, which was the main outside of the Jewish Religion; only with their Flocks and their Herds, not with their Hearts, with those inward qualifications of deep Humiliation and Repentance for Sin: As though outside appearances limited God's observation, whereas God had told them before, That he knew Ephraim and Israel was not hid from him. Thus to do is to put a cheat upon God, and think to blind his All-seeing Eye; and therefore it is called deceit, Psal. 78. 36. They did flatter him with their Mouths;

* Psal. 11.

* Jer. 3. 4, 5.

* Hos. 5. 6. Verse 3.

The

The word נסה ſignifies to deceive as well as to flatter; not that they or any elſe can deceive God, but it implies an endeavour to deceive him, by a few diſſembling words and geſtures, or an imagination that God was ſatisfied with bare profeſſions, and would not concern himſelf in a further inquiſition: This is an unworthy conceit of God, to fanſie that we can ſatisfie for inward Sins, and avert approaching Judgments, by External Offerings, by a loud Voice with a falſe Heart, as if God (like Children) would be pleas'd, with the glittering of an empty Shell, or the ratling of Stones, the chincking of Money, a meer Voice, and crying without inward frames and intentions of Service.

4. In cheriſhing multitudes of evil thoughts. No man but would bluſh for ſhame, if the baſe, impure, ſlovenly thoughts, either in or out of Duties of Worſhip were viſible to the underſtanding of man; how diligent would he be to curb his luxuriant and unworthy fancies, as well as bite in his words; but when we give the Reins to the Motions of our Hearts, and ſuffer them to run at random without a Curb, 'tis an evidence we are not concern'd for their falling under the notice of the Eye of God; and it argues a very weak belief of this Perfection, or ſcarce any belief at all. Who can think any Man's Heart poſſeſſed with a ſenſe of this Infinite Excellency, that ſuffers his Mind, in his Meditation on God, to wander into every Sty, and be picking up Stones upon a Dunghill? What doth it intimate, but that thoſe thoughts are as inviſible, or unaudible to God, as they are to Men without the Garments of Words? * When a Man thinks of obſcene things, his own natural Notions, if reviv'd, would tell him, that God diſcerns what he thinks, that the depths of his heart are open to him: And the voice of thoſe Notions are, Deface thoſe vain imaginations out of your Minds. But what is done? Men caſt away Rational Light, muſter up Conceits, that God ſees them not, knows them not, and ſo ſink into the Puddle of their ſordid Imaginations, as though they remained in Darkneſs to God.

I might further inſtance.

In omiſſion of Prayer, which ariſes ſometime from a flat Atheiſm: Who will call upon a God, that believes no ſuch being? Or from partial Atheiſm, either a denial of God's ſufficiency to help, or of his Omniſcience to know, as if God were like the Statue of Jupiter in Crete framed without Ears.

In the Hypocrital pretences of Men, to exempt them from the ſervice God calls them to. When Men pretend one thing, and intend another; this lurks in the Veins ſometimes of the beſt Men; ſometimes it ariſeth from the fear of Man; when Men are more afraid of the power of Man, than of diſſembling with the Almighty: It will pretend a vertue to cover a ſecret wile: And chooſe the Tongue of the Craftie, as the Expreſſion in Job *.

* Job 15. 5.

The caſe is plain in Moſes, who when ordered to undertake an eminent Service, pretends a want of Eloquence, and an ungrateful ſlowneſs of Speech *. This generous Soul, that before was not afraid to diſcover himſelf in the midſt of Egypt for his Country-men, anſwers ſneakingly to God, and would veil his carnal fear, with a pretence of Inſufficiency and Humility; Who am I, that I ſhould go unto Pharaoh *? He could not well alledge an inability to go to Pharaoh, ſince he had had an Education in the Egyptian Learning, which render'd him capable to appear at Court. God at laſt uncaſeth him, and ſhews it all to be a diſſimulation, and whatſoever was the pretence, fear lay at the bottom; he was afraid of his Life upon his appearance before Pharaoh, from whoſe Face he had fled upon the ſlaying the Egyptian, which God intimates to him, Exod. 4. 19. Go, and return into Egypt, for all the Men are dead which ſought thy life. What doth this Carriage ſpeak, but as if God's Eye were not upon our inward parts, as though we could lock him out of our hearts, that cannot be ſhut out from any Creek of the hearts of Men and Angels.

II. The ſecond Uſe is of Comfort. 'Tis a ground of great Comfort under the preſent diſpenſation wherein we are: * We have heard the Doctrinal part, and God hath given us the Experimental part of it in his ſpecial Providence this day, upon the Stage of the World. And bleſſed be God that he hath given us a ground of Comfort, without going out of our ordinary courſe to fetch it, whereby it ſeems to be peculiarly of God's ordering for us.

* Nov. 1678. When the Popiſh Plot was diſcover'd.

1. 'Tis a Comfort in all the clandeſtine Contrivances of Men againſt the Church. His Eyes pierce as far as the depths of Hell: Not one of his Churches Adverſaries lies in a miſt, all are as plain as the Stars which he numbers; Mine Adverſaries are all before thee *: More exactly known to thee, than I can recount them. 'Tis a Prophecy of Chriſt, wherein Chriſt is brought in ſpeaking to God, of his own and the Churches Enemies: He comforts himſelf with this, that God hath his Eye upon every particular Perſon among his Adverſaries: He knows where they repoſe themſelves, when they go out to Conſult, and when they come in with their Reſolves: He diſcerns all the Rage that Spirits their Hearts, in what corner it lurks, how it acts; all the diſorders, motions of it, and every Object of that Rage; He cannot be deceived by the cloſeſt and ſubtileſt Perſon. Thus God ſpeaks concerning Sennacherib and his Hoſt againſt Jeruſalem *. After he had ſpoke of the forming of his Church, and the weakneſs of it, he adds, But I know thy abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy Rage againſt me; becauſe thy Rage againſt me, and thy Tumult is come up into mine Ears, therefore will I put my Hook in thy Noſe, and my Bridle in thy Lips, and will turn thee back, &c. He knows all the Methods of the Counſels, the Stages they had laid, the manner of Execution of their Deſigns, all the ways whither they turned themſelves, and would uſe them no better than Men do devouring Fiſh and untam'd Beaſts, with a Hook in the Noſe, and a Bridle in the Mouth. Thoſe Stateſmen in Iſa. 29. 15. thought their Contrivances too deep for God to fathom, and too cloſe for God to fruſtrate; They ſeek deep to hide their Counſels from the Lord; ſurely your turning of things upſide down, ſhall be eſteemed as the Potter's Clay; of no more force and underſtanding than a Potter's Veſſel, which underſtands not its own form wrought by the Artificer, nor the uſe it is put to by the Buyer and Poſſeſſor; or ſhall be eſteemed as a Potter's Veſſel, that can be as eaſily flung back into the Maſs from whence it was taken, as preſerved in the Figure it is now endued with. No ſecret Deſigner is ſhrowded from God's ſight, or can be ſhelter'd from God's Arm: He underſtands the Venom of their Hearts, better than we can feel it, and diſcovers their inward fury more plainly, than we can ſee the Sting or Teeth of a Viper when they are opened for miſchief; and to what purpoſe doth God know and ſee them, but in order to deliver his People from them in his own due time; I know their ſorrow, and am come down to deliver them *: The Walls of Jeruſalem are continually before him, he knows therefore all that would undermine and demoliſh them; None can hurt Zion by any ignorance or inadvertency in God.

'Tis obſervable, that our Saviour, aſſuming to himſelf a different Title in every Epiſtle to the Seven Churches, doth particularly aſcribe to himſelf this of Knowledge and Wrath in that to Thyatira, an Emblem or Deſcription of the Romiſh State:

* Rev. 2. 19. * And unto the Angel of the Church of Thyatira write, These things ſaith the Son of God, who hath his Eyes like to a flame of fire, and his Feet like fine Braſs. His Eyes, like a flame of Fire, are of a piercing nature, inſinuating themſelves into all the Pores and parts of the Body they encounter with, and his Feet like braſs to cruſh them with, is explained, Verſe 23. I, will kill her Children with Death, and all the Churches ſhall know that I am he which ſearches the Reins and the Heart, and I will give to every one of you according to your works. He knows every deſign of the Romiſh Party, deſign'd by that Church of *Thyatira. Jezabel, there, ſignifies a whoriſh Church, ſuch a Church as ſhall act as Jezabel, Ahab's Wife, who was not only a Worſhipper of Idols, but propagated Idolatry in Iſrael, ſlew the Prophets, perſecuted Elijah, murdered Naboth, the Name whereof ſignifies Propheſie, fiez'd upon his Poſſeſſion. And if it be ſaid that Verſe 19. this Church was commended for her Works, Faith, Patience; 'tis true Rome did at firſt ſtrongly profeſs Chriſtianity, and maintain'd the intereſt of it, but afterwards fell into the practice of Jezabel, and committed Spiritual Adultery: And is ſhe to be owned for a Wife, that now plays the Harlot, becauſe ſhe was honeſt and modeſt at her firſt Marriage; * And though ſhe ſhall be deſtroy'd yet not ſpeedily, Verſe 22. I will caſt her into a Bed, ſeems to intimate the deſtruction of Jezabel, not to be at once and ſpeedily, but in a lingring way, and by degrees, as Sickneſs conſumes a Body.

* For the Evidence of it I refer you to Dr. More's Expoſition of the Seven Churches, worthy every Learned and Underſtanding Man's reading, and of every ſober Romaniſt.

2. This Perfection of God fits him to be a ſpecial Object of Truſt. If he were forgetful, what comfort could we have in any promiſe? how could we depend upon him if he were ignorant of our State? His Compaſſions to pity us, his Readineſs to relieve us, his Power to protect and aſſiſt us, would be inſignificant, without his Omniſcience to inform his Goodneſs, and direct the Arm of his power. This perfection is as it were Gods Office of Intelligence. As you go to your Memorandum Book to know what you are to do; ſo doth God to his Omniſcience: This perfection is Gods Eye, to acquaint him with the neceſſities of his Church, and directs all his other Attributes in their exerciſe for and about his people. You may depend upon his Mercy that hath promiſed, and upon his Truth to perform, upon his ſufficiency to ſupply you, and his Goodneſs to relieve you, and his Righteouſneſs to reward you, becauſe he hath an infinite Underſtanding to know you and your wants, you and your ſervices. And without this Knowledge of his, no comfort could be drawn from any other perfection; none of them could be a ſure Nail to hang our hopes and confidence upon. This is that, the Church always Celebrated, Pſal. 105. 7. He hath remembred his Covenant for ever, and the Word which he hath commanded to a thouſand generations; And Verſe 42. *He remembred his holy promiſe; and he remembred for them his Covenant. He remembers and underſtands his Covenant, therefore his promiſe to perform it, and therefore our Wants to ſupply them.

* Pſal. 106. 45.

3. And the rather, becauſe God knows the Perſons of all his own. He hath in his infinite Underſtanding, the exact number of all the individual perſons that belong to him; 2 Tim. 2. 19. The Lord knows them that are his. He knows all things, becauſe he hath created them; and he knows his People becauſe he hath not only made them, but alſo choſe them: He could no more chooſe he knew not what, than he could Create he knew not what: he knows them under a double Title; of Creation as Creatures, in the common Maſs of Creation; as new Creatures by a particular act of Separation. He cannot be ignorant of them in time, whom he fore-knew from Eternity: His knowledge in time is the ſame that he had from Eternity; He foreknew them that he had intended to give the Grace of Faith unto; and he knows them after they believe, becauſe he knows his own Act, in beſtowing Grace upon them, and his own Mark and Seal wherewith he hath ſtampt them: No doubt but he that *calls the Stars of Heaven by their Names, knows the Number of thoſe living Stars that ſparkle in the Firmament of his Church. He cannot be ignoraat of their Perſons, when he numbers the Hairs of their Heads, and hath Regiſtred their Names in the Book of Life. As he only had an infinite Mercy to make the Choice, ſo he only hath an infinite Underſtanding to comprehend their Perſons. We only know the Elect of God by a Moral Aſſurance in the Judgment of Charity, when the Converſation of Men is according to the Doctrine of God: We have not an infallible knowledge of them, we may be often miſtaken; Judas, a Devil, may be judged by Man for a Saint, till he be ſtript of his Diſguiſe. God only hath an infallible knowledge of them, he knows his own Records, and the Counterparts in the Hearts of his People: None can counterfeit his Seal, nor can any raze it out. *When the Church is either ſcatter'd, like Duſt, by Perſecution, or over-grown with Superſtition and Idolatry, that there is ſcarce any grain of true Religion appearing, as in the Time of Elijah, who complain'd that he was left alone, as if the Church had been rooted out of that corner of the World, * yet God knew that he had a number fed in a Cave, and had reſerved ſeven thouſand Men that had preſerved the Purity of his Worſhip, and not bow'd their Knee to Baal. Chriſt knew his Sheep, as well as he is known of them; yea, better than they can know him.* Hiſtory acquaints us, that Cyrus had ſo vaſt a Memory, that he knew the Name of every particular Soldier in his Army, which conſiſted of divers Nations; Shall it be too hard for an infinite Underſtanding to know every one of that Hoſt that march under his Banners? May he not as well know them, as know the Number, Qualities, Influences of thoſe Stars which lie conceal'd from our Eye, as well as thoſe that are viſible to our Senſe? Yes, he knows them, as a General to employ them, as a Shepherd to preſerve them: He knows them in the World to guard them, and he knows them when they are out of the World to gather them, and cull out their Bodies, though wrapped up in a Cloud of the putrified Carcaſes of the Wicked: As he knew them from all Eternity to elect them, ſo he knows them in time to cloath their Perſons with Righteouſneſs, to protect their Perſons in Calamity according to his good pleaſure, and at laſt to raiſe and reward them according to his Promiſe.

4. We may take Comfort from hence, That our ſincerity cannot be unknown, to an infinite Underſtanding. Not a way of the Righteous is conceal'd from him, and therefore they ſhall ſtand in Judgment before him; * The Lord knows the way of the Righteous: He knows them to obſerve them, and he knows them to Reward them. How comfortable is it to appeal to this Attribute of God for our integrity, with Hezekiah, 2 Kings 20. 3. Remember Lord how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart. Chriſt himſelf is brought in this Prophetical Pſalm drawing out the Comfort of this Attribute, Pſal. 40. 9. I have not reſtrain'd my Lips, O Lord, thou knoweſt, meaning his faithfulneſs in declaring the Righteouſneſs of God. Job follows the ſame ſteps, *Alſo now, behold, my Record is in Heaven, and my Witneſs is on high: My Innocence hath the Teſtimony of Men, but my greateſt ſupport is in the Records of God. Alſo now; or beſides the Teſtimony of my own Heart, I have another Witneſs in Heaven that knows the Heart and can only Judge of the principles of my actions, and clear me from the ſcorns of my Friends, and the accuſations of Men, with a juſtification of my Innocence: He repeats it twice to take the greater comfort in it. God knows, that we do that in the ſimplicity of our Hearts, which may be judged by Men to be done for unworthy and ſordid ends: He knows not only the outward action, but the inward affection; and praiſes that which Men often diſpraiſe; and writes down that with an Euge, Well done good and faithful Servant, which Men daub with their ſevereſt Cenſures *. How refreſhing is it to conſider, that God never miſtakes the appearance for reality, nor is lead by the judgment of Man? He ſits in Heaven and laughs at their follies and Cenſures. If God had no ſounder and no more piercing a Judgment than Man, woe be to the ſincereſt Souls that are often judged Hypocrites by ſome. What a happineſs is it for Integrity to have a Judge of infinite Underſtanding, who will one day wipe off the dirt of Worldly Reproaches?

* Pſal. 1. 6.

* Rom. 2. 29.

Again, God knows the leaſt dram of Grace and Righteouſneſs in the Hearts of his People, though but as a ſmoaking Flax, or as the leaſt bruiſe of a ſaving conviction *; and knows it ſo as to cheriſh it; he knows what work he hath begun, and never hath his Eye off from it to abandon it.

* Mat. 12. 20.

5. The conſideration of this excellent Perfection in God may comfort us in our ſecret Prayers, ſighs and works. If God were not infinite Underſtanding, to pierce into the Heart, what comfort hath a poor Creature that hath a ſcantineſs of Expreſſions, but a Heart in a flame? If God did not underſtand the Heart, Faith and Prayer, which are internal works, would be in vain: How could he give that Mercy our Hearts plead for, if he were ignorant of our inward Affections? Hypocrites might ſcale Heaven by lofty Expreſſions, and a Sincere Soul come ſhort of the happineſs he is prepared for, for want of floriſhing Gifts. Prayer is an internal work, words are but the Garment of Prayer; Meditation is the Body, and Affections the Soul and Life of Prayer; Give Ear to my words, O Lord, conſider my Meditation *. Prayer is a Rational act, an act of the mind, not the act of a Parrot: Prayer is an act of the Heart, though the ſpeaking Prayer is the work of the Tongue; Now God gives Ear to the words, but he conſiders the Meditation, the frame of the Heart. Conſideration is a more exact notice than hearing, the act only of the Ear. Were not God of an infinite Underſtanding, and Omniſcient, he might take fine Clothes, a heap of Garments for the Man himſelf; and be put off by glittering words, without a Spiritual Frame. What matter of rejoycing is it, that we call not upon a deaf and ignorant Idol; but on one that liſtens to our ſecret Petitions to give them a diſpatch, that knows our deſires afar off, and from the infiniteneſs of his Mercy, joyn'd with his Omniſcience, ſtands ready to give us a return? Hath he not a Book of Remembrance for them that fear him, and for their ſighs and ejaculations to him as well as their diſcourſes of him *; and not only what Prayers they utter, but what gracious and holy thoughts they have of him? That thought upon his Name. Though millions of ſupplications be put up at the ſame time, yet they have all a diſtinct File (as I may ſay) in an infinite Underſtanding, which perceives and comprehends them all. As he obſerves millions of Sins committed at the ſame time by a vaſt number of Perſons to Record them in order to Puniſhment; ſo he diſtinctly diſcerns an infinite number of Cries at the ſame moment to Regiſter them in order to an Anſwer.

* Pſal. 5. 1.

* Mal. 3. 16.

A ſigh cannot ſcape an infinite Underſtanding, though crowded among a mighty multitude of Cries from others, or cover'd with many unwelcome diſtractions in our ſelves, no more than a believing touch from the Woman that had the Bloudy Iſſue, could be conceal'd from Chriſt, and be undiſcern'd from the preſs of the thronging multitudes: Our groans are as audible and intelligible to him as our words, and he knows what is the mind of his own Spirit, though expreſt in no plainer language than ſobs and heavings *. Thus David cheers up himſelf under the neglects of his Friends, Pſal. 38. 9. Lord my deſire is before thee, and my groaning is not hid from thee. Not a groan of a panting Spirit ſhall be loſt till God hath loſt his knowledge; not a Petition forgotten while God hath a Record, nor a Tear dried while God hath a Bottle to reſerve it in *.

* Rom. 8. 27.

* Pſal. 56. 8.

Our ſecret works are alſo known and obſerved by him; not only our outward labour, but our inward love in it, Heb. 6. 10. If with Iſaac we go privately into the Field to meditate, or ſecretly caſt our Bread upon the Waters, he keeps his Eye upon us to Reward us, and returns the Fruit into our own Boſoms *; Yea, though it be but a Cup of cold Water from an inward Spring of love given to a Diſciple: He ſees your works and your labours, and faith and patience in working them *, all the marks of your induſtry, and ſtrength of your intentions, and will be as exact at laſt in order to a due Praiſe, as to open Sins in order to a juſt Recompence *.

6. The Conſideration of this excellent Attribute, affords Comfort in the Afflictions of good Men. He knows their Preſſures, as well as hears their Cries *: His knowledge comes not by information from us; but his Compaſſionate liſtening to our Cries ſprings from his own Inſpection into our Sorrows; He is affected with them, before we make any diſcovery of them: He is not ignorant of the beſt Seaſon, when they may be uſefully inflicted, and when they may be profitably removed: The Tribulation and Poverty of his Church is not unknown to him, Rev. 2. 8, 9. I know thy Works and Tribulation, &c. He knows their Works, and what Tribulation they meet with for him; He ſees their extremities, when they are toiling againſt the Wind and Tide of the World *: Yea, the natural exigences of the multitude are not neglected by him, he diſcerns to take care of them: Our Saviour conſidered the three days faſting of his Followers, and miraculouſly provides a Diſh for them in the Wilderneſs. No good Man is ever out of Gods Mind, and therefore never out of his Compaſſionate Care: His eye pierceth into their Dungeons and pities their Miſeries. Joſeph may forget his Brethren, and the Diſciples not know Chriſt, when he walks upon the Midnight Waves and Turbulent Sea; * but a Lion's Den cannot obſcure a Daniel from his Sight, nor the depths of the Whales Belly bury Jonah from the Divine Underſtanding: He diſcerns Peter in his Chains, and Stephen under the Stones of Martyrdom: He knows Lazarus under his tatter'd Rags, and Abel wallowing in his Blood: His Eye and Knowledge goes along with his People, when they are tranſplanted into Foreign Countries, and ſold for Slaves into the Iſlands of the Græcians, for he will raſe them out of the place, Joel 3. 6, 7. He would defeat the hopes of the Perſecutors, and applaud the Patience of his people: He knows his People in the Tabernacle of Life, and in the Valley of the Shadow of Death, Pſal. 23. He knows all penal Evils becauſe he commiſſions and directs them: He knows the Inſtruments becauſe they are his Sword *, and he knows his gracious Sufferer becauſe he hath his Mark: He diſcerns Job in his Anguiſh, and the Devil in his Malice: By the direction of this Attribute he orders Calamities, and reſcues from them. Thou haſt ſeen it, for thou beholdeſt miſchief and ſpight *: That is the Comfort of the Pſalmiſt, and the Comfort of every Believer, and the Ground of committing committing themselves to God under all the injustice of Men.

7. 'Tis a Comfort in all our infirmites. As he knows our Sins to charge them; so he knows the weakness of our Nature to pity us. As his infinite Understanding may scare us, because he knows our Transgressions; so it may relieve us, because he knows our natural mutability in our first Creation: *Psal. 103. 14. He knows our frame, he remembers that we are dust. 'Tis the reason of the precedent Verses, why he removes our Transgression from us, why he is so backward in punishing; so patient in waiting, so forward in pitying; Why? He doth not only remember our Sins, but remember our frame or forming, what brittle, though clear glasses we were by Creation, how easie to be crackt; He remembers our impotent and weak Condition by Corruption, what a sink we have of vain imaginations that remain in us after Regeneration; he doth not only consider that we were made according to his image, and therefore able to stand, but that we were made of Dust and weak Matter, and had a sensitive Soul, like that of Beasts, as well as an intellectual Nature, like that of Angels, and therefore liable to follow the dictates of it, without exact care and watchfulness. If he remembred only the first, there would be no issue but Indignation; but the Consideration of the latter moves his Compassion. How miserable should we be for want of this perfection in the Divine Nature, whereby God remembers and reflects upon his past act in our first frame, and the mindfulness of our Condition excites the motion of his Bowels to us? Had he lost the knowledge, how he first framed us; did he not still remember the mutability of our Nature, as we were form'd and stampt in his Mint; how much more wretched would our condition be than it is? If his remembrance of our Original, be one ground of his Pity, the sense of his Omniscience should be a ground of our Comfort, in the stirring of our infirmities: He remembers we were but Dust, when he made us; and yet remembers we are but Dust, while he preserves and forbears us.

8. 'Tis some Comfort in the fears of some lurking Corruption in our Hearts. We know by this whither to address our selves for the search and discovery of it: Perhaps some Blessings we want are retarded, some Calamities we understand not the particular cause of, are inflicted, some Petitions we have put up, hang too long for an Answer; and the Chariot Wheels of Divine Goodness move slow and are long in coming: Let us beg the Aid of this Attribute to open to us the Remora's, to discovery what base Affection there is that retards the Mercies we want, or attracts the Affliction we feel, or bars the Door against the return of our supplications. What our dim sight cannot discover, the clear Eye of God can make visible to us Job 10. 2. Shew me wherefore thou contendest with me. As in want of Pardon, we particularly plead his Mercy, and in our desires for the performances of his Promise, we argue with him from his faithfulness; so in the fear of any insincerity or hidden Corruption we should implore his Omniscience: For as God is a God in Covenant, our God, our God in the whole of his Nature; so the Perfections of his Nature, are employed in their several Stations, as assistances of his Creatures. This was David's Practice and Comfort, after that large Meditation on the Omniscience and Omnipresence of God, he turns his Thoughts of it into Petitions for the Employment of it in the Concerns of his Soul, and begs a Mercy suitable to the Glory of this Perfection, Psal. 139. 23. Search me, Oh God, and try my Heart, try me and know my Thoughts; Dive to the bottom, Verse 24. And see if there be any wicked Way in me, and lead me in the Way Everlasting. His desire is not barely that God should know him, for it would be senseless to beg of God that he should have Mercy, or Faithfulness, or Power, or Knowledge in his Nature; but he desires the Exercise of this Attribute, in the Discovery of himself to himself, in order to his Sight of any wicked Way, and Humiliation for it, and Reformation of it, in order to his Conduct to Everlasting Life. As we may appeal to this Pertection to judge us, when the sincerity of our Actions is censured by others; so we may implore it to search us, when our Sincerity is question'd by our selves: That our Minds may be enlightned by a Beam from his Knowledge, and the little Thieves may be pull'd out of their Dens in our Hearts, by the Hand of his Power. In particular, it is our Comfort that we can, and our necessity that we must Address particularly to this, when we engage solemnly in a Work of Self-Examination; that we may have a clearer Eye to direct us than our own, that we may not mistake Brass for Gold, or counterfeit Graces for true; that nothing that is filthy and fit to be cast out, may escape our Sight, and preserve its Stations. And we need not question the laying at the Door of this Neglect, (viz. not calling in this Attribute to our Aid, whose proper Office it is, (as I may so say) to search and enquire) all the Mistakes, ill Success, and fruitlessness of our Endeavours in Self-Examination, because we would engage in it, in the pitiful Strength of our own Dimness, and not in the Light of God's Countenance, and the Assistance of his Eye, which can discern what we cannot see, and discover that to us, which we cannot manifest to our selves. 'Tis a Comfort to a Learner of an Art, to have a skilful Eye to overlook his Work, and inform him of the Defects. Beg the help of the Eye of God in all your Searches and Self Examinations.

9. The Consideration of this Attribute is comfortable in our Assurances of, and Reflections upon the pardon of Sin, or seeking of it. As God punishes Men for Sin according to his Knowledge of them, which is greater than the Knowledge their own Consciences have of them; so he pardons according to his Knowledge: He pardons not only according to our Knowledge, but according to his own: He is greater than any Man's Heart, to condemn for that, which a Man is at present ignorant of; and greater than our Hearts, to pardon that which is not at present visible to us: He knows that which the most watchful Conscience cannot take a survey of: If God had not an infinite Understanding of us, how could we have a perfect and full pardon from him? It would not stand with his Honour to pardon he knew not what. He knows what Crimes we have to be pardon'd, when we know not all of them our selves; that stand in need of a gracious Remission: His Omniscience beholds every Sin to charge it upon our Saviour. If he knows our Sins that are black, he knows every mite of Christ's Righteousness which is pure, and the utmost extent of his Merits, as well as the Demerit of our Iniquities. As he knows the filth of our Sin, he also knows the covering of our Saviour: He knows the value of the Redeemer's Sufferings, and exactly understands every Plea in the Intercession of our Advocate. Though God knows our Sins oculo indice, yet he doth not see them oculo judice, with a Judicial Eye: His Omniscience stirs not up his Justice to Revenge, but his Mercy to Pity. His infinite Understanding of what Christ hath done, directs him to disarm his Justice, and sound an Alarm to his Bowels. As he understands better than we what we have committed; so he understands better than we what our Saviour hath merited; and his Eye directs his Hand in the blotting out Guilt, and applying the Remedy.

3. The third Uſe ſhall be to Sinners to humble them, and put them upon ſerious Conſideration. This Attribute ſpeaks terrible things to a Profligate Sinner. Baſil thinks that the ripping open the Sins of the Damned to their faces by this Perfection of God, is more terrible than their other Torments in Hell. God knows the Perſons of Wicked Men, not one is exempted from his Eye, he ſees all the Actions of Men, as well as he knows their Perſons: Job 11. 11. He knows vain men, he ſees wickedneſs alſo. Job 34. 21. His Eye is upon all their goings. He hears the moſt private Whiſpers, Pſal. 139. 4 the ſcope, manner, circumſtance of ſpeaking, he knows it altogether: He underſtands all our thoughts, the firſt bubblings of that bitter Spring, Pſal. 139. 2. The quickeſt glances of the Fancy, the cloſeſt muſings of the Mind, and the abortive wouldings or wiſhes of the Will, the language of the Heart, as well as the language of the Tongue; Not a fooliſh thought, or an idle word, not a wanton glance, or a diſhoneſt action; Not a negligent ſervice, or a diſtracting fancy, but is more viſible to him, than the filth of a Dunghil can be to any Man by the help of a Sun-Beam. How much better would it be for deſperate Sinners, to have their Crimes known to all the Angels in Heaven, and Men upon Earth, and Devils in Hell, than that they ſhould be known to their Sovereign, whoſe Laws they have violated, and to their Judge, whoſe Righteouſneſs obligeth him to revenge the Injury?

Conſider, What a poor Refuge is Secrecy to a Sinner? Not the Miſts of a foggy Day, nor the Obſcurity of the darkeſt Night, nor the cloſeſt Curtains, nor the deepeſt Dungeon, can hide any Sin from the Eye of God. Adam is known in his Thickets, and Jonah in his Cabin. Achan's Wedge of Gold is diſcern'd by him, though buried in the Earth, and hooded with a Tent. Shall Sarah be unſeen by him, when ſhe mockingly laughs behind the Door? Shall Gehazi tell a Lye, and comfort himſelf with an imagination of his Maſter's Ignorance, as long as God knows it? Whatſoever works Men do, are not hid from God, whether done in the darkneſs or Day-light, in the Midnight Darkneſs, or the Noon-day Sun: He is all Eye to ſee, and he hath a great Wrath to Puniſh. The Wheels in Ezekiel are full of Eyes: A piercing Eye to behold the Sinner, and a ſwift Wheel of Wrath to overtake him. God is Light, and of all things Light is moſt difficultly kept out. The ſecreteſt Sins are ſet in the light of his Countenance *, as legible to him, as if writ with a Sun-Beam; More viſible to him than the greateſt Print to the ſharpeſt Eye. The Fornications of the Samaritan Woman, perhaps known only to her own Conſcience, were manifeſt to Chriſt *. There is nothing ſo ſecretly done, but there is an infallible Witneſs to prepare a Charge. Though God be inviſible to us, we muſt not imagine we are ſo to him; 'tis a vanity therefore to think, we can conceal our ſelves from God, by concealing the Notions of God from our ſenſe and practice. If Men be as cloſe from the Eyes of all Men, as from thoſe of the Sun: Yea, if they could ſeparate themſelves from their own Shadow, they could not draw themſelves from God's Underſtanding: How then can Darkneſs ſhelter us, or Crafty Artifices defend us? With what ſhame will Sinners be filled, when God, who hath trac'd their Steps, and writ their Sins in a Book, ſhall make a Repetition of their ways, and unveil the Web of their Wickedneſs?

* Pſal. 90. 8.

* John 4. 16.

2. What a dreadful Conſideration is this to the juggling Hypocrite, that maſks himſelf with an appearance of Piety? An Infinite Underſtanding judges not according to the Veils and Shadows, but according to the Truth; He judges not according to appearance *. The outward Comelineſs of a Work impoſeth not on him, his Knowledge, and therefore his Eſtimations are quite of another Nature than thoſe of Men. By this Perfection God looks through the Veil, and beholds the litter of Abominations in the ſecrets of the Soul: The true Quality and Principle of every Work, and judges of them as they are, and not as they appear. Diſguiſed Pretexts cannot deceive him; the Diſguiſes are known afar off before they are weav'd, he pierceth into the depths of the moſt abſtruſe Wills; all ſecret Ends are diſſected before him: Every action is naked in its outſide, and open in its inſide, all are as clear to him as if their Bodies were of Cryſtal, ſo that if there be any ſecret Reſerves, he will certainly reprove us *. We are often deceiv'd, we may take Wolves for Sheep, and Hypocrites for Believers; for the Eyes of Men are no better than Fleſh, and dive no further than appearance; but an infinite Underſtanding, that fathoms the ſecret depths of the Heart, is too knowing to let a Dream paſs for a Truth, or miſtake a Shadow for a Body. Though we call God Father all our days, ſpeak the Language of Angels, or be endowed with the Gift of Miracles, he can diſcern whether we have his Mark upon us; He can eſpy the Treaſon of Judas in a Kiſs, Herod's intent of Murdering under a ſpecious pretence of Worſhip: A Phariſee's fraud under a broad Phylactery: A Ravenous Wolf under the ſoftneſs of a Sheep's Skin; And the Devil in Samuel's Mantle, or when he would ſhrowd himſelf among the Sons of God *. All the Rooms of the Heart, and every Atome of Duſt in the leaſt chink of it is clear to his Eye: He can ſtrip Sin from the faireſt Excuſes, pierce into the Heart with more eaſe than the Sun can through the thinneſt Cloud or Vapour; and look through all Ephraim's ingenious Inventions to excuſe his Idolatry *. Hypocriſie then is a ſenſeleſs thing, ſince it cannot eſcape unmasking, by an infinite Underſtanding. As all our Force cannot ſtop his Arm, when he is reſolved to Puniſh; ſo all our Sophiſtry cannot blind his Underſtanding, when he comes to Judge. Woe to the Hypocrite, for God ſees him; all his juggling is open and naked to infinite Underſtanding.

* Job 13. 10.

* Job 1. 6, 7.

* Hoſ. 5. 3.

3. Is it not alſo a ſenſeleſs thing to be careleſs of Sins committed long ago? The old Sins forgotten by Men, ſtick faſt in an infinite Underſtanding: Time cannot raze out that which hath been known from Eternity. Why ſhould they be forgotten many Years after they were acted, ſince they were foreknown in an Eternity before they were committed, or the Criminal capable to practice them? Amalek muſt pay their Arrears of their ancient Unkindneſs to Iſrael in the time of Saul, though the Generation that committed them were rotten in their Graves *. Old Sins are written in a Book, which lies always before God; and not only our own Sins, but the Sins of our Fathers, to be requited upon their Poſterity *. What a vanity is it then to be regardleſs of the Sins of an Age that went before us; becauſe they are in ſome meaſure out of our knowledge, are they therefore blotted out of God's remembrance? Sins are bound up with him, as Men do Bonds, till they reſolve to ſue for the Debt; The Iniquity of Ephraim is bound up *. As his fore-knowledge extends to all acts that ſhall be done, ſo his remembrance extends to all acts that have been done. We may as well ſay, God fore-knows nothing that ſhall be done to the end of the World, as that he forgets any thing that hath been done from the beginning of the World. The former Ages of the World are no further diſtant from him than the latter. God hath a Calendar, (as it were) or an Account Book of Mens Sins ever ſince the beginning of the World, what they did in their

And it is to be obſerved, that God doth not only neceſſarily remember them, but ſometimes binds himſelf by an Oath to do it; Amos 8. 7. The Lord hath ſworn by the Excellency of Jacob, ſurely I will never forget any of their works. Or in the Hebrew, If I ever forget any of their works; That is, I et me not be accounted a God for ever, if I do forget; Let me loſe my Godhead, if I loſe my Remembrance. 'Tis not leſs a Miſery to the Wicked, than it is a Comfort to the Godly, that their Record is in Heaven.

4. Let it be obſerved, That this infinite Underſtanding doth exactly know the ſins of Men, he knows ſo as to conſider. He doth not only know them, but in-

* Jer. 2. 22. 'Tis exact, for Iniquity is mark'd before him *.

5. God knows Mens miſcarriage ſo as to judge. This uſe his Omniſcience is put to, to maintain his Soveraign Authority in the exerciſe of his Juſtice: His notice of the Sins of Men is in order to a juſt Retribution, Pſal. 10. 14. Thou haſt ſeen miſchief to requite it with thy hand. The Eye of his Knowledge directs the Hand of his Juſtice; and no ſinful action that falls under his Cognizance, but will fall under his Revenge; they can as little eſcape his Cenſure as they can his Knowledge: He is a Witneſs in his Omniſcience, that he may be a Judge in his Righteouſneſs: He knows the hearts of the Wicked, ſo as to hate their Works, and teſtifie his abhorrency of *Luke 16. 15. that which is of high value with Men *. Sin is not preſerved in his Underſtanding, or written down in his Book to be Moth-eaten as an old Manuſcript, but to be open'd one day, and Copied out in the Conſciences of Men: He writes them to publiſh them, and ſets them in the light of his Countenance, to bring them to the light of their Conſciences What a terrible Conſideration is it, to think that the Sins of a day are upon Record in an Infallible Underſtanding, much more the Sins of a Week? What a number then do the Sins of a Month, a Year, ten or forty Years ariſe to? How many actions againſt Charity, againſt Sincerity; what an infinite number is there of them, all bound up in the Court Rolls of God's Omniſcience, in order to a Tryal, to be brought out before the Eyes of Men? Who can ſeriouſly conſider all thoſe Bonds, reſerv'd in the Cabinet of God's Knowledge, to be ſued out againſt the Sinner in due time, without an unexpreſſible horror?

4. The fourth Uſe is of Exhortation. Let us have a ſenſe of God's Knowledge upon our hearts. All Wickedneſs hath a ſpring from a want of due Conſideration and ſenſe of it. David concludes it ſo, * The proud
* Pſal. 86. 14. roſe againſt him, and violent Men ſought after his Soul, becauſe they did not ſet God before them. They think God doth not know, and therefore care not what, nor how they act. When the fear of this Attribute is remov'd, a Door is open'd to all Impiety: What is there ſo villainous, but the minds of Men will attempt to act? What Reverence of a Deity can be left, when the ſenſe of his infinite Underſtanding is extinguiſh'd? What Faith could there be in Judgments in Witneſſes? How would the Foundations of Humane Society be overturn'd? The Pillars upon which Commerce ſtands, be utterly broken and diſſolved? What Society can be preſerved, if this be not truly believed and faithfully ſtuck to? But how eaſily would Oaths be ſwallowed and quickly violated, if the ſenſe of this Perfection were rooted out of the minds of Men? What fear could they have of calling to Witneſs a Being they imagine blind and ignorant? Men ſecretly imagine, that God knows not, or ſoon forgets, and then make bold to Sin againſt
* Ezek. 8. 12. him *. How much does it therefore concern us to cheriſh and keep alive the ſenſe of this? If God writes us upon the Palms of his Hands, as the Expreſſion is, to remember us, let us engrave him upon the Tables of our Hearts to remember him. It would be a good Motto to write upon our Minds, God knows all, he is of infinite Underſtanding.

1. This would give check to much Iniquity. Can a Man's Conſcience eaſily and delightfully ſwallow that, which he is ſenſible falls under the Cognizance of God, when it is hateful to the Eye of his Holineſs, and renders the Actor odious to him? Doth he not ſee my ways, and count all my ſteps, ſaith Job *? * Job 41. To what end doth he fix this Conſideration? To 4. keep him from wanton glances. Temptations have no encouragement to come near him, that is conſtantly arm'd with the thoughts that his Sin is Book'd in God's Omniſcience. If any impudent Devil hath the face to tempt us, we ſhould not have the impudence to joyn iſſue with him under the ſenſe of an infinite Underſtanding. How fruitleſs would his Wiles be againſt this Conſideration? How eaſily would his Snares be crack'd, by one ſenſible thought of this? This doth Solomon preſcribe to allay the heat of Carnal imaginations *. It were a uſeful Que- * Prov. 5. 20, 21. ſtion to ask, at the appearance of every Temptation, at the entrance upon every Action, as the Church did in Temptations to Idolatry; * Shall not God ſearch * Pſal. 44. this out, for he knows the ſecrets of the heart? His 21. Underſtanding comprehends us more than our Conſciences can our acts, or our Underſtanding our thoughts: Who durſt ſpeak Treaſon againſt a Prince, if he were ſure he heard him, or that it would come to his knowledge? A ſenſe of God's knowledge of Wickedneſs in the firſt motion and inward contrivance, would bar the accompliſhment and execution. The Conſideration of God's infinite Underſtanding, would cry ſtand to the firſt glances of the heart to Sin.

2. It would make us watchful over our hearts and thoughts. Should we harbour any unworthy thoughts in our Cabinet, if our heads and hearts were poſſeſs'd with this uſeful Truth, That God knows every thing which comes into our minds *? We ſhould as much * Ezek. 11. bluſh at the riſing of impure thoughts before the 5. Underſtanding of God, as at the diſcovery of unworthy actions to the knowledge of Men: If we lived

lived under a ſenſe, that not a thought of all thoſe Millions, which flutter about our Minds, can be conceal'd from him; how watchful and careful ſhould we be of our hearts and thoughts?

3. It would be a good Preparation to every Duty. This Conſideration ſhould be the Preface to every Service: The Divine Underſtanding knows how I now act. This would engage us to ſerious Intention, and quell wandring and diſtracting Fancies: Who would come before God with a careleſs and ignorant Soul, under a ſenſe of his infinite Underſtanding, and Prerogative of ſearching the Heart? Oh thou that ſitteſt in Heaven, was a Conſideration the Pſalmiſt had at the beginning of his Prayer*: Whereby he teſtifies not only an Apprehenſion of the Majeſty and Power of God, but of his Omniſcience; as one ſitting above, beholds all that is below; would we offer to God ſuch raw and undigeſted Petitions; would there be ſo much flattneſs in our Services; ſhould our Hearts ſo often give us the ſlip: Would any hang down their Heads like a Bulruſh by an affected or counterfeit Humility, while the Heart is filled with Pride, if we did actuate Faith in this Attribute? No, our Prayers would be more ſound, our Devotions more vigorous, our Hearts more cloſe, our Spirits like the Chariots of Aminadab, more ſwift in their Motions: Every thing would be done by us with all our might, which would be very feeble and faint, if we conceived God to be of a Finite Underſtanding like our ſelves. Let us therefore before every Duty, not draw, but open the Curtains between God and our Souls, and think that we are going before him that ſees us, before him that knows us*. And the ſtronger Impreſſions of the Divine Knowledge are upon our Minds, the better would our Preparation be for, and the more active our Frames in every Service: And certainly we may judge of the ſuitableneſs of our Preparations, by the ſtrength of ſuch Impreſſions upon us.

* Pſal. 123. 1.

* Gen. 16. 13.

4. This would tend to make us ſincere in our whole Courſe. This Preſcription David gave to Solomon, to maintain a ſoundneſs and health of Spirit in his Walk before God; 1 Chron. 28. 9. And thou Solomon my Son, know the God of thy Fathers, and ſerve him with a perfect Heart, for the Lord underſtands all the Imaginations of the Thoughts. Joſephus gives this Reaſon for Abel's Holineſs, that he believed God was ignorant of nothing. As the Doctrine of Omniſcience is the Foundation of all Religion; ſo the Impreſſion of it, would promote the practice of all Religion. When all our ways are imagin'd by us to be before the Lord, we ſhall then *keep his Precepts. And we can never be perfect or ſincere, till we walk before God, Gen. 17. 1. as under the Eye of God's Knowledge. What we ſpeak, what we think, what we act is in his Sight: He knows every place where we are, every thing that we do, as well as Chriſt knew Nathanael under the Fig-Tree. As he is too powerful to be vanquiſh'd, ſo he is too Underſtanding to be deceived: The ſenſe of this would make us walk with as much Care, as if the Underſtanding of all Men did comprehend us and our Actions.

* Antiquit. lib. 1. cap. 3.

* Pſal. 119. 168.

5. The Conſideration of this Attribute would make us humble. How dejected would a Perſon be, if he were ſure all the Angels in Heaven, and Men upon Earth, did perfectly know his Crimes, with all their Aggravations? But what is created Knowledge to an infinite and juſt cenſuring Underſtanding? When we conſider that he knows our Actions, whereof there are Multitudes, and our Thoughts, whereof there are Millions: That he views all the Bleſſings beſtow'd upon us; all the Injuries we have return'd to him; that he exactly knows his own Bounty, and our Ingratitude; all the Idolatry, Blaſphemy, and ſecret Enmity in every Man's Heart againſt him; all Tyrannical Oppreſſions, hidden Luſts, Omiſſions of neceſſary Duties, violation of plain Precepts, every fooliſh Imagination, with all the Circumſtances of them, and that perfectly in their full Anatomy, every Mite of Unworthineſs and Wickedneſs in every Circumſtance; and add to this his Knowledge, the Wonders of his Patience, which are miraculous upon the ſcore of his Omniſcience, that he is not as quick in his Revenge, as he is in his Underſtanding; but is ſo far from inflicting Puniſhment, that he continues his former Benefits, arms not his Juſtice againſt us, but ſollicits our Repentance, and waits to be gracious with all this Knowledge of our Crimes; ſhould not the Conſideration of this, melt our Hearts into Humiliation before him, and make us earneſt in begging Pardon and Forgiveneſs of him?

Again, Do we not all find a Worm in our beſt Fruit, a Flaw in our ſoundeſt Duties? Shall any of us vaunt, as if God beheld only the Gold, and not any Droſs; as if he knew one thing only, and not another: If we knew ſomething by our ſelves to chear us, do we not alſo know ſomething, yea, many things to condemn us, and therefore to humble us? Let the ſenſe of God's infinite Knowledge therefore be an Incentive and Argument for more Humiliation in us. If we know enough to render our ſelves vile in our own Eyes, how much more doth God know to render us vile in his!

6. The Conſideration of this excellent Perfection, ſhould make us to acquieſce in God, and rely upon him in every ſtrait. In publick, in private: He knows all Caſes, and he knows all Remedies: He knows the Seaſons of bringing them, and he knows the Seaſons of removing them, for his own Glory. What is contingent in reſpect of us, and of our Foreknowledge, and in reſpect of ſecond Cauſes, is it not ſo in regard of God's, who hath the Knowledge of the futurition of all things: He knows all Cauſes in themſelves, and therefore knows what every Cauſe will produce, what will be the event of every Counſel, and of every Action? How ſhould we commit our ſelves to this God of infinite Underſtanding, who knows all things, and fore-knows every thing, that cannot be forced through Ignorance to take new Counſel, or be ſurpriz'd with any thing that can happen to us? This Uſe the Pſalmiſt makes of it, Pſal. 10. 14. Thou haſt ſeen it, the poor committeth himſelf unto thee. Though *ſome truſt in Chariots and Horſes, ſome in Counſels and Counſellors, ſome in their Arms and Courage, and ſome in meer Vanity and Nothing, yet let us remember the Name and Nature of the Lord our God, his Divine Perfections, of which this of his infinite Underſtanding and Omniſcience is none of the leaſt, but ſo neceſſary, that without it he could not be God, and the whole World would be a meer Chaos and Confuſion.

* Pſal. 10. 7.

A DISCOURSE UPON THE Wiſdom of GOD.

Rom. XVI. xxvii.

To God only Wiſe be Glory through Jeſus Chriſt, for ever, Amen.

THis Chapter being the laſt of this Epiſtle, is chiefly made up of charitable and friendly Salutations and Commendations of particular Perſons, according to the early neſs and ſtrength of their ſeveral Graces, and their labour of Love for the Intereſt of God and his People.

In verſe 17. he warns them not to be drawn aſide from the Goſpel Doctrine, which had been taught them, by the plauſible Pretences and Inſinuations, which the Corrupters of the Doctrine and Rule of Chriſt never want from the ſuggeſtions of their Carnal Wiſdom. The Brats of Soul-deſtroying Errors, may walk about the world in a garb and diſguiſe of good words, and fair ſpeeches, as it is in the 18*th Verſe*, by good words and fair ſpeeches deceive the hearts of the ſimple. And for their encouragement to a conſtancy in the Goſpel Doctrine, he aſſures them, that all thoſe that would diſpoſſeſs them of Truth, to poſſeſs them with Vanity, are but Satans's Inſtruments, and will fall under the ſame Captivity and Yoke with their principal; Verſe 18. The God of Peace ſhall bruiſe Satan under your feet ſhortly.

Whence obſerve,

1. All Corrupters of Divine Truth, and Troublers of the Churches Peace, are no better than Devils. Our Saviour thought the Name Satan, a Title merited by Peter, when he breathed out an Advice, as an Ax at the Root of the Goſpel, the Death of Chriſt, the foundation of all Goſpel Truth; and the Apoſtle concludes them under the ſame Character, which hinder the ſuperſtructure, and would mix their Chaff with his Wheat; Mat. 16. 23. Get thee behind me Satan. 'Tis not, Get thee behind me Simon, or, Get thee behind me Peter; but, Get thee behind me Satan: thou art an offence to me: Thou doſt oppoſe thy ſelf to the Wiſdom, and Grace, and Authority of God, to the Redemption of Man, and to the good of the World,

As the Holy Ghoſt is the Spirit of Truth, ſo is Satan the Spirit of Falſhood: As the Holy Ghoſt inſpires Believers with Truth, ſo doth the Devil corrupt Unbelievers with Error. Let us cleave to the Truth of the Goſpel, that we may not be counted by God as part of the Corporation of fallen Angels, and not be barely reckon'd as Enemies of God, but in league with the greateſt Enemy to his Glory in the World.

2. The Reconciler of the World will be the ſubduer of Satan. The God of peace ſent the Prince of Peace to be the Reſtorer of his Rights, and the Hammer to beat in pieces the Uſurper of them. As a God of Truth he will make good his promiſe, as a God of Peace he will perfect the deſign his Wiſdom hath laid, and begun to act. In the ſubduing Satan, he will be the Conqueror of his Inſtruments: He ſaith not, God ſhall bruiſe your Troublers, and Hereticks; but Satan: The fall of a General proves the rout of the Army. Since God, as a God of Peace, hath delivered his own, he will perfect the Victory, and make them ceaſe from bruiſing the heel of his Spiritual ſeed.

3. Divine Evangelical Truth ſhall be Victorious. No Weapon formed againſt it ſhall proſper: The Head of the Wicked ſhall fall as low as the feet of the Godly. The Devil never yet bluſter'd in the World, but he met at laſt with a diſappointment: His fall hath been like Lightning, ſudden, certain, vaniſhing.

4. Faith muſt look back as far as the foundation-promiſe. The God of Peace, ſhall bruiſe, &c. The Apoſtle ſeems to allude to the firſt promiſe, Gen 2. 15. A Promiſe that hath vigor to nouriſh the Church in all Ages of the World: 'Tis the ſtanding Cordial; out of the Womb of this promiſe all the reſt have taken their birth. The promiſes of the Old Teſtament were deſigned for thoſe under the New, and full performance of them, is to be expected, and will be enjoyed by them. 'Tis a mighty ſtrengthening to Faith, to trace the footſteps of Gods Truth and Wiſdom, from the Threatning againſt the Serpent in Eden, to the bruiſe he received in Calvary, and the Triumph over him upon Mount Olivet.

5. We are to conſide in the promiſe of God, but leave the ſeaſon of its accompliſhment to his Wiſdom. He will bruiſe Satan under your feet, therefore do not doubt it; and ſhortly, therefore wait for it: Shortly it will be done, that is, quickly when you think it may be a great way off; or ſhortly, that is, ſeaſonably, when Satan's Rage is hotteſt. God is the beſt Judge of the ſeaſons of diſtributing his own mercies, and darting out his own Glory: 'Tis enough to encourage our waiting, that it will be, and that it will be ſhortly; but we muſt not meaſure God's ſhortly by our Minutes.

The Apoſtle after this concludes with a comfortable Prayer, That ſince they were liable to many Temptations, to turn their backs upon the Doctrine which they had learned; yet he deſires God, who had brought them to the knowledge of his Truth, would confirm them in the belief of it, ſince it was the Goſpel of Chriſt, his dear Son, and a myſtery he had been chary of and kept in his own Cabinet, and now brought forth to the World, in purſuance of the Ancient Prophecies, and now had publiſh'd to all Nations for that end that it might be obeyed; and concludes with a Doxology, a voice of Praiſe, To him who was only Wiſe, to effect his own purpoſes; Verſes 25, 26, 27. Now to him that is of power to eſtabliſh you, according to my Goſpel and the preaching of Jeſus Chriſt, according to the revelation of the Myſtery, which was kept ſecret ſince the World began; but now is made manifeſt, and by the Scriptures of the Prophets, according to the commandment of the Everlaſting God, made known to all Nations for the obedience of Faith. This Doxology is interlac'd with many Comforts for the Romans; He explains the cauſes of this glory to God, Power and Wiſdom; Power to eſtabliſh the Romans in Grace, which includes his will. This he proves from a Divine Teſtimony, viz. the Goſpel; the Goſpel committed to him, and preach'd by him, which he commends by calling it the preaching of Chriſt; and deſcribes it, for the Inſtruction and Comfort of the Church, from the Adjuncts, the obſcurity of it under the Old Teſtament, and the clearneſs of it under the New: It was hid from the former Ages, and kept in ſilence; not ſimply and abſolutely, but comparatively and in part; becauſe in the Old Teſtament, the Doctrine of Salvation by Chriſt was confin'd to the limits of Judea, preach'd only to the Inhabitants of that Country: To them he gave his Statutes and his Judgments, and dealt not ſo magnificently with any Nation *; but now he cauſes it to ſpring with greater Majeſty out of thoſe narrow bounds, and ſpread its Wings about the World. This manifeſtation of the Goſpel he declares firſt, from the ſubject, All Nations: 2. From the principal efficient cauſe of it, The Commandment and Order of God: 3. The Inſtrumental cauſe, The Prophetick Scriptures: 4. From the End of it, The obedience of Faith.

*Pſal. 147. 19, 20.

Gomarus in loc.

1. Obſerve, The glorious Attributes of God bear a comfortable reſpect to Believers. Power and Wiſdom are here mention'd as two Props of their Faith; his Power here includes his Goodneſs. Power to help, without will to aſſiſt, is a dry Chip. The Apoſtle mentions not God's Power ſimply and abſolutely conſidered, for that of it ſelf is no more Comfort to Men, than it is to Devils; but as conſidered in the Goſpel-Covenant, his Power, as well as his other Perfections, are ingredients in that Cordial of God's being our God. We ſhould never think of the Excellency of the Divine Nature, without conſidering the Duties they demand, and gathering the Honey they preſent.

2. Obſ. The ſtability of a gracious Soul depends upon the Wiſdom, as well as the Power of God. It would be a diſrepute to the Almightineſs of God, if that ſhould be totally vanquiſh'd which was introduc'd by his mighty Arm, and rooted in the Soul by an irreſiſtible Grace. It would ſpeak a want of ſtrength to maintain it, or a change of Reſolution, and ſo would be no honour to the Wiſdom of his firſt Deſign. 'Tis no part of the wiſdom of an Artificer, to let a Work wherein he determin'd to ſhew the greatneſs of his Skill, to be daſh'd in pieces, when he hath power to preſerve it. God deſign'd every gracious Soul for a piece of his workmanſhip *: What, to have the Skill of his Grace defeated? If any Soul which he hath graciouſly conquer'd ſhould be wreſted from him, what could be thought, but that his Power is enfeebled? If deſerted by him, what could be imagin'd, but that he repented of his Labour, and alter'd his Counſel, as if raſhly undertaken? Theſe Romans were rugged Pieces, and lay in a filthy Quarry, when God came firſt to ſmooth them; for ſo the Apoſtle repreſents them with the reſt of the Heathen, Rom. 1. 19. and would he throw them away, or leave them to the power of his Enemy, after all his pains he had taken with them, to fit them for his Building? Did he not foreſee the Deſigns of Satan againſt them; what Stratagems he would uſe to defeat his purpoſes, and ſtrip him of the honour of his Work; and would God ſo gratifie his Enemy, and diſgrace his own Wiſdom? The deſerting of what hath been acted, is a real Repentance, and argues an Imprudence in the firſt reſolve and attempt. The Goſpel is called, the Manifold Wiſdom of God, Eph. 3. 10. the fruit of it in the heart of any Perſon, which is a main deſign of it, hath a Title to the ſame Character; and ſhall this Grace, which is the product of this Goſpel, and therefore the birth of Manifold Wiſdom, be ſuppreſs'd? 'Tis at God's hand we muſt ſeek our fixedneſs and eſtabliſhment, and act Faith upon theſe two Attributes of God. Power is no ground to expect ſtability, without Wiſdom intereſting the Agent in it, and finding out and applying the means for it. Wiſdom is naked without Power to act, and Power is uſeleſs without Wiſdom to direct: They are theſe two Excellencies of the Deity, the Apoſtle here pitches the Hope and Faith of the converted Romans upon for their ſtability.

* Eph. 2. 10.

3. Obſ. Perſeverance of Believers in Grace, is a Goſpel-Doctrine. According to my Goſpel: My Goſpel miniſterially, according to that Goſpel-Doctrine I have taught you in this Epiſtle; (for, as the Prophets were Comments upon the Law, ſo are the Epiſtles upon the Goſpel:) This very Doctrine he had diſcours'd of, Rom. 8. 38, 39. where he tells them, that neither death nor life, the Terrors of a cruel death, or the Allurements of an honourable and pleaſant life, nor principalities and powers, with all their ſubtility and ſtrength; not the things we have before us, nor the promiſes of a future felicity, by either Angels in Heaven, or Devils in Hell; not the higheſt Angel, nor the deepeſt Devil, is able to ſeparate us, us Romans, from the love of God which is in Chriſt Jeſus. So that, According to my Goſpel, may be according to that Declaration of the Goſpel, which I have made in this Epiſtle, which doth not only promiſe the firſt creating Grace, but the Perfecting and Crowning Grace; for not only the being of Grace, but the health, livelineſs, and perpetuity of Grace is the fruit of the New Covenant, Jer. 32. 40.

4. Obſerve, That the Goſpel is the ſole Means of a Chriſtian's Eſtabliſhment. According to my Goſpel, that is, by my Goſpel. The Goſpel is the Inſtrumental cauſe of our Spiritual Life, 'tis the cauſe alſo of the continuance of it; 'tis the Seed whereby we were born, and the Milk whereby we are nouriſh'd *; 'tis the Power of God to Salvation *, and therefore to all the degrees of it. John 17. 17. Sanctifie them by thy Truth, or through thy Truth; by or through his Truth he Sanctifies us, and by the ſame Truth he eſtabliſheth us: The firſt Sanctification, and the progreſs of it, the firſt lineaments, and the laſt colours, are wrought by the Goſpel. The Goſpel therefore ought to be known, ſtudied, and conſidered by us: 'Tis the Charter of our Inheritance, and the ſecurity for our ſtanding. The Law acquaints us with our Duty, but contributes nothing to our ſtrength and ſettlement.

* 1 Pet. 1. 23.

* 1 Pet. 2. 2.

5. Obſ. The Goſpel is nothing elſe but the Revelation of Chriſt. Verſe 25. According to my Goſpel, and the preaching of Jeſus Chriſt: The diſcovery of the Myſtery, and Redemption, and Salvation, in and by him. 'Tis Genitivus objecti, that Preaching wherein Chriſt is declared and ſet out, with the Benefits accruing by him. This is the Privilege the Wiſdom of God reſerved for the latter Times, which the Old Teſtament-Church had only under a Veil.

6. 'Tis a part of the Excellency of the Goſpel, that it had the Son of God for its Publiſher: The Preaching of Jeſus Chriſt. It was firſt preached to Adam in Paradiſe Paradiſe by God, and afterwards publiſh'd by Chriſt in Perſon to the Inhabitants of Judea. It was not the Invention of Man, but Copied from the Boſom of the Father by him that lay in his Boſom. The Goſpel we have, is the ſame which our Saviour himſelf preached when he was in the World: He preached it not to the Romans; but the ſame Goſpel he preached is tranſmitted to the Romans. It therefore Commands our Reſpect, whoever ſlights it, 'tis as much as if he ſlighted Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, were he in Perſon to ſound it from his own Lips The validity of a Proclamation is derived from the Authority of the Prince that dictates it, and orders it; yet the greater the Perſon that publiſheth it, the more diſhonour is caſt upon the Authority of the Prince that enjoyns it, if it be contemn'd. The Everlaſting God ordain'd it, and the Eternal Son publiſh'd it.

7. The Goſpel was of an Eternal Reſolution, though of a temporary Revelation. Verſe 25. According to the Revelation of the Myſtery, which was kept ſecret ſince the World began. 'Tis an Everlaſting Goſpel. It was a Promiſe before the World began, Titus 1. 2. It was not a new Invention, but only kept ſecret among the Arcana, in the Breaſt of the Almighty. It was hidden from Angels, for the depths of it are not yet fully made known to them; their deſire to look into it, ſpeaks yet a deficiency in their Knowledge of it *. It was publiſh'd in Paradiſe, but in ſuch words as Adam did not fully underſtand: It was both diſcover'd and clouded in the Smoak of Sacrifices: It was wrapped up in a Veil under the Law, but not open'd till the Death of the Redeemer: It was then plainly ſaid to the Cities of Judah, behold your God comes. The whole Tranſaction of it between the Father and the Son, which is the Spirit of the Goſpel, was from Eternity; the Creation of the World was in order to the manifeſtation of it. Let us not then regard the Goſpel as a Novelty; the conſideration of it, as one of God's Cabinet Rarities, ſhould enhance our Eſtimation of it. No Traditions of Men, no Invention of vain Wits, that pretend to be wiſer than God, ſhould have the ſame Credit with that which bears date from Eternity.

* 1 Pet. 1. 12.

8. Obſerve, That Divine Truth is Myſterious. According to the revelation of the myſtery, Chriſt manifeſted in the fleſh. The whole Scheme of Godlineſs is a Myſtery. No Man or Angel could imagine, how two Natures ſo diſtant as the Divine and Humane, ſhould be united; how the ſame Perſon ſhould be Criminal and Righteous; how a Juſt God ſhould have a Satisfaction, and Sinful Man a Juſtification; how the Sin ſhould be puniſh'd, and the Sinner ſaved. None could imagine ſuch a way of Juſtification, as the Apoſtle in this Epiſtle declares: It was a Myſtery, when hid under the ſhadows of the Law; and a Myſtery to the Prophets, when it ſounded from their Mouths; they ſearched it, without being able to comprehend it *.

* 1 Pet. 1. 10, 11.

If it be a Myſtery, 'tis humbly to be ſubmitted to: Myſteries ſurmount Human Reaſon. The ſtudy of the Goſpel muſt not be with a yawning and careleſs frame. Trades you call Myſteries, are not learned ſleeping and nodding; diligence is required, we muſt be Diſciples at God's Feet. As it had God for the Author, ſo we muſt have God for the Teacher of it; the Contrivance was his, and the Illumination of our Minds muſt be from him. As God only manifeſted the Goſpel, ſo he only can open our Eyes to ſee the Myſteries of Chriſt in it.

In Verſe 26. we may obſerve,

1. The Scriptures of the Old Teſtament verifie the ſubſtance of the New, and the New doth evidence the Authority of the Old. By the Scriptures of the Prophets made known. The Old Teſtament credits the New, and the New illuſtrates the Old. The New Teſtament is a Comment upon the Prophetick part of the Old. The Old ſhews the Promiſes and Predictions of God, and the New ſhews the Performance: What was foretold in the Old, is fulfilled in the New; the Predictions are cleared by the Events. The Predictions of the Old are Divine, becauſe they are above the Reaſon of Man to foreknow: None but an Infinite Knowledge could foretell them, becauſe none but an Infinite Wiſdom could order all things for the accompliſhment of them.

The Chriſtian Religion hath then the ſureſt Foundation, ſince the Scriptures of the Prophets, wherein it is foretold, are of undoubted Antiquity, and owned by the Jews and many Heathens, which are and were the great Enemies of Chriſt. The Old Teſtament is therefore to be read for the ſtrengthening of our Faith. Our Bleſſed Saviour himſelf draws the Streams of his Doctrine from the Old Teſtament: He clears up the Promiſe of Eternal Life, and the Doctrine of the Reſurrection, from the words of the Covenant, I am the God of Abraham, &c. Mat. 22. 32. And our Apoſtle clears up the Doctrine of Juſtification by Faith from God's Covenant with Abraham, Rom. 4. It muſt be read, and it muſt be read as it is writ: It was writ to a Goſpel end, it muſt be ſtudied with a Goſpel Spirit. The Old Teſtament was writ to give Credit to the New, when it ſhould be manifeſted in the World. It muſt be read by us to give ſtrength to our Faith, and eſtabliſh us in the Doctrine of Chriſtianity. How many view it as a bare ſtory, an Almanack out of date, and regard it as a dry Bone, without ſucking from it the Evangelical Marrow? Chriſt is, in Geneſis, Abraham's Seed; in David's Pſalms and the Prophets, the Meſſiah and Redeemer of the World.

2. Obſerve the Antiquity of the Goſpel is made manifeſt by the Scriptures of the Prophets. It was of as Ancient a date as any Prophecy: The firſt Prophecy was nothing elſe but a Goſpel-Charter; it was not made at the Incarnation of Chriſt, but made manifeſt. It then roſe up to its Meridian luſtre, and ſprung out of the Clouds, wherewith it was before obſcur'd. The Goſpel was preached to the Ancients by the Prophets, as well as to the Gentiles by the Apoſtles; Heb. 4. 2. Unto us was the Goſpel preached, as well as unto them. To them firſt, to us after; to them indeed more cloudy, to us more clear; but they as well as we, were Evangeliz'd, as the word ſignifies.

The Covenant of Grace was the ſame in the Writings of the Prophets, and the Declarations of the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles. Though by our Saviour's Incarnation, the Goſpel Light was clearer, and by his Aſcenſion, the Effuſions of the Spirit fuller and ſtronger; yet the Believers under the Old Teſtament, ſaw Chriſt in the Swadling-Bands of Legal Ceremonies, and the Lattice of Prophetical Writings; they could not elſe offer one Sacrifice, or read one Prophecy with a Faith of the right ſtamp. Abraham's Juſtifying Faith had Chriſt for its Object, though it was not ſo explicit as ours, becauſe the manifeſtation was not ſo clear as ours.

3. All Truth is to be drawn from Scripture. The Apoſtle refers them here to the Goſpel and the Prophets: The Scripture is the Source of Divine Knowledge; not the Traditions of Men, nor Reaſon ſeparate from Scripture. Whoſoever brings another Doctrine, coins another Chriſt; nothing is to be added to what is written, nothing detracted from it. He doth not ſend us for Truth, to the Puddles of Humane Inventions, to the Enthuſiaſms of our Brain; nor to the See of Rome, no, nor to the Inſtructions of Angels; but the Writings of the Prophets, as they clear up the Declarations of the Apoſtles. The Church of Rome is not made here the Standard of Truth; but the Scriptures of the Prophets are to be the Touchſtone to the Romans, for the trial of the Truth of the Goſpel.

4. How great is the Goodneſs of God? The Borders of Grace are enlarged to the Gentiles, and not hid under the Skirts of the Jews. He that was ſo long the God of the Jews, is now alſo manifeſt to be the God of the Gentiles: The Goſpel is now made known to all Nations, according to the Commandment of the Everlaſting God. Not only in a way of common Providence, but ſpecial Grace; in calling them to the Knowledge of himſelf, and a Juſtification of them by Faith, he hath brought Strangers to him, to the Adoption of Children, and lodged them under the Wings of the Covenant, that were before alienated from him through the univerſal Corruption of Nature. Now he hath manifeſted himſelf a God of Truth, mindful of his Promiſe in bleſſing all Nations in the Seed of Abraham. The Fury of Devils, and the Violence of Men, could not hinder the Propagation of this Goſpel: Its Light hath been diſperſed as far as that of the Sun; and that Grace that ſounded in the Gentiles Ears, hath bent many of their Hearts to the Obedience of it.

5. Obſerve, That Libertiniſm and Licentiouſneſs find no Encouragement in the Goſpel. It was made known to all Nations for the Obedience of Faith. The Goodneſs of God is publiſh'd, that our Enmity to him may be parted with. Chriſt's Righteouſneſs is not offered us to be put on, that we may roll more warmly in our Luſts. The Doctrine of Grace Commands us to give up our ſelves to Chriſt to be accepted through him, and to be ruled by him. Obedience is due to God, as a Sovereign Lord in his Law; and 'tis due out of Gratitude, as he is a God of Grace in the Goſpel. The Diſcovery of a further Perfection in God, weakens not the Right of another, nor the Obligation of the Duty the former Attribute claims at our Hands. The Goſpel frees us from the Curſe, but not from the Duty and Service: We are delivered from the Hands of our Enemies, that we might ſerve God in Holineſs and Righteouſneſs, Luk. 1. 74. This is the Will of God in the Goſpel, even our Sanctification. When a Prince ſtrikes off a Malefactor's Chains, though he deliver him from the Puniſhments of his Crime, he frees him not from the Duty of a Subject: His Pardon adds a greater Obligation, than his Protection did before while he was Loyal. Chriſt's Righteouſneſs gives us a Title to Heaven; but there muſt be a Holineſs to give us a Fitneſs for Heaven.

6. Obſerve, That Evangelical Obedience, or the Obedience of Faith is only acceptable to God. Obedience of Faith; Genitivus ſpeciei, noting the kind of Obedience God requires; an Obedience ſpringing from Faith, animated and influenced by Faith. Not Obedience of Faith, as though Faith were the Rule, and the Law were abrogated; but to the Law as a Rule, and from Faith as a Principle. There is no true Obedience before Faith: Heb. 11. 6. Without Faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; and therefore without Faith impoſſible to obey him. A good Work cannot proceed from a defil'd Mind and Conſcience; and without Faith every Man's Mind is darkned, and his Conſcience polluted*. Faith is the Band of Union to Chriſt, and Obedience is the Fruit of Union; we cannot bring forth Fruit without being Branches*, and we cannot be Branches without Believing. Legitimate Fruit follows upon Marriage to Chriſt, not before it: Rom. 7. 4. That you ſhould be married to another, even to him that is raiſed from the dead, that you ſhould bring forth Fruit unto God. All Fruit before Marriage is Baſtard, and Baſtards were excluded from the Sanctuary. Our Perſons muſt be firſt accepted in Chriſt, before our Services can be acceptable; thoſe Works are not acceptable where the Perſon is not pardoned. Good Works flow from a pure Heart; but the Heart cannot be pure before Faith. All the Good Works reckoned up in the 11th. Chapter of the Hebrews were from this Spring; thoſe Heroes firſt believed, and then obeyed. By Faith Abel was righteous before God, without it his Sacrifice had been no better than Cain's: By Faith Enoch pleaſed God, and had a Divine Teſtimony to his Obedience before his Tranſlation: By Faith Abraham offered up Iſaac, without which he had been no better than a Murderer. All Obedience hath its Root in Faith, and is not done in our own Strength, but in the Strength and Virtue of another, of Chriſt, whom God hath ſet forth as our Head and Root.

7. Obſerve, Faith and Obedience are diſtinct, though inſeparable: The Obedience of Faith. Faith indeed is Obedience to a Goſpel Command, which enjoyns us to believe; but it is not all our Obedience. Juſtification and Sanctification are diſtinct Acts of God; Juſtification reſpects the Perſon, Sanctification the Nature; Juſtification is firſt in order of Nature, and Sanctification follows: They are diſtinct, but inſeparable; every Juſtified Perſon hath a Sanctified Nature, and every Sanctified Nature ſuppoſeth a Juſtified Perſon. So Faith and Obedience are diſtinct; Faith as the Principle, Obedience as the Product; Faith as the Cauſe, Obedience as the Effect; the Cauſe and the Effect are not the ſame. By Faith we own Chriſt as our Lord; by Obedience we regulate our ſelves according to his Command. The Acceptance of the Relation to him as a Subject, precedes the Performance of our Duty: By Faith we receive his Law, and by Obedience we fulfil it. Faith makes us God's Children, Gal. 3. 26. Obedience manifeſts us to be Chriſt's Diſciples, John 15. 8. Faith is the Touchſtone of Obedience; the Touchſtone, and that which is tried by it, are not the ſame. But though they are diſtinct, yet they are inſeparable. Faith and Obedience are joined together; Obedience follows Faith at the Heels. Faith purifies the Heart, and a pure Heart cannot be without pure Actions. Faith unites us to Chriſt, whereby we partake of his Life; and a living Branch cannnot be without Fruit in its Seaſon, and much Fruit, John 15. 5. and that naturally from a newneſs of Spirit, Rom. 7. 9. not conſtrained by the Rigors of the Law, but drawn forth from a ſweetneſs of Love; for Faith works by Love. The Love of God is the ſtrong Motive, and Love to God is the quickning Principle; as there can be no Obedience without Faith, ſo no Faith without Obedience.

After all this, the Apoſtle ends with the Celebration of the Wiſdom of God; To God only wiſe, be Glory through Jeſus Chriſt for ever. The rich Diſcovery of the Goſpel, cannot be thought of by a gracious Soul, without a return of Praiſe to God, and Admiration of his ſingular Wiſdom.

Wiſe God.] His Power before, and his Wiſdom here, are mentioned in conjunction (in which his Goodneſs is included, as intereſted in his eſtabliſhing Power) as the ground of all the Glory and Praiſe God hath from his Creatures.

Only Wiſe.] As Chriſt ſaith, Mat. 19. 17. None is good, but God; ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, None Wiſe, but God. As all Creatures are unclean in regard of his Purity; ſo they are all Fools in regard of his Wiſdom, yea the glorious Angels themſelves*. Wiſdom is the Royalty of God; the proper Dialect of all his Ways and Works. No Creature can lay claim to it: He is ſo Wiſe, that he is Wiſdom it ſelf.

Be glory through Jeſus Chriſt.] As God is only known in and by Chriſt, ſo he muſt be only worſhiped and celebrated in and through Chriſt. In him we muſt pray to him, and in him we muſt Praiſe

* Tit. 1. 15.

* John. 15. 4, 5.

* Job 4. 18.

Praiſe him. As all Mercies flow from God through Chriſt to us, ſo all our Duties are to be preſented to God through Chriſt.

In the Greek, verbatim it runs thus; To the alone Wiſe God, through Jeſus Chriſt, to him be Glory for ever. But we muſt not underſtand it, as if God were Wiſe by Jeſus Chriſt; but that Thanks are to be given to God through Chriſt, becauſe in and by Chriſt God hath revealed his Wiſdom to the World. The Greek hath a Repetition of the Article ᾧ not expreſt in the Tranſlation, To him be Glory. Beza expungeth this Article, but without Reaſon, for ᾧ is as much as ἀυτῷ, To him; and joining this, The only Wiſe God with the 25th. Verſe, To him that is of Power to eſtabliſh you; Reading it thus, To him that is of Power to eſtabliſh you, the only Wiſe God, leaving the reſt in a Parentheſis, it runs ſmoothly, To him be Glory through Jeſus Chriſt. And Crellius the Socinian obſerves, that this Article ᾧ, which ſome leave out, might be induſtriouſly inſerted by the Apoſtle, to ſhew, that the Glory we aſcribe to God, is alſo given to Chriſt.

We may Obſerve, That neither in this place, nor any where in Scripture, is the Virgin Mary, or any of the Saints, aſſociated with God or Chriſt in the Glory aſcrib'd to them.

In the Words there is,

1. An Appropriation of Wiſdom to God, and a Remotion of it from all Creatures; Only Wiſe God.
2. A Gloriſying him for it.

The Point I ſhall inſiſt upon, is,

That Wiſdom is a tranſcendent Excellency of the Divine Nature. We have before ſpoken of the Knowledge of God, and the infiniteneſs of it: The next Attribute is the Wiſdom of God. Moſt confound the Knowledge and Wiſdom of God together; but there is a manifeſt Diſtinction between them in our Conception.

I ſhall handle it thus:

1. Shew what Wiſdom is. Then lay down
2. Some Propoſitions about the Wiſdom of God. And ſhew,
3. That God is Wiſe, and only Wiſe.
4. Wherein his Wiſdom appears.
5. The Uſe.

I. What Wiſdom is. Wiſdom among the Greeks, firſt ſignified an eminent Perfection in any Art or Myſtery; ſo a good Statuary, Engraver, or Limner, was called Wiſe, as having an excellent Knowledge in his particular Art. But afterwards the Title of Wiſe was appropriated to thoſe that devoted themſelves to the Contemplation of the higheſt things, that ſerved for a Foundation to Speculative Sciences *. But ordinarily we count a Man a Wiſe Man, when he conducts his Affairs with Diſcretion, and governs his Paſſions with Moderation, and carries himſelf with a due Proportion and Harmony in all his Concerns.

* Amyrant. Moral. Tom. 3. p. 123.

But in Particular Wiſdom conſiſts,

1. In acting for a right End. The chiefeſt part of Prudence is in fixing a right End, and in chuſing fit Means, and directing them to that ſcope: To ſhoot at random is a mark of Folly. As he is the wiſeſt Man, that hath the nobleſt End and fitteſt Means; ſo God is infinitely Wiſe; as he is the moſt excellent Being, ſo he hath the moſt excellent End. As there is none more excellent than himſelf, nothing can be his End but himſelf: As he is the Cauſe of all, ſo he is the End of all; and he puts a true Byaſs into all the Means he uſeth to hit the Mark he aims at: Of him, and through him, and to him are all things, Rom. 11. 36.

2. Wiſdom conſiſts, in obſerving all Circumſtances for Action. He is counted a wiſe Man, that lays hold of the fitteſt Opportunities to bring his Deſigns about, that hath the fulleſt foreſight of all the little Intriegues which may happen in a Buſineſs he is to manage, and Times every part of his Action in an exact Harmony with the proper Minutes of it. God hath all the Circumſtances of things in one entire Image before him; he hath a proſpect of every little Creek in any Deſign. He ſees what Second Cauſes will act, and when they will act this or that; yea, he determines them to ſuch and ſuch Acts; ſo that it is impoſſible he ſhould be miſtaken, or miſs of the due Seaſon of bringing about his own Purpoſes. As he hath more Goodneſs, than to deceive any; ſo he hath more Underſtanding, than to be miſtaken in any thing. Hence the Time of the Incarnation of our Bleſſed Saviour, is called the Fulneſs of Time, the proper Seaſon for his coming. Every Circumſtance about Chriſt was tim'd according to the Predictions of God; even ſo little a thing as not parting his Garment, and the giving him Gall and Vinegar to drink: And all the bleſſings he ſhowers down upon his People, according to the Covenant of Grace, are ſaid to come in his due Seaſon, Ezek. 34. 25, 26.

3. Wiſdom conſiſts, In willing and acting according to the right Reaſon, according to a right Judgment of things. We never count a wilful Man a wiſe Man, but him only that acts according to a right Rule, when right Counſels are taken and vigorouſly executed. The Reſolves and Ways of God are not meer Will, but Will guided by the Reaſon and Counſel of his own Infinite Underſtanding; Eph. 1. 11. Who works all things according to the Counſel of his own Will. The Motions of the Divine Will are not raſh, but follow the Propoſals of the Divine Mind: He chuſes that which is fitteſt to be done, ſo that all his Works are graceful, and all his Ways have a Comelineſs and Decorum in them.

Hence all his Ways are ſaid to be Judgment, Deut. 32. 4. not meer Will.

Hence it appears, that Wiſdom and Knowledge are two diſtinct Perfections. Knowledge hath its Seat in the Speculative Underſtanding, Wiſdom in the Practical. Wiſdom and Knowledge are evidently diſtinguiſh'd as two ſeveral Gifts of the Spirit in Man, 1 Cor. 12. 8. To one is given by the Spirit the Word of Wiſdom, to another the Word of Knowledge by the ſame Spirit. Knowledge is an underſtanding of general Rules, and Wiſdom is a drawing Concluſions from thoſe Rules in order to particular Caſes. A Man may have the Knowledge of the whole Scripture, and have all Learning in the Treaſury of his Memory, and yet be deſtitute of Skill to make uſe of them upon particular Occaſions, and unty thoſe knotty Queſtions which may be propoſed to him, by a ready Application of thoſe Rules.

Again, Knowledge and Wiſdom may be diſtinguiſh'd in our Conception, as Two diſtinct Perfections in God: The Knowledge of God is his Underſtanding of all things; his Wiſdom is the skillful reſolving and acting of all things. And the Apoſtle, in his Admiration of him, owns them as diſtinct, Oh the Depths of the Riches, both of the Wiſdom and Knowledge of God, Rom. 11. 33. Knowledge is the Foundation of Wiſdom, and antecedent to it; Wiſdom, the Superſtructure upon Knowledge: Men may have Knowledge without Wiſdom, but not Wiſdom without Knowledge; according to our common Proverb, The greateſt Clerks are not the wiſeſt Men. All Practical Knowledge is founded in Speculation, either Secundum rem, as in a Man; or Secundum rationem, as in God. They agree in this, that they are both Acts of the Underſtanding; but Knowledge is the Apprehenſion of a thing, and Wiſdom is the Appointing and Ordering of things. Wiſdom is the Splendour and Luſtre of Knowledge ſhining forth in Operations and is an Act both of Underſtanding and Will; Underſtanding in Counſelling ſelling and Contriving, Will in Reſolving and Executing: Counſel and Will are link'd together, Epheſ. 1. 11.

II. The ſecond thing is to lay down ſome Propoſitions in general, concerning the Wiſdom of God.

1. There is an Eſſential and a Perſonal Wiſdom of God. The Eſſential Wiſdom, is the Eſſence of God; the Perſonal Wiſdom, is the Son of God. Chriſt is called Wiſdom by himſelf, Luke 7. 35. The Wiſdom of God by the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 1. 24. The Wiſdom I ſpeak of belongs to the Nature of God, and is conſidered as a neceſſary Perfection. The perſonal Wiſdom is called ſo, becauſe he opens to us the Secrets of God. If the Son were that Wiſdom whereby the Father is wiſe, the Son would be alſo the Eſſence whereby the Father is God. If the Son were the Wiſdom of the Father, whereby he is Eſſentially wiſe; the Son would be the Eſſence of the Father, and the Father would have his Eſſence from the Son, ſince the VViſdom of God is the Eſſence of God; and ſo the Son would be the Father, if the VViſdom and Power of the Father were originally in the Son.

2. Therefore Secondly, The Wiſdom of God is the ſame with the Eſſence of God. VViſdom in God is not a Habit added to his Eſſence, as it is in Man, but it is his Eſſence. 'Tis like the Splendour of the Sun, the ſame with the Sun it ſelf; or like the brightneſs of Chryſtal, which is not communicated to it by any thing elſe, as the brightneſs of a Mountain is by the Beam of the Sun, but it is one with the Chryſtal it ſelf. 'Tis not a Habit ſuperadded to the Divine Eſſence; that would be repugnant to the ſimplicity of God, and ſpeak him compounded of divers Principles; it would be contrary to the Eternity of his Perfections: If he be Eternally wiſe, his Wiſdom is his Eſſence; for there is nothing Eternal, but the Eſſence of God. * As the Sun melts ſome things, and hardens others; blackens ſome things, and whitens others, and produceth contrary Qualities in different Subjects; yet it is but one and the ſame Quality in the Sun, which is the cauſe of thoſe contrary Operations: So the Perfections of God ſeem to be divers in our Conceptions, yet they are but one and the ſame in God. The VViſdom of God, is God acting Prudently; as the Power of God, is God acting Powerfully, and the Juſtice of God, is God acting Righteouſly: And therefore 'tis more truly ſaid, that God is Wiſdom, Juſtice, Truth, Power, than that he is Wiſe, Juſt, True, &c. as if he were compounded of Subſtance and Qualities. All the Operations of God proceed from one ſimple Eſſence; as all the Operations of the Mind of Man, though various, proceed from one Faculty of Underſtanding.

*Maimon. Mor. Part. 1 cap. 53.

3. Wiſdom is the Property of God alone. He is only Wiſe. 'Tis an Honour peculiar to him Upon the account that no Man deſerved the Title of Wiſe, but that it was a Royalty belonging to God *, Pythagoras would not be call'd Σοφὸς, a Title given to their Learned Men; but φιλόσοφος. The Name Philoſopher, aroſe out of a reſpect to this tranſcendent Perfection of God.

* Laert. lib. 1. Proem.

1. God is only Wiſe neceſſarily. As he is neceſſarily God, ſo he is neceſſarily VViſe; for the Notion of VViſdom is inſeparable from the Notion of a Deity. VVhen we ſay God is a Spirit, is True, Righteous, Wiſe; we underſtand that he is tranſcendently theſe by an intrinſick and abſolute neceſſity, by virtue of his own Eſſence, without the Efficiency of any other, or any Efficiency in and by himſelf. God doth not make himſelf VViſe, no more than he makes himſelf God. As he is a neceſſary Being in regard of his Life, ſo he is neceſſarily VViſe in regard of his Underſtanding. Syneſius ſaith, that God is Eſſentiated, ἐσπῆσθαι, by his Underſtanding. He places the Subſtance of God in Underſtanding and Wiſdom: Wiſdom is the firſt vital Operation of God. He can no more be Unwiſe than he can be untrue; for Folly in the Mind is much the ſame with Falſity in Speech. Wiſdom among Men is gained by Age and Experience, furthered by Inſtructions and Exerciſe; but the Wiſdom of God is his Nature, as the Sun cannot be without Light, while it remains a Sun; and as Eternity cannot be without Immortality; ſo neither can God be without Wiſdom. As he only hath Immortality, 1 Tim. 6. 16. not arbitrarily, but neceſſarily; ſo he only hath Wiſdom: Not becauſe he will be Wiſe, but becauſe he cannot but be Wiſe. He cannot but contrive Counſels, and exert Operations, becoming the Greatneſs and Majeſty of his Nature.

2. Therefore only VViſe originally. God is ἀυτοδίδακτος, ἀυτόσοφος. Men acquire Wiſdom by the loſs of their faireſt Years; but his VViſdom is the Perfection of the Divine Nature, not the birth of Study or the growth of Experience, but as neceſſary, as Eternal, as his Eſſence. He goes not out of himſelf to ſearch Wiſdom: He needs no more the Brains of Creatures in the Contrivance of his Purpoſes, than he doth their Arm in the Execution of them. He needs no Counſel, he receives no Counſel from any; Rom. 11. 34. VVho hath been his Counſellor? and Iſai. 40. 14. VVith whom took he counſel, and who inſtructed him, or taught him in the path of Judgment, and taught him Knowledge, and ſhewed to him the path of Underſtanding? He is the only Fountain of VViſdom to others; Angels and Men have what Wiſdom they have, by Communication from him. All created Wiſdom is a ſpark of the Divine Light, like that of the Stars borrowed from the Sun. He that borrows VViſdom from another, and doth not originally poſſeſs it in his own Nature, cannot properly be called VViſe. As God is the only Being, in regard that all other Beings are derived from him; ſo he is only VViſe, becauſe all other VViſdom flows from him. He is the Spring of VViſdom to all; none the Original of VViſdom to him.

3. Therefore only VViſe perfectly. There is no Cloud upon his Underſtanding. He hath a diſtinct and certain Knowledge of all things that can fall under Action. As he hath a perfect Knowledge without Ignorance, ſo he hath a Beautiful VViſdom without Mole or VVart. Men are wiſe, yet have not an Underſtanding ſo vaſt as to graſp all things; nor a Perſpicacity ſo clear, as to penetrate into the depths of all Beings. Angels have more delightful and lively Sparks of VViſdom, yet ſo imperfect, that in regard of the VViſdom of God they are charged with folly, Job 4. 18. Their VViſdom as well as their Holineſs is veiled in the Preſence of God. It vaniſheth, as the glowing of a Fire doth before the Beauty of the Sun; or as a Light of a Candle in the midſt of a Sunſhine contracts it ſelf, and none of its Rays are ſeen, but in the Body of the Flame. The Angels are not perfectly Wiſe, becauſe they are not perfectly Knowing: The Goſpel, the great Diſcovery of God's Wiſdom, was hid from them for Ages.

4. Therefore only VViſe univerſally. Wiſdom in one Man is of one ſort, in another of another ſort; one is a wiſe Tradeſman, another a wiſe Stateſman, and another a wiſe Philoſopher: One is wiſe in the Buſineſs of the VVorld, another is wiſe in Divine Concerns. One hath not ſo much of Plenty of one ſort, but he may have a Scantineſs in another; one may be wiſe for Invention, and fooliſh in Execution; an Artificer may have skill to frame an Engine, and not skill to uſe it: The Ground that is fit for Olives, may not be fit for Vines; that will bear one ſort of Grain and not another. But God hath an

an Univerſal VViſdom, becauſe his Nature is VViſe; 'tis not limited, but hovers over every thing, ſhines in every Being. His Executions are as wiſe as his Contrivances: He is Wiſe in his Reſolves, and wiſe in his Ways; wiſe in all the Varieties of his Works of Creation, Government, Redemption. As his Will wills all things, and his Power effects all things; ſo his Wiſdom is the univerſal Director of the Motions of his Will, and the Executions of his Power: As his Righteouſneſs is the meaſure of the matter of his Actions, ſo his Wiſdom is the Rule that directs the manner of his Actions. The abſolute Power of God is not an unruly Power: His VViſdom orders all things, ſo that nothing is done, but what is fit and convenient, and agreeable to ſo excellent a Being: As he cannot do an unjuſt thing becauſe of his Righteouſneſs, ſo he cannot do an unwiſe Act, becauſe of his infinite VViſdom. Though God be not neceſſitated to any Operation without himſelf, as to the Creation of any thing, yet ſuppoſing he will act, his VViſdom neceſſitates him to do that which is congruous, as his Rigteouſneſs neceſſitates him to do that which is juſt: So that though the will of God be the principle, yet his wiſdom is the rule of his Actions. VVe muſt in our conceiving of the order, ſuppoſe wiſdom antecedent to will: None that acknowledges a God, can have ſuch an impious thought, as to affix temerity and raſhneſs to any of his proceedings.

All his Decrees are drawn out of the infinite Treaſury of Wiſdom in himſelf. * He reſolves nothing about any of his Creatures without Reaſon; but the reaſon of his purpoſe is in himſelf, and ſprings from himſelf, and not from the Creatures: There is not one thing that he wills, but he wills by counſel, and works by counſel, Eph. 1. 11. Counſel writ down every line, every letter, in his eternal Book; and all the Orders are drawn out from thence by his wiſdom and will: What was Illuſtrious in the contrivance, glitters in the execution. His underſtanding and will are infinite; what is therefore the act of his will, is the reſult of his underſtanding, and therefore rational: His underſtanding and will joyn hands; there is no conteſt in God, Will againſt Mind, and Mind againſt Will; they are one in God, one in his reſolves, and one in all his works.

* Polhil. againſt Sherlock, p. 377.

5. Therefore he is only wiſe perpetually. As the wiſdom of man is got by ripeneſs of Age, ſo it is loſt by decay of years; 'tis got by inſtruction, and loſt by dotage. The perfecteſt minds, when in the wane, have been darkned with folly: Nebuchadnezzar that was wiſe for a man, became as fooliſh as a Brute. But the Ancient of days is an unchangeable Poſſeſſor of Prudence; his wiſdom is a mirror of brightneſs, without a defacing ſpot. It was poſſeſſed by him in the beginning of his ways, before his works of old, Prov. 8. 22. and he can never be diſpoſſeſſed of it in the end of his works. 'Tis inſeparable from him: The Being of his Godhead may as ſoon ceaſe, as the Beauty of his Mind; with him is wiſdom, Job 12. 13. it is inſeparable from him, therefore as durable as his Eſſence. 'Tis a wiſdom infinite, and therefore without increaſe or decreaſe in it ſelf. The experience of ſo many Ages in the Goverment of the World hath added nothing to the immenſity of it; as the ſhining of the Sun ſince the Creation of the World, hath added nothing to the light of that glorious Body. As ignorance never darkens his knowledge, ſo Folly never diſgraces his Prudence, God infatuates men, but neither Men nor Devils can infatuate God; he his unerringly wiſe; his Counſel doth not vary and flatter; 'tis not one day one Counſel, and another day another, but it ſtands like an immoveable Rock, or a Mountain of Braſs. The Counſel of the Lord ſtands for ever, and the thoughts of his heart to all Generations, Pſal. 33. 11.

6 He is only incomprehenſibly wiſe. His thoughts are deep, Pſal. 92. 5. His judgments unſearchable, his ways paſt finding out, Rom. 11. 33. Depths that cannot be fathomed. A ſplendor, more dazling to our dim minds, than the light of the Sun to our weak eyes. The wiſdom of one man may be comprehended by another, and over comprehended; and often men are underſtood by others to be wiſer in their Actions, than they underſtand themſelves to be. And the wiſdom of one Angel may be meaſured by another Angel of the ſame perfection. But as the Eſſence, ſo the wiſdom of God is incomprehenſible to any Creature; God is only comprehended by God: The ſecrets of wiſdom in God are double to the expreſſions of it in his works, Job 11. 6, 7. Canſt thou by ſearching find out God. There is an unfathomable depth in all his Decrees, in all his Works we cannot comprehend the reaſon of his Works, much leſs that of his Decrees, much leſs that in his Nature; becauſe his Wiſdom being infinite as well as his power can no more act to the higheſt pitch, than his Power. As his Power is not terminated by what he hath wrought, but he could give further teſtimonies of it; ſo neither is his wiſdom, but he could furniſh us with infinite expreſſions and pieces of his skill. As in regard of his Immenſity, he is not bounded by the limits of place; in regard of his Eternity, not meaſured by the minutes of Time; in regard of his Power, not terminated with this or that number of Objects; ſo in regard of his Wiſdom, he is not confin'd to this or that particular mode of working; ſo that in regard of the reaſon of his Actions, as well as the Glory and Majeſty of his Nature, he dwells in unapproachable light, 1 Tim. 6. 16. and whatſoever we underſtand of his wiſdom in Creation and Providence, is infinitely leſs than what is in himſelf, and his own unbounded Nature.

Many things in Scripture are declar'd chiefly to be the acts of the Divine will, yet we muſt not think that they were acts of meer will without wiſdom, but they are repreſented ſo to us, becauſe we are not capable of underſtanding the infinite Reaſon of its acts: His Soveraignty is more intelligible to us than his Wiſdom. We can better know the Commands of a Superiour, and the Laws of a Prince, than underſtand the reaſon that gave birth to thoſe Laws. We may know the Orders of the Divine will as they are publiſh'd, but not the ſublime Reaſon of his will. Though Election be an act of God's Soveraignty, and he hath no cauſe from without to determine him; yet his infinite wiſdom ſtood not ſilent while meer Dominion acted. Whatſoever God doth, he doth wiſely, as well as ſoveraignly; though that wiſdom which lies in the ſecret places of the Divine Being, be as incomprehenſible to us, as the effects of his Soveraignty and Power in the World are viſible: God can give a reaſon of his proceeding, and that drawn from himſelf, though we underſtand it not.

The cauſes of things viſible lie hid from us; Doth any man know how to diſtinguiſh the ſeminal vertue of a ſmall Seed from the Body of it, and in what nook and corner that lies, and what that is that ſpreads it ſelf in ſo fair a Plant, and ſo many Flowers? Can we comprehend the Juſtice of God's proceedings in the proſperity of the wicked, and the afflictions of the Godly? Yet as we muſt conclude them the fruits of an unerring righteouſneſs, ſo we muſt conclude all his actions the fruits of an unſpotted wiſdom, though the concatenation of all his counſels is not intelligible to us; for he is as eſſentially and neceſſarily wiſe, as he is eſſentially and neceſſarily good and righteous.

God

God is not only ſo wiſe that nothing more wiſe can be conceiv'd, but he is more wiſe than can be imagin'd; ſomething greater in all his Perfections than can be comprehend by any Creature. 'Tis a fooliſh thing therefore to queſtion that which we cannot comprehend: we ſhould adore inſtead of diſputing againſt it; and take it for granted, that God would not order any thing, were it not agreeable to the Soveraignty of his wiſdom, as well as that of his will. Though the reaſon of man proceed from the wiſdom of God, yet there is more difference between the reaſon of Man, and the wiſdom of God, than between the light of the Sun, and the feeble ſhining of the Gloe-worm; yet we preſume to cenſure the ways of God, as if our pur-blind reaſon had a reach above him.

7. God is only wiſe infallibly. The wiſeſt men meet with rubs in the way, that make them fall ſhort of what they aim at; they often deſign, and fail; then begin again, and yet all their counſels end in ſmoak and none of them arrive at perfection. If the wiſeſt Angels lay a plot, they may be diſappointed; for though they are higher and wiſer than Man, yet there is one higher and wiſer than they, that can check their Projects. God always compaſſeth his end, never fails of any thing he deſigns and aims at; all his undertakings are counſel and will; as nothing can reſiſt the efficacy of his will, ſo nothing can countermine the skill of his counſel; There is no wiſdom, nor underſtanding, nor counſel againſt the Lord, Prov. 21. 30. He compaſſeth his ends by thoſe actions of Men and Devils, wherein they think to croſs him; they ſhoot at their own mark, and hit his. Lucifer's plot by Divine wiſdom fullfilled God's purpoſe againſt Lucifer's mind. The counſel of Redemption by Chriſt, the end of the Creation of the World, rode into the World upon the back of the Serpent's Temptation. God never miſtakes the means, nor can there be any diſapointments, to make him vary his Counſels, and pitch upon other means than what before he had ordain'd. His word that goeth forth of his mouth ſhall not return to him void, but it ſhall accompliſh that which he pleaſes, and it ſhall proſper in the thing whereto he ſent it, Iſa. 55 11. What is ſaid of his word, is true of his Counſel, it ſhall proſper in the thing for which it is appointed; it cannot be defeated by all the Legions of Men and Devils; for as he thinks, ſo ſhall it come to paſs; and as he hath purpoſed, ſo ſhall it ſtand; The Lord hath purpoſed, and who ſhall diſannul it? Iſa. 14. 24. 27. The Wiſdom of the Creature is a drop from the Wiſdom of God, and is like a drop to the Ocean, and a ſhadow to the Sun; and therefore is not able to mate the Wiſdom of God, which is infinite and boundleſs. No Wiſdom is exempted from miſtakes, but the Divine: He is wiſe in all his Reſolves, and never calls back his words and purpoſes, Iſa. 31. 2.

III. The third General is to prove that God is Wiſe.

This is aſcrib'd to God in Scripture, Dan. 2. 20. Wiſdom and Might are his; Wiſdom to contrive, and Power to effect. * Where ſhould Wiſdom dwell, but in the Head of a Deity? And where ſhould Power triumph, but in the Arm of Omnipotency? All that God doth, he doth artificially, skilfully: Whence he is called the Builder of the Heavens, Heb. 11. 10. Τεχνίτης, an artificial and curious Builder, a Builder by Art. And that word, Prov. 8. 30. meant of Chriſt, Then I was by him, as one brought up with him; ſome render it, Then was I the curious Artificer; and the ſame word is tranſlated a cunning workman, Cant. 7. 5. For this cauſe Counſel is aſcrib'd to God *; not properly; for Counſel implies ſomething of Ignorance, or Irreſolution, antecedent to the Conſultation, and a poſture of will afterwards, which was not before. Counſel is properly a laborious deliberation, and a reaſoning of things: An invention of means for the attainment of the end, after a diſcuſſing and reaſoning of all the doubts which ariſe pro re natâ, about the matter in Counſel: But God hath no need to deliberate in himſelf, what are the beſt means to accompliſh his ends. He is never ignorant or undetermin'd, what courſe he ſhould take, as Men are before they conſult. But it is an expreſſion in condeſcention to our Capacity, to ſignifie that God doth nothing but with Reaſon and Underſtanding, with the higheſt Prudence, and for the moſt glorious ends, as Men do after conſultation, and the weighing of every foreſeen Circumſtance.

Though he acts all things Soveraignly by his Will, yet he acts all things wiſely by his Underſtanding; and there is not a decree of his will, but he can render a ſatisfactory reaſon for in the face of Men and Angels. As he is the cauſe of all things, ſo he hath the higheſt Wiſdom for the ordering of all things. If wiſdom among Men be the knowledge of Divine and Humane things, God muſt be infinitely wiſe, ſince knowledge is moſt radiant in him; he knows what Angels and Men do, and infinitely more; what is known by them obſcurely, is known by him clearly: What is known by Man after it is done, was known by God before it was wrought. By his wiſdom as much as by any thing, he infinitely differs from all his Creatures, as by wiſdom Man differs from a Brute. We cannot frame a Notion of God, without conceiving him infinitely wiſe. We ſhould render him very inconſiderable, to imagine him furniſh'd with an infinite knowledge, and not have an infinite wiſdom to make uſe of that knowledge; or to fancy him with a mighty power, deſtitute of prudence. Knowledge without prudence is an eye without motion; and power without diſcretion, is an arm without a head; a hand to act, without underſtanding to contrive and model; a ſtrength to act, without reaſon to know how to act: It would be a miſerable notion of a God, to fanſie him with a brutiſh and unguided power. The Heathens therefore had, and could not but have this Natural Notion of God. Plato therefore calls him Mens *, and Cleanthes uſed to call God Reaſon, and Socrates thought the Title of Σοφὸς too magnificent to be attributed to any thing elſe but God alone.

Arguments to prove that God is wiſe.

Reaſ. 1. God could not be infinitely perfect without wiſdom. A rational Nature is better than an irrational Nature. A Man is not a perfect Man without Reaſon; how can God without it, be an infinitely perfect God? Wiſdom is the moſt eminent of all Vertues; all the other Perfections of God without this, would be as a Body without an Eye, a Soul without Underſtanding. A Chriſtian's Graces want their luſtre, when they are deſtitute of the guidance of wiſdom: Mercy is a feebleneſs, and Juſtice a cruelty; Patience a timorouſneſs, and Courage a madneſs, without the conduct of wiſdom; ſo the Patience of God would be Cowardice, his Power an Oppreſſion, his Juſtice a Tyranny, without Wiſdom as the Spring, and Holineſs as the Rule. No Attribute of God could ſhine with a due luſtre and brightneſs without it. Power is a great perfection, but Wiſdom a greater *. Wiſdom may be without much power, as in Bees and Ants; but power is a tyrannical thing without wiſdom and righteouſneſs. The Pilot is more valuable becauſe of his skill, than the Gally-Slave becauſe of his ſtrength; and the conduct of a General more eſtimable than the might of a private Soldier. Generals are choſen more by their skill to guide, than their ſtrength to act; what a Clod is a Man without Prudence?

* Iſa. 46. 10. Jer. 32. 19. Great in Counſel, Job 12. 13. He hath counſel and underſtanding.

What a Nothing would God be without it? This is the Salt that gives relish to all other perfections in a Creature: This is the Jewel in the Ring of all the Excellencies of the Divine Nature, and Holiness is the splendor of that Jewel.

Now God being the first Being, possesses whatsoever is most noble in any Being. If therefore Wisdom, which is the most noble perfection in any Creature, were wanting in God, he would be deficient in that which is the highest Excellency. God being the living God, as he is frequently termed in Scripture, he hath therefore the most perfect manner of living, and that must be a pure and intellectual life: Being essentially living, he is essentially in the highest degree of living. As he hath an infinite life above all Creatures, so he hath an infinite intellectual life, and therefore an infinite wisdom; whence some have called God not sapientem, but super-sapientem *, not only wise, but above all wisdom.

* Suarez. Vol. 1. lib. 1 cap. 3. p. 10.

Reas. 2. Without infinite Wisdom he could not govern the World. Without wisdom in forming the Matter, which was made by Divine power, the world could have been no other than a Chaos; and without wisdom in Government, it could have been no other than a heap of Confusion; without wisdom the world could not have been created in the posture it is. Creation supposeth a determination of the will putting power upon acting; the determination of the will supposeth the counsel of the understanding, determining the will: No work, but supposeth understanding as well as will in a rational Agent. As without skill things could not be created, so without it things cannot be governed. Reason is a necessary perfection to him that presides over all things: Without knowledge there could not be in God a foundation for Government, and without wisdom there could not be an exercise of Government; and without the most excellent wisdom, he could not be the most excellent Governor. He could not be an universal Governour, without an universal wisdom, nor the sole Governor without an unimitable wisdom; nor an independent Governor without an original and independent wisdom; nor a perpetual Governor without an incorruptible wisdom. He would not be the Lord of the world in all points, without skill to order the affairs of it Power and wisdom are foundations of all Authority and Government: Wisdom to know how to Rule and Command; Power to make those Commands obeyed: No regular Order could issue out without the first, nor could any Order be enforced without the second. A feeble wisdom, and a brutish power, seldom or never produce any good effect. Magistracy without wisdom, would be a frantick power, a rash conduct; like a strong arm when the eye is out, it strikes it knows not what, and leads it knows not whither. Wisdom without power, would be like a great body without feet *, like the knowledge of a Pilot that hath lost his arm, who, though he knows the Rule of Navigation, and what Course to follow in his Voyage, yet cannot manage the Helm: But when those two, wisdom and power are link'd together, there ariseth from both a fitness for Government: There is wisdom to propose an end, and both wisdom and power to employ means that conduce to that end. And therefore when God demonstrates to Job his right of Government, and the unreasonableness of Job's quarrelling with his proceedings, he chiefly urgeth upon him the consideration of those two Excellencies of his Nature, power, and wisdom, which are express'd in his works *. A Prince without wisdom, is but a Title without a Capacity to perform the Office; no Man without it is fit for government: Nor could God without wisdom, exercise a just Dominion in the world.

* Amirant. moral.

* Chap. 38, 39, 40, 41.

He hath therefore the highest wisdom, since he is the universal Governor. That wisdom which is able to govern a Family, may not be able to govern a City; and that wisdom which governs a City, may not be able to govern a Nation or Kingdom, much less a World. The bounds of God's government being greater than any, his wisdom for government must needs surmount the wisdom of all.

* And though the Creatures be not in number actually infinite, yet they cannot be well governed, but by one endowed with infinite Discretion. Providential government can be no more without infinite wisdom, than infinite wisdom can be without Providence

* Amyrald. defert. Theol. p. 111.

Reas. 3. The Creatures working for an end, without their own knowledge, demonstrates the Wisdom of God that guides them. All things in the world work for some end; the ends are unknown to them, though many of their ends are visible to us. As there was some prime Cause, which by his power inspir'd them with their several instincts, so there must be some supream wisdom, which moves and guides them to their end. As their Being manifests his power that endowed them, so the acting according to the rules of their Nature, which they themselves understand not, manifests his wisdom in directing them. Every thing that acts for an end, must know that end, or be directed by another to attain that end. The Arrow doth not know who shoots it, or to what end it is shot, or what Mark is aimed at; but the Archer that puts it in, and darts it out of the Bow, knows. A Watch hath a regular motion, but neither the Spring nor the Wheels that move, know the end of their motion; no Man will judge a wisdom to be in the Watch, but in the Artificer that dispos'd the Wheels and Spring, by a joynt-combination to produce such a motion for such an end. Doth either the Sun that enlivens the Earth, or the Earth that travels with the Plant, know what Plant it produceth in such a Soil, what temper it should be of, what fruit it should bear, and of what colour? VVhat Plant knows its own Medicinal qualities, its own beautiful flowers, and for what use they are ordain'd? VVhen it strikes up its head from the Earth, doth it know what proportion of them there will be? Yet it produceth all these things in a state of ignorance. The Sun warms the Earth, concocts the humours, excites the vertue of it, and cherishes the Seeds, which are cast into her lap, yet all unknown to the Sun or the Earth. Since therefore that Nature, that is the immediate cause of those things, doth not understand its own quality, nor operation, nor the end of its action, that which thus directs them must be conceived to have an infinite wisdom. When things act by a Rule they know not, and move for an end they understand not, and yet work harmoniously together for one end, that all of them, we are sure, are ignorant of, it mounts up our minds to acknowledge the wisdom of that supream Cause, that hath rang'd all these inferior Causes in their order, and imprinted upon them the Laws of their motions, according to the Idea's in his own Mind, who orders the Rule by which they act, and the end for which they act, and directs every motion according to their several Natures, and therefore is possessed with infinite wisdom in his own Nature.

Reas. 4. God is the fountain of all Wisdom in the Creatures, and therefore is infinitely wise himself. As he hath a fulness of Being in himself, because the streams of Being are derived to other things from him; So he hath a fulness of wisdom, because he is the spring of wisdom to Angels and Men. That Being must be infinitely wise from whence all other wisdom derives its Original: For nothing can be in the Effect, which which is not eminently in the Cauſe; the Cauſe is always more perfect than the Effect: If therefore the Creatures are wiſe, the Creator muſt be much more wiſe. If the Creator were deſtitute of wiſdom, the Creature would be much more perfect than the Creator. If you conſider the wiſdom of the Spider in her Web, which is both her Houſe and Net; the artifice of the Bee in her Comb, which is both her Chamber and Granary; the proviſion of the Piſmire in her repoſitories for Corn; the wiſdom of the Creator is illuſtrated by them; whatſoever Excellency you ſee in any Creature, is an Image of ſome Excellency in God. The skill of the Artificer is viſible in the fruits of his Art; a workman tranſcribes his ſpirit in the work of his hands. But the wiſdom of rational Creatures, as Men, doth more illuſtrate it: All Arts among Men are the Rays of Divine Wiſdom ſhining upon them, and by a common gift of the Spirit enlightning their minds to curious Inventions, as Prov. 8. 12. I wiſdom find out the knowledge of witty inventions; that is, I give a faculty to Men to find them out; without my wiſdom, all things would be buried in darkneſs and ignorance: Whatſoever wiſdom there is in the world, it is but a ſhadow of the wiſdom of God, a ſmall Rivulet derived from him, a ſpark leaping out from Uncreated Wiſdom. Iſa. 54. 16. He created the Smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and makes the Inſtruments: The skill to uſe thoſe weapons in warlike Enterprizes is from him, I have created the waſter to deſtroy; 'Tis not meant of creating their Perſons, but communicating to them their Art; he ſpeaks it there to expel fear from the Church of all warlike preparations againſt them: He had given Men the skill to form and uſe weapons, and could as well ſtrip them of it, and defeat their purpoſes. The Art of Husbandry is a fruit of Divine Teaching, Iſa. 28. 24, 25. If thoſe lower kinds of knowledge, that are common to all Nations, and eaſily learn'd by all, are diſcoveries of Divine Wiſdom, much more the nobler Sciences, Intellectual and Political Wiſdom, Dan. 2. 21. He gives Wiſdom to the wiſe, and knowledge to them that know underſtanding; ſpeaking of the more abſtruſe parts of knowledge; The inſpiration of the Almighty gives Underſtanding, Job 32. 8. Hence the wiſdom which Solomon expreſs'd in the Harlots caſe, 1 Kings 3. 28. was in the Judgment of all Iſrael, the Wiſdom of God; that is, a fruit of Divine Wiſdom, a Beam communicated to him from God. Every Man's Soul is endowed more or leſs with thoſe noble qualities: The Soul of every Man exceeds that of a Brute; If the Streams be ſo excellent, the Fountain muſt be fuller and clearer. The firſt Spirit muſt infinitely more poſſeſs, what other Spirits derive from him by Creation; were the wiſdom of all the Angels in Heaven and Men on Earth collected in one Spirit, it muſt be infinitely leſs than what is in the Spring; for no Creature can be equal to the Creator. As the higheſt Creature already made, or that we can conceive may be made by Infinite Power, would be infinitely below God in the Notion of a Creature, ſo it would be infinitely below God in the Notion of Wiſe.

IV. The fourth Thing is, Wherein the Wiſdom of God appears.

It appears (1.) In Creation, (2.) In Government, (3.) In Redemption.

1. In Creation. As in a Muſical Inſtrument, there is firſt the skill of the workman in the frame; then the skill of the Muſician in ſtringing it proper for ſuch Muſical Notes as he will expreſs upon it; and after that the tempering of the Strings by various ſtops to a delightful Harmony: So is the wiſdom of God ſeen in framing the world, then in tuning it, and afterwards in the motion of the ſeveral Creatures. The Fabrick of the world is called the Wiſdom of God; 1 Cor. 1. 21. After that in the Wiſdom of God the world by Wiſdom knew not God; i. e. by the Creation the world knew not God; the framing Cauſe is there put for the Effect and the work framed: Becauſe the Divine Wiſdom ſtept forth in the Creatures to a publick appearance, as if it had preſented it ſelf in a viſible ſhape to Man, giving Inſtructions in and by the Creatures, to know and adore him. What we tranſlate, 1 Gen. 1. In the beginning God created the Heaven and the Earth, the Targum expreſſeth, In the Wiſdom God created the Heaven and the Earth. Both bear a ſtamp of this perfection on them: And when the Apoſtle tells the Romans, Rom. 1. 20. the inviſible things of God were clearly underſtood by the things that are made: The word he uſes is ποίημασι, not ἔργοις, this ſignifies a work of labour, but ποίημα, a work of skill, or a Poem. The whole Creation is a Poem, every Species a Stanza, and every individual Creature a Verſe in it. The Creation preſents us with a proſpect of the wiſdom of God, as a Poem doth the Reader with the wit and fancy of the Compoſer: By wiſdom he created the Earth, Prov. 3. 19. and ſtretched out the Heavens by diſcretion, Jer. 10. 12. There is not any thing ſo mean, ſo ſmall, but glitters with a beam of Divine Skill; and the conſideration of them would juſtly make every Man ſubſcribe to that of the Pſalmiſt, O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wiſdom haſt thou made them all, Pſal. 104. 24. All, the leaſt as well as the greateſt, and the meaneſt as well as the nobleſt; even thoſe Creatures which ſeem ugly and deformed to us, as Toads, &c. becauſe they fall ſhort of thoſe perfections which are the dowry of other Animals: In theſe there is a footſtep of Divine Wiſdom, ſince they were not produc'd by him at random, but determin'd to ſome particular end, and deſign'd to ſome uſefulneſs, as parts of the world in their ſeveral natures and ſtations. God could never have had a ſatisfaction in the review of his works, and pronounc'd them good or comely, as he did, Gen. 1. 31. had they not been agreeable to that Eternal Original Copy in his own mind: 'Tis ſaid he was refreſh'd, viz. with that review, Exod. 31. 17. which could not have been, if his piercing Eye had found any defect in any thing, which had ſprung out of his hand, or an unſuitableneſs to that end for which he created them. He ſeems to do as a Man that hath made a curious and polite work, with exact care to peer about every part and line, if he could perceive any imperfection in it, to rectifie the miſtake: But no defect was found by the infinitely wiſe God upon his ſecond Examination.

* Omne opus naturæ eſt opus intelligentiæ.

This Wiſdom of the Creation appears,

(1.) In the variety, (2.) In the beauty, (3.) The fitneſs of every Creature for its uſe, (4.) The ſubordination of one Creature to another, and the joynt concurrence of all to one common end.

1. In the Variety. Pſal. 104. 24. O Lord how manifold are thy Works! How great a variety is there of Animals and Plants, with a great variety of Forms, Shapes, Figurations, Colours, various Smells, Vertues and Qualities! and this variety is produced from one and the ſame Matter, as Beaſts and Plants from the Earth; Gen. 1. 11. 24. Let the Earth bring forth living Creatures; and the Earth brought forth Graſs, and the Herb yielding Seed after his kind: Such diverſity of Fowl and Fiſh from the Water; Gen 1. 20. Let the Waters bring forth abundantly the moving Creature that hath Life, and Fowl that may fly; ſuch a beautiful and active Variety from ſo dull a Matter as the Earth; ſo ſolid a Variety from ſo fluid a Matter as the Water; ſo noble a piece as the Body of Man, with ſuch variety of Members, fit to entertain a more excellent Soul as a Gueſt, from ſo mean a matter matter as the duſt of the ground, Gen. 2. 7. This Extraction of ſuch variety of Forms out of one ſingle and dull Matter, is the Chymiſtry of Divine Wiſdom: 'Tis a greater skill to frame noble Bodies of vile Matter, as varieties of precious Veſſels of Clay and Earth, than of a nobler Matter, as Gold and Silver.

Again, all thoſe Varieties propagate their kind in every particular and quality of their Nature, and uniformly bring forth exact Copies, according to the firſt pattern God made of the kind, Gen. 1 11, 12, 24. Conſider alſo how the ſame piece of Ground is garniſh'd with Plants and Flowers of ſeveral Virtues, Fruits, Colours, Scents, without our being able to perceive any variety in the Earth that breeds them, and not ſo great a difference in the Roots that bears them. Add to this, the Diverſities of Birds of different Colours, Shapes, Notes conſiſting of various part, Wings like Oars to cut the Air, and Tails as the Rudder of a Ship to guide their Motion.

How various alſo are the Endowments of the Creatures? Some have vegetation, and the power of growth; others have the addition of Senſe, and others the Excellency of Reaſon; ſomething wherein all agree, and ſomething wherein all differ; variety in unity, and unity in variety: The Wiſdom of the Workman had not been ſo conſpicuous, had there been only one degree of Goodneſs: The greateſt Skill is ſeen in the greateſt variety.

The comelineſs of the Body is viſible in the variety of Members, and their uſefulneſs to one another; what an inform thing had Man been, had he been all Ear, or all Eye? If God had made all the Stars to be Suns, it would have been a demonſtration of his Power, but perhaps leſs of his Wiſdom: No Creatures, with the Natures they now have, could have continued in being under ſo much heat: There was no leſs Wiſdom went to the frame of the leaſt, than to the greateſt Creature. It ſpeaks more Art in a Limner to paint a Landskip exactly, than to draw the Sun, though the Sun be a more glorious Body.

I might inſtance alſo in the different Characters and Features imprinted upon the Countenances of Men and Women, the differences of Voices and Statures, whereby they are diſtinguiſh'd from one another: Theſe are the Foundations of Order and of human Society and Adminiſtration of Juſtice; what confuſion would have been if a grown up Son could not be known from his Father, the Magiſtrate from the Subject, the Creditor from the Debtor, the Innocent from the Criminal? The Laws God hath given to Mankind, could not have been put in Execution: This variety ſpeaks the Wiſdom of God.

2. The wiſdom of the Creation appears in the Beauty, and Order, and Situation of the ſeveral Creatures. Eccleſ. 3. 11. He hath made every thing beautiful in his time. As their Being was a fruit of Divine Power, ſo their Order is a fruit of Divine Wiſdom All Creatures are as members in the great body of the world, proportion'd to one another, and contributing to the beauty of the whole; * ſo that if the particular forms of every thing, the union of all for the compoſition of the world, and the Laws which are eſtabliſhed in the Order of Nature for its conſervation, be conſidered, it would raviſh us with an admiration of God: All the Creatures are as ſo many Pictures or Statues, exactly fram'd by Line; Pſal. 19. 4. Their Line is gone through all the Earth; Their Line a meaſuring Line, or a Carpenter's Rule, whereby he proportions ſeveral pieces to be exactly link'd and coupled together. Their Line, that is their harmonious proportion, and the inſtruction from it is gone forth through all the Earth. Upon the account of this harmony, ſome of the ancient Heathens framed the Images of their Gods with muſical Inſtruments in their hands, ſignifying that God wrought all things in a due proportion *.

* Amyrant Moral. Vol. 1. p. 257.

The Heavens ſpeak this Wiſdom in their Order.

The Revolutions of the Sun and Moon determine the Seaſons of the Year, and make Day and Night in an orderly ſucceſſion. The Stars beautifie the Heavens, and influence the Earth, and keep their Courſes, Judges 5. 20. They keep their ſtations without interfering with one another; and tho they have roll'd about for ſo many Ages they obſerve their diſtinct Laws, and in the variety of their Motions have not diſturb'd one anothers Functions.

* The Sun is ſet as the heart in the midſt of this great body, to afford warmth to all: Had it been ſet lower, it had long ſince turned the Earth into flame and aſhes: Had it been placed higher, the Earth would have wanted the nouriſhment and refreſhment neceſſary for it. Too much nearneſs had ruin'd the Earth by parching heat, and too great a diſtance had deſtroyed the Earth by ſtarving it with cold.

The Sun hath alſo its appointed Motion; had it been fixed without motion, half of the Earth had been unprofitable; there had been perpetual darkneſs in a moiety of it; nothing had been produc'd for nouriſhment, and ſo it had been rendred uninhabitable: But now by this motion, it viſits all the Climates of the World, runs its Circuit, ſo that nothing is hid from the heat thereof, Pſal. 19. 6 It imparts its vertue to every Corner of the world in its daily and yearly viſits. Had it been fixed, the fruits of the Earth under it had been parch'd and deſtroy'd before their maturity; but all thoſe inconveniencies are provided againſt by the perpetual motion of the Sun.

This motion is orderly *; It makes its daily Courſe from Eaſt to Weſt, its yearly motion from North to South: It goes to the North, till it comes to the Point God hath ſet it, and then turns back to the South, and gains ſome point every day: It never riſeth nor ſets in the ſame place one day, where it did the day before. The World is never without its light: ſome ſee it Riſing the ſame moment we ſee its ſetting.

The Earth alſo ſpeaks the Divine Wiſdom; 'tis the Pavement of the World, as the Heaven is the the Ceiling of Fretwork. * Tis placed lowermoſt, as being the heavieſt body, and fit to receive the weightieſt Matter, and provided as an Habitation proper for thoſe Creatures, which derive the matter of their bodies from it and partake of its Earthly nature; and garniſht with other Creatures for the profit and pleaſure of man.

The Sea alſo ſpeaks the ſame divine Wiſdom. He ſtrengthened the Fountains of the Deep and gave the Sea a Decree, that it ſhould not paſs his Command, Prov. 8. 28, 29. He hath given it certain Bounds, that it ſhould not overflow the Earth, Job 28. 11. It contains it ſelf in the ſituation wherein God hath placed it and doth not tranſgreſs its bounds. What if ſome part of a Country, a little Spot; hath been overflowed by it, and groaned under its waves? Yet for the main, it retains the ſame Channels wherein it was at firſt lodged.

All Creatures are cloathed with an outward Beauty and endowed with an inward Harmony; there is an agreement in all parts of this great Body; every one is beautiful and orderly; but the beauty of the World reſults from all of them diſpos'd and linkt together.

3. This Wiſdom is ſeen in the fitneſs of every thing for its end, and the uſefulneſs of it. Divine Wiſdom is more illuſtrious in the fitneſs and uſefulneſs of this great variety, than in the Compoſure of their diſtinct parts: As the Artificers Skill is more eminent in fitting the Wheels, and ſetting them in order for their due motion, than in the external Fabrick of the Materials which compoſe the Clock.

After the moſt diligent inſpection, there can be found nothing in the Creation unprofitable; nothing but is capable of ſome Service, either for the ſupport of our Bodies, recreation of our Senſes, or Moral Inſtruction of our Minds. Not the leaſt Creature but is formed and ſhap'd and furniſh'd with Members and Parts, in a due proportion for its end and ſervice in the World; nothing is ſuperfluous, nothing defective.

* Amyrant. ſur diverſes Text. p. 127.

The Earth is fitted in its parts*; the Valleys are appointed for Granaries, the Mountains to ſhadow them from the ſcorching heat of the Sun; the Rivers like veins, carry refreſhment to every Member of this Body; Plants and Trees thrive on the face of the Earth, and Metals are ingendred in the Bowels of it, for Materials for Building and other uſes for the ſervice of Man There he cauſes the Graſs to grow for the Cattle, and Herb for the Service of Man, that he may bring forth food out of the Earth, Pſal. 104. 14.

The Sea is fitted for uſe; 'tis a Fiſh-pond for the nouriſhment of Man; a Boundary for the dividing of Lands and ſeveral Dominions; It joyns together Nations far diſtant. A great Veſſel for Commerce, Pſal. 104. 26. There go the Ships. It affords Vapours to the Clouds, wherewith to water the Earth, which the Sun draws up, ſeparating the finer from the ſalter parts, that the Earth may be fruitful, without being burthened with barrenneſs by the ſalt. The Sea hath alſo its Salt, its ebbs and flouds; the one as Brine, the other as Motion, to preſerve it from Putrefication, that it may not be Contagious to the reſt of the World.

Showers are appointed to refreſh the bodies of living Creatures, to open the Womb of the Earth, and water the Ground to make it fruitful, Pſal. 104. 3. The Clouds therefore are called the Chariots of God; he rides in them in the manifeſtation of his goodneſs and Wiſdom.

* Leſſins. * Winds are fitted to purifie the Air, to preſerve it from Putrefaction; to carry the Clouds to ſeveral parts to refreſh the parched Earth, and aſſiſt her Fruits: And alſo to ſerve for the Commerce of one Nation with another by Navigation. God in his Wiſdom and Goodneſs walks upon the wings of the wind, Pſal. 104. 3.

* Daille melan. part. 2. p. 472. 473. * Rivers are appointed to bathe the Ground, and render it freſh and lively; they fortifie Cities, are the limits of Countrys, ſerve for Commerce, they are the Watring-pots of the Earth, and the Veſſels for Drink for the living Creatures that dwell upon the Earth, God cut thoſe Channels for the wild Aſſes, the Beaſts of the Deſarts, which are his Creatures as well as the reſt, Pſal. 104. 10. 12, 13.

Trees are appointed for the Habitation of Birds, ſhadows for the Earth, Nouriſhment for the Creatures, Materials for building, and Fuel for the relief of Man againſt Cold.

The Seaſons of the Year have their uſe; the Winter makes the Juice retire into the Earth, fortifies Plants, and fixes their Roots: It moiſtens the Earth that was dried before by the heat of the Summer, and cleanſeth and prepares it for a new fruitfulneſs. The Spring calls out the Sap in new Leaves and Fruit: The Summer conſumes the ſuperfluous moiſture, and produceth Nouriſhment for the Inhabitants of the World.

* The Day and Night have alſo their uſefulneſs: The Day gives Life to Labour, and is a guide to Motion and Action. Pſal. 104. 23. The Sun ariſeth, Man goeth forth to his labour untill the Evening. It warms the Air, and quickens Nature; without Day the World would be a Chaos, an unſeen Beauty. The Night indeed caſts a Veil upon the bravery of the Earth, but it draws the Curtains from that of Heaven; though it darkens below, it makes us ſee the Beauty of the World above, and diſcovers to us a glorious part of the Creation of God, the Tapiſtry of Heaven, and the Motion of the Stars, hid from us by the eminent light of the Day. It procures a Truce from Labour, and refreſheth the Bodies of Creatures, by recruiting the Spirits which are ſcattered by watching. It prevents the ruin of Life, by a reparation of what was waſted in the Day. It takes from us the ſight of Flowers and Plants, but it waſheth their Face with Dews for a new Appearance next Morning. The length of the Day and Night, is not without a Mark of Wiſdom; were they of a greater length, as the length of a Week or Month, the one would too much dry, and the other too much moiſten; and for want of Action, the Members would be ſtupified. The perpetual Succeſſion of Day and Night, is an Evidence of the Divine Wiſdom, in tempering the travel and reſt of Creatures. Hence the Pſalmiſt tells us, Pſal. 74. 16, 17. The day is thine, and the night is thine; thou haſt prepared the light of the ſun, and made ſummer and winter; i. e. they are of God's framing, not without a wiſe counſel and end. * Daille melang. part. 1. p. 774. &c.

Hence let us aſcend to the Bodies of living Creatures, and we ſhall find every member fitted for uſe. What a curioſity is there in every Member? Every one fitted to a particular uſe in their ſituation, form, temper, and mutual agreement for the good of the whole: The Eye to direct, the Ear to receive directions from others, the Hands to act, the Feet to move. Every Creature hath members fitted for that Element wherein it reſides: And in the Body, ſome parts are appointed to change the Food into Blood, others to refine it, and others to diſtribute and convey it to ſeveral parts for the maintenance of the whole: The Heart to mint vital Spirits for preſerving Life, and the Brain to coin animal Spirits for Life and Motion; the Lungs to ſerve for the cooling the Heart, which elſe would be parcht as the Ground in Summer. The Motion of the Members of the Body by one act of the Will, and alſo without the Will by a natural Inſtinct, is an admirable Evidence of Divine Skill in the Structure of the Body; ſo that well might the Pſalmiſt cry out, Pſal. 139. 14. I am fearfully and wonderfully made.

But how much more of this Divine Perfection is ſeen in the Soul? A Nature furniſh'd with a Faculty of Underſtanding to judge of things, to gather in things that are diſtant, and to reaſon and draw Concluſions from one thing to another, with a Memory to treaſure up things that are paſt, with a Will to apply it ſelf ſo readily to what the mind judges fit and comely, and fly ſo ſpeedily from what it judges ill and hurtful. The whole World is a Stage, every Creature in it hath a part to act, and a Nature ſuted to that part and end 'tis deſign'd for; and all concur in a joint Language to publiſh the Glory of Divine Wiſdom, they have a Voice to proclaim the Glory of God, Pſal. 19. 1. 3. And it is not the leaſt part of God's Skill, in framing the Creatures ſo, that upon Man's Obedience, they are the Channels of his Goodneſs; and upon Man's Diſobedience, they can in their Natures be the Miniſters of his Juſtice for the puniſhing of offending Creatures.

4. Fourthly, The Wiſdom is apparent in the linking all theſe uſeful parts together, ſo that one is ſubordinate

to the other for a common end. All parts are exactly ſuted to one another, and every part to the whole, though they are of different Natures, as Lines diſtant in themſelves, yet they meet in one common Center, the good and the preſervation of the Univerſe; they are all joined togerher, as the word
* Heb. 11. 3. tranſlated framed * ſignifies; knit by fit Bands and Ligaments to contribute mutual Beauty, Strength and Aſſiſtance to one another; like ſo many Links of a Chain coupled together, that though there be a diſtance in place, there is a unity in regard of connexion and end, there is a conſent in the whole. Hoſea 2. 21, 22. The Heavens hear the Earth, and the Earth hears the Corn, and the Wine, and the Oyl. The Heavens communicate their Qualities to the Earth, and the Earth conveys them to the Fruits ſhe bears:
* Daille. 15. Serm. p. 170. * The Air diſtributes Light, Wind, and Rain to the Earth; the Earth and the Sea render to the Air Exhalations and Vapours, and all together charitably give to the Plants and Animals, that which is neceſſary for their Nouriſhment and Refreſhment. The Influences of the Heavens animate the Earth, and the Earth affords matter in part for the Influences it receives from the Regions above. Living Creatures are maintain'd by Nouriſhment; Nouriſhment is conveyed to them by the Fruits of the Earth; the Fruits of the Earth are produced by means of rain and heat; matter for Rain and Dew is raiſed by the heat of the Sun; and the Sun by its motion diſtributes heat, and quickning virtue to all parts of the Earth. So Colours are made for the pleaſure of the Eye, Sounds for the delight of the Ear: Light is formed, whereby the Eye may ſee the one, and Air to convey the Species of Colours to the Eye, and Sound to the Ear; all things are like the Wheels of a Watch compacted: And though many of the Creatures be endowed with contrary Qualities, yet they are joined in a Marriage-knot for the publick Security, and Subſerviency to the Preſervation and Order of the Univerſe: As the variety of Strings upon an Inſtrument, ſending forth various and diſtinct Sounds, are temper'd together, for the framing excellent and delightful Airs. In this univerſal conſpiring of the Creatures together to one end, is the Wiſdom of the Creator apparent; in tuning ſo many Contraries as the Elements are, and preſerving them in their Order, which if once broken, the whole Frame of Nature would crack, and fall in pieces; all are ſo interwoven and inlaid together, by the Divine Workmanſhip, as to make up one intire Beauty in the whole Fabrick: As every part in the Body of Man hath a diſtinct Comelineſs, yet there is beſides, the Beauty of the whole, that reſults from the union of divers parts exactly faſhioned to one another, and linkt together.

By the way,

Uſe. How much may we ſee of the Perfection of God in every thing that preſents it ſelf to our Eyes? And how ſhould we be convinc'd of our unworthy neglect of aſcending to him with reverent and admiring thoughts, upon the proſpect of the Creatures? What dull Scholars are we, when every Creature is our Teacher, every part of the Creature a lively Inſtruction! Thoſe things that we tread under our Feet, if uſed by us according to the full Deſign of their Creation, would afford rich matter, not only for our Heads, but our Hearts. As Grace doth not deſtroy Nature, but elevate it, ſo neither ſhould the freſher and fuller Diſcoveries of Divine Wiſdom in Redemption, deface our thoughts of his Wiſdom in Creation. Though the greater Light of the Sun, obſcures the leſſer ſparkling of the Stars, yet it gives way in the Night to the diſcovery of them, that God may be ſeen, known, and conſidered, in all his Works of Wonder, and Miracles of Nature. No part of Scripture is more ſpiritual than the Pſalms; none filled with clearer Diſcoveries of Chriſt in the Old Teſtament; yet how often do the Pen-men conſider the Creation of God, and find their Meditations on him to be ſweet, as conſider'd in his Works? Pſal. 104. 34. My meditation of him ſhall be ſweet. When? why, after a ſhort Hiſtory of the Goodneſs and Wiſdom of God in the Frame of the World, and the Species of the Creatures.

2. The Wiſdom of God appears in his Government of his Creatures. The regular Motion of the Creatures ſpeaks for this Perfection, as well as the exact Compoſition of them. If the exquiſiteneſs of the Frame conducts us to the Skill of the Contriver; the exactneſs of their Order, according to his Will and Law, ſpeaks no leſs the Wiſdom of the Governour. It cannot be thought that a raſh and irrational Power preſides over a World ſo well diſpoſed: The diſpoſition of things hath no leſs Characters of Skill, than the Creation of them. No Man can hear an excellent Leſſon upon a Lute, but muſt preſently reflect upon the Art of the Perſon that touches it. The Prudence of Man appears in wrapping up the Concerns of a Kingdom in his Mind, for the well-ordering of it; and ſhall not the Wiſdom of God ſhine forth, as he is the Director of the World?

I ſhall omit his Government of Inanimate Creatures, and confine the Diſcourſe to his Government of Man, as Rational, as Sinful, as Reſtor'd.

1. In his Government of Man as a Rational Creature.

1. In the Law he gives to Man. Wiſdom framed it, though Will enacted it. The will of God is the Rule of Righteouſneſs to us, but the wiſdom of God is the Foundation of that Rule of Righteouſneſs which he preſcribes us. * The Compoſure of a Muſician is the Rule of ſinging to his Scholars; yet the Conſent and Harmony in that Compoſure, derives not it ſelf from his Will, but from his Underſtanding; he would not be a Muſician, if his Compoſures were contrary to the Rules of true Harmony: So the Laws of Men are compos'd by Wiſdom though they are enforc'd by Will and Authority.
* Caſtellio Dialog. l. 4. p. 46.

The Moral Law, which was the Law of Nature, the Law imprinted upon Adam, is ſo framed, as to ſecure the Rights of God, as Supream, and the Rights of Men in their diſtinctions of Superiority and Equality: 'Tis therefore called holy and good, Rom. 7. 12. holy, as it preſcribes our Duty to God in his Worſhip; good, as it regulates the Offices of human Life, and preſerves the common Intereſt of Mankind.

1. 'Tis ſuited to the Nature of Man. As God hath given a Law of Nature, a fixed order to Inanimate Creatures, ſo he hath given a Law of Reaſon to Rational Creatures: Other Creatures are not capable of a Law differencing Good and Evil, becauſe they are deſtitute of Faculties and Capacities to make diſtinction between them. It had not been agreeable to the wiſdom of God to propoſe any Moral Law to them, who had neither Underſtanding to diſcern, nor Will to chuſe. 'Tis therefore to be obſerved, that whilſt Chriſt exhorted others to the embracing his Doctrine, yet he exhorted not little Children, though he took them in his Arms, becauſe though they had Faculties, yet they were not come to ſuch a Maturity, as to be capable of a Rational Inſtruction. But there was a neceſſity for ſome Command for the Government of Man; ſince God hath made him a rational Creature, it was not agreeable to his Wiſdom to govern him as a Brute, but as a Rational Creature, capable of knowing his Precepts, and voluntarily walking in them; and without a Law, he had not been capable of any exerciſe of his Reaſon in Services reſpecting God.

He therefore gives him a Law, with a Covenant annex'd to it, whereby man is obliged to Obedience, and ſecured of a Reward. This was enforced with ſevere Penalties, Death, with all the Horrors attending it, to derer him from Tranſgreſſion, Gen. 2. 17. wherein is implied a Promiſe of continuance of Life, and all its Felicities, to allure him to a mindfulneſs of his Obligation. So perfect a Hedge did Divine Wiſdom ſet about him to keep him within the bounds of that Obedience, which was both his Debt and Security, that whereſoever he looked, he ſaw either ſomething to invite him, or ſomething to drive him to the payment of his Duty, and perſeverance in it. Thus the Law was exactly framed to the Nature of Man; Man had twiſted in him a deſire of Happineſs, the Promiſe was ſuited to cheriſh this Natural Deſire. He had alſo the Paſſion of Fear; the proper Object of this was any thing deſtructive to his Being, Nature, and Felicity; this the Threatning met with. In the whole it was accommodated to man as rational: Precepts to the Law in his mind, Promiſes to the Natural Appetite, Threatnings to the moſt prevailing Affection, and to the implanted Deſires of preſerving both his Being and Happineſs in that Being. Theſe were rational Motives fitted to the Nature of Adam, which was above the life God had given Plants, and the ſenſe he had given Animals.

The Command given Man in Innocence, was ſuited to his ſtrength and power; God gave him not any Command, but what he had ability to obſerve: And ſince we want not power to forbear an Apple in our corrupted and impotent State, he wanted not ſtrength in his ſtate of Integrity. The wiſdom of God commanded nothing, but what was very eaſie to be obſerved by him, and inferior to his natural Ability. It had been both unjuſt and unwiſe to have commanded him to fly up to the Sun, when he had not wings; or ſtop the Courſe of the Sea, when he had not ſtrength.

2. 'Tis ſuited to the happineſs and benefit of man. God's Laws are not an act of meer Authority reſpecting his own Glory, but of wiſdom and goodneſs reſpecting man's Benefit. They are perfective of man's Nature, conferring a wiſdom upon him, rejoycing his heart, enlightning his eyes, Pſal. 19. 7, 8. affording him both a knowledge of God, and of himſelf. To be without a Law, is for Man to be as Beaſts, without Juſtice, and without Religion: Other things are for the good of the Body, but the Laws of God for the good of the Soul: The more perfect the Law, the greater the benefit. The Laws given to the Jews were the honour and excellency of that Nation; Deut. 1. 8. What Nation is there ſo great, that hath Statutes and Judgments ſo righteous? They were made Stateſmen in the Judicial Law, Eccleſiaſticks in the Ceremonial, honeſt Men in the Second Table, and Divine in the Firſt. All his Laws are ſuited to the true ſatisfaction of Man, and the good of Human Society. Had God framed a Law only for one Nation, there would have been the Characters of a particular wiſdom; but now an univerſal wiſdom appears, in accommodating his Law, not only to this or that particular Society or Corporation of Men, but to the benefit of all Mankind in the variety of Climates, and Countries wherein they live: Every thing that is diſturbing to Human Society is provided againſt; nothing is enjoyn'd, but what is ſweet, rational, and uſeful: It orders us not to attempt any thing againſt the life of our Neighbour, the honour of his Bed, propriety in his Goods, and the clearneſs of his Reputation; and if well obſerved, would alter the face of the world, and make it look with another hue. The world would be alter'd from a brutiſh to a human world: It would change Lions and Wolves, Men of Lion-like and Wolviſh diſpoſition, into reaſon and ſweetneſs. And becauſe the whole Law is ſum'd up in love, it obligeth us to endeavour the preſervation of one anothers Beings, the favouring of one anothers Intereſts, and increaſing the Goods, as much as Juſtice will permit, and keeping up one anothers Credits; becauſe love, which is the Soul of the Law, is not ſhewn by a ceſſation from action, but ſignifies an order upon all occaſions in doing good. I ſay, were this Law well obſerved, the world would be another thing than it is. It would become a Religious Fraternity, the Voice of Enmity, and the Noiſe of Groans and Curſings would not be heard in our Streets: Peace would be in all our Borders, plenty of Charity in the midſt of Cities and Countries; Joy and ſinging would ſound in all Habitations. Man's advantage was deſign'd in God's Laws, and doth naturally reſult from the obſervance of them. God ſo ordered them by his Wiſdom, that the Obedience of Man ſhould draw forth his Goodneſs, and prevent thoſe ſmarting Judgments, which were neceſſary to reduce the Creature to order, that would not voluntarily continue in the order God had appointed. The Laws of Men are often unjuſt, oppreſſive, cruel; ſometimes againſt the Law of Nature: But an univerſal wiſdom and righteouſneſs glitters in the Divine Law: There is nothing in it, but what is worthy of God, and uſeful for the Creature; ſo that we may well ſay with Job, Who teaches like God, Job 36. 22. or as ſome render it, who is a Law-giver like God? Who can ſay to him, thou haſt wrought iniquity or folly among Men? His Precepts were framed for the preſervation of Man in that rectitude wherein he was created, in that likeneſs to God wherein he was firſt made, that there might be a correſpondence between the Integrity of the Creature and the Goodneſs of his Creator, by the Obedience of Man; that Man might exerciſe his Faculties in Operations worthy of him, and beneficial to the world.

3. The Wiſdom of God is ſeen in ſuiting his Laws to the Conſciences, as well as the Intereſt of all Mankind. Rom. 2. 14. The Gentiles do by nature the things contained in the Law; ſo great an affinity there is between the wiſe Law and the Reaſon of Man.

There is a Natural Beauty emerging from them, and darting upon the Reaſons and Conſciences of Men, which dictates to them that this Law is worthy to be obſerved in it ſelf. The two main Principles of the Law, The Love and Worſhip of God, and doing as we would be done by, have an indeliable impreſſion in the Conſciences of all Men in regard of the Principle; though they are not ſuitably expreſs'd in the Practice. Were there no Law outwardly publiſh'd, yet every man's Conſcience would dictate to him, that God was to be acknowledged, worſhipped, loved, as naturally as his Reaſon would acquaint him that there was ſuch a Being as God. This ſuitableneſs of them to the Conſciences of Men, is manifeſt, in that the Laws of the beſt governed Nations among the Heathen have had an agreement with them. Nothing can be more exactly compoſed, according to the Rules of right and exact Reaſon than this; no Man but approves of ſomething in it, yea, of the whole when he exerciſeth that dim Reaſon which he hath. Suppoſe any Man, (not an abſolute Atheiſt) he cannot but acknowledge the reaſonableneſs of worſhipping God. Grant him to be a Spirit, and it will preſently appear abſurd to repreſent him by any Corporeal Image, and derogate from his Excellency by ſo mean a reſemblance; with the ſame eaſineſs he will grant a reverence due to the Name of God; that we muſt not ſerve our turn of him, by calling him to witneſs to a lye in a Solemn Oath. That as Worſhip is due due to him, ſo ſome ſtated time is a Circumſtance neceſſary to the performance of that Worſhip. And as to the Second Table, will any Man in his right Reaſon quarrel with that Command that engageth his Inferiors to honour him; that ſecures his Being from a violent Murder, and his Goods from unjuſt Rapine? And though by the fury of his Luſts he break the Laws of Wedlock himſelf, yet he cannot but approve of that Law, as it prohibits every Man from doing him the like injury and diſgrace. The ſuitableneſs of the Law to the Conſciences of Men, is further evidenced by thoſe furious reflections, and ſtrong alarms of Conſcience upon a tranſgreſſion of it, and that in all Parts of the World, more or leſs in all Men: So exactly hath Divine Wiſdom fitted the Law to the Reaſon and Conſciences of Men, as one Tally to another. Indeed, without ſuch an Agreement, no man's Conſcience could have any ground for a Hue and Cry, nor need any Man be ſtartled with the Records of it. This manifeſts the wiſdom of God in framing his Law ſo, that the Reaſons and Conſciences of all Men do one time or other ſubſcribe to it. What Governour in the world is able to make any Law diſtinct from this revealed by God, that ſhall reach all Places, all Perſons, all Hearts?

We may add to this the extent of his Commands in ordering goodneſs at the root, not only in action but affection; not only in the motion of the Members, but the diſpoſition of the Soul; which ſuiting a Law to the inward frame of man, is quite out of the compaſs of the wiſdom of any Creature.

4. His Wiſdom is ſeen in the encouragements he gives for the ſtudying and obſerving his will, Pſal. 19. 11. In keeping the Commandments there is great reward. The variety of them; there is not any particular Genius in man, but may find ſomething ſuitable to win upon him in the revealed will of God. There is a ſtrain of Reaſon to ſatisfie the Rational; of Eloquence, to gratifie the Fanciful; of Intereſt, to allure the Selfiſh; of Terror, to ſtartle the Obſtinate. As a ſkilful Angler ſtores himſelf with Baits, according to the Appetites of the ſorts of Fiſh he intends to catch; ſo in the Word of God, there are varieties of Baits, according to the varieties of the Inclinations of men; Threatnings to work upon Fear; Promiſes to work upon Love; Examples of holy men ſet out for Imitation; and thoſe plainly, neither his Threatnings nor his Promiſes are dark as the Heathen Oracles; but peremptory, as becomes a Soveraign Law-giver; and plain, as was neceſſary for the underſtanding of a Creature: As he deals graciouſly with men in exhorting and encouraging them; ſo he deals wiſely herein, by taking away all Excuſe from them if they ruin the intereſt of their Souls by denying Obedience to their Soveraign.

Again, the Rewards God propoſeth are accommodated, not to the Bruti ſh parts of man, his Carnal Senſe and Fleſhly Appetite; but to the Capacity of a Spiritual Soul, which admits only of Spiritual Gratifications; and cannot in its own Nature, without a ſordid ſubjection to the Humours of the Body, be moved by Senſual Propoſals. God backs his Precepts with that which the Nature of Man longed for, and with Spiritual Delights, which can only ſatisfie a rational Appetite: And thereby did as well gratifie the nobleſt Deſires in man, as oblige him to the nobleſt Service and Work *. Indeed Vertue and Holineſs being perfectly amiable, ought chiefly to affect our Underſtandings, and by them draw our Wills to the eſteem and purſuit of them. But ſince the deſire of Happineſs is inſeparable from the Nature of Man, as impoſſible to be diſ-joyn'd, as an Inclination to deſcend to be ſevered from heavy Bodies, or an inſtinct to aſcend from light and airy Subſtances; God ſerves himſelf of the Inclinations of our Natures to Happineſs, to ingender in us an eſteem and affection to the Holineſs he doth require. He propoſeth the enjoyment of a ſupernatural Good, and everlaſting Glory, as a Bait to that inſatiable longing our Natures have for Happineſs, to receive the impreſſion of Holineſs into our Souls. And beſides, he proportions Rewards according to the degrees of mens Induſtry, Labour, and Zeal for him; and weighs out a Recompence, not only ſuited to, but above the Service. He that improves five Talents, is to be Ruler over five Cities; that is, a greater proportion of Honour and Glory than another, Luke 19. 17, 18. As a wiſe Father excites the affection of his Children to things worthy of Praiſe, by varieties of Recompences according to their ſeveral Actions. It was the wiſdom of the Steward, in the Judgment of our Saviour, to give every one the portion that belonged to him, Luke 12. 42. There is no part of the Word wherein we meet not with the will and wiſdom of God, varieties of Duties, and varieties of Encouragement mingled together.

* Amyrant.

5. The Wiſdom of God is ſeen In fitting the Revelations of his will to after-times, and for the preventing of the fore-ſeen Corruptions of men. The whole Revelation of the mind of God is ſtored with wiſdom in the words, connexion, ſenſe; it looks backwards to paſt, and forwards to Ages to come: A hidden wiſdom lies in the bowels of it, like Gold in a Mine.

The Old Teſtament was ſo compoſed, as to fortifie the New, when God ſhould bring it to light. The Foundations of the Goſpel were laid in the Law: The Predictions of the Prophets, and Figures of the Law were ſo wiſely framed, and laid down in ſuch clear expreſſions, as to be Proofs of the Authority of the New Teſtament, and Convictions of Jeſus his being the Meſſiah, Luke 24. 14. Things concerning Chriſt were written in Moſes, the Prophets, and Pſalms, and do to this day ſtare the Jews ſo in the face, that they are fain to invent abſurd and nonſenſical Interpretations to excuſe their Unbelief, and continue themſelves in their obſtinate Blindneſs. And in purſuance of the efficacy of thoſe Predictions, it was a part of the wiſdom of God to bring forth the Tranſlation of the Old Teſtament, (by the means of Ptolomy King of Egypt, ſome hundreds of Years before the coming of Chriſt) into the Greek Language, the Tongue the moſt known in the world; And why? To prepare the Gentiles, by the reading of it, for that gracious Call he intended them, and for the entertainment of the Goſpel, which ſome few Years after was to be publiſh'd among them; that by reading the Predictions ſo long before made, they might more readily receive the accompliſhment of them in their due time.

The Scripture is written in ſuch a manner, as to obviate Errors foreſeen by God to enter into the Church: It may be wondred, why the Univerſal Particle ſhould be inſerted by Chriſt, in the giving the Cup in the Supper, which was not in the diſtributing the Bread, Mat. 26. 27. Drink ye all of it; Not at the diſtributing the Bread, Eat you all of it: And Mark in his Relation tells us, They all drank of it, Mark 11. 23. The Church of Rome hath been the occaſion of diſcovering to us the wiſdom of our Saviour in inſerting that Particle all, ſince they were ſo bold to exclude the Communicants from the Cup by a trick of Concomitancy. Chriſt foreſaw the Error, and therefore put in a little word to obviate a great Invaſion: And the Spirit of God hath particularly left upon Record that Particle, as we may reaſonably ſuppoſe to ſuch a purpoſe. And ſo in the deſcription of the Bleſſed Virgin, Luke 1. 27.

There

There is nothing of her Holineſs mentioned, which is with much diligence recorded of Elizabeth; Verſe 6. Righteous, walking in all the Commandments of God blameleſs; Probably to prevent the Superſtition which God foreſaw would ariſe in the world. And we do not find more undervaluing ſpeeches, uttered by Chriſt to any of his Diſciples in the exerciſe of his Office, than to her, except to Peter. As when ſhe acquainted him with the want of Wine at the Marriage in Cana, ſhe receives a ſlighting Anſwer, Woman, what have I to do with thee? John 2.4. And when one was admiring the bleſſedneſs of her that bare him, he turns the Diſcourſe another way, to pronounce a bleſſedneſs rather belonging to them that hear the Word of God and keep it, Luke 11.27, 28. in a mighty wiſdom to Antidote his People againſt any conceit of the prevalency of the Virgin over him in Heaven, in the Exerciſe of his Mediatory Office.

2. As his Wiſdom appears in his Government by his Laws, ſo it appears in the various Inclinations and Conditions of Men. As there is a diſtinction of ſeveral Creatures, and ſeveral Qualities in them, for the common good of the World; ſo among Men there are ſeveral Inclinations and ſeveral Abilities, as Donatives from God, for the common advantage of human Society; as ſeveral Chanels cut out from the ſame River run ſeveral Ways, and refreſh ſeveral Soils; one Man is qualified for one Employment, another marked out by God for a different Work, yet all of them fruitful to bring in a Revenue of Glory to God, and a Harveſt of Profit to the reſt of Mankind. How unuſeful would the Body be, if it had but one Member? 1 Cor. 12. 19. How unprovided would a Houſe be, if it had not Veſſels of Diſhonour as well as of Honour? The Corporation of Mankind would be as much a Chaos, as the Matter of the Heavens and the Earth was, before it was diſtinguiſht by ſeveral Forms breathed into it at the Creation. Some are inſpired with a particular Genius for one Art, ſome for another: Every Man hath a diſtinct Talent. If all were Husband-men, where would be the Inſtruments to Plow and Reap? If all were Artificers, where would they have Corn to nouriſh themſelves? All Men are like Veſſels, and Parts in the Body, deſign'd for diſtinct Offices and Functions for the good of the whole, and mutually return an Advantage to one another.

As the variety of Gifts in the Church is a fruit of the wiſdom of God, for the preſervation and increaſe of the Church, ſo the variety of Inclinations and Employments in the World is a fruit of the wiſdom of God, for the preſervation and ſubſiſtence of the World by mutual Commerce: What the Apoſtle largely diſcourſeth of the former, in 1 Cor. 12. may be applied to the other.

The various Conditions of Men is alſo a fruit of Divine Wiſdom. Some are Rich, and ſome Poor; the Rich have as much need of the Poor, as the Poor have of the Rich: If the Poor depend upon the Rich for their livelyhood, the Rich depend upon the Poor for their Conveniencies. Many Arts would not be learned by Men, if Poverty did not oblige them to it; and many would faint in the learning of them, if they were not thereunto encouraged by the Rich.

The Poor labour for the Rich, as the Earth ſends Vapours into the vaſter and fuller Air; and the Rich return Advantages again to the Poor, as the Clouds do the Vapours in Rain upon the Earth. As Meat would not afford a nouriſhing Juyce without Bread, and Bread without other Food would immoderately fill the Stomach, and not be well digeſted; ſo the Rich would be unprofitable in the Commonwealth without the Poor, and the Poor would be burthenſome to a Commonwealth without the Rich: The Poor could not be eaſily govern'd without the Rich, nor the Rich ſufficiently and conveniently provided for without the Poor. If all were Rich, there would be no Objects for the exerciſe of a noble Part of Charity: If all were Poor there were no Matter for the exerciſe of it. Thus the Divine Wiſdom planted various Inclinations, and diverſified the Conditions of Men for the publick Advantages of the World.

II. God's Wiſdom appears, in the Government of Men, as Fallen and Sinful; or in the Government of Sin. After the Law of God was broke, and Sin invaded and conquer'd the World; Divine Wiſdom had another Scene to act in, and other Methods of Government were neceſſary. The Wiſdom of God is then ſeen in ordering thoſe jarring Diſcords, drawing Good out of Evil, and Honour to himſelf out of that, which in its own Nature tended to the ſupplanting of his Glory. God being a Sovereign Good, would not ſuffer ſo great an Evil to enter, but to ſerve himſelf of it for ſome greater End; for all his Thoughts are full of Goodneſs and Wiſdom.

Now though the Permiſſion of Sin be an Act of his Sovereignty, and the Puniſhment of Sin be an Act of his Juſtice; yet the Ordination of Sin to Good, is an Act of his Wiſdom, whereby he doth diſpoſe the Evil, over-rules the Malice, and orders the Events of it to his own Purpoſes. Sin in it ſelf is a Diſorder, and therefore God doth not permit Sin for it ſelf; for in its own Nature it hath nothing of Amiableneſs; but he wills it for ſome Righteous End, which belongs to the manifeſtation of his Glory, which is his aim in all the Acts of his Will: He wills it not as Sin, but as his Wiſdom can order it to ſome greater Good than was before in the World, and make it contribute to the Beauty of the Order he intends. As a dark Shadow is not delightful and pleaſant in it ſelf, nor is drawn by a Painter for any Amiableneſs there is in the Shadow it ſelf, but as it ſerves to ſet forth that Beauty, which is the main deſign of his Art; ſo the glorious Effects which ariſe from the Entrance of Sin into the World, are not from the Creatures Evil, but the Depths of Divine Wiſdom.

Particularly,

1. God's Wiſdom is ſeen in the bounding of Sin. As it is ſaid of the Wrath of Man, it ſhall praiſe him, and the remainder of Wrath God doth reſtrain, Pſal. 76. 10. He ſets Limits to the boyling Corruption of the Heart, as he doth to the boiſterous Waves of the Sea, Hitherto ſhalt thou go, and no further. As God is the Rector of the World, he doth ſo reſtrain Sin, ſo temper and direct it, as that Human Society is preſerved, which elſe would be overflown with a Deluge of Wickedneſs, and Ruin would be brought upon all Communities. The World would be a Shambles, a Brothel-houſe, if God by his Wiſdom and Goodneſs, did not ſet Bars to that Wickedneſs which is in the Hearts of Men: The whole Earth would be as bad as Hell. Since the Heart of Man is a Hell of Corruption, by that, the Souls of all Men would be excited to the acting the worſt Villanies; ſince every thought of the heart of Man is only evil, and that continually, Gen. 6. 5. if the Wiſdom of God did not ſtop theſe Floud-gates of Evil in the Hearts of Men, it would over-flow the World, and fruſtrate all the Gracious Deſigns he carries on among the Sons of Men. Were it not for this Wiſdom, every Houſe would be filled with Violence, as well as every Nature is with Sin. What harm would not ſtrong and furious Beaſts do, did not the Skill of Man tame and bridle them? How often hath Divine Wiſdom reſtrain'd the Viciouſneſs of human Nature, and let it run, not to that point they they deſign'd, but to the end he propoſed? Laban's Fury, and Eſau's Enmity againſt Jacob, were pent in within Bounds for Jacob's Safety, and their Hearts over-ruled from an intended Deſtruction of the good Man to a perfect Amity *.

* Gen. 31. 29. and Gen. 32.

2. God's Wiſdom is ſeen, in the bringing Glory to himſelf out of Sin.

(1.) Out of Sin it ſelf. God erects the Trophies of Honour upon that, which is a natural means to hinder and deface it. His glorious Attributes are drawn out to our view, upon the occaſion of Sin, which otherwiſe had lain hid in his own Being. Sin is altogether black and abominable; but by the admirable Wiſdom of God, he hath drawn out of the dreadful darkneſs of Sin, the ſaving Beams of his Mercy, and diſplayed his Grace in the Incarnation and Paſſion of his Son for the Attonement of Sin. Thus he permitted Adam's Fall, and wiſely order'd it for a fuller diſcovery of his own Nature, and a higher elevation of Man's good, that as Sin reigned to Death, ſo might Grace reign through Righteouſneſs to Eternal Life, by Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. 5. 21. The unbounded Goodneſs of God could not have appeared without it. His Goodneſs in rewarding innocent Obedience, would have been manifeſted; but not his Mercy in pardoning rebellious Crimes: An innocent Creature is the Object of the Rewards of Grace, as the ſtanding Angels are under the Beams of Grace; but not under the Beams of Mercy, becauſe they were never Sinful, and conſequently never Miſerable. Without Sin the Creature had not been Miſerable: Had Man remained Innocent, he had not been the Subject of Puniſhment; and without the Creatures Miſery, God's Mercy in ſending his Son to ſave his Enemies, could not have appeared. The abundance of Sin is a paſſive Occaſion for God to manifeſt the abundance of his Grace.

The Power of God in the changing the Heart of a rebellious Creature, had not appeared, had not Sin infected our Nature. We had not clearly known the Vindictive Juſtice of God, had no Crime been committed; for that is the proper Object of Divine Wrath. The Goodneſs of God could never have permitted Juſtice to exerciſe it ſelf upon an innocent Creature, that was not guilty either Perſonally, or by Imputation. Pſal. 11. 7. The righteous Lord loveth Righteouſneſs, his Countenance doth behold the upright. Wiſdom is illuſtrious hereby. God ſuffered Man to fall into a Mortal Diſeaſe, to ſhew the vertue of his own Reſtoratives to cure Sin, which in it ſelf is incurable by the Art of any Creature. And otherwiſe this Perfection, whereby God draws Good out of Evil, had been utterly uſeleſs, and would have been deſtitute of an Object wherein to diſcover it ſelf.

Again, Wiſdom in ordering a rebellious head-ſtrong World to its own ends, is greater than the ordering an innocent World, exactly obſervant of his Precepts, and complying with the end of the Creation. Now, without the entrance of Sin, this Wiſdom had wanted a Stage to act upon. Thus God raiſed the Honour of his Wiſdom, while Man ruin'd the Integrity of his Nature; and made uſe of the Creatures breach of his Divine Law, to eſtabliſh the Honour of it in a more ſignal and ſtable manner, by the Active and Paſſive Obedience of the Son of his Boſom. Nothing ſerves God ſo much, as an occaſion of glorifying himſelf, as the entrance of Sin into the World; by this occaſion God communicates to us the Knowledge of thoſe Perfections of his Nature, which had elſe been folded up from us in an Eternal Night; his Juſtice had lain in the dark, as having nothing to puniſh; his Mercy had been obſcure, as having none to pardon; a great part of his Wiſdom had been ſilent, as having no ſuch Object to order.

2. His Wiſdom appears, In making uſe of ſinful Inſtruments. He uſes the Malice and Enmity of the Devil to bring about his own Purpoſes, and makes the ſworn Enemy of his Honour contribute to the illuſtrating of it againſt his Will. This great Craft's-Maſter he took in his own Net, and defeated the Devil by the Devil's Malice; by turning the Contrivances he had hatch'd and accompliſh'd againſt Man, againſt himſelf. He uſed him as a Tempter, to grapple with our Saviour in the Wilderneſs, whereby to make him fit to ſuccour us; and as the God of this World, to inſpire the wicked Jews to crucifie him, whereby to render him actually the Redeemer of the World, and ſo made him an ignorant Inſtrument of that Divine Glory he deſign'd to ruin.

* 'Tis more Skill to make a curious piece of Workmanſhip with ill condition'd Tools, than with Inſtruments naturally fitted for the Work: 'Tis no ſuch great wonder for a Limner to draw an exact piece with a fit Pencil and ſutable Colours, as to begin and perfect a beautiful Work with a Straw and Water, things improper for ſuch a Deſign. This Wiſdom of God is more admirable and aſtoniſhing, than if a Man were able to rear a vaſt Palace by Fire, whoſe nature is to conſume Combuſtible matter, not to erect a Building.

* Moulins Serm. Dedicat. 10. p. 231, 232.

To make things ſerviceable contrary to their own Nature, is a Wiſdom peculiar to the Creator of Nature. God's making uſe of Devils, for the Glory of his Name, and the Good of his People, is a more amazing piece of Wiſdom, than his Goodneſs in employing the Bleſſed Angels in his Work. To promiſe, that the World, (which includes the God of the World) and Death, and Things preſent, let them be as Evil as they will, ſhould be ours, that is, for our Good, and for his Glory, is an act of Goodneſs; but to make them ſerviceable to the Honour of Chriſt, and the Good of his People, is a Wiſdom that may well raiſe our higheſt Admirations *: They are for Believers, as they are for the glory of Chriſt, and as Chriſt is for the glory of God.

* 1 Cor. 3. 22.

To Chain up Satan wholly, and fruſtrate his Wiles, would be an Argument of Divine Goodneſs; but to ſuffer him to run his riſque, and then improve all his Contrivances for his own glorious and gracious Ends and Purpoſes, manifeſts, beſides his Power and Goodneſs, his Wiſdom alſo. He uſes the Sins of Evil Inſtruments for the glory of his Juſtice, Iſa. 10. 5, 6, 7. Thus he ſerved himſelf of the Ambition and Covetouſneſs of the Aſſyrians, Chaldeans, and Romans, for the Correction of his People and Puniſhment of his Rebels. Juſt as the Roman Magiſtrates uſed the fury of Lions and other wild Beaſts, in their Theatres, for the Puniſhment of Criminals: The Lions acted their natural Temper in tearing thoſe that were expos'd to them for a Prey; but the intent of the Magiſtrates was to puniſh their Crimes. The Magiſtrate inſpir'd not the Lions with their Rage, that they had from their Natures; but ſerved themſelves of that natural Rage, to execute Juſtice.

3. God's Wiſdom is ſeen in bringing good to the Creature out of Sin. He hath ordered Sin to ſuch an end as Man never dreamt of the Devil never imagin'd, and Sin in its own Nature could never attain. Sin in its own Nature tends to no Good, but that of Puniſhment, whereby the Creature is brought into order. It hath no relation to the Creatures good in it ſelf, but to the Creatures miſchief: But God, by an act of Infinite Wiſdom brings good out of it to the Creature, as well as glory to his Name, contrary to the Nature of the Crime, the Intention of the Criminal, and the Deſign of the Tempter.

God willed Sin, that is, he willed to permit it, that he might communicate himſelf to the Creature

in

in the moſt excellent manner. He willed the Permiſſion of Sin, as an occaſion to bring forth the Myſtery of the Incarnation and Paſſion of our Saviour; as he permitted the Sin of Joſeph's Brethren, that he might uſe their Evil to a good end. He never, becauſe of his Holineſs, wills Sin as an End; but in regard of his Wiſdom he wills to permit it as a Means and Occaſion: And thus, to draw good out of thoſe things which are in their own Nature moſt contrary to Good, is the higheſt pitch of wiſdom.

1. The Redemption of Man in ſo excellent a way, was drawn from the occaſion of Sin. The greateſt Bleſſing that ever the world was bleſs'd with, was uſher'd in by Contrarieties, by the Luſt and irregular Affection of Man; the firſt Promiſe of the Redeemer, by the Fall of Adam, Gen. 3. 15. and the bruiſing the heel of that Promiſed Seed, by the blackeſt Tragedy acted by wicked Rebels, the Treachery of Judas, and the Rage of the Jews; the higheſt Good hath been brought forth by the greateſt Wickedneſs As God out of the Chaos of rude and indigeſted Matter framed the firſt Creation; ſo from the Sins of Men, and Malice of Satan, he hath erected the Everlaſting Scheme of Honour in a New Creation of all things by Jeſus Chriſt.

The Devil inſpir'd Man, to content his own fury in the Death of Chriſt; and God order'd it to accompliſh his own deſign of Redemption in the Paſſion of the Redeemer: The Devil had his Diabolical Ends, and God over-powers his Action to ſerve his own Divine Ends. The Perſon that betrayed him, was admitted to be a Spectator of the moſt private Actions of our Saviour, that his Innocence might be juſtified; to ſhew, that he was not afraid to have his Enemies Judges of his moſt retir'd Privacies. While they all thought to do their own Wills, Divine Wiſdom orders them to do God's Will. Acts 2. 23. Him being delivered by the determinate Counſel and Fore-knowledge of God, you have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and ſlain. And wherein the Crucifiers of Chriſt ſinned, in ſhedding the richeſt Blood, upon their Repentance they found the expiation of their Crimes, and the diſcovery of a ſuperabundant Mercy. Nothing but Blood was aimed at by them: The beſt Blood was ſhed by them; but Infinite Wiſdom makes the Croſs the Scene of his own Righteouſneſs, and the Womb of Man's Recovery.

By the occaſion of man's lapſed ſtate, there was a way open to raiſe man to a more excellent Condition, than that whereinto he was put by Creation: And the depriving man of the happineſs of an Earthly Paradiſe, in a way of Juſtice, was an occaſion of advancing him to a Heavenly Felicity, in a way of Grace. The Violation of the Old Covenant, occaſionally introduc'd a better: The loſs of the firſt Integrity, uſher'd in a more ſtable Righteouſneſs, an Everlaſting Righteouſneſs, Dan. 9. 24. And the falling of the Firſt Head, was ſucceeded by one whoſe ſtanding could not but be Eternal.

The fall of the Devil was ordered by Infinite Wiſdom, for the good of that Body from which he fell. 'Tis ſuppoſed by ſome, that the Devil was the Chief Angel in Heaven, the Head of all the reſt; and that he Falling, the Angels were left as a Body without a Head; and after he had Politically beheaded the Angels, he endeavoured to deſtroy Man, and rout him out of Paradiſe: But God takes the Opportunity to ſet up his Son, as the Head of Angels and Men. And thus whilſt the Devil endeavoured to ſpoil the Corporation of Angels, and make them a Body contrary to God, God makes Angels and Men one Body under one Head, for his Service.

The Angels in loſing a defective Head, attained a more excellent and glorious Head in another Nature, which they had not before; though of a lower Nature in his Humanity, yet of a more glorious Nature in his Divinity: From whence many ſuppoſe they derive their Confirming Grace, and the ſtability of their ſtanding. All things in Heaven and Earth are gathered together in Chriſt, Eph. 1. 10. ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι. All united in him, and reduced under one Head: That though our Saviour be not properly their Redeemer, for Redemption ſuppoſeth Captivity, yet in ſome ſenſe he is their Head and Mediator; ſo that now the Inhabitants of Heaven and Earth are but one Family, Epheſ. 3. 15. And the Innumerable Company of Angels are parts of that Heavenly and Triumphant Jeruſalem, and that General Aſſembly, whereof Jeſus Chriſt is Mediator, Heb. 12. 22. 29.

2. The Good of a Nation often, by the skill of Divine Wiſdom, is promoted by the Sins of ſome Men. The Patriarchs ſelling Joſeph to the Midianites *, was, without queſtion, a Sin, and a breach of Natural Affection; yet by God's wiſe Ordination, it proved the Safety of the whole Church of God in the world, as well as the Egyptian Nation *. * Gen. 37. 28. * Gen. 45. 5. 8. & Gen. 50. 30.

The Jews Unbelief was a ſtep whereby the Gentiles aroſe to the knowledge of the Goſpel: As the ſetting of the Sun in one place, is the riſing of it in another *. He uſes the Corruptions of men Inſtrumentally to propagate his Goſpel: He built up the True Church by the Preaching of ſome out of envy, Phil. 1. 15. as he bleſſed Iſrael out of the Mouth of a Falſe Prophet, Numb. 23. How often have the Hereſies of Men been the occaſion of clearing up the Truth of God, and fixing the more lively Impreſſions of it on the Hearts of Believers? * Mat. 22. 9.

Neither Judah nor Tamar, in their Luſt, dreamt of a Stock for the Redeemer; yet God gave a Son from that Unlawful Bed, whereof Chriſt came according to the fleſh; Gen. 38. 29. compared with Mat. 1. 3.

Jonah's Sin was probably the firſt and remote occaſion of the Ninevites giving credit to his Prophecy: His Sin was the cauſe of his Puniſhment, and his being flung into the Sea might facilitate the reception of his Meſſage, and excite the Ninevites Repentance, whereby a Cloud of ſevere Judgment was blown away from them.

'Tis thought by ſome, That when Jonah paſſed through the Streets of Nineveh with his Proclamation of Deſtruction, he might be known by ſome of the Mariners of that Ship, from whence he was caſt Over-board into the Sea, and might after their Voyage be occaſionally in that City, the Metropolis of the Nation, and the place of ſome of their Births; and might acquaint the People, that this was the ſame Perſon they had caſt into the Sea by his own conſent, for his acknowleg'd running from the Preſence of the Lord; for that he had told them, Jonah 1. 10. and the Mariners Prayer, Verſe 14. evidenceth it, whereupon they might conclude his Meſſage worthy of Belief, ſince they knew from ſuch Evidences, that he had ſunk into the Bowels of the Waters, and now ſaw him ſafe in their Streets, by a Deliverance unknown to them; and that therefore that Power that delivered him, could eaſily verifie his Word in the threatned Judgment.

Had Jonah gone at firſt without committing that Sin, and receiving that Puniſhment, his Meſſage had not been judged a Divine Prediction, but a fruit of ſome Enthuſiaſtick Madneſs: His Sin upon this account was the firſt occaſion of averting a Judgment from ſo great a City.

3. The good of the Sinner himſelf is ſometimes promoted by Divine Wiſdom, ordering the Sin. As God had not permitted Sin to enter upon the world, unleſs to bring Glory to himſelf by it; ſo he would not not let Sin remain in the little world of a Believer's Heart, if he did not intend to order it for his good. What is done by Man to his damage and diſparagement, is directed by Divine wiſdom to his advantage; not that it is the intent of the Sin, or the Sinner; but it is the event of the Sin, by the ordination of Divine Wiſdom and Grace.

As without the Wiſdom of God permitting Sin to enter into the world, ſome Attributes of God had not been Experimentally known; ſo ſome Graces could not have been exercis'd: For where had there been an Object for that Noble Zeal, in vindicating the Glory of God, had it not been invaded by an Enemy? The intenſeneſs of Love to him could not have been ſo ſtrong, had we not an Enemy to hate for his ſake. Where had there been any place for that Noble part of Charity in Holy Admonitions and Compaſſion to the Souls of our Neighbours, and Endeavours to reduce them out of a deſtructive to a happy Path? Humility would not have had ſo many grounds for its growth and exerciſe, and holy Sorrow had had no fuel.

And as without the appearance of Sin, there had been no exerciſe of the Patience of God; ſo without Afflictions, the Fruits of Sin, there had been no ground for the exerciſe of the Pattence of a Chriſtian, one of the Nobleſt parts of Valour. Now Sin being Evil, and ſuch as cannot but be Evil, hath no reſpect in it ſelf to any good, and cannot work a gracious End, or any thing profitable to the Creature; nay, it is a hindrance to any good, and therefore what good comes from it, is Accidental, occaſioned indeed by Sin, but efficiently cauſed by the over-ruling Wiſdom of God, taking occaſion thereby to diſplay it ſelf and the Divine Goodneſs.

The Sins and Corruptions remaining in the Heart of a Man, God orders for good, and there are good effects by the direction of his Wiſdom and Grace.

I. As the Soul reſpects God.

1. God often brings forth a ſenſibleneſs of the neceſſity of Dependance on him. The Nurſe often lets the Child ſlip, that it may the better know who ſupports it, and may not be too venturous and confident of its own ſtrength. Peter would truſt in Habitual Grace, and God ſuffers him to Fall, that he might truſt more in Aſſiſting Grace; Mat. 26. 35. Though I ſhould die with thee, yet I will not deny thee. God leaves ſometimes the brighteſt Souls in an Eclipſe, to manifeſt, that their Holineſs, and the preſervation of it, depend upon the darting out his Beams upon them.

As the Falls of Men are the effects of their coldneſs and remiſsneſs in acts of Faith and Repentance, ſo the fruit of theſe Falls is often a running to him for Refuge, and a deeper ſenſibleneſs where their Security lies. It makes us lower our ſwelling Sails, and come under the Lee and Protection of Divine Grace. When the Pleaſures of Sin anſwer not the expectations of a Revolted Creature, he reflects upon his former ſtate, and ſticks more cloſe to God, when before God had little of his Company; Hoſ. 2. 7. I will return to my firſt Husband, for then it was better with me than now.

As God makes the Sins of Men ſometimes an occaſion of their Converſion, ſo he ſometimes makes them an occaſion of a further Converſion. Oneſimus run from Philemon, and was met with by Paul, who proved an Inſtrument of his Converſion, Philem. 10. My Son Oneſimus, whom I have begotten in my Bonds. His flight from his Maſter, was the occaſion of his Regeneration by Paul a Priſoner.

The Falls of Believers God orders to their further ſtability: He that is fallen for want of uſing his Staff, will lean more upon it to preſerve himſelf from the like Diſaſter.

God, by permitting the Lapſes of Men, doth often make them deſpair of their own ſtrength to ſubdue their Enemies, and rely upon the ſtrength of Chriſt, wherein God hath laid up Power for us, and ſo becomes ſtronger in that ſtrength which God hath ordained for them.

We are very apt to truſt in our ſelves, and have confidence in our own worth and ſtrength; and God lets looſe Corruptions to abate this ſwelling Humour. This was the reaſon of the Apoſtle Paul's Thorn in the fleſh, 2 Cor. 12. 9. whether it were a Temptation, or Corruption, or Sickneſs, that he might be ſenſible of his own inability, and where the ſufficiency of Grace for him was placed.

He that is in danger of Drowning, and hath the Waves come over his Head, will with all the might he hath, lay hold upon any thing near him, which is capable to ſave him. God lets his People ſometimes ſink into ſuch a condition, that they may lay the faſter hold on him who is near to all that call upon him

2. God hereby raiſeth higher Eſtimations of the value and vertue of the Blood of Chriſt. As the great Reaſon why God permitted Sin to enter into the World, was to honour himſelf in the Redeemer; ſo the Continuance of Sin, and the Conqueſts it ſometimes makes in renewed Men, are to honour the Infinite value and vertue of the Redeemer's Merit, which God from the beginning intended to magnifie: The Value of it, in taking off ſo much ſucceſſive Guilt; and the Vertue of it, in waſhing away ſo much daily filth.

The Wiſdom of God hereby keeps up the Credit of Imputed Righteouſneſs, and manifeſts the Immenſe Treaſure of the Redeemer's Merit to pay ſuch daily Debts. Were we perfectly Sanctified, we ſhould ſtand upon our own Bottom, and imagine no need of the continual and repeated Imputation of the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt for Juſtification: We ſhould confide in Inherent Righteouſneſs, and ſlight Imputed.

If God ſhould take off all Remainders of Sin, as well as the Guilt of it, we ſhould be apt to forget that we are Fallen Creatures, and that we had a Redeemer: But the Reliques of Sin in us, mind us of the neceſſity of ſome higher ſtrength to ſet us right: They mind us both of our own Miſery, and the Redeemer's perpetual Benefit. God by this keeps up the Dignity and Honour of our Saviour's Blood to the height, and therefore ſometimes lets us ſee, to our own coſt, what filth yet remains in us for the employment of that Blood, which we ſhould elſe but little think of, and leſs admire. Our Gratitude is ſo ſmall to God, as well as Man, that the firſt Obligations are ſoon forgot, if we ſtand not in need of freſh ones ſucceſſively to ſecond them; we ſhould loſe our Thankful Remembrance of the firſt vertue of Chriſt's blood in waſhing us, if our Infirmities did not mind us of freſh Reiterations and Applications of it.

Our Saviour's Office of Advocacy was erected eſpecially for Sins committed after a Juſtified and Renewed ſtate *. We ſhould ſcarce remember we had an Advocate, and ſcarce make uſe of him without ſome ſenſible Neceſſity; but our Remainders of Sin diſcover our Impotency, and an impoſſibility for us either to expiate our Sin, or conform to the Law, which neceſſitates us to have recourſe to that Perſon whom God hath appointed to make up the Breaches between God and us. * 1 John 2. 1.

So the Apoſtle wraps up himſelf in the Covenant of Grace and his Intereſt in Chriſt, after his Conflict with Sin, Rom. 7. ult. I thank God through Jeſus Chriſt. Now, after ſuch a Body of Death, a Principle within me that ſends up daily ſteams; yet as long as I ſerve God with my Mind, as long as I keep the main Condition of the Covenant, there is *no Condemnation: Chriſt takes my part, procures my acceptance, and holds the Band of Salvation firm in his hands. The brightneſs of Chriſt's Grace is ſet off by the darkneſs of our Sin. We ſhould not underſtand the Sovereignty of his Medicines, if there were no Reliques of Sin for him to exerciſe his Skill upon: The Phyſician's Art is moſt experimented, and therefore moſt valued in Relapſes, as dangerous as the former Diſeaſe. As the Wiſdom of God brought our Saviour into Temptation, that he might have Compaſſion to us; ſo it permits us to be overcome by Temptation, that we might have due Valuations of him.

* Rom. 8. 1.

3. God hereby often engageth the Soul to a greater Induſtry for his Glory. The higheſt Perſecutors, when they have become Converts, have been the greateſt Champions for that Cauſe they both hated and oppreſt. The Apoſtle Paul is ſuch an Inſtance of this, that it needs no enlargement. By how much they have failed of anſwering the end of their Creation in glorifying God, by ſo much the more they ſummon up all their force for ſuch an end, after their Converſion; to reſtore as much as they can of that Glory to God, which they by their Sin had robb'd him of. Their Sins, by the Order of Divine Wiſdom, prove Whet-ſtones to ſharpen the edge of their Spirits for God. Paul never remembred his Perſecuting Fury, but he doubled his Induſtry for the Service of God, which before he trampled under his feet. The further we go back, the greater Leap many times we take forward.

Our Saviour, after his Reſurrection, put Peter upon the exerciſe of that Love to him, which had ſo lately ſhrunk his head out of Suffering*; and no doubt but the conſideration of his baſe Denial, together with a reflection upon a gracious Pardon, engag'd his ingenuous Soul to ſtronger and fiercer flames of Affection. A Believer's Courage for God, is more ſharpned oftentimes by the ſhame of his Fall: He endeavours to repair the faults of his Ingratitude and Diſingenuity, by larger and ſtronger ſteps of Obedience. As a Man in a Fight having been foil'd by his Enemy, reaſſumes new Courage by his Fall; and is many times oblig'd to his Foil, both for his Spirit and his Victory. A gracious Heart will, upon the very Motions to ſin, double its vigour, as well as by good ones: It is uſually more quickned both in its motion to God and for God, by the temptations and motions to ſin, which run upon it. This is another Good the Wiſdom of God brings forth from Sin.

* John 21. 15, 16, 17.

4. Again, Humility towards God is another Good Divine Wiſdom brings forth from the Occaſion of Sin. By this God beats down all good Opinion of our ſelves. Hezekiah was more humbled by his Fall into Pride, than by all the Diſtreſs he had been in by Sennacherib's Army, 2 Chron. 32. 26. Peter's Confidence before his Fall, gave way to an humble Modeſty after it: You ſee his Confidence, Mark 14. 24. Though all ſhould be offended in thee, yet will not I; and you have the mark of his Modeſty, John 21. 17. 'Tis not then, Lord, I will love thee to the death, I will not ſtart from thee; but, Lord, thou knoweſt that I love thee. I cannot aſſure my ſelf of any thing after this Miſcarriage; but, Lord, thou knoweſt there is a Principle of Love in me to thy Name. He was aſham'd, that himſelf who appeared ſuch a Pillar, ſhould bend as meanly as a Shrub to a Temptation.

The reflection upon ſin, lays a Man as low as Hell in his humiliation, as the commiſſion of ſin did in the merit. When David comes to exerciſe repentance for his ſin, he begins it from the Well-head *of Sin, his original corruption, and draws down the ſtreams of it to the laſt commiſſion: Perhaps he did not ſo ſeriouſly humble himſelf for the ſin of his nature all his days, ſo much as at that time; at leaſt we have not ſuch Evidences of it. And Hezekiah humbled himſelf for the pride of his heart; not only for the pride of *his Act, but for the pride in the Heart, which was the ſpring of that pride in Act, in ſhewing his Treaſures to the Babyloniſh Ambaſſadors. God lets ſin continue in the hearts of the beſt in this World, and ſometimes gives the reins to Satan, and a Man's own Corruption, to keep up a ſenſe of the ancient Sale we made of our ſelves to both.

* Pſal. 51. 5.

* 2 Chron. 32. 26.

II. In regard of our ſelves. Herein is the Wonder of Divine Wiſdom, that God many times makes a ſin, which meritoriouſly fits us for Hell, a providential occaſion to fit us for Heaven; when it is an occaſion of a more humble Faith and believing Humility, and an occaſion of a through Sanctification and growth in Grace, which prepares us for a ſtate of Glory.

1. He makes uſe of one Sin's breaking out to diſcover more; and ſo brings us to a ſelf-abhorrency and indignation againſt ſin, the firſt ſtep towards Heaven. Perhaps David, before his groſs fall, thought he had no Hypocriſie in him. We often find him appealing to God for his Integrity, and deſiring God to try him, if any guile could be found in his heart, as if he could find none himſelf: But his lapſe into that great wickedneſs, makes him diſcern much falſeneſs in his ſoul, when he deſires God to renew a right ſpirit within him, and ſpeaks of truth in the inward parts, Pſal. 51. 6. 10. The ſtirring of one Corruption makes all the Mud at the bottom appear, which before a ſoul did not ſuſpect. No Man would think there were ſo great a cloud of ſmoak contain'd in a little ſtick of wood, were it not for the powerful operation of the fire, that both diſcovers and ſeparates it. Job, that curſed the day of his birth; and uttered many impatient expreſſions againſt God upon the account of his own integrity; upon his recovery from his affliction, and God's cloſe application of himſelf, was wrought to a greater Abhorrency of himſelf, than ever we read he was exercis'd in before*. The hoſtile acts of ſin encreaſe the ſoul's hatred of it; and the deeper our humiliations are for it, the ſtronger impreſſions of abhorrency are made upon us.

* Job 42. 6.

2. He often orders it, to make Conſcience more tender, and the Soul more watchful. He that finds by his calamity, his enemy to have more ſtrength againſt him than he ſuſpected, will double his guards and quicken his diligence againſt him. A being overtaken by ſome ſin, is by the wiſdom of God diſpos'd to make us more fearful of cheriſhing any occaſion to enflame it, and watchful againſt every motion and ſtart of it. By a fall, the ſoul hath more experience of the deceitfulneſs of the heart; and by obſerving its methods, is render'd better able to watch againſt them. 'Tis our ignorance of the devices of Satan, and our own hearts, that makes us obnoxious to their ſurprizes. A fall into one ſin is often a prevention of more which lay in wait for us: as the fall of a ſmall body into an ambuſh, prevents the deſign of the Enemy upon a greater. As God ſuffers Hereſies in the Church, to try our Faith; ſo he ſuffers Sins to remain, and ſometimes to break out, to try our watchfulneſs. This advantage he brings from them, to ſteel our Reſolutions againſt the ſame ſins, and quicken our Circumſpection for the future againſt new Surprizes by a Temptation. David's Sin was ever before him, Pſal. 51. 3. and made his Conſcience cry, Blood, Blood, upon every occaſion; he refuſed the Water of the Well of Bethlehem,

2 Sam.

2 Sam 23. 16, 17. becauſe it was gained with the hazard of Lives: He could endure nothing that had the taſte of Blood in it. Our fear of a thing depends much upon a trial of it: A Child will not fear too near approaches to the Fire, till he feels the ſmart of it.

Mortification doth not wholly ſuppreſs the motions of Sin, though it doth the Reſolutions to commit it; but that there will be a proneneſs in the Reliques of it, to entice a Man into thoſe Faults, which upon ſight of their Blemiſhes coſt him ſo many Tears. As great Sickneſſes after the Cure are more watch'd and the Body humour'd, that a man might not fall from the Crazineſs they have left in him; which he is apt to do, if Relapſes are not carefully provided againſt. A man becomes more careful of any thing, that may contribute to the Reſurrection of an expir'd Diſeaſe.

3. God makes it an occaſion of the Mortification of that Sin, which was the matter of the Fall. The livelineſs of one Sin in a renewed Man, many times is the occaſion of the Death of it. A wild Beaſt, while kept cloſe in a Den, is ſecure in its Life; but when it breaks out to Rapine, it makes the Maſter reſolve to prevent any further Miſchief by the Death of it. The impetuous ſtirring of an Humour in a Diſeaſe, is ſometime Critical, and a Prognoſtick of the Strength of Nature againſt it, whereby the Diſeaſe loſeth its Strength by its ſtruggling, and makes room for Health to take place by Degrees. One Sin is uſed by God for the Deſtruction both of it ſelf and others: As the Fleſh of a Scorpion cures the biting of it. It ſometimes by wounding us loſeth its Sting, and like the Bee renders it ſelf uncapable of a ſecond Revenge. Peter, after his groſs Denial, never denied his Maſter afterwards. The Sin that lay undiſcovered, is by a Fall become viſible, and ſo more obvious to a mortifying ſtroke. The Soul lays the faſter hold on Chriſt and the Promiſe, and goes out againſt that Enemy in the Name of the Lord of Hoſts, of which he was too negligent before; and therefore, as he proves more ſtrong, ſo more ſucceſsful: He hath more Strength, becauſe he hath leſs Confidence in himſelf, and more in God, the prime Strength of his Soul. As it was with Chriſt, ſo it is with us, while the Devil was bruiſing his heel, he was bruiſing his head; and while the Devil is bruiſing our heel, the God of Peace and Wiſdom is ſometimes bruiſing his head both in us and for us; ſo that the ſtrugglings of Sin, are often as the faint groans or bitings of a Beaſt that is ready to expire 'Tis juſt with a Man ſometimes, as with a running Fountain that hath Mud at the bottom, when it is ſtirred the Mud tinctures, and defiles it all over; yet ſome of that Mud hath a vent with the Streams which run from it, ſo that when it is re-ſettled at the bottom, 'tis not ſo much in quantity as it was before. God by his Wiſdom weakens the Sin, by permitting it to ſtir and defile.

4. Sometimes Divine Wiſdom makes it an occaſion to promote a Sanctification in all parts of the Soul. As the working of one ill humour in the Body, is an occaſion of caſhiering not only that, but the reſt by a ſound Purge. As a Man that is a little cold, doth not think of the Fire; but if he ſlips with one Foot into an Icy-puddle, he haſtens to the Fire, whereby not only that part, but all the reſt receive a warmth and ſtrength upon that occaſion: Or, as if a Perſon fall into the Mire, his Cloaths are waſhed; and by that means cleanſed, not only from the filth at preſent contracted, but from the former Spots that were before unregarded. God by his Wiſdom brings ſecret Sins to a Diſcovery, and thereby cleanſeth the Soul of them.

David's Fall might be ordered as an Anſwer to his former Petition, Pſal. 19. 12. Cleanſe thou me from my ſecret Sins; and as he did earneſtly pray after his Fall, ſo no doubt but he endeavour'd a thorough Sanctification, Pſal. 51. 7. Purge me, waſh me: and that he meant not only a Sanctification from that ſingle ſin, but from all, Root and Branch, is evident by that Complaint of the ſtaw in his Nature, verſe 5. the Droſs and Chaff which lies in the Heart is hereby diſcovered, and an opportunity adminiſtred of throwing it out, and ſearching all the corners of the Heart to diſcover where it lay. As God ſometime takes occaſion from one ſin to reckon with Men in a way of Juſtice for others; ſo he ſometimes takes occaſion from the commiſſion of one ſin, to bring out all the Actions againſt the Sinner, to make him, in a way of gracious Wiſdom, ſet more cordially upon the work of Sanctification.

A great Fall ſometimes hath been the occaſion of Man's Converſion. The Fall of Mankind occaſioned a more bleſſed Reſtoration; and the Falls of particular Believers, oft-times occaſion a more extenſive Sanctification. Thus the only wiſe God makes Poyſons in Nature, to become Medicines in a way of Grace and Wiſdom.

5. Hereby the growth in Grace is furthered. 'Tis a wonder of Divine Wiſdom, to ſubſtract ſometimes his Grace from a Perſon, and let him fall into ſin, thereby to occaſion the increaſe of habitual Grace in him, and to augment it by thoſe Ways that ſeem'd to depreſs it. By making ſins an occaſion of a more vigorous acting the contrary Grace, the wiſdom of God makes our Corruptions in their own nature deſtructive, to become profitable to us. Grace often breaks out more ſtrongly afterwards, as the Sun doth with its heat, after it hath been mask'd and interrupted with a Miſt: They often, through the mighty working of the Spirit, make us more humble, and Humility fits us to receive more Grace from God *. How doth Faith, that ſunk under the Waves, liſt up its head again, and carry the Soul out with a greater livelineſs? What ardours of Love, what ſtouds of repenting Tears, what ſeverity of Revenge, what horrours at the remembrance of the Sin, what tremblings at the appearance of a ſecond Temptation? So that Grace ſeems to be awaken'd to a new and more vigorous Life *. The broken Joint is many times ſtronger in the Rupture, than it was before. The Luxuriancy of the Branches of Corruption, is an occaſion of purging, and purging is with a deſign to make Grace more fruitful; John 15. 2. He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.

* James 4. 6.

* 2 Cor. 7. 11.

Thus Divine Wiſdom doth both ſharpen and brighten us by the duſt of ſin, and ripen and mellow the fruits of Grace by the dung of Corruption. Grace grows the ſtronger by oppoſition, as the Fire burns hotteſt and cleareſt, when it is moſt ſurrounded by a cold Air; and our natural heat reaſſumes a new ſtrength by the coldneſs of the Winter. The ſoil under a Diamond, though an imperfection in it ſelf, increaſeth the beauty and luſtre of the Stone. The Enmity of Man was a commendation of the Grace of God: It occaſioned the breaking out of the Grace of God upon us; and is an occaſion, by the Wiſdom and Grace of God, of the increaſe of Grace many times in us.

How ſhould the Conſideration of God's Incomprehenſible Wiſdom, in the management of Evil, ſwallow us up in Admiration; who brings forth ſuch Beauty, ſuch eminent Diſcoveries of himſelf, ſuch excellent good to the Creature, out of the Bowels of the greateſt Contrarieties, making dark ſhadows ſerve to diſplay and beautifie to our apprehenſions the Divine Glory? If Evil were not in the World, men would not know what Good is: They would not behold the luſtre of Divine Wiſdom; as without Night we could not underſtand the beauty of the Day.

Though God is not the Author of Sin, becauſe of his Holineſs, yet he is the Adminiſtrator of Sin by his Wiſdom, and accompliſheth his own Purpoſes, by the Iniquities of his Enemies, and the Lapſes and Infirmities of his Friends.

Thus much for the Second, The Government of Man in his lapſed State, and the Government of Sin, wherein the Wiſdom of God doth wonderfully appear.

III. The Wiſdom of God appears in the Government of Man in his Converſion and Return to him. If there be a Counſel in framing the loweſt Creature, and in the minuteſt Paſſages of Providence; there muſt needs be a higher Wiſdom in the government of the Creature to a ſupernatural end, and framing the Soul to be a monument of his Glory. The Wiſdom of God is ſeen with more Admirations, and in more Varieties by the Angels in the Church, than in the Creation *; that is, in forming a Church out of the Rubbiſh of the World, out of Contrarieties and Contradictions to him, which is greater than the framing a Celeſtial and Elementary World out of a rude Chaos. The moſt glorious Bodies in the World, even thoſe of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, have not ſuch ſtamps of Divine Skill upon them, as the Soul of Man, nor is there ſo much of Wiſdom in the Fabrick and Faculties of that, as in the reduction of a blind, wilful, rebellious Soul to its own Happineſs, and God's Glory; Eph. 1. 11, 12. He worketh all things according to the Counſel of his own Will, that we ſhould be for the Praiſe of his Glory. If all things, then this, which is none of the leaſt of his Works: To the Praiſe of the Glory of his Goodneſs in his Work, and to the praiſe of the Rule of his Work, his Counſel, in both the act of his Will, and the act of his Wiſdom. The reſtoring of the Beauty of the Soul, and its fitneſs for its true end, ſpeaks no leſs Wiſdom, than the firſt draught of it in Creation: And the application of Redemption, and bringing forth the Fruits of it is as well an act of his Prudence, as the contrivance was of his Counſel.

* Eph. 3. 10.

Divine Wiſdom appears,

Firſt, In the Subjects of Converſion. His Goodneſs reigns in the very Duſt, and he erects the Walls and Ornaments of his Temple from the Clay and Mud of the World: He paſſes over the Wiſe, and Noble, and Mighty, that may pretend ſome grounds of boaſting in their own natural or acquired Endowments; and pitches upon the moſt contemptible Materials, wherewith to build a ſpiritual Tabernacle for himſelf, 1 Cor. 1. 26, 27. The fooliſh, and weak things of the World; thoſe that are naturally moſt unfit for it, and moſt refractory to it. Herein lies the skill of an Architect, to render the moſt knotty, crooked, and inform pieces, by his Art, ſubſervient to his main purpoſe and deſign. Thus God hath ordered from the beginning of the World, contrary Tempers, various Humours, divers Nations, as Stones of ſeveral Natures, to be a Building for himſelf, fitly framed together, and to be his own Family *. Who will queſtion the Skill that alters a black Jet into a clear Chryſtal, a Glow-worm into a Star, a Lion into a Lamb, and a Swine into a Dove? The more intricate and knotty any Buſineſs is, the more eminent is any Man's Ability and Prudence, in untying the Knots and bringing it to a good Iſſue. The more deſperate the Diſeaſe, the more admirable is the Phyſicians Skill in the Cure.

* 1 Cor. 3. 9.

He pitches upon Men for his Service, who have natural Diſpoſitions to ſerve him in ſuch Ways as he diſpoſeth of them, after their Converſion: So Paul was naturally a Conſcientious Man; what he did againſt Chriſt was from the Dictates of an erroneous Conſcience, ſoak'd in the Phariſaical Interpretations of the Jewiſh Law: He had a ſtrain of Zeal to proſecute what his depraved Reaſon and Conſcience did inform him in. God pitches upon this Man, and works him in the Fire for his Service: He alters not his natural Diſpoſition, to make him of a Conſtitution and Temper contrary to what he was before; but directs it to another Object, claps in another Byaſs into the Bowl, and makes his ill-governed Diſpoſitions move in a new way of his own Appointment, and guided that natural Heat to the ſervice of that Intereſt, which he was before ambitious to extirpate. As a high metled Horſe, when left to himſelf, creates both diſturbance and Danger. But under the conduct of a wiſe Rider, moves regularly; not by a change of his natural Fierceneſs, but a skilful Management of the Beaſt to the Rider's purpoſe.

2. In the Seaſons of Converſion. The Prudence of Man conſiſts in the timing the execution of his Counſels; and no leſs doth the Wiſdom of God conſiſt in this. As he is a God of Judgment, or Wiſdom, he wairs to introduce his Grace into the Soul in the fitteſt ſeaſon.

This Attribute, Paul in the ſtory of his own Converſion puts a particular remark upon, which he doth not upon any other, in that Catalogue he reckons up 1 Tim. 1. 17. Now unto the King Eternal, Immortal, Inviſible, the only Wiſe God, be Honour and Glory for ever and ever. Amen. A moſt ſolemn Doxology, wherein Wiſdom ſits upon the Throne above all the reſt, with a ſpecial Amen to the Glory of it; which refers to the timing of his Mercy ſo to Paul, as made moſt for the glory of his Grace, and the encouragement of others from him as the Pattern. God took him at a time when he was upon the brink of Hell; when he was ready to devour the new-born Infant Church at Damaſcus; when he was arm'd with all the Authority from without, and fired with all the Zeal from within, for the Proſecution of his Deſign: Then God ſeizeth upon him, and runs him in a Channel for his own Honour, and his Creatures Happineſs.

'Tis obſervable * how God ſet his Eye upon Paul all along in his furious courſe, and lets him have the Reins, without putting out his hand to bridle him; yet no motion he could take, but the Eye of God runs along with him; he ſuffered him to kick againſt the Pricks of Miracles, and the convincing Diſcourſe of Stephen, at his Martyrdom. There were many that voted for Stephen's Death, as the Witneſſes that flung the Stones firſt at him; but they are not named, only Saul, who teſtified his Approbation as well as the reſt, and that by watching the Witneſſes Cloaths while they were about that bloody Work, Acts 7. 58. The Witneſſes laid their Cloaths at a young Man's Feet, named Saul. Again, though Multitudes were conſenting to his Death, yet Acts 8. 1. Saul only is mentioned. God's Eye is upon him, yet he would not at that time ſtop his Fury. He goes on further, and makes havock of the Church, Acts 8. 3. He had ſurely many more Accomplices, but none are named (as if none regarded with any deſign of Grace) but Saul: Yet God would not reach out his Hand to Change him, but Eyes him; waiting for a fitter opportunity, which in his Wiſdom he did foreſee. And therefore, Acts 9. 1. the Spirit of God adds a Yet; Saul yet breathing out Threatnings. It was not God's time yet, but it would be ſhortly. But when Saul was putting in execution his Deſign againſt the Church of Damaſcus, when the Devil was at the top of his Hopes, and Saul in the height of his Fury, and the Chriſtians ſunk into the depth of their Fears; the Wiſdom of God lays hold of the opportunity, and by Paul's Converſion at this Seaſon, defeats the Devil, diſappoints the High Prieſts, ſhields his People, diſcharges their Fears by pulling Saul out of the

* which I have upon another occaſion noted.

the Devil's Hands, and forming Satan's Inſtrument to a holy Activity againſt him.

3. The Wiſdom of God appears, In the manner of Converſion. So great a Change God makes, not by a deſtruction, but with a preſervation of, and ſuitableneſs to Nature. As the Devil Tempts us, not by offering violence to our Natures, but by propoſing things convenient to our Corrupt Natures; ſo doth God ſolicite us to a Return, by Propoſals ſuited to our Faculties. As he doth in Nature convey Nouriſhment to Men, by means of the Fruits of the Earth, and produceth the Fruits of the Earth by the Influences of Heaven; the Influences of Heaven do not force the Earth, but excite that Natural vertue and ſtrength which is in it. So God produceth Grace in the Soul by the means of the Word, fitted to the capacity of Man, as Man, and proportion'd to his Rational Faculties, as Rational.

It would be contrary to the Wiſdom of God, to move Man like a Stone, to invert the order and privilege of that Nature which he ſettled in Creation; for then God would in vain have given Man Underſtanding and Will: Becauſe without moving men according to thoſe Faculties, they would remain unprofitable and unuſeful in man. * God doth not reduce us to himſelf, as Logs, by a meer force; or as Slaves forced by a Cudgel, to go forth to that place, and do that work which they have no ſtomach to: But he doth accommodate himſelf to thoſe Foundations he hath laid in our Nature, and guides us in a way agreeable thereunto, by an Action as ſweet as powerful; clearing our Underſtandings of dark Principles, whereby we may ſee his Truth, our own Miſery, and the Seat of our Happineſs; and bending our Wills according to this Light, to deſire and move conveniently to this End of our Calling: Efficaciouſly, yet agreeably; powerfully, yet without impoſing on our Natural Faculties; * ſweetly without Violence in ordering the Means, but effectually without Failing in accompliſhing the End. And therefore the Scripture calleth it, Teaching, John 6. 45. Alluring, Hoſ. 2. 14. Calling us to ſeek the Lord, Pſal. 27. 8. Teaching, is an act of Wiſdom; Alluring, an act of Love; Calling, an act of Authority: But none of them argue a violent Conſtraint, the Principle that moves the will is ſupernatural; but the will, as a Natural Faculty, concurs in the act or motion.

* Daillé ſur Philip. Part. 1. p. 545, 546

* Sanderſon, Part. 2. p. 205.

God doth not act in this in a way of Abſolute Power, without an Infinite Wiſdom, ſuiting himſelf to the Nature of the things he acts upon: He doth not change the Phyſical Nature, though he doth the Moral. As in the Government of the world, he doth not make heavy things aſcend, nor light things deſcend, ordinarily; but guides their Motions according to their Natural qualities: So God doth not ſtrain the Faculties beyond their due pitch. He lets the Nature of the Faculty remain, but changes the Principle in it: The Underſtanding remains Underſtanding, and the Will remains Will. But where there was before Folly in the Underſtanding, he puts in a Spirit of Wiſdom; and where there was before a ſtoutneſs in the Will, he forms it to a pliableneſs to his offers. He hath a Key to fit every Ward in the Lock, and opens the Will without injuring the Nature of the Will.

He doth not change the Soul by an alteration of the Faculties, but by an alteration of ſomething in them: Not by an Inroad upon them, or by meer Power, or a blind Inſtinct; but by propoſing to the Underſtanding ſomething to be known, and informing it of the Reaſonableneſs of his Precepts, and the Innate goodneſs and excellency of his Offers, and by inclining the will to love and embrace what is propoſed. And things are propos'd under thoſe Notions, which uſually move our wills and affections. We are moved by things as they are good, pleaſant, profitable; we entertain things as they make for us, and deteſt things as they are contrary to us. Nothing affects us but under ſuch qualities; and God ſuits his Encouragements to thoſe Natural Affections which are in us: His power and wiſdom go hand in hand together; his power to act what his wiſdom orders, and his wiſdom to conduct what his power executes. He brings men to him in ways ſuited to their Natural diſpoſitions. The ſtubborn he tears like a Lion, the gentle he wins like a Turtle, by ſweetneſs; he hath a Hammer to break the ſtout, and a Cord of Love to draw the more pliable Tempers: He works upon the more Rational in a way of Goſpel-Reaſon; upon the more Ingenuous in a way of kindneſs, and draws them by the Cords of Love.

The Wiſe Men were led to Chriſt by a Star, and means ſuited to the knowledge and ſtudy that thoſe Eaſtern Nations uſed, which was much in Aſtronomy: He worketh upon others by Miracles accommodated to every ones ſenſe, and ſo proportions the means according to the Nature of the Subjects he works upon.

IV. The Wiſdom of God is apparent in his Diſcipline, and Penal Evils. The wiſdom of Humane Governments is ſeen in the matter of their Laws, and in the Penalties of their Laws, and in the proportion of the Puniſhment to the Offence, and in the good that redounds from the Puniſhment either to the Offender, or to the Community.

The Wiſdom of God is ſeen in the Penalty of Death upon the Tranſgreſſion of his Law; both in that it was the greateſt Evil that man might fear, and ſo was a convenient means to keep him in his due bound, and alſo in the proportion of it to the Tranſgreſſion. Nothing leſs could be in a wiſe Juſtice inflicted upon an Offender for a Crime againſt the higheſt Being, and the Supream Excellency: But this hath been ſpoken of before, in the Wiſdom of his Laws. I ſhall only mention ſome few, it would be too tedious to run into all.

1. His Wiſdom appears in Judgments, in the ſuiting them to the qualities of Perſons, and nature of Sins. He deviſeth evil, Jer. 18. 11. his Judgments are fruits of Counſel. He alſo is wiſe, and will bring evil, Iſa. 31. 2. Evil ſuitable to the Perſon offending, and Evil ſuitable to the Offence committed: As the Husbandman doth his Threſhing-Inſtruments to the Grain: He hath a Rod for the Cummin, a tenderer Seed, and a Flayl for the harder; ſo hath God greater Judgments for the obdurate Sinner, and lighter for thoſe that have ſomething of tenderneſs in their wickedneſs, Iſa. 28. 27. 29. Becauſe he is wonderful in Counſel, and excellent in working; ſo ſome underſtand the place punctim, With the froward he will ſhew himſelf froward.

He proportions Puniſhment to the Sin, and writes the cauſe of the Judgment in the Forehead of the Judgment it ſelf. Sodom burned in Luſt, and was conſumed by Fire from Heaven. The Jews ſold Chriſt for Thirty pence, and at the Taking of Jeruſalem, Thirty of them were ſold for a Penny. So Adonibezek cut off the Thumbs and great Toes of others, and he is ſerved in the ſame kind, Judges 1. 7. The Babel Builders deſign'd an indiſſoluble Union, and God brings upon them an unintelligible Confuſion. And in Exod. 9. 9. the Aſhes of the Furnace, where the Iſraelites burnt the Egyptian Bricks, ſprinkled towards Heaven, brought Boyls upon the Egyptian Bodies, that they might feel in their own, what Pain they had cauſed in the Iſraelites fleſh; and find by the ſmart of the inflamed Scab, what they had made the Iſraelites endure. The Waters of the River Nilus are turned into Blood, wherein they had ſtifled the breath of the Iſraelites Infants: And at laſt the Prince, and the flower of their Nobility, are drowned in the Red Sea.

'Tis

'Tis part of the Wiſdom of Juſtice to proportion Puniſhment to the Crime, and the degrees of wrath to the degrees of malice in the Sin. Afflictions alſo are wiſely proportion'd: God, as a wiſe Phyſician, conſiders the Nature of the Humour, and Strength of the Patient, and ſuits his Medicines both to the one and the other; 1 Cor. 10. 13.

2. In the ſeaſons of Puniſhments and Afflictions. He ſtays till Sin be ripe, that his Juſtice may appear more equitable, and the Offender more inexcuſable; Dan. 9. 14. he watches upon the evil to bring it upon Men. To bring it in the juſt ſeaſon and order, for his righteous and gracious purpoſe; his Righteous purpoſe on the Enemies, and his Gracious purpoſe on his People.

Jeruſalem's Calamity came upon them, when the City was full of People at the Solemnity of the Paſſover, that he might mow down his Enemies at once, and Time their Deſtruction to ſuch a moment wherein they had Timed the Crucifixion of his Son. He watched over the Clouds of his Judgments, and kept them from pouring down, till his People the Chriſtians were provided for, and had departed out of the City to the Chambers and retiring Places God had provided for them. He made not Jeruſalem the Shambles for his Enemies, till he had made Pella and other Places, the Ark of his Friends. As Pliny tells us, the Providence of God holds the Seas in a Calm for fifteen days, that the Halcyons, little Birds, that frequent the Shoar, may build their Neſts, and hatch up their Young. The Judgment upon Sodom was ſuſpended for ſome hours, till Lot was ſecured.

* Daillè ſur 1 Cor. 10. p. 390

* God ſuffer'd not the Church to be Invaded by Violent Perſecutions, till ſhe was eſtabliſh'd in the Faith: He would not expoſe her to ſo great Combats, while ſhe was weak and feeble, but gave her time to ſo tifie her ſelf, to be render'd more capable of bearing up under them. He ſtifled all the motions of Paſſion the Idolaters might have for their Superſtition, till Religion was in ſuch a condition, as rather to be increaſed and purified, than extinguiſh'd by Oppoſition. Paul was ſecur'd from Nero's Chains, and the Nets of his Enemies, till he had broke off the Chain of the Devil from many Cities of the Gentiles, and catched them by the Net of the Goſpel out of the Sea of the World.

Thus the Wiſdom of God is ſeen in the Seaſons of Judgments and Afflictions.

3. It is apparent in the gracious iſſue of Afflictions and Penal Evils. It is a part of Wiſdom to bring Good out of the Evil of Puniſhment, as well as to bring Good out of Sin. The Church never was ſo like to Heaven, as when it was moſt Perſecuted by Hell: The Storms often cleans'd it, and the Lance often made it more healthful. Job's Integrity had not been ſo clear, nor his Patience ſo illuſtrious, had not the Devil been permitted to afflict him. God by his Wiſdom outwits Satan; when he by his Temptations intends to pollute us and buffet us, God orders it to puriſie us; he often brings the cleareſt Light out of the thickeſt Darkneſs, makes Poiſons to become Medicines. * Death it ſelf, the greateſt Puniſhment in this Life, and the entrance into Hell in its own Nature, he hath by his wiſe contrivance, made to his People the Gate of Heaven, and the Paſſage into Immortality. Penal Evils in a Nation often end in a Publick Advantage: Troubles and Wars among a People are many times not deſtroying, but Medicinal, and cure them of that Degeneracy, Luxury, and Effeminateneſs, they contracted by a long Peace

* Turretin. Serm. p. 53.

4. This Wiſdom is evident, In the various Ends which God brings about by Afflictions. The attainment of various Ends by one and the ſame Means, is the fruit of the Agents Prudence. By the ſame Affliction, the wiſe God corrects ſometimes for ſome baſe Affection, excites ſome ſleepy Grace, drives out ſome lurking Corruption, refines the Soul, and ruines the Luſt; diſcovers the greatneſs of a Crime, the Vanity of the Creature, and the Sufficiency in himſelf.

The Jews bind Paul, and by the Judge he is ſent to Rome; while his Mouth is ſtopt in Judea, 'tis open'd in one of the greateſt Cities of the World, and his Enemies unwittingly contribute to the increaſe of the knowledge of Chriſt by thoſe Chains, in that City * that triumphed over the Earth. And his Afflictive Bonds added Courage and Reſolution to others, Phil. 1. 14. Many waxing confident by my Bonds; which could not in their own Nature produce ſuch an effect, but by the Order and Contrivance of Divine Wiſdom: In their own Nature, they would rather make them diſguſt the Doctrine he ſuffered for, and cool their Zeal in the propagating of it, for fear of the ſame diſgrace and hardſhip they ſaw him ſuffer *. But the Wiſdom of God changed the Nature of theſe Fetters, and conducted them to the glory of his Name, the encouragement of others, the increaſe of the Goſpel, and the comfort of the Apoſtle himſelf, Phil. 1. 12, 13. 18. The Sufferings of Paul at Rome confirm'd the Philippians, a People at a diſtance from thence, in the Doctrine they had already received at his hands.

* Acts 28. 31.

* Daillè ſur Philip. Part. p. 116, 117.

Thus God makes Sufferings ſometimes which appear like Judgments, to be like the Viper on Paul's hand, Acts 28. 6. A means to clear up Innocence, and procure favour to the Doctrine among thoſe Barbarians. How often hath he multiplied the Church by Death and Maſſacres, and increaſed it by thoſe means uſed to annihilate it?

5. The Divine Wiſdom is apparent in the Deliverances he affords to other parts of the World, as well as to his Church. There are delicate compoſures, curious threds in his Webs, and he works them like an Artificer. A goodneſs wrought for them, curiouſly wrought, Pſal. 31. 19.

1. In making the Creatures ſubſervient in their Natural Order to his gracious Ends and Purpoſes. He orders things in ſuch a manner, as not to be neceſſitated to put forth an extraordinary Power in things, which ſome part of the Creation might accompliſh. Miraculous Productions would ſpeak his Power; but the ordering the Natural courſe of things, to occaſion ſuch effects they were never intended for, is one part of the glory of his Wiſdom. And that his Wiſdom may be ſeen in the courſe of Nature, he conducts the Motions of Creatures, and acts them in their own ſtrength; and doth that by various windings and turnings of them, which he might do in an inſtant by his Power, in a Supernatural way. Indeed, ſometimes he hath made Invaſions on Nature, and ſuſpended the Order of their Natural Law for a ſeaſon, to ſhew himſelf the Abſolute Lord and Governour of Nature: Yet if frequent Alterations of this Nature were made, they would impede the knowledge of the Nature of things, and be ſome bar to the diſcovery and glory of his Wiſdom; which is beſt ſeen by moving the wheels of inferiour Creatures, in an exact regularity to his own Ends. He might, when his little Church in Jacob's Family was like to ſtarve in Canaan, have for their preſervation turn'd the Stones of the Country into Bread; but he ſends them down to Egypt to procure Corn, that a way may be opened for their removal into that Country; the Truth of his Prediction in their Captivity accompliſh'd, and a way made after the declaration of his great Name Jehovah, both in the fidelity of his Word, and the greatneſs of his Power, in their deliverance from that Furnace of Affliction.

He

He might have ſtruck Goliah, the Captain of the Philiſtines Army, with a Thunder-bolt from Heaven, when he blaſphemed his Name, and ſcar'd his People; but he uſed the Natural ſtrength of a Stone, and the Artificial motion of a Sling, by the Arm of David, to confront the Giant, and thereby to free Judea from the ravage of a Potent Enemy. He might have delivered the Jews from Babylon by as ſtrange Miracles, as he uſed in their Deliverance from Egypt: He might have plagu'd their Enemies, gather'd his People into a Body, and protected them by the Bulwark of a Cloud and a Pillar of Fire, againſt the Aſſaults of their Enemies. But he uſes the Differences between the Perſians and thoſe of Babylon, to accompliſh his Ends. How ſometimes hath the veering about of the Wind on a ſudden, been the loſs of a Navy, when it hath been upon the point of Victory, and driven back the Deſtruction upon thoſe which intended it for others? And the accidental ſtumbling, or the natural fierceneſs of a Horſe, flung down a General in the midſt of a Battle, where he hath loſt his Life by the throng, and his Death hath brought a Defeat to his Army, and Deliverance to the other Party, that were upon the brink of Ruine? Thus doth the Wiſdom of God link things together according to Natural Order, to work out his intended Preſervation of a People.

2. In the ſeaſon of Deliverance. The Timing of Affairs is a part of the Wiſdom of Man, and an eminent part of the Wiſdom of God. It is in due ſeaſon he ſends the former and the latter Rain, when the Earth is in the greateſt Indigence, and when his Influences may moſt contribute to the bringing forth and ripening the Fruit. The dumb Creatures have *their meat from him in due ſeaſon: And in his due ſeaſon have his darling People their Deliverance. When Paul was upon his Journey to Damaſcus with a Perſecuting Commiſſion, he is ſtruck down for the ſecurity of the Church in that City. The Nature of the Lion is changed in due ſeaſon for the preſervation of the Lambs from worrying. The Iſraelites are miraculouſly reſcued from Egypt, when their Wits were at a loſs, when their danger, to Human Underſtanding, was unavoidable; when Earth and Sea refus'd Protection, then the Wiſdom and Power of Heaven ſtept in to effect that, which was paſt the skill of the Conductors of that Multitude And when the Lives of the Jews lay at the ſtake, and their Necks were upon the Block at the Mercy of their Enemies Swords by an Order from Shuſhan; not only a Reprieve, but a Triumph arrives to the Jews, by the VViſdom of God guiding the Affair, whereby of Perſons deſign'd to Execution, they are made Conquerors, and have Opportunity to exerciſe their Revenge inſtead of their Patience, proving Triumphers where they expected to be Sufferers*. How ſtrangely doth God by ſecret ways bow the hearts of Men, and the Nature of Things to the execution of that which he deſigns, notwithſtanding all the reſiſtance of that which would traverſe the ſecurity of his People? How often doth he trap the wicked in the work of their own hands, make their confidence to become their ruine, and enſnare them in thoſe Nets they wrought and laid for others? Pſal. 9. 16. The wicked is ſnared in the works of his own hands. He ſcatters the proud in the imagination of their hearts, Luke 1.51. in the height of their hopes, when their Deſigns have been laid ſo deep in the Foundation, and knit, and cemented ſo cloſe in their Superſtructure, that no Humane Power or Wiſdom could raze them down: He hath then diſappointed their Projects, and befool'd their Craft. How often hath he kept back the Fire, when it hath been ready to devour; broke the Arrows when they have been prepared in the Bow; turned the Spear into the bowels of the Bearers, and wounded them at the very inſtant they were ready to wound others.

*Pſal. 104. 27.

*Eſther 8 & 9.

3. In ſuiting Inſtruments to his purpoſe. He either finds them fit, or makes them on a ſudden fit for his gracious ends. If he hath a Tabernacle to build, he will fit a Bezaleel and Aholiab with the Spirit of Wiſdom and Underſtanding in all cunning workmanſhip, Exod. 31. 3. 6. If he finds them crooked pieces, he can, like a wiſe Architect, make them ſtrait Beams for the rearing his Houſe, and for the honour of his Name.

He ſometimes picks out Men, according to their Natural Tempers, and employs them in his Work: Jehu, a Man of a furious Temper, and ambitious Spirit, is called out for the Deſtruction of Ahab's Houſe. Moſes, a Man furniſh'd with all Egyptian Wiſdom, fitted by a generous Education, prepared alſo by the Affliction he met with in his flight, and one who had had the benefit of Converſation with Jethro, a Man of more than an ordinary Wiſdom and Goodneſs, as appears by his Prudent and Religious Counſel; this Man is called out to be the Head and Captain of an oppreſs'd People, and to reſcue them from their Bondage, and ſettle the firſt National Church in the World. So Elijah, a high-ſpirited Man, of a hot and angry Temper, one that ſlighted the Frowns, and undervalued the Favour of Princes, is ſet up to ſtem the Torrent of the Iſraelitiſh Idolatry. So Luther, a Man of the ſame Temper, is drawn out by the ſame Wiſdom to encounter the Corruptions in the Church, againſt ſuch Oppoſition, which a milder Temper would have ſunk under. The Earth, in Rev. 12. 16. is made an Inſtrument to help the woman: When the Grandees of that Age transferred the Imperial Power upon Conſtantine, who became afterwards a Protecting and Nurſing Father to the Church, an end which many of his Favourers never deſign'd nor ever dreamt of: But God by his Infinite Wiſdom made theſe ſeveral Deſigns like ſeveral Arrows ſhot at Rovers, meet in one Mark to which he directed them, viz. in bringing forth an Inſtrument to render Peace to the World, and Security and Increaſe to his Church.

III. The Wiſdom of God doth wonderfully appear in Redemption. His Wiſdom in Creation raviſheth the Eye and Underſtanding; his Wiſdom in Government, doth no leſs affect a curious Obſerver of the Links, and Concatenation of the Means; but his Wiſdom in Redemption mounts the Mind to a greater aſtoniſhment. The works of Creation are the Footſteps of his Wiſdom; the work of Redemption is the Face of his Wiſdom: A Man is better known by the Features of his Face, than by the Prints of his Feet. We with open face, or a revealed face, beholding the glory of the Lord, 2 Cor. 3. 18. Face there, refers to God, not to us; the glory of God's Wiſdom is now open, and no longer covered and veiled by the ſhadows of the Law. As we behold the Light glorious, as ſcattered in the Air before the appearance of the Sun, but more glorioufly in the Face of the Sun, when it begins its Race in our Horizon. All the Wiſdom of God in Creation and Government in his variety of Laws, was like the Light, the three firſt days of the Creation, diſpers'd about the World, but the fourth day it was more glorious, when all gathered into the Body of the Sun, Gen. 1. 4. 16. So the Light of Divine Wiſdom and Glory, was ſcattered about the World, and ſo more obſcure, till the fourth Divine day of the World, about the four thouſandth Year, it was gathered into one Body, the Sun of Righteouſneſs, and ſo ſhone out more glorioufly to Men and Angels. All things are weaker, the thinner they are extended, but ſtronger, the more they are united and compacted in one Body and Appearance. In Chriſt, in the diſpenſation by him, as well as in his Perſon, were hid all the Treaſures of Wiſdom and Knowledge, Coloſſ. 2. 3. Some Doles of Wiſdom were given out in Creation, but the Treaſures of it opened in Redemption; the higheſt Degrees of it that ever God did exert in the World. Chriſt is therefore called the Wiſdom of God, as well as the Power of God, 1 Cor. 1. 24. and the Goſpel is called the Wiſdom of God. Chriſt is the Wiſdom of God principally, and the Goſpel inſtrumentally, as it is the Power of God inſtrumentally to ſubdue the Heart to himſelf. This is wrapped up in the appointing Chriſt as Redeemer, and open'd to us in the Revelation of it by the Goſpel.

more

1. It is a hidden Wiſdom. In this regard, God is ſaid in the Text to be only wiſe; and it is ſaid to be a hidden wiſdom, 1 Tim. 1. 17. and wiſdom in a myſtery, 1 Cor. 2. 7. incomprehenſible to the ordinary capacity of an Angel, more than the abſtruſe qualities of the Creatures are to the underſtanding of Man. No wiſdom of Men or Angels is able to ſearch all the veins of this Mine, to tell all the threds of this Web, or to underſtand the luſtre of it; they are as far from an ability fully to comprehend it, as they were at firſt to contrive it. That wiſdom that invented it, can only comprehend it. In the uncreated underſtanding only there is a clearneſs of light without any ſhadow of darkneſs. We come as ſhort of full apprehenſions of it, as a Child doth of the Counſel of the wiſeſt Prince. It is ſo hidden from us, that without revelation we could not have the leaſt imagination of it; and though it be revealed to us, yet without the help of an infiniteneſs of underſtanding, we cannot fully fathom it. 'Tis ſuch a Tractate of divine wiſdom, that the Angels never before had ſeen the Edition of it, till it was publiſh'd to the World, Eph. 3. 10. To the intent that now unto principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church, the manifold wiſdom of God. Now made known to them, not before; and now made known to them in the heavenly places. They had not the knowledge of all heavenly Myſteries, though they had the poſſeſſion of heavenly Glory: They knew the Prophecies of it in the Word, but attained not a clear Interpretation of thoſe Prophecies, till the things that were prophecied of came upon the Stage.

2. Manifold Wiſdom: So 'tis called. As manifold as myſterious. Variety in the Myſtery, and Myſtery in every part of the Variety. It was not one ſingle act, but a variety of counſels met in it; a conjunction of excellent ends and excellent means. The glory of God, the ſalvation of Man, the defeat of the Apoſtate Angels, the diſcovery of the Bleſſed Trinity in their Nature, Operations, their combin'd and diſtinct acts and expreſſions of Goodneſs; The means are the conjunction of two Natures infinitely diſtant from one another; the union of Eternity and Time, of Mortality and Immortality: Death is made the way to Life, and Shame the path to Glory. The weakneſs of the Croſs is the reparation of Man; and the Creature is made wiſe by the fooliſhneſs of preaching: Fallen man grows rich by the poverty of the Redeemer, and man is filled by the emptineſs of God: The Heir of Hell made a Son of God, by God's taking upon him the form of a Servant; the Son of Man advanc'd to the higheſt degree of Honour, by the Son of God becoming of no reputation.

'Tis called, Eph. 1. 8. abundance of Wiſdom and Prudence. Wiſdom in the Eternal Counſel, contriving a way; Prudence in the Temporary Revelation, ordering all Affairs and Occurrences in the World for the attaining the end of his Counſel. Wiſdom refers to the Myſtery; Prudence to the manifeſtation of it in fit Ways and convenient Seaſons. Wiſdom, to the Contrivance and Order; Prudence, to the Execution and Accompliſhment. In all things God acted as became him, as a wiſe and juſt Governour of the World, Heb. 2. 10. Whether the wiſdom of God might not have found out ſome other way, or whether he were, in regard of the neceſſity and naturalneſs of his Juſtice, limited to this, is not the Queſtion: But that it is the beſt and wiſeſt way for the manifeſtation of his Glory, is out of queſtion.

This wiſdom will appear in the different Intereſts reconciled by it. In the Subject, the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity, wherein they were reconciled: In the two Natures, wherein he accompliſh'd it; whereby God is made known to Man in his Glory, Sin eternally condemned, and the repenting and believing Sinner eternally reſcued. The Honour and Righteouſneſs of the Law vindicated both in the Precept and Penalty. The Devil's Empire overthrown by the ſame Nature he had overturned, and the Subtilty of Hell defeated by that Nature he had ſpoiled: The Creature engaged in the very act to the higheſt Obedience and Humility, that as God appears as a God upon his Throne, the Creature might appear in the loweſt poſture of a Creature, in the depths of Reſignation and Dependance; the publication of this made in the Goſpel, by Ways congruous to the Wiſdom which appeared in the execution of his Counſel, and the Conditions of enjoying the fruit of it, moſt wiſe and reaſonable.

1. The greateſt different Intereſts are reconcil'd, Juſtice in puniſhing, and Mercy in pardoning. For Man had broken the Law, and plung'd himſelf into a Gulf of Miſery: The Sword of Vengeance was unſheathed by Juſtice, for the Puniſhment of the Criminal: The Bowels of Compaſſion were ſtirred by Mercy, for the reſcue of the miſerable. Juſtice ſeverely beholds the Sin, and Mercy compaſſionately reflects upon the Miſery. Two different claims are entred by thoſe concerned Attributes: Juſtice votes for Deſtruction, and Mercy votes for Salvation. Juſtice would draw the Sword, and drench it in the Blood of the Offender; Mercy would draw the Sword, and turn it from the Breaſt of the Sinner. Juſtice would edge it, and Mercy would blunt it. The Arguments are ſtrong on both ſides.

1. Juſtice pleads. I arraign, before the Tribunal, a Rebel, who was the glorious Work of thy Hands, the Center of thy rich Goodneſs, and a Counterpart of thy own Image; he is indeed miſerable, whereby to excite thy Compaſſion; but he is not miſerable, without being Criminal. Thou didſt create him in a State, and with Ability to be otherwiſe: The riches of thy Bounty aggravate the blackneſs of his Crime. He is a Rebel, not by neceſſity, but will. What conſtraint was there upon him to liſten to the Counſels of the Enemy of God? What force could there be upon him, ſince it is without the compaſs of any Creature to work upon, or conſtrain the Will? Nothing of Ignorance can excuſe him; the Law was not ambiguouſly expreſs'd, but in plain Words, both as to Precept and Penalty it was writ in his Nature in legible Characters: Had he received any diſguſt from thee after his Creation, it would not excuſe his Apoſtacy, ſince, as a Sovereign, thou wert not obliged to thy Creature. Thou hadſt provided all things richly for him; he was crowned with Glory and Honour: Thy infinite Power had beſtowed upon him an Habitation richly furniſhed, and Varieties of Servants to attend him. Whatever he viewed without, and whatever he viewed within himſelf, were ſeveral Marks of thy Divine Bounty, to engage him to Obedience: Had there been ſome reaſon of any diſguſt, it could not have balanced that Kindneſs which had ſo much reaſon to oblige him: However, he had received no Courteſie from the fallen Angel to oblige him to turn into his Camp. Was it not enough, that one of thy Creatures would have ſtript thee of the Glory of Heaven, but this alſo muſt deprive thee of thy Glory upon Earth, which was due from him to thee as his Creator? Can he charge the difficulty of the Command? No: It was rather below, than above his Strength. He might rather complain that it was no higher, whereby his Obedience and Gratitude might have a larger ſcope, and a more ſpacious Field to move in, than a Precept ſo light, ſo eaſie, as to abſtain from one Fruit in the Garden. What Excuſe can he have, that would prefer the liquoriſhneſs of his Senſe before the dictates of his Reaſon, and the Obligations of his Creation? The Law thou didſt ſet him, was righteous and reaſonable, and ſhall Righteouſneſs and Reaſon be rejected by the Supream and Infallible Reaſon, becauſe the rebellious Creature hath trampled upon it? What? Muſt God abrogate his holy Law, becauſe the Creature hath ſlighted it? What Reflection will this be upon the Wiſdom that enacted it; and upon the Equity of the Command and Sanction of it? Either Man muſt ſuffer, or the Holy Law be expunged, and for ever out of date. And is it not better Man ſhould Eternally ſmart under his Crime, than any diſhonourable Reflections of Unrighteouſneſs be caſt upon the Law, and of Folly, and want of Foreſight upon the Lawgiver? Not to puniſh, would be to approve the Devil's Lye, and juſtifie the Creature's Revolt. It would be a Condemnation of thy own Law as unrighteous, and a Sentencing thy own Wiſdom as imprudent. Better Man ſhould for ever bear the Puniſhment of his Offence, than God bear the Diſhonour of his Attributes: Better Man ſhould be miſerable, than God ſhould be unrighteous, unwiſe, falſe, and tamely bear the denial of his Sovereignty. But what advantage would it be to gratifie Mercy by Pardoning the Malefactor? Beſides the irreparable diſhonour to the Law, the falſifying thy veracity in not executing the denounced Threatning, he would receive Incouragement by ſuch a Grace to ſpurn more at thy Sovereignty, and oppoſe thy Holineſs by running on in a Courſe of Sin with Hopes of Impunity: If the Creature be reſtored, it cannot be expected, that he that hath fared ſo well, after the breach of it, ſhould be very careful of a future Obſervance: His eaſie readmiſſion would abett him in the Repetition of his Offence, and thou ſhalt ſoon find him caſt off all Moral Dependance on thee. Shall he be reſtored without any Condition, or Covenant? he is a Creature not to be governed without a Law, and a Law is not to be enacted without a Penalty. What future regard will he have to thy Precept, or what fear will he have of thy Threatning, if his Crime be ſo lightly paſt over? Is it the ſtability of thy Word? What Reaſon will he have to give credit to that, which he hath found already diſregarded by thy ſelf? Thy Truth in future Threatnings will be of no force with him, who hath experienced thy laying it aſide in the former. 'Tis neceſſary therefore that the rebellious Creature ſhould be puniſhed for the Preſervation of the Honour of the Law, and the Honour of the Law-giver, with all thoſe Perfections that are united in the compoſure of it.

2. Secondly, Mercy doth not want a Plea. 'Tis true indeed, the Sin of Man wants not its Aggravations: He hath ſlighted thy Goodneſs, and accepted thy Enemy as his Counſellor; but it was not a pure Act of his own, as the Devil's Revolt was: He had a Tempter, and the Devil had none: He had, I acknowledge, an Underſtanding to know thy Will, and a Power to obey it; yet he was mutable, and had a Capacity to fall. It was no difficult task that was ſet him, nor a hard yoke that was laid upon him; yet he had a brutiſh part, as well as a rational, and Senſe as well as Soul; whereas the fallen Angel was a pure intellectual Spirit. Did God create the World to ſuffer an eternal Diſhonour, in letting himſelf be outwitted by Satan, and his Work wreſted out of his Hands? Shall the Work of eternal Counſel preſently ſink into irreparable Deſtruction, and the Honour of an Almighty and wiſe Work be loſt in the ruin of the Creature? This would ſeem contrary to the Nature of thy Goodneſs, to make Man only to render him miſerable: To deſign him in his Creation for the Service of the Devil, and not for the Service of his Creator. What elſe could be the iſſue, if the chief work of thy Hand, defaced preſently after the erecting, ſhould for ever remain in this marred Condition: What can be expected upon the continuance of his Miſery, but a perpetual hatred, and enmity of thy Creature againſt thee? Did God in Creation deſign his being hated, or his being loved by his Creature? Shall God make a holy Law, and have no Obedience to that Law from that Creature whom it was made to govern? Shall the curious Workmanſhip of God, and the excellent Engravings of the Law of Nature in his Heart, be ſo ſoon defaced, and remain in that blotted Condition for ever? This Fall thou couldſt not but in the Treaſures of thy Infinite Knowledge foreſee; why hadſt thou Goodneſs then to create him in an Integrity, if thou wouldſt not have Mercy to pity him in Miſery? Shall thy Enemy for ever trample upon the Honour of thy Work, and triumph over the Glory of God, and applaud himſelf in the Succeſs of his ſubtilty? Shall thy Creature only paſſively glorifie thee as an Avenger, and not actively as a Compaſſionater? Am not I a Perfection of thy Nature as well as Juſtice? Shall Juſtice ingroſs all, and I never come into view? 'Tis reſolved already, that the fallen Angels ſhall be no Subjects for me to exerciſe my ſelf upon; and I have now leſs Reaſon than before to plead for them: They fell with a full conſent of Will, without any Motion from another; and not content with their own Apoſtacy, they envy thee, and thy Glory upon Earth, as well as in Heaven, and have drawn into their Party the beſt part of the Creation below: Shall Satan plunge the whole Creation in the ſame irreparable ruin with himſelf: If the Creature be reſtored, will he contract a boldneſs in Sin by Impunity? Haſt thou not a Grace to render him ingenious in Obedience, as well as a Compaſſion to recover him from Miſery? What will hinder, but that ſuch a Grace, which hath eſtabliſhed the ſtanding Angels, may eſtabliſh this recovered Creature? If I am utterly excluded from exerciſing my ſelf on Men, as I have been from Devils, a whole Species is loſt; nay, I can never expect to appear upon the Stage: If thou wilt quite ruin him by Juſtice, and create another World, and another Man, if he ſtand, thy Bounty will be eminent, yet there is no room for Mercy to act unleſs by the Commiſſion of Sin, he expoſeth himſelf to Miſery; and if Sin enter into another World, I have little hopes to be heard then, if I am rejected now. Worlds will be perpetually created by Goodneſs, Wiſdom, and Power: Sin entring into theſe Worlds, will be perpetually puniſhed by Juſtice; and Mercy, which is a perfection of thy Nature, will for ever be commanded ſilence, and lie wrapt up in an eternal Darkneſs. Take occaſion now therefore to expoſe me to the Knowledge of thy Creature, ſince without Miſery, Mercy can never ſet foot into the World.

Mercy pleads, if Man be ruined, the Creation is in vain; Juſtice pleads, if Man be not ſentenced, the Law is in vain; Truth backs Juſtice, and Grace abetts Mercy. What ſhall be done in this ſeeming Contradiction? Mercy is not manfeſted, if man be not pardoned; Juſtice will complain, if man be not puniſhed.

3. An expedient is found out by the Wiſdom of God to anſwer theſe Demands, and adjuſt the Differences between them. The Wiſdom of God anſwers, I will ſatisfie your Pleas. The Pleas of Juſtice ſhall be ſatisfied in puniſhing, and the Pleas of Mercy ſhall be received in pardoning. Juſtice ſhall not complain for want of Puniſhment, nor Mercy for want of Compaſſion. I will have an infinite Sacrifice to content Juſtice; and the Virtue and Fruit of that Sacrifice ſhall delight Mercy. Here ſhall Juſtice have Puniſhment to accept, and Mercy ſhall have Pardon to beſtow. The Rights of both are preſerved, and the Demands of both amicably accorded in Puniſhment and Pardon, by transferring the Puniſhment of our Crimes upon a ſurety, exacting a Recompence from his Blood by Juſtice, and conferring Life and Salvation upon us by Mercy, without the Expence of one drop of our own. Thus is Juſtice ſatisfied in its Severities, and Mercy in its Indulgencies. The Riches of Grace are twiſted with the Terrors of Wrath. The Bowels of Mercy are wound about the flaming Sword of Juſtice, and the Sword of Juſtice protects and ſecures the Bowels of Mercy. Thus is God righteous without being cruel, and merciful without being unjuſt; his Righteouſneſs inviolable, and the World recoverable. Thus is a reſplendent Mercy brought forth in the midſt of all the Curſes, Confuſions, and Wrath threatned to the Offender.

Thus is the admirable temperament found out by the Wiſdom of God His Juſtice is honoured in the Sufferings of Man's Surety; and his Mercy is honoured in the Application of the propitiation to the Offender. Rom. 3. 24, 25. Being juſtified freely by his Grace, through the Redemption that is in Jeſus Chriſt: Whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation through Faith in his Blood, to declare his Righteouſneſs for the Remiſſion of Sins that are paſt, through the Forbearance of God. Had we in our Perſons been Sacrifices to Juſtice, Mercy had for ever been unknown; had we been ſolely ſoſtered by Mercy, Juſtice had for ever been ſecluded; had we, being guilty, been abſolved, Mercy might have rejoyced, and Juſtice might have complained; had we been ſolely puniſhed, Juſtice would have triumphed and Mercy grieved. But by this medium of Redemption, neither hath ground of Complaint: Juſtice hath nothing to charge, when the Puniſhment is inflicted; Mercy hath whereof to boaſt when the Surety is accepted. The Debt of the Sinner is transferred upon the Surety, that the Merit of the Surety may be conferred upon the Sinner; ſo that God now deals with our Sins in a way of conſuming Juſtice, and with our Perſons in a way of relieving Mercy. 'Tis highly better, and more glorious, than if the Claim of one had been granted, with the Excluſion of the Demand of the other: It had then been either an unrighteous Mercy, or a mercileſs Juſtice: 'Tis now a righteous Mercy, and a merciful Juſtice.

2. The Wiſdom of God appears in the Subject or Perſon wherein theſe were accorded: The ſecond Perſon in the bleſſed Trinity. There was a congruity in the Sons undertaking and effecting it rather than any other Perſon, according to the order of the Perſons, and the ſeveral Functions of the Perſons, as repreſented in Scripture. The Father, after Creation, is the Law-giver, and preſents Man with the Image of his own Holineſs, and the way to his Creatures Happineſs: But after the Fall, man was too impotent to perform the Law, and too polluted to enjoy a Felicity. Redemption was then neceſſary; not that it was neceſſary for God to redeem man, but it was neceſſary for man's Happineſs, that he ſhould be recovered. To this the ſecond Perſon is appointed, that by Communion with him, man might derive a Happineſs, and be brought again to God. But ſince man was blind in his Underſtanding, and an Enemy in his Will to God, there muſt be the exerting of a Vertue to enlighten his Mind, and bend his Will to underſtand, and accept of this Redemption: And this work is aſſigned to the third Perſon, the Holy Ghoſt.

1. It was not congruous that the Father ſhould aſſume Human Nature, and ſuffer in it for the Redemption of Man. He was firſt in order, he was the Law-giver, and therefore to be the Judge. As Lawgiver, it was not convenient he ſhould ſtand in the ſtead of the Law-breaker; and as a Judge, it was as little convenient he ſhould be reputed a Malefactor: That he who had made a Law againſt Sin, denounced a Penalty upon the Commiſſion of Sin, and whoſe part it was actually to puniſh the Sinner, ſhould become Sin for the wilful Tranſgreſſor of his Law. He being the Rector, how could he be an Advocate and Interceſſor to himſelf? How could he be the Judge and the Sacrifice? A Judge, and yet a Mediator to himſelf? If he had been the Sacrifice, there muſt be ſome Perſon to examine the validity of it, and pronounce the Sentence of Acceptance. Was it agreeable that the Son ſhould ſit upon a Throne of Judgment, and the Father ſtand at the Bar, and be reſponſible to the Son? That the Son ſhould be in the place of a Governour, and the Father in the place of the Criminal? That the Father ſhould be bruiſed * by the Son, as the Son was by the Father; * that the Son ſhould awaken a Sword againſt the Father, as the Father did againſt the Son; that the Father ſhould be ſent by the Son, as the Son was by the Father *: The order of the Perſons in the bleſſed Trinity had been inverted and diſturbed. Had the Father been ſent, he had not been firſt in Order; the Sender is before the Perſon ſent: As the Father begets, and the Son is begotten, Joh. 1. 14. ſo the Father ſends, and the Son is ſent. He whoſe order is to ſend, cannot properly ſend himſelf.

* Iſa. 53. 10.
* Zach. 13. 7.
* Gal. 4. 4.

2. Nor was it congruous that the Spirit ſhould be ſent upon this Affair. If the Holy Ghoſt had been ſent to redeem us, and the Son to apply that Redemption to us, the Order of the Perſons had alſo been inverted: The Spirit then, who was third in Order, had been ſecond in Operation. The Son would then have received of the Spirit, as the Spirit doth now of Chriſt, and ſhew it unto us, Joh. 1. 15. As the Spirit proceeded from the Father and the Son, ſo the proper Function and Operation of it, was in order after the Operations of the Father and the Son: Had the Spirit been ſent to redeem us, and the Son ſent by the Father and the Spirit to apply that Redemption to us; the Son in his Acts had proceeded from the Father and the Spirit; the Spirit, as Sender, had been in order before the Son; whereas the Spirit is called the Spirit of Chriſt, as ſent by Chriſt from the Father, Gal. 4. 6 Joh. 15. 27. But as the Order of the Works, ſo the Order of the Perſons is preſerved in their ſeveral Operations Creation, and a Law to govern the Creature, precedes Redemption. Nothing, or that which hath no Being, is not capable of a redeemed Being. Redemption ſuppoſeth the exiſtence and the miſery of a Perſon redeemed. As Creation preceeds Redemption, ſo Redemption preceeds the application of it. As Redemption ſuppoſeth the Being of the Creature, ſo Application of Redemption Redemption ſuppoſeth the efficacy of Redemption. According to the order of theſe works is the order of the Operations of the three Perſons. Creation belongs to the Father, the firſt Perſon. Redemption, the ſecond work, is the Function of the Son, the ſecond Perſon. Application, the third work, is the Office of the Holy Ghoſt, the third Perſon. The Father orders it, the Son acts it, the Holy Ghoſt applies it. He purifies our Souls to underſtand, believe, and love theſe Myſteries. He forms Chriſt in the womb of the Soul, as he did the Body of Chriſt in the womb of the Virgin. As the Spirit of God moved upon the waters, to garniſh and adorn the world, after the matter of it was formed, Gen. 1. 2. ſo he moves upon the heart, to ſupple it to a complyance with Chriſt, and draws the Lineaments of the new Creation in the Soul, after the Foundation is laid.

The Son pays the Price that was due from us to God, and the Spirit is the earneſt of the Promiſes of Life and Glory purchaſed by the Merit of that Death. * 'Tis to be obſerved, that the Father, under the diſpenſation of the Law, propoſed the Commands, with the Promiſes and Threatnings, to the Underſtandings of Men; and Chriſt, under the diſpenſation of Grace, when he was upon the Earth, propoſeth the Goſpel as the Means of Salvation, exhorts to Faith as the Condition of Salvation; but it was neither the Function of the one, or the other, to diſplay ſuch an Efficacy in the Underſtanding, and Will to make Men believe and obey, and therefore there were ſuch few Converſions in the time of Chriſt, by his Miracles: But this work was reſerved, for the fuller and brighter appearance of the Spirit, whoſe Office it was to convince the World of the neceſſity of a Redeemer, becauſe of their loſt condition; of the Perſon of the Redeemer, the Son of God; of the ſufficiency and efficacy of Redemption, becauſe of his Righteouſneſs and acceptation by the Father. The Wiſdom of God is ſeen in preparing and preſenting the Objects, and then in making impreſſion of them upon the Subjects he intends. And thus is the order of the three Perſons preſerved.

* Amyrant. Moral. Tom. 5. p. 478, 479 480.

3. The ſecond Perſon had the greateſt congruity to this work. He by whom God created the World, was moſt conveniently employed in reſtoring the defaced World: Who more fit to recover it from its lapſed ſtate, than he that had erected it in its Primitive ſtate? Heb. 1. 2. He was the light of men in Creation, and therefore it was moſt reaſonable he ſhould be the light of men in Redemption. Who fitter to reform the Divine Image, than he that firſt formed it? Who fitter to ſpeak for us to God, than he who was the Word? John 1. 1. Who could better intercede with the Father, than he who was the only begotten and beloved Son? Who ſo fit to redeem the forfeited Inheritance, as the Heir of all things? Who fitter and better to prevail for us to have the Right of Children, than he that poſſeſſed it by Nature? We fell from being the Sons of God, and who fitter to introduce us into an adopted ſtate, than the Son of God? Herein was an expreſſion of the richer Grace, becauſe the firſt ſin was immediately againſt the wiſdom of God, by an ambitious affectation of a wiſdom equal to God: That that Perſon, who was the Wiſdom of God, ſhould be made a Sacrifice for the expiation of the ſin againſt wiſdom.

John 1. 4.

3. The Wiſdom of God is ſeen in the two Natures of Chriſt, whereby his Redemption was accompliſhed. The Union of the two Natures was the Foundation of the Union of God, and the fallen Creature.

1. The Union it ſelf is admirable: The Word is made Fleſh, John 1. 14. One equal with God in the form of a Servant, Phil. 2. 7. When the Apoſtle ſpeaks of God manifeſted in the fleſh, he ſpeaks the Wiſdom of God in a Myſtery, 1 Tim. 3. 16. That which is incomprehenſible to the Angels, which they never imagined before it was revealed, which perhaps they never knew till they beheld it. I am ſure, under the Law the Figures of the Cherubims were placed in the Sanctuary with their faces looking towards the Propitiatory, in a perpetual poſture of Contemplation and Admiration, Exod. 37. 9. to which the Apoſtle alludes, 1 Pet. 1. 12.

Myſterious is the wiſdom of God to unite Finite and Infinite, Almightineſs and Weakneſs, Immortality and Mortality, Immutability with a Thing ſubject to Change; to have a Nature from Eternity, and yet a Nature ſubject to the Revolutions of Time; a Nature to make a Law, and a Nature to be ſubjected to the Law; to be God bleſſed for ever, in the boſom of his Father, and an Infant expoſed to Calamities from the womb of his Mother: Terms ſeeming moſt diſtant from union, moſt uncapable of conjunction, to ſhake hands together, to be moſt intimately conjoyned; Glory and Vileneſs, Fulneſs and Emptineſs, Heaven and Earth, the Creature with the Creator; he that made all things, in one Perſon with a Nature that is made; Immanuel, God and Man in one: That which is moſt Spiritual, to partake of that which is Carnal Fleſh and Blood: * One with the Father in his Godhead, one with us in his Manhood: The Godhead to be in him in the fulleſt Perfection, and the Manhood in the greateſt Purity: The Creature one with the Creator, and the Creator one with the Creature. Thus is the incomprehenſible wiſdom of God declared in the Word being made Fleſh.

* Heb. 2. 14.

2. In the manner of this Union. A Union of two Natures, yet no Natural Union. It tranſcends all the Unions viſible among Creatures *: It is not like the Union of Stones in a Building, or of two pieces of Timber faſtned together, which touch one another only in their Superficies and outſide, without any intimacy with one another. By ſuch a kind of Union, God would not be Man: The Word could not ſo be made Fleſh. Nor is it Union of Parts to the whole, as the Members and the Body; the Members are Parts, the Body is the whole; for the whole reſults from the Parts, and depends upon the Parts: But Chriſt being God, is independent upon any thing. The parts are in order of Nature before the whole, but nothing can be in order of Nature before God. Nor is it as the Union of two Liquors, as when wine and water are mixed together; for they are ſo incorporated, as not to be diſtinguiſh'd from one another; no man can tell which Particle is wine, and which is water. But the Properties of the Divine Nature are diſtinguiſhable from the Properties of the Humane. Nor is it as the Union of the Soul and Body, ſo as that the Deity is the form of the Humanity, as the Soul is the form of the Body: For as the Soul is but a part of the Man, ſo the Divinity would be then but a part of the Humanity; and as a form, or the Soul is in a ſtate of Imperfection, without that which it is to inform; ſo the Divinity of Chriſt would have been imperfect, till it had aſſumed the Humanity. And ſo the perfection of an Eternal Deity would have depended on a Creature of Time.

* Savana triump. cruci. Lib. 3. cap. 7. p. 211.

This Union of two Natures in Chriſt is incomprehenſible: And it is a Myſtery we cannot arrive to the top of. How the Divine Nature, which is the ſame with that of the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, ſhould be united to the Humane Nature; without its being ſaid, that the Father and the Holy Ghoſt were united to the Fleſh; but the Scripture doth not encourage any ſuch Notion; it ſpeaks only of the Word, the Perſon of the Word being made Fleſh. And in his being made Fleſh, diſtinguiſheth him from the Father, as the only begotten of the Father, John 1 14. The Perſon of the Son was the term of this Union.

1. This Union doth not confound the Properties of the Deity, and thoſe of the Humanity. They remain diſtinct and entire in each other. The Deity is not changed into Fleſh, nor the Fleſh transform'd into God: They are diſtinct, and yet united: They are conjoyned, and yet unmixt: The dues of either Nature are preſerved. 'Tis impoſſible that the Majeſty of the Divinity can receive an alteration: 'Tis as impoſſible that the meanneſs of the Humanity can receive the Impreſſions of the Deity, ſo as to be changed into it; and a Creature be metamorphos'd into the Creator, and Temporary Fleſh become Eternal, and Finite mount up into Infinity: As the Soul and Body are united, and make one Perſon; yet the Soul is not changed into the perfections of the Body, nor the Body into the perfections of the Soul. There is a change made in the Humanity by being advanced to a more Excellent Union, but not in the Deity; as a change is made in the Air, when it is enlightned by the Sun, not in the Sun, which communicates that brightneſs to the Air. Athanaſius makes the burning Buſh to be a Type of Chriſt's Incarnation, Exod. 3. 2. The Fire ſignifying the Divine Nature, and the Buſh the Human. The Buſh is a branch ſpringing up from the Earth, and the Fire deſcends from Heaven; as the Buſh was united to the Fire, yet was not hurt by the flame, nor converted into Fire, there remained a difference between the Buſh and the Fire, yet the properties of the Fire ſhined in the Buſh, ſo that the whole Buſh ſeemed to be on Fire. So in the Incarnation of Chriſt, the Human Nature is not ſwallowed up by the Divine, nor changed into it, nor confounded with it: But ſo united, that the properties of both remain firm; Two are ſo become one that they remain two ſtill: One Perſon in Two Natures, containing the glorious perfections of the Divine, and the weakneſſes of the Humane. The fulneſs of the Deity dwells bodily in Chriſt, Col. 2. 9.

2. The Divine Nature is united to every part of the Humanity. The whole Divinity to the whole Humanity; ſo that no part but may be ſaid to be the Member of God, as well as the Blood is ſaid to be the Blood of God, Acts 20. 28. By the ſame reaſon it may be ſaid, the Hand of God, the Eye of God, the Arm of God. As God is infinitely preſent every where, ſo as to be excluded from no place; ſo is the Deity hypoſtatically every where in the Humanity not excluded from any part of it: As the light of the Sun in every part of the Air, as a ſparkling ſplendor in every part of the Diamond. Therefore it is concluded by all that acknowledge the Deity of Chriſt, that when his Soul was ſeparated from the Body, the Deity remained united both to Soul and Body, as light doth in every part of a broken Cryſtal.

3. Therefore perpetually united, Coloſſ. 2. 9. The fulneſs of the Godhead dwells in him bodily. It Dwells in him, not lodges in him as a Traveller in an Inn; it reſides in him as a fixed Habitation. As God deſcribes the perpetuity of his Preſence in the Ark by his habitation or dwelling in it, Exod. 29. 44. ſo doth the Apoſtle the inſeparable duration of the Deity in the Humanity, and the indiſſoluble Union of the Humanity with the Deity. It was united on Earth, it remains united in Heaven. It was not an Image or an Apparition, as the Tongues wherein the Spirit came upon the Apoſtles, were a Temporary Repreſentation, not a thing united perpetually to the Perſon of the Holy Ghoſt.

4. It was a Perſonal Union. It was not an Union of Perſons, though it was a Perſonal Union: So Davenant expounds Col. 2. 9. Chriſt did not take the Perſon of Man, but the Nature of Man into ſubſiſtence with himſelf. The Body and Soul of Chriſt were not united in themſelves, had no ſubſiſtence in themſelves, till they were united to the Perſon of the Son of God. If the Perſon of a Man were united to him, the Human Nature would have been the Nature of the Perſon ſo united to him, and not the Nature of the Son of God, Heb. 2 14. 16. For-aſmuch then as the Children are partakers of fleſh and blood, he alſo himſelf likewiſe took part of the ſame, that through Death he might deſtroy him that had the power of Death, that is, the Devil. For verily he took not on him the nature of Angels: But he took on him the ſeed of Abraham. He took Fleſh and Blood to be his own Nature, perpetually to ſubſiſt in the Perſon of the Λόγος, which muſt be by a Perſonal Union, or no way: The Deity united to the Humanity, and both Natures to be one Perſon. This is the myſterious and manifold Wiſdom of God.

3. The end of this Union.

1. He was hereby fitted to be Mediator. He hath ſomething like to Man, and ſomething like to God. If he were in all things only like to Man, he would be at a diſtance from God: If he were in all things only like to God, he would be at a diſtance from Man. He is a true Mediator between Mortal Sinners, and the Immortal Righteous One. He was near to us by the Infirmities of our Nature, and near to God by the Perfections of the Divine; as near to God in his Nature, as to us in ours; as near to us in our Nature, as he is to God in the Divine. Nothing that belongs to the Deity, but he poſſeſſes; nothing that belongs to the Human Nature, but he is clothed with.

He had both the Nature which had offended, and that Nature which was offended; a Nature to pleaſe God, and a Nature to pleaſure us: A Nature whereby he experimentally knew the Excellency of God, which was injured, and underſtood the Glory due to him, and conſequently the greatneſs of the Offence, which was to be meaſur'd by the Dignity of his Perſon: And a Nature whereby he might be ſenſible of the Miſeries contracted by, and endure the Calamities due to the Offender, that he might both have Compaſſion on him, and make due Satisfaction for him * He had two diſtinct Natures, capable of the Affections and Sentiments of the two Perſons he was to accord; he was a juſt Judge of the Rights of the one, and the demerit of the other. He could not have this full and perfect Underſtanding, if he did not poſſeſs the Perfections of the one, and the Qualities of the other: The one fitted him for things appertaining to God, Heb. 5. 1. and the other furniſh'd him with a ſenſe of the Infirmities of Man, Heb. 4. 15. * Gomb. de relig. p. 42.

2. He was hereby fitted for the working out the happineſs of Man. A Divine Nature to communicate to Man, and a Human Nature to carry up to God.

1. He had a Nature whereby to ſuffer for us, and a Nature whereby to be meritorious in thoſe Sufferings. A Nature to make him capable to bear the Penalty, and a Nature to make his Sufferings ſufficient for all that embraced him. A Nature capable to be expoſed to the flames of Divine Wrath, and another Nature uncapable to be cruſh'd by the weight, or conſum'd by the heat of it: A Human Nature to ſuffer, and ſtand a Sacrifice in the ſtead of Man; a Divine Nature to ſanctifie theſe Sufferings, and fill the Noſtrils of God with a ſweet ſavour, and thereby atone his wrath: The one to bear the ſtroke due to us, and the other to add merit to his Sufferings for us. Had he not been Man, he could not have filled our place in ſuffering; and could he otherwiſe have ſuffered, his Sufferings had not been applicable to us; and had he not been God, his Sufferings had not been meritoriouſly and fruitfully applicable. Had not his Blood been the Blood of God, it had been of as little advantage as the Blood of an ordinary Man, or the Blood of the Legal Sacrifices *. Nothing leſs than God, could have ſatisfied God for the Injury done by Man. Nothing leſs than God, could have countervail'd the Torments due to the offending Creature: Nothing leſs than God, could have reſcued us out of the hands of the Jaylor, too powerful for us.

* Heb. 9. 12.

2. He had therefore a Nature to be compaſſionate to us, and victorious for us. A Nature ſenſibly to compaſſionate us, and another Nature to render thoſe Compaſſions effectual for our Relief; he had the Compaſſions of our Nature to pity us, and the Patience of the Divine Nature to bear with us. He hath the Affections of a Man to us, and the Power of a God for us: A Nature to diſarm the Devil for us, and another Nature to be ſenſible of the working of the Devil in us, and againſt us. If he had been only God, he would not have had an Experimental ſenſe of our Miſery; and if he had been only Man, he could not have vanquiſh'd our Enemies: Had he been only God, he could not have died; and had he been only Man, he could not have conquered Death.

3. A Nature efficaciouſly to inſtruct us. As Man, he was to inſtruct us ſenſibly; as God, he was to inſtruct us infallibly. A Nature whereby he might converſe with us, and a Nature whereby he might influence us in thoſe Converſes A Human Mouth to miniſter Inſtructions to Man, and a Divine Power to imprint it with efficacy.

4. A Nature to be a Pattern to us. A Pattern of Grace as Man, as Adam was to have been to his Poſterity. * A Divine Nature ſhining in the Human, the Image of the inviſible God in the Glaſs of our Fleſh, that he might be a perfect Copy for our Imitation, Col. 1. 15. The Image of the inviſible God, and the firſt-born of every Creature in conjunction. The Vertues of the Deity are ſweetned and tempered by the Union with the Humanity, as the Beams of the Sun are by ſhining through a colour'd Glaſs, which condeſcends more to the weakneſs of our Eye

* Amyraunt. Moral. Tom. 5. p. 463, 469

Thus the Perfections of the inviſible God, breaking through the firſt-born of every Creature, glittering in Chriſt's created State, became more ſenſible for Contemplation by our Mind; and more imitable for Conformity in our Practice.

5. A Nature to be a ground of Confidence in our approach to God. A Nature wherein we may behold him, and wherein we may approach to him. A Nature for our Comfort, and a Nature for our Confidence. Had he been only Man, he had been too feeble to aſſure us; and had he been only God, he had been too high to attract us: But now we are allured by his Human Nature; and aſſured by his Divine, in our drawing near to Heaven. Communion with God was deſired by us, but our Guilt ſtifled our hopes, and the infinite Excellency of the Divine Nature, would have dampt our hopes of ſpeeding; but ſince theſe two Natures, ſo far diſtant, are met in a Marriage-knot, we have a ground of hope, nay, an Earneſt that the Creator and believing Creature ſhall meet and converſe together.

And ſince our Sins are expiated by the Death of the human Nature in conjunction with the Divine, our Guilt, upon believing, ſhall not hinder us from this comfortable approach. Had he been only Man, he could not have aſſured us an approach to God. Had he been only God, his Juſtice would not have admitted us to approach to him; he had been too terrible for guilty Perſons, and too holy for polluted Perſons to come near to him: But by being made Man, his Juſtice is tempered, and by his being God and Man, his Mercy is enſured. A human Nature he had, one with us, that we might be related to God, as one with him.

6. A Nature to derive all good to us. Had he not been Man, we had had no ſhare or part in him: A Satisfaction by him had not been imputed to us. If he were not God, he could not communicate to us Divine Graces and Eternal Happineſs; he could not have had power to convey ſo great a good to us, had he been only Man; and he could not have done it, according to the Rule of inflexible Righteouſneſs, had he been only God. As Man, he is the way of Conveyance; as God, he is the ſpring of Conveyance. From this Grace of Union, and the Grace of Unction, we find Rivers of Waters flowing, to make glad the City of God. Believers are his Branches, and draw Sap from him as he is their Root in his human Nature, and have an endleſs duration of it from his Divine. Had he not been Man, he had not been in a State to obey the Law. Had he not been God as well as Man, his Obedience could not have been valuable to be imputed to us.

How ſhould this Myſtery be ſtudied by us, which would afford us both Admiration and Content? Admiration in the incomprehenſibleneſs of it; Contentment in the fitneſs of the Mediator. By this Wiſdom of God we receive the props of our Faith, and the fruits of Joy and Peace. Wiſdom conſiſts in chuſing fit means, and conducting them in ſuch a method, as may reach with good ſucceſs the variety of Marks which are aimed at. Thus hath the Wiſdom of God ſet forth a Mediator, ſuted to our wants, fitted for our ſupplies, and ordered ſo the whole Affair by the Union of theſe two Natures in the Perſon of the Redeemer, that there could be no diſappointment, by all the buſtle Hell and helliſh Inſtruments could raiſe againſt it.

4. The Wiſdom of God is ſeen in this way of Redemption, in vindicating the Honour and Righteouſneſs of the Law, both as to Precept and Penalty. The firſt and irreverſible deſign of the Law, was Obedience. The Penalty of the Law had only entrance upon Tranſgreſſion. Obedience was the Deſign, and the Penalty was added to enforce the obſervance of the Precept. Gen. 2. 17. Thou ſhalt not eat; there is the Precept: In the Day thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt die; there is the Penalty. Obedience was our Debt to the Law, as Creatures; Puniſhment was due from the Law to us, as Sinners: We were bound to endure the Penalty for our firſt Tranſgreſſion, but the Penalty did not cancel the Bond of future Obedience: The Penalty had not been incurr'd without tranſgreſſing the Precept; yet the Precept was not abrogated by enduring the Penalty. Since Man ſo ſoon revolted, and by his Revolt fell under the threatning, the Juſtice of the Law had been honoured by Man's Sufferings, but the Holineſs, and Equity of the Law had been honoured by Man's Obedience. The Wiſdom of God finds out a Medium to ſatisfie both: The Juſtice of the Law is preſerved in the Execution of the Penalty; and the Holineſs of the Law is honoured in the obſervance of the Precept.

The Life of our Saviour is a Conformity to the Precept, and his Death is a Conformity to the Penalty; the Precepts are exactly performed, and the Curſe punctually executed, by a voluntary obſerving the one, and a voluntary undergoing the other. It is obeyed, as if it had not been tranſgreſs'd, and executed as if it had not been obeyed.

It became the Wiſdom, Juſtice, and Holineſs of God, as the Rector of the World, to exact it, Heb. 2. 10. and it became the holineſs of the Mediator to * Rom. 8. 3 Mat. 3. 15 fulfil all the Righteouſneſs of the Law *. And thus the honour of the Law was vindicated in all the parts of it. The Tranſgreſſion of the Law was condemned in the Fleſh of the Redeemer, and the Righteouſneſs of the Law was fulfilled in his Perſon: And both theſe acts of Obedience, being counted as one Righteouſneſs, and imputed to the Believing Sinner, render him a ſubject to the Law, both in its preceptive and minatory part. By Adam's ſinful acting we were made ſinners, and by Chriſt's righteous acting we are made righteous, Rom. 5. 10. As by one man's diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous. The Law was obeyed by him, that the righteouſneſs of it might be fulfilled in us, Rom. 8. 4. 'Tis not fulfilled in us, or in our actions, by inherency, but fulfilled in us by imputation of that Righteouſneſs which was exactly fulfilled by another. As he died for us, and roſe again for us, ſo he lived for us. The Commands of the Law were as well obſerved for us, as the Threatnings of the Law were endured for us. This juſtification of a Sinner, with the preſervation of the holineſs of the Law in truth, in the inward parts, in ſincerity of intention, as well as the conformity in action, is the wiſdom of God, the Goſpel-wiſdom which David deſires to know, Pſal. 51. 6. Thou deſireſt truth in the inward parts, and in the hidden part thou ſhalt make me to know wiſdom; or as ſome render it, the hidden things of wiſdom. Not an inherent wiſdom in the acknowledgments of his ſin, which he had confeſs'd before; but the wiſdom of God in providing a Medicine, ſo as to keep up the holineſs of the Law in the obſervance of it in Truth, and the averting the Judgment due to the ſinner. In and by this way methodiz'd by the wiſdom of God, all doubts and troubles are diſcharg'd. Naturally if we take a view of the Law to behold its Holineſs and Juſtice, and then of our hearts, to ſee the contrariety in them to the command, and the pollution repugnant to its holineſs; and after this caſt our eyes upward, and behold a flaming Sword, edg'd with Curſes and Wrath: Is there any matter, but that of Terror, afforded by any of theſe? But when we behold, in the Life of Chriſt, a conformity to the Mandatory part of the Law, and in the Croſs of Chriſt, a ſuſtaining the minatory part of the Law; this wiſdom of God gives a well-grounded and rational diſmiſs to all the horrors that can ſeize upon us.

5. The wiſdom of God in Redemption is viſible in manifeſting two contrary Affections at the ſame time, and in one act: The greateſt hatred of Sin, and the greateſt love to the Sinner. In this way he puniſhes the ſin without ruining the ſinner, and repairs the ruins of the ſinner, without indulging the ſin. Here is eternal love, and eternal hatred; a condemning the ſin to what it merited, and an advancing the ſinner to what he could not expect. Herein is the choiceſt love, and the deepeſt hatred manifeſt. An implacableneſs againſt the ſin, and a placableneſs to the ſinner. His hatred of ſin hath been diſcovered in other ways; in puniſhing the Devil without remedy; ſentencing Man to an expulſion from Paradiſe, though ſeduced by another; in accurſing the Serpent, an irrational Creature, though but a miſguided Inſtrument. The whole tenor of his Threatnings declare his loathing of ſin, and the ſprinklings of his Judgments in the World, and the horrible expectations of terrified Conſciences confirm it. But what are all theſe Teſtimonies to the higheſt Evidence that can poſſibly be given in the ſheathing the Sword of his wrath in the heart of his Son? If a Father ſhould order his Son to take a mean Garb below his Dignity, order him to be dragg'd to Priſon, ſeem to throw off all Affection of a Father for the Severity of a Judge, condemn his Son to a horrible Death, be a Spectator of his bleeding Condition, withhold his hand from aſſwaging his Miſery, regard it rather with Joy than Sorrow, give him a bitter Cup to drink, and ſtand by to ſee him drink it off to the bottom, dregs and all, and flaſh frowns in his face all the while; and this not for any fault of his own, but the Rebellion of ſome Subjects he undertook for, and that the Offenders might have a Pardon ſeal'd by the Blood of the Son the ſufferer; all this would evidence his deteſtation of the Rebellion, and his affection to the Rebels; his hatred to their Crime, and his love to their Welfare. This did God do; He delivered Chriſt up for our Offences, Rom. 8. 32. the Father gave him the Cup, John 18. 18. the Lord bruiſed him with pleaſure, Iſa. 53. 10. and that for ſin: He transferr'd upon the ſhoulders of his Son the pain we had merited, that the Criminal might be reſtored to the place he had forfeited. He hates the ſin ſo, as to condemn it for ever, and wrap it up in the Curſe he had threatned; and loves the ſinner believing and repenting, ſo as to mount him to an expectation of a happineſs exceeding the firſt ſtate, both in glory and perpetuity. Inſtead of an Earthly Paradiſe, lays the Foundation of an Heavenly Manſion, brings forth a weight of Glory from a weight of Miſery, ſeparates the comfortable light of the Sun, from the ſcorching heat we had deſerved at his hands. Thus hath God's hatred of ſin been manifeſted. He is at an eternal Defiance with ſin, yet nearer in alliance with the ſinner, than he was before the Revolt: As if Man's miſerable Fall had endeared him to the Judge. This is the wiſdom and prudence of Grace, wherein God hath abounded, Eph. 1. 9. A wiſdom in twiſting the happy reſtoration of the broken Amity, with an everlaſting Curſe upon that which made the breach, both upon ſin the Cauſe, and upon Satan the Seducer to it. Thus is hatred and love in their higheſt glory manifeſted together: Hatred to ſin, in the death of Chriſt, more than if the torments of Hell had been undergone by the ſinner; and love to the ſinner, more than if he had, by an abſolute and ſimple Bounty, beſtowed upon him the poſſeſſion of Heaven; becauſe the gift of his Son, for ſuch an end, is a greater token of his boundleſs Affections, than a reinſtating Man in Paradiſe. Thus is the wiſdom of God ſeen in Redemption; conſuming the ſin, and recovering the ſinner.

6. The wiſdom of God is evident in overturning the Devil's Empire, by the Nature he had vanquiſh'd, and by ways quite contrary to what that malicious Spirit could imagine. The Devil indeed read his own doom in the firſt Promiſe, and found his ruin reſolved upon, by the means of the Seed of the Woman, but by what Seed, was not ſo eaſily known to him *. And the methods whereby it was to be brought about, was a Myſtery kept ſecret from the malicious Devils, ſince it was not diſcovered to the obedient Angels. He might know from Iſa. 53. that the Redeemer was aſſured to divide the Spoil with the ſtrong, reſcue a part of the loſt Creation out of his hands; and that this was to be effected, by making his Soul an Offering for ſin: But could he imagine which way his Soul was to be made ſuch an Offering? He ſhrewdly ſuſpected Chriſt juſt after his Inauguration into his Office by Baptiſm, to be the Son of God But did he ever dream that the Meſſiah, by dying as a reputed Malefactor, ſhould be a Sacrifice for the expiation of the ſin the Devil had introduced by his ſubtilty? Did he ever imagine a Croſs ſhould diſpoſſeſs him of his Crown, and that dying groans ſhould wreſt the Victory out of his hands? He

* And indeed the Heathen Oracles, managed by the Devils, declared that they were not long to hold their Scepter in the World, but the Hebrew Child ſhould vanquiſh them.

He was conquer'd by that Nature he had caſt headlong into ruin: A Woman, by his ſubtilty, was the occaſion of our Death; and Woman, by the conduct of the only wiſe God, brings forth the Author of our Life, and the Conqueror of our Enemies. The Fleſh of the old Adam had infected us, and the Fleſh of the new Adam cures us, 1 Cor. 15. 21. By man came death; by man alſo came the reſurrection from the dead. We are killed by the old Adam, and raiſed by the new. As among the Iſraelites, a fiery Serpent gave the wound, and a brazen Serpent adminiſters the Cure. The Nature that was deceived bruiſeth the Deceiver, and razeth up the Foundations of his Kingdom. Satan is defeated by the Counſels he took to ſecure his Poſſeſſion, and loſes the Victory by the ſame means whereby he thought to preſerve it.

His tempting the Jews to the ſin of Crucifying the Son of God, had a contrary ſucceſs to his tempting Adam to eat of the Tree. The firſt death he brought upon Adam, ruined us, and the death he brought by his Inſtruments upon the ſecond Adam, reſtored us. By a Tree, if one may ſo ſay, he had triumphed over the World, and by the Fruit of a Tree, one hanging upon a Tree, he is diſcharged of his Power over us. Heb. 2. 14. Through death he deſtroyed him that had the power of death. And thus the Devil ruins his own Kingdom, while he thinks to confirm and enlarge it. And is defeated by his own Policy, whereby he thought to continue the World under his Chains, and deprive the Creator of the World of his purpoſed honour. What deeper Counſel could he reſolve upon for his own ſecurity, than to be inſtrumental in the death of him, who was God, the terror of the Devil himſelf, and to bring the Redeemer of the World to expire with diſgrace in the ſight of a multitude of men? Thus did the Wiſdom of God ſhine forth in reſtoring us by Methods ſeemingly repugnant to the end he aimed at, and above the ſuſpicion of a ſubtle Devil, whom he intended to baffle.

Could he imagine that we ſhould be healed by ſtripes, quickned by death, purified by blood, crowned by a croſs, advanced to the higheſt honour by the loweſt humility, comforted by ſorrows, glorified by diſgrace, abſolved by condemnation, and made rich by poverty? That the ſweeteſt Honey ſhould at once ſpring out of the belly of a dead Lion, the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, and out of the boſom of the living God? How wonderful is this wiſdom of God! That the Seed of the Woman, born of a mean Virgin, brought forth in a Stable, ſpending his days in affliction, miſery, and poverty, without any pomp and ſplendor, paſſing ſome time in a Carpenter's Shop, with Carpenter's Tools, and afterwards expoſed to a horrible and diſgraceful Death, ſhould by this way pull down the gates of Hell, ſubvert the Kingdom of the Devil, and be the hammer to break in pieces that power, which he had ſo long exerciſed over the world! Thus became he the Author of our Life, by being bound for a while in the Chains of Death, and arrived to a Principality over the moſt malicious Powers, by being a Priſoner for us, and the Anvil of their Rage and Fury.

* Mark 6. 6.

7. The Wiſdom of God appears, In giving us this way the ſureſt ground of Comfort, and the ſtrongeſt incentive to Obedience. The Rebel is reconciled, and the Rebellion ſhamed; God is propitiated, and the Sinner ſanctified by the ſame Blood. What can more contribute to our comfort and confidence, than God's richeſt gift to us? What can more enflame our love to him, than our recovery from death by the oblation of his Son to miſery and death for us? It doth as much engage our duty as ſecure our happineſs. It preſents God glorious and gracious, and therefore every way fit to be truſted, in regard of the intereſt of his own glory in it, and in regard of the effuſions of his grace by it. It renders the Creature obliged in the higheſt manner, and ſo awakens his induſtry to the ſtricteſt and nobleſt obedience. Nothing ſo effectual as a crucified Chriſt to wean us from ſin, and ſtifle all motions of deſpair, a means, in regard of the Juſtice ſignaliz'd in it, to make man to hate the ſin which had ruined him; and a means, in regard of the love expreſs'd, to make him delight in that Law he had violated, 2 Cor. 5. 14, 15. The love of Chriſt, and therefore the love of God expreſs'd in it, conſtrains us no longer to live to our ſelves.

1. It is a ground of the higheſt comfort and confidence in God. Since he hath given ſuch an evidence of his impartial Truth to his threatning for the honour of his Juſtice, we need not queſtion but he will be as punctual to his promiſe for the honour of his Mercy. 'Tis a ground of confidence in God, ſince he hath redeemed us in ſuch a way as glorifies the ſteadineſs of his veracity, as well as the ſeverity of his Juſtice; We may well truſt him for the performance of his promiſe, ſince we have experience of the execution of his threatning; his merciful truth will as much engage him to accompliſh the one, as his juſt truth did to inflict the other. The goodneſs which ſhone forth in weaker rays in the Creation, breaks out with ſtronger beams in Redemption. And the Mercy which before the appearance of Chriſt was manifeſted in ſome ſmall Rivulets, diffuſeth himſelf like a boundleſs Ocean. That God that was our Creator, is our Redeemer, the Repairer of our Breaches, and the Reſtorer of our Paths to dwell in, and the plenteous Redemption from all Iniquity, manifeſted in the Incarnation and Paſſion of the Son of God, is much more a ground of hope in the Lord, than it was in the paſt Ages, when it could not be ſaid, The Lord hath, but the Lord ſhall redeem Iſrael from all his iniquities, Pſal. 130. 8. It is a full Warrant to caſt our ſelves into his Arms.

2. An incentive to Obedience.

1. The Commands of the Goſpel require the Obedience of the Creature. There is not one Precept in the Goſpel which interferes with any Rule in the Law, but ſtrengthens it, and repreſents it in its true exactneſs: The heat to ſcorch us is allayed, but the light to direct us is not extinguiſh'd. Not the leaſt allowance to any ſin is granted; not the leaſt affection to any ſin is indulg'd. The Law is temper'd by the Goſpel, but not null'd and caſt out of doors by it: It enacts, that none but thoſe that are ſanctified, ſhall be glorified; that there muſt be Grace here, if we expect glory hereafter; that we muſt not preſume to expect an admittance to the Viſion of God's Face, unleſs our Souls be cloathed with a Robe of Holineſs, Heb. 12. 14. It requires an obedience to the whole Law in our intention and purpoſe, and an endeavour to obſerve it in our actions: It promotes the honour of God, and ordains an univerſal Charity among men; it reveals the whole Counſel of God, and furniſheth men with the holieſt Laws.

2. It preſents to us the exacteſt Pattern for our Obedience. The redeeming Perſon is not only a Propitiation for the ſin, but a Pattern to the ſinner, 1 Pet. 2. 21. The Conſcience of man, after the Fall of Adam, approved of the reaſon of the Law, but by the corruption of nature, man had no ſtrength to perform the Law. The poſſibility of keeping the Law by Human Nature, is evidenced by the appearance and life of the Redeemer, and an aſſurance given that it ſhall be advanc'd to ſuch a ſtate, as to be able to obſerve it: We aſpire to it in this Life, and and have hopes to attain it in a future: And while we are here, the Actor of our Redemption is the Copy for our Imitation. The Pattern to imitate is greater than the Law to be ruled by. What a luſtre did his Vertues caſt about the World? How attractive are his Graces? With what high Examples for all Duties hath he furniſh'd us out of the Copy of his Life?

3. It preſents us with the ſtrongeſt motives to Obedience. Titus 2. 11, 12. The Grace of God teaches us to deny ungodlineſs. What Chains bind faſter and cloſer than love? Here is love to our Nature, in his Incarnation; love to us though Enemies, in his Death and Paſſion; encouragements to Obedience by the proffers of Pardon for former Rebellions: By the diſobedience of Man, God introduceth his redeeming Grace, and engageth his Creature to more ingenuous and excellent returns than his Innocent ſtate could oblige him to. In his created ſtate he had goodneſs to move him, he hath the ſame goodneſs now to oblige him as a Creature, and a greater love and mercy to oblige him as a repaired Creature; and the terror of Juſtice is taken off, which might invenom his heart as a Criminal. In his revolted ſtate he had miſery to diſcourage him, in his redeemed ſtate he hath love to attract him. Without ſuch a way, black deſpair had ſeized upon the Creature expoſed to a remedileſs miſery: And God would have had no returns of love from the beſt of his earthly Works: But if any ſpark of ingenuity be left, they will be excited by the efficacy of this Argument.

This willingneſs of God to receive returning ſinners, is manifeſted in the higheſt degree; and the willingneſs of a ſinner to return to him in duty hath the ſtrongeſt engagements. He hath done as much to encourage our Obedience, as to illuſtrate his Glory. We cannot conceive what could be done greater for the Salvation of our Souls, and conſequently what could have been done more to enforce our obſervance. We have a Redeemer, as Man, to Copy it to us, and as God, to perfect us in it. It would make the heart of any to tremble to wound him that hath provided ſuch a ſalve for our Sores, and to make Grace a warrant for Rebellion: Motives capable to form Rocks into a flexibleneſs. Thus is the Wiſdom of God ſeen in giving us a ground of the ſureſt confidence, and furniſhing us with incentives to the greateſt Obedience by the horrors of wrath, death, and ſufferings of our Saviour.

8. The Wiſdom of God is apparent in the Condition he hath ſettled for the enjoying the fruits of Redemption, and this is Faith, a wiſe and reaſonable Condition: And the concomitants of it.

1. In that it is ſuited to man's lapſed ſtate and God's Glory. Innocence is not required here; that had been a Condition impoſſible in its own Nature after the Fall: The rejecting of Mercy is now only condemning, where Mercy is propoſed: Had the Condition of Perfection in Works been required, it had rather been a Condemnation than Redemption. Works are not demanded whereby the Creature might aſcribe any thing to himſelf; but a Condition which continues in Man a ſenſe of his Apoſtacy, abates all aſpiring Pride, and makes the Reward of Grace, not of Debt: A Condition whereby Mercy is owned, and the Creature emptied: Fleſh ſilenc'd in the Duſt, and God ſet upon his Throne of Grace and Authority: The Creature brought to the loweſt debaſement, and Divine Glory raiſed to the higheſt pitch. The Creature is brought to acknowledge Mercy, and ſeal to Juſtice; to own the Holineſs of God in the hatred of ſin, the Juſtice of God in the puniſhment of ſin, and the Mercy of God in the pardoning of ſin: A Condition that deſpoils Nature of all its pretended Excellency: Beats down the glory of Man at the foot of God, 1 Cor. 1. 29. 31. It ſubjects the Reaſon and Will of Man to the Wiſdom and Authority of God; it brings the Creature to an unreſerved ſubmiſſion, and entire reſignation. God is made the Soveraign Cauſe of all; the Creature continued in his emptineſs, and reduced to a greater dependence upon God than by a Creation; depending upon him for a conſtant influx for an entire happineſs. A Condition that renders God glorious in the Creature, and the fallen Creature happy in God: God glorious in his Condeſcenſion to Man, and Man happy in his emptineſs before God.

Faith is made the Condition of man's recovery, that the lofty looks of man might be humbled, and the haughtineſs of man be pulled down, Iſa. 2. 11. That every towring imagination might be levelled, 2 Cor. 10. 5. Man muſt have all from without doors; he muſt not live upon himſelf, but upon another's allowance. He muſt ſtand to the proviſion of God, and be a perpetual Suitor at his Gates.

2. A Condition oppoſite to that which was the cauſe of the Fall. We fell from God by an unbelief of the threatning, he recovers us by a belief of the Promiſe; by Unbelief we laid the Foundation of God's diſhonour, by Faith therefore God exalts the Glory of his free Grace. We loſt our ſelves by a deſire of ſelf-dependence, and our return is ordered by a way of ſelf-emptineſs. 'Tis reaſonable we ſhould be reſtored in a way contrary to that whereby we fell: We ſinned by a refuſal of cleaving to God, 'tis a part of Divine Wiſdom to reſtore us in a denial of our own Righteouſneſs and Strength *. Man having ſinned by Pride, the Wiſdom of God humbles him (ſaith one) at the very Root of the Tree of Knowledge, and makes him deny his own Underſtanding, and ſubmit to Faith, or elſe, for ever to loſe his deſired Felicity.

* Laud againſt Fiſher, p. 5.

3. It is a Condition ſuited to the Common Sentiment and Cuſtom of the World. There is more of belief than reaſon in the World. All Inſtructers and Maſters in Sciences and Arts, require firſt a belief in their Diſciples, and a reſignation of their Underſtandings and Wills to them. And it is the Wiſdom of God to require that of Man, which his own reaſon makes him ſubmit to another which is his fellow Creature. He therefore that quarrels with the Condition of Faith, muſt quarrel with all the World, ſince Belief is the beginning of all Knowledge *; yea, and moſt of the Knowledge in the World, may rather come under the Title of Belief, than of Knowledge: For what we think we know this day, we may find from others ſuch Arguments as may ſtagger our Knowledge, and make us doubt of that we thought our ſelves certain of before: Nay, ſometimes we change our Opinions our ſelves, without any Inſtructor; and ſee a reaſon to entertain an Opinion quite contrary to what we had before. And if we found a general Judgment of others to vote againſt what we think we know, it would make us give the leſs Credit to our ſelves, and our own Sentiments. All Knowledge in the World, is only a belief depending upon the teſtimony or arguings of others; for indeed it may be ſaid of all men as in Job, Job 8. 9. We are but of yeſterday, and know nothing: Since therefore Belief is ſo univerſal a thing in the World, the Wiſdom of God requires that of us which every man muſt count reaſonable, or render himſelf utterly ignorant of any thing. It is a Condition that is common to all Religions. All Religions are founded upon a belief: Unleſs men did believe future things, they would not hope nor fear. A Belief and Reſignation was required in all the Idolatries in the World; ſo that God requires nothing but what an univerſal Cuſtom of the World gives gives its ſuffrage to the reaſonableneſs of it: Indeed juſtifying Faith is not ſuited to the Sentiments of men; but that Faith which muſt precede juſtifying; a belief of the Doctrine, though not comprehended by reaſon, is common to the Cuſtom of the World *. 'Tis no leſs madneſs not to ſubmit our Reaſon to Faith, than not to regulate our Fancies by Reaſon.

* Bradward. 28.

* Janeway, p. 88.

4. This Condition of Faith and Repentance is ſuited to the Conſciences of Men. The Law of Nature teaches us, that we are bound to believe every Revelation from God, when it is made known to us: And not only to aſſent to it as true, but embrace it as good. This Nature dictates, that we are as much obliged to believe God, becauſe of his Truth, as to love him becauſe of his Goodneſs. Every man's Reaſon tells him, he cannot obey a Precept, nor depend upon a Promiſe, unleſs he believes both the one and the other. No man's Conſcience, but will inform him upon hearing the Revelation of God, concerning his excellent contrivance of Redemption, and the way to enjoy it, that it is very reaſonable he ſhould ſtrip off all affections to ſin, lie down in ſorrow, and bewail what he hath done amiſs againſt ſo tender a God. Can you expect that any man that promiſes you a great Honour, or a rich Donative, ſhould demand leſs of you than to truſt his word, bear an affection to him, and return him kindneſs? Can any leſs be expected by a Prince than obedience from a pardoned Subject, and a redeemed Captive? If you have injured any man in his Body, Eſtate, Reputation, would you not count it a reaſonable Condition for the partaking of his Clemency and Forgiveneſs, to expreſs a hearty ſorrow for it, and a reſolution not to fall into the like Crime again? Such are the Conditions of the Goſpel, ſuited to the Conſciences of men.

5. The Wiſdom of God appears, in that this condition was only likely to attain the end. There are but two Common Heads appointed by God, Adam and Chriſt: By one we are made a living Soul, by the other a quickning Spirit: By the one we are made Sinners, by the other we are made Righteous. Adam fell as a Head, and all his Members, his whole Iſſue and Poſterity fell with him, becauſe they proceeded from him by Natural Generation. But ſince the ſecond Adam cannot be our Head by Natural Generation, there muſt be ſome other way of ingrafting us in him, and uniting us to him as our Head, which muſt be Moral and Spiritual; this cannot rationally be conceived to be by any other way than what is ſuitable to a reaſonable Creature, and therefore muſt be by an act of the Will, Conſent, and Acceptance, and owning the terms ſettled for an Admiſſion to that Union. And this is that we properly call Faith, and therefore called a receiving of him, John 1. 12.

1. Now this Condition of enjoying the Fruits of Redemption could not be a bare Knowledge; for that is but only an act of the Underſtanding, and doth not in it ſelf include the act of the Will, and ſo would have united only one Faculty to him, not the whole Soul: But Faith is an act both of the Underſtanding and Will too; and principally of the Will, which doth preſuppoſe an act of the Underſtanding: For there cannot be a Perſwaſion in the Will, without a propoſition from the Underſtanding. The Underſtanding muſt be convinced of the Truth and goodneſs of a thing, before the Will can be perſwaded to make any motion towards it; and therefore all the Promiſes, Invitations, and Proffers are ſuited to the Underſtanding and Will; To the Underſtanding in regard of Knowledge, to the Will in regard of Appetite; to the Underſtanding as true, to the Will as good; to the Underſtanding as practical and influencing the Will.

2. Nor could it be an entire Obedience. That, as was ſaid before, would have made the Creature have ſome matter of boaſting, and this was not ſuitable to the Condition he was ſunk into by the Fall. Beſides, Man's Nature being corrupted, was rendered uncapable to obey, and unable to have one thought of a due Obedience, 2 Cor. 3. 5.

When Man turned from God, and upon that was turned out of Paradiſe, his return was impoſſible by any ſtrength of his own; his Nature was as much corrupted as his re-entrance into Paradiſe was prohibited. That Covenant, whereby he ſtood in the Garden, required a perfection of action and intention in the obſervance of all the Commands of God: But his Fall had crack'd his Ability to recover happineſs by the terms and condition of an entire Obedience; yet Man being a Perſon governable by a Law, and capable of happineſs by a Covenant; if God would reſtore him, and enter into a Covenant with him, we muſt ſuppoſe it to have ſome Condition, as all Covenants have. That Condition could not be works, becauſe man's Nature was polluted. Indeed, had God reduced man's Body to the duſt, and his Soul to nothing, and framed another man, he might have govern'd him by a Covenant of Works: But that had not been the ſame man that had revolted, and upon his revolt was ſtain'd and diſabled. But ſuppoſe God had by any tranſcendent Grace, wholly purified him from the ſtain of his former Tranſgreſſion, and reſtored to him the ſtrength and ability he had loſt, might he not as eaſily have rebelled again? And ſo the Condition would never have been accompliſh'd, the Covenant never have been performed, and Happineſs never have been enjoyed. There muſt be ſome other Condition than in the Covenant God would make for man's Security.

Now Faith is the moſt proper for receiving the Promiſe of Pardon of Sin: Belief of thoſe Promiſes is the firſt Natural Reflection that a Malefactor can make upon a Pardon offered him, an acceptance of it is the firſt conſequent from that belief. Hence is Faith entituled a perſwaſion of, and embracing the Promiſes, Heb. 11. 13. and a receiving the atonement, Rom. 5. 11.

Thus the Wiſdom of God is apparent in annexing ſuch a Condition to the Covenant, whereby man is reſtored, as anſwers the end of God for his Glory, the State, Conſcience, and neceſſity of Man, and had the greateſt congruity to his recovery.

9. This Wiſdom of God is manifeſt in the manner of the publiſhing and propagating this Doctrine of Redemption.

1. In the gradual diſcoveries of it. Flaſhing a great light in the face of a ſudden, is amazing; ſhould the Sun glare in our Eyes in all its brightneſs on a ſudden, after we have been in a thick darkneſs, it would blind us inſtead of comforting us: So great a Work as this muſt have ſeveral digeſtions.

God firſt reveals of what Seed the Redeeming Perſon ſhould be, the Seed of the Woman, Gen. 3. 15. Then of what Nation, Gen. 26. 4. then of what Tribe, Gen. 49. 12. of the Tribe of Judah; then of what Family, the Family of David; then what works he was to do, what ſufferings to undergo. The firſt Predictions of our Saviour were obſcure. Adam could not well ſee the Redemption in the Promiſe, for the Puniſhment of Death which ſucceeded in the Threatning; the Promiſe exerciſed his Faith, and the Obſcurity and bodily Death, his Humility. The Promiſe made to Abraham was clearer than the Revelations made before, yet he could not tell how to reconcile his Redemption with his Exile. God ſupported his Faith by the Promiſe, and exerciſed his Humility, by making him a Pilgrim. and keeping him in a perpetual dependance upon him in all his motions.

The Declarations to Moſes are brighter than thoſe to Abraham. The delineations of Chriſt by David in the Pſalms, more illuſtrious than the former. And all thoſe exceeded by the Revelations made to the Prophet Iſaiah, and the other Prophets, according as the Age did approach, wherein the Redeemer was to enter into his Office.

God wrapt up this Goſpel in a multitude of Types and Ceremonies, fitted to the Infant-ſtate of the Church, Gal. 4. 3. An Infant State is uſually affected with ſenſible things; yet thoſe Ceremonies were fitted to that great end of the Goſpel, which he would bring forth in time to the world. And the wiſdom of God in them would be amazing, if we could underſtand the Analogy between every Ceremony in the Law and the thing ſignified by it. As it cannot but affect a diligent Reader to obſerve that little account of them we have by the Apoſtle Paul, ſprinkled in his Epiſtles, and more largely in that to the Hebrews. As the Political Laws of the Jews flowed from the depth of the Moral Law, ſo their Ceremonial did from the depth of Evangelical Counſels, and all of them had a ſpecial relation to the honour of God, and the debaſing the Creature.

Though God formed the Maſs and Matter of the World at the firſt Creation at once, yet his Wiſdom took ſix days time for the diſpoſing and adorning it. The more Illuſtrious Truths of God are not to be comprehended on a ſudden by the weakneſs of men: Chriſt did not declare all Truths to his Diſciples in the time of his Life, becauſe they were not able at that preſent to bear them, John 16. 12. Ye cannot bear them now. Some were reſerved for his Reſurrection, others for the coming of the Spirit; and the full diſcovery of all kept back for another World. This Doctrine God figured out in the Law, Oracled by the Prophets, and unveil'd by Chriſt and his Apoſtles.

2. The Wiſdom of God appeared, in uſing all proper means to render the belief of it eaſie.

1. The moſt minute things that were to be tranſacted, were predicted in the Ancient foregoing Age, long before the coming of the Redeemer: The Vinegar and Gall offered to him upon the Croſs, the parting his Garments, the not breaking of his Bones, the piercing of his Hands and Feet, the betraying of him, the ſlighting of him by the multitude, all were exactly painted and repreſented in variety of Figures. There was Light enough to good men not to miſtake him; and yet not ſo plain, as to hinder bad men from being Serviceable to the Counſels of God in the crucifying of him when he came.

2. The Tranſlation of the Old Teſtament from the private Language of the Jews into the moſt publick Language of the World. That Tranſlation which we call Septuagint, from Hebrew into Greek, ſome Years before the coming of Chriſt, that Tongue being moſt diffuſed at that time, by reaſon of the Macedonian Empire raiſed by Alexander, and the Univerſity of Athens, to which other Nations reſorted for Learning and Education: This was a Preparation for the Sons of Japhet to dwell in the Tents of Shem. By this was the Entertainment of the Goſpel facilitated: When they compar'd the Prophecies of the Old Teſtament, with the Declarations of the New, and found things ſo long predicted before they were tranſacted in the publick view.

3. By ordering concurrent Teſtimonies as to matter of Fact, that the matter of Fact was not deniable. That there was ſuch a Perſon as Chriſt, that his Miracles were ſtupendous, that his Doctrine did not encline to Sedition, that he affected not worldly Applauſe, that he did ſuffer at Jeruſalem, was acknowledged by all: Not a man among the greateſt Enemies of Chriſtians was found, that denied the matter of Fact. And this great Truth, that Chriſt is the Meſſiah and Redeemer, hath been, with univerſal conſent, owned by all the Profeſſors of Chriſtianity throughout the World: Whatever Bickerings there have been among them about ſome particular Doctrines, they all centred in that Truth of Chriſt's being the Redeemer. The firſt publication of this Doctrine was ſealed by a Thouſand Miracles, and ſo illuſtrious, that he was an utter ſtranger to the world that was ignorant of them.

4. In keeping up ſome Principles and Opinions in the World to facilitate the belief of this, or render men inexcuſable for rejecting of it. The Incarnation of the Son of God could not be ſo ſtrange to the world, if we conſider the general belief of the Appearances * of their Gods among them; that the Epicureans, and others that denied any ſuch Appearances, were accounted Atheiſts *. And Pythagoras was eſteemed to be one, not of the inferior Genii and Lunar Dæmons, but one of the higher Gods, who appeared in a Human Body, for the curing and rectifying Mortal Life *. And himſelf tells Abaris the Scythian, that he was ἀνθρωπόμορφος, that he took the fleſh of Man, that Men might not be aſtoniſhed at him, and in a fright fly from his Inſtructions. It was not therefore accounted an irrational thing among them, that God ſhould be Incarnate: But indeed the great ſtumbling-block was a crucified God. But had they known the holy and righteous Nature of God, the Malice of Sin, the univerſal Corruption of Human Nature, the firſt threatning and the neceſſity of Vindicating the honour of the Law, and clearing the Juſtice of God; the Notion of his Crucifixion would not have appeared ſo incredible, ſince they believed the poſſibility of an Incarnation.

* Jamblich. Vit. Pythag. l. 1. cap. 6. p. 44. & lib. 2. c. 19. p. 94.

Another Principle was that univerſal One of Sacrifices for Expiation, and rendring God propitious to Man, and was practiſed among all Nations. I remember not any wherein this Cuſtom did not prevail; for it did even among thoſe People where the Jews, as being no Trading Nation, had not any Commerce; and alſo in America, found out in theſe latter Ages. It was not a Law of Nature, no Man can find any ſuch thing written in his own heart, but a Tradition from Adam. Now, that among the loſs of ſo many other Doctrines, that were handed down from Adam to his immediate Poſterity, as in particular that of the Seed of the Woman, which one would think a neceſſary Appendix to that of Sacrificing: This latter ſhould be preſerved as a Fragment of an Ancient Tradition, ſeems to be an Act of Divine Wiſdom, to prepare Men for the Entertainment of the Doctrine of the great Sacrifice for the Expiation of the ſin of the World. And as the Apoſtle forms his Argument from the Jewiſh Sacrifices in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, for the convincing them of the end of the Death of Chriſt, ſo did the Ancient Fathers make uſe of this practice of the Heathen, to convince them of the ſame Doctrine.

5. The Wiſdom of God appeared in the time and circumſtances of the firſt Solemn Publication of the Goſpel by the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem. The Relation you may read in Acts 2. from verſe 1. to the 12*th.* The Spirit was given to the Apoſtles on the day of Pentecoſt; a time wherein there were multitudes of Jews from all Nations, not only near, but remote, that heard the great things of God ſpoken in the ſeveral Languages of thoſe Nations, where their Habitations were fixed; and that by twelve illiterate men. That two or three hours before knew no Language but that of their Native Country.

It was the Cuſtom of the Jews, that dwelt among other Nations, at a diſtance from Jeruſalem, to aſſemble together at Jeruſalem at the Feaſt of Pentecoſt: And God pitched upon this Seaſon, that there might be Witneſſes of this Miracle in many Parts of the World: There were ſome of every Nation under Heaven, verſe 5. That is, of that known part of the World, ſo ſaith the Text. Fourteen ſeveral Nations are mentioned; and Proſelytes as well as Jews by Birth. They are called devout men, men of Conſcience, whoſe Teſtimony would carry weight with it among their Neighbours at their return, becauſe of their Reputation by their Religious Carriage.

Again, this was not heard and ſeen by ſome of them at one time, and ſome at another, by ſome one hour, by others the next ſucceſſively *, but all together in a Solemn Aſſembly, that the teſtimony of ſo many witneſſes at a time, might be more valid, and the truth of the Doctrine appear more illuſtrious and undeniable. And it muſt needs be aſtoniſhing to them, to hear that Perſon magnified in ſo miraculous a manner, who had ſo lately been condemned by their Country-men as a Malefactor.

* Faucheur in loc. p. 294, 295.

Wiſdom conſiſts in the timing of things. And in this Circumſtance doth the wiſdom of God appear, in furniſhing the Apoſtles with the Spirit at ſuch a time, and bringing forth ſuch a Miracle, as the gift of Tongues, on a ſudden, that every Nation might hear in their own Language, the wonder of Redemption, and as witneſſes, at their returns into their own Countries, report it to others; that the Credit they had, in their ſeveral places, might facilitate the belief and entertainment of the Goſpel, when the Apoſtles, or others, ſhould arrive to thoſe ſeveral Charges and Dioceſſes appointed for them to Preach the Goſpel in. Had this Miracle been wrought in the preſence only of the Inhabitants of Judea, that underſtood only their own Language, or one or two of the Neighbouring Tongues, it had been counted by them rather a Madneſs than a Miracle. Or had they underſtood all the Tongues which they ſpoke, the News of it had ſpread no further than the limits of their own Habitations, and had been confin'd within the narrow bounds of the Land of Judea. But now it is carried to ſeveral remote Nations, where any of thoſe Auditors then aſſembled had their Reſidence.

As God choſe the time of the Paſſeover for the Death of Chriſt, that there might be the greateſt Number of the Inhabitants of the Country, as witneſſes of the Matter of Fact, the Innocence and Sufferings of Chriſt, ſo he choſe the time of Pentecoſt for the firſt publiſhing the value and end of this Blood to the world.

Thus the Evangelical Law was given in a Confluence of People from all Parts and Nations, becauſe it was a Covenant with all Nations: And the variety of Languages ſpoken by a Company of poor Galileans, bred up at the Lake of Tiberias, and in poor corners of Canaan, without the Inſtructions of men for ſo great a Skill, might well evidence to the hearers, that God, that brought the Confuſion of Languages firſt at Babel, did only work that Cure of them, and combine all together at Jeruſalem.

3. The wiſdom of God is ſeen in the Inſtruments he employed in the publiſhing the Goſpel. He did not employ Philoſophers, but Fiſhermen, uſed not acquired Arts, but infus'd wiſdom and courage. This Treaſure was put into, and preſerved in Earthen Veſſels, that the wiſdom, as well as the power of God, might be magnified. The weaker the means are which attain the end, the greater is the skill of the Conductor of them.

Wiſe Princes choſe Men of moſt Credit, Intereſt, Wiſdom, and Ability to be Miniſters of their Affairs, and Embaſſadors to others. But what were theſe that God choſe for ſo great a work, as the publiſhing a new Doctrine to the world? What was their quality, but mean? what was their Authority, without Intereſt? What was their Ability, without eminent Parts for ſo great a work, but what Divine Grace in a ſpecial manner endowed them with? Nay, what was their diſpoſition to it? As dull and unweildy. Witneſs the frequent rebukes for their ſlow-heartedneſs, from their Maſter, when he converſed in the Fleſh with them. And One of the greateſt of them, ſo fond of the Jewiſh Ceremonies and Phariſaical Principles, wherein he had been more than ordinarily principled, that he hated the Chriſtian Religion to extirpation, and the Profeſſors of it to death; by thoſe ways which were out of the Road of Human wiſdom, and would be accounted the greateſt abſurdity to be practis'd by Men that have a repute for diſcretion, did God advance his wiſdom. 1 Cor. 1. 25. The fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer than Man. By this means it was indiſputably evidenc'd to unbyaſſed Minds, that the Doctrine was Divine. It could not rationally be imagined, that Inſtruments deſtitute of all Human Advantages, ſhould be able to vanquiſh the world, confound Judaiſm, overturn Heatheniſm, chaſe away the Devils, ſtrip them of their Temples, alienate the Minds of Men from their ſeveral Religions, which had been rooted in them by Education, and eſtabliſhed by a long ſucceſſion. It could not, I ſay, reaſonably be imagined to be without a Supernatural Aſſiſtance, an Heavenly and efficacious working: Whereas, had God taken a Courſe agreeable to the Prudence of Man, and uſed thoſe that had been furniſhed with Learning, tip'd with Eloquence, and armed with Human Authority, the Doctrines would have been thought to have been of a Human Invention, and to be ſome ſubtle Contrivance for ſome unworthy and ambitious end: The nothingneſs and weakneſs of the Inſtruments manifeſt them to be conducted by a Divine Power, and declare the Doctrine it ſelf to be from Heaven.

When we ſee ſuch feeble Inſtruments Proclaiming a Doctrine repugnant to Fleſh and Blood, ſounding forth a crucified Chriſt to be believed in, and truſted on, and declaiming againſt the Religion and Worſhip, under which the Roman Empire had long flouriſhed; exhorting them to the contempt of the world, preparation for Afflictions, denying themſelves, and their own Honours, by the hopes of an unſeen Reward, things ſo repugnant to Fleſh and Blood. And theſe Inſtruments concurring in the ſame Story, with an admirable Harmony in all parts, and ſealing this Doctrine with their Blood; can we upon all this aſcribe this Doctrine to a Human Contrivance, or fix any lower Author of it than the wiſdom of Heaven? 'Tis the wiſdom of God that carries on his own Deſigns in Methods moſt ſuitable to his own Greatneſs, and different from the Cuſtoms and Modes of Men, that leſs of Humanity, and more of Divinity might appear.

4. The Wiſdom of God appears in the ways and manner, as well as in the Inſtruments of its propagation. By ways ſeemingly contrary. You know how God had ſent the Jews into Captivity in Babylon, and though he ſtruck off their Chains, and reſtored them to their Country, yet many of them had no mind to leave a Country wherein they had been born and bred. The diſtance from the Place of the Original of their Anceſtors, and their affection to the Country wherein they were born, might have occaſioned their embracing the Idolatrous Worſhip of the Place. Afterwards the Perſecutions of Antiochus ſcatter'd many of the Jews for their ſecurity into other Nations; yet a great part, and perhaps the greateſt, preſerved their Religion, and by that were obliged to come every Year to Jeruſalem to Offer, and ſo were preſent at the effuſion of the Spirit on the day of Pentecoſt, and were witneſſes of the miraculous effects of it: Had they not been diſpers'd by Perſecution, had they not reſided in ſeveral Countries, and been acquainted with their Languages, the Goſpel had not ſo eaſily been diffuſed into ſeveral Countries of the world. The firſt Perſecutions alſo raiſed againſt the Church propagated the Goſpel; the ſcattering of the Diſciples enflamed their courage, and diſpers'd the Doctrine*, according to the Prophecy of Daniel, Dan. 12. 4. Many ſhould run to and fro, and knowledge ſhould be increaſed. The flights and hurryings of Men ſhould enlarge the Territories of the Goſpel. There was not a Tribunal, but the Primitive Chriſtians were cited to; not a horrible Puniſhment, but was inflicted upon them. Treated they were, as the dregs and offals of Mankind, as the common Enemies of the world; yet the Flames of the Martyrs brightned the Doctrine and the Captivity of its Profeſſors, made way for the Throne of its Empire. The Impriſonment of the Ark was the downfal of Dagon. Religion grew ſtronger by Sufferings, and Chriſtianity taller by Injuries. What can this be aſcribed to, but the conduct of a wiſdom ſuperiour to that of Men and Devils, defeating the Methods of Human and Helliſh Policy; thereby making the Wiſdom of this world fooliſhneſs with God? 1 Cor. 3. 19.

* Acts 3. 3.

Fifthly, The Uſe: I. Of Information. If wiſdom be an Excellency of the Divine Nature; then,

1. Chriſt's Deity may hence be aſſerted. Wiſdom is the emphatical Title of Chriſt in Scripture, Prov. 8. 12, 13. 31. where Wiſdom is brought in ſpeaking as a diſtinct Perſon; aſcribing Counſel, and Underſtanding, and the Knowledge of witty Inventions to it ſelf. He is called alſo the Power of God, and the Wiſdom of God. * And the Ancients generally underſtood that place, Col. 2. 3. In him are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, as an aſſertion of the Godhead of Chriſt, in regard of the infiniteneſs of his knowledge; referring wiſdom to his knowledge of Divine things, and knowledge to his underſtanding of all Human things. But the Natural ſenſe of the place ſeems to be this, that all wiſdom and knowledge is diſplayed by Chriſt in the Goſpel; and the words, ἐν ᾧ, refer either to Chriſt, or the Myſtery of God ſpoken of, verſ. 2. But the Deity of Chriſt, in regard of infinite wiſdom, may be deduc'd from his Creation of things, and his Government of things; both which are aſcribed to him in Scripture. The firſt aſcribed to him, John 1. 3. All things were made by him; and verſe 27. Without him was not any thing made, that was made. The ſecond, John 5. 22. The Father hath committed all Judgment to the Son; and both put together, Col. 2. 16, 17.

* 1 Cor. 1. 24.

Now, ſince he hath the Government of the world, he hath the Perfections neceſſary to ſo great a work. As the Creation of the world, which is aſcribed to him, requires an infinite power, ſo the Government of the world requires an infinite wiſdom. That he hath the knowledge of the hearts of men, was proved in handling the Omniſcience of God. That knowledge would be to little purpoſe without wiſdom to order the motions of mens hearts, and conduct all the qualities and actions of Creatures, to ſuch an end as is anſwerable to a wiſe Government; we cannot think ſo great an Employment can be without an Ability neceſſary for it. The Goverment of Men and Angels is a great part of the Glory of God; and if God ſhould entruſt the greateſt part of his Glory in hands unfit for ſo great a Truſt, it would be an Argument of weakneſs in God, as it is in Men, to pitch upon unfit Inſtruments for particular Charges: Since God hath therefore committed to him his greateſt Glory, the Conduct of all things for the higheſt end, he hath a wiſdom requiſite for ſo great an end, which can be no leſs than infinite: If then Chriſt were a finite Perſon, he would not be capable of an infinite Communication; he could not be a Subject wherein infinite wiſdom could be lodged; for the terms finite and infinite are ſo diſtant, that they cannot commence one another; finite can never be changed into infinite, no more than infinite can into finite.

2. Hence we may aſſert, The right and fitneſs of God for the Government of the World, as he is the wiſeſt Being. Among Men, thoſe who are excellent in Judgment, are accounted fitteſt to preſide over, and give Orders to others; the wiſeſt in a City are moſt capable to govern a City; or at leaſt, though ignorant Men may bear the Title, yet the advice of the ſoundeſt and skilfulleſt Heads ſhould prevail in all Publick Affairs: We ſee in Nature, that the Eye guides the Body, and the Mind directs the Eye.

* Power and Wiſdom are the two Arms of Authority: Wiſdom knows the end, and directs the means; Power executes the means deſign'd for ſuch an end. The more ſplendid and ſtrong thoſe are in any, the more Authority reſults from thence, for the conduct of others that are of an inferiour Orb: Now God being infinitely excellent in both, his Ability and Right to the management of the world, cannot be ſuſpected; the whole world is but one Commonwealth, whereof God is the Monarch. Did the Government of the world depend upon the Election of Men and Angels, where could they pitch, or where would they find Perfections capable of ſo great a work, but in the Supream Wiſdom? His wiſdom hath already been apparent in thoſe Laws, whereby he formed the world into a Civil Society, and the Iſraelites into a Commonwealth: The one ſuited to the Conſciences and Reaſons of all his Subjects, and the other ſuited to the Genius of that particular Nation, drawn out of the Righteouſneſs of the Moral Law, and applicable to all Caſes that might ariſe among them in their Government; ſo that Moſes aſſerts, that the wiſdom apparent in their Laws enacted by God, as their chief Magiſtrate, would render them famous among other Nations, in regard of their Wiſdom, as well as their Righteouſneſs, Deut. 4. 6, 7, 9. Alſo this Perfection doth evidence, that God doth actually govern the world. It would not be a commendable thing for a Man, to make a curious Piece of Clock-work, and take no care for the orderly motion of it. Would God diſplay ſo much of his Skill in framing the Heaven and Earth, and none in actual guidance of them to their particular and univerſal ends? Did he lay the Foundation in order, and fit every Stone in the Building, make all things in weight and meaſure, to let them afterwards run at hap-hazard? Would he bring forth his Power to view in the Creation, and let a more glorious Perfection lie idle, when it had ſo large a Field to move in? Infinite wiſdom is inconſiſtent with inactivity. All Prudence doth illuſtrate it ſelf in untying the hardeſt Knots, and diſpoſing the moſt difficult Affairs to a happy and ſucceſsful Iſſue: All thoſe various Arts and Inventions among Men, which lend their aſſiſting hand to one another, and thoſe various Employments, their ſeveral Genius's led them to, whereby they ſupport one anothers welfare, are Beams and Inſtincts of Divine wiſdom in the Government of the world. He that *made all things in wiſdom, would not leave his works to act and move only according to their own folly, and idly behold them jumble together, and run counter to that end he deſigned them for; we muſt not fancy a Divine Wiſdom to be deſtitute of Activity.

* Amyraut. Moral. Tom. 1. p. 258, 259

* Pſal. 104. 24.

3. Here we may ſee a ground of God's Patience. The moſt impotent Perſons are the moſt impatient, when unforeſeen Emergencies ariſe, or at Events expected by them, when their feeble Prudence was not a ſufficient match to conteſt with them, or prevent them. But the wiſer any Man is, the more he bears with thoſe things which ſeem to croſs his Intentions, becauſe he knows he graſps the whole Affair, and is ſure of attaining the End he propoſeth to himſelf; yet as a finite Wiſdom can have but a finite Patience, ſo an infinite Wiſdom poſſeſſes an infinite Patience.

The wiſe God intends to bring Glory to himſelf, and good to ſome of his Creatures, out of the greateſt Evils that can happen in the World: He beholds no exorbitant Afflictions, and monſtrous Actions, but what he can diſpoſe to a good and glorious End, even to work together for Good to them that love God *; and therefore doth not preſently fall foul upon the Actors, till he hath wrought out that temporary Glory to himſelf, and Good to his People, which he deſigns. The times of Ignorance God winks at, till he had brought his Son into the World, and manifeſted his Wiſdom in Redemption, and when this was done, he preſſeth Men to a ſpeedy Repentance *; that as, he forebore puniſhing their Crimes, in order to the diſplaying his Wiſdom in the deſign'd Redemption, ſo when he had effected it, they muſt forbear any longer abuſing his Patience.

* Rom. 8. 28.

* Acts 17. 30.

4. Hence appears the Immutability of God in his Decrees. He is not deſtitute of a Power, and Strength to change his own Purpoſes; but his infinite Perfection of Wiſdom is a Bar to his laying aſide his Eternal Reſolves, and forming new ones; Iſa. 46. 10. He reſolves the end from the beginning, and his Counſel ſtands; ſtands immovable, becauſe it is Counſel. 'Tis an impotent Counſel, that is ſubject to a daily thwarting it ſelf. Inconſtant Perſons are accounted by Men, deſtitute of a due meaſure of Prudence. If God change his Mind, 'tis either for the better or the worſe; if for the better, he was not wiſe in his former Purpoſe; if for the worſe, he is not wiſe in his preſent Reſolve. No Alteration can be, without a Reflection of Weakneſs upon the former or preſent Determination. God muſt either ceaſe to be as wiſe as he was before, or begin to be wiſer than he was before the change; which to think or imagine, is to deny a Diety. If any Man change his Reſolution, he is apprehenſive of a Flaw in his former Purpoſe, and finds an Inconvenience in it, which moves him to ſuch a change; which muſt be either for want of fore-ſight in himſelf, or want of a due Conſideration of the Object of his Counſel: Neither of which can be imagined of God, without a denial of the Deity. No, there are no Blots and Blemiſhes in his Purpoſes and Promiſes. Repentance indeed is an Act of Wiſdom in the Creature; but it preſuppoſeth Folly in his former Actions, which is inconſiſtent with infinite Perfection. Men are often too raſh in Promiſing; and therefore what they promiſe in haſt, they perform at Leaſure, or not at all: They conſider not before they Vow, and make After-enquiries, whether they had beſt ſtand to it.

The only wiſe God needs not any After-game: As he is Sovereignly Wiſe, he ſees no Cauſe of reverſing any thing, and wants not Expedients for his own Purpoſe; and as he is infinitely Powerful, he hath no Superior to hinder him from executing his Will, and making his People enjoy the Effects of his Wiſdom. If he had a Recollection of Thoughts (as Man hath) and ſaw a Neceſſity to mend them, he were not infinitely Wiſe in his firſt Decrees. As in Creation, he looked back upon the ſeveral Pieces of that goodly Frame he had erected, and ſaw them ſo exact, that he did not take up his Pencil again to mend any Particle of the firſt Draught; ſo his Promiſes are made with ſuch infinite Wiſdom and Judgment, that what he writes is Irreverſible, and for Ever, as the Decrees of the Medes and Perſians. All the Words of God are Eternal, becauſe they are the Births of Righteouſneſs and Judgment, Hoſ. 2. 19. I will betroth thee to me for ever, in Righteouſneſs and Judgment. He is not of a wavering and flitting Diſcretion: If he Threatens, he wiſely conſiders what he Threatens; if he Promiſes, he wiſely conſiders what he Promiſes, and therefore is Immutable in both.

5. Hence it follows, that God is a fit Object for our Truſt and Confidence. For God being infinitely Wiſe, when he Promiſes any thing, he ſees every thing which may hinder, and every thing which may promote the Execution of it; ſo that he cannot diſcover any thing afterwards, that may move him to take up After-thoughts. He hath more Wiſdom than to promiſe any thing hand-over-head, or any thing which he knows he cannot accompliſh. Though God, as True, be the Object of our Truſt; yet God, as Wiſe, is the Foundation of our Truſt. We truſt him in his Promiſe; the Promiſe was made by Mercy, and 'tis perform'd by Truth; but Wiſdom conducts all Means to the Accompliſhment of it. There are many Men, whoſe Honeſty we can confide in, but whoſe Diſcretion we are diffident of: But there is no Defect either of the one or the other, which may ſcare us from a depending upon God in our Concerns. The Words of Man's Wiſdom, the Apoſtle entitles Enticing, 1 Cor. 2. 4. in Oppoſition to the Words of God's Wiſdom, which are firm, ſtable, and undeniable Demonſtrations. As the Power of God is an Encouragement of Truſt, becauſe he is able to effect; ſo the Wiſdom of God comes into the Rank of thoſe Attributes which ſupport our Faith. To put a Confidence in him, we muſt be perſwaded, not only that he is Ignorant of nothing in the World, but that he is Wiſe to manage the whole Courſe of Nature, and diſpoſe of all his Creatures, for the bringing his Purpoſes and his Promiſes to their deſigned Perfection.

6. Hence appears the neceſſity of a publick review of the Management of the World, and of a Day of Judgment. As a Day of Judgment may be inferr'd from many Attributes of God; as his Sovereignty, Juſtice, Omniſcience, &c. ſo among the reſt from this of Wiſdom. How much of this Perfection will lie unveil'd and obſcure, if the Sins of Men be not brought to view, whereby the ordering the unrighteous Actions of Men, by his directing and over-ruling Hand of Providence, in ſubſerviency to his own Purpoſes, and his Peoples Good, may appear in all its Glory? Without ſuch a publick Review, this part of Wiſdom will not be clearly viſible; how thoſe Actions, which had a vile Foundation in the Hearts and Deſigns of Men, and were formed there to gratifie ſome baſe Luſt, Ambition, and Covetouſneſs, &c. were by a ſecret Wiſdom preſiding over them, conducted to amazing Ends.

'Tis a part of Divine Wiſdom to right it ſelf, and convince Men of the reaſonableneſs of its Laws, and the unreaſonableneſs of their Contradictions to it. The Execution of the Sentence, is an Act of Juſtice; but the Conviction of the reaſonableneſs of the Sentence, is an Act of Wiſdom, clearing up the Righteouſneſs of the Proceeding; and this precedes, and the other follows, Jude 15. To convince all that are ungodly, of all their ungodly Deeds. That Wiſdom which contrived Satisfaction, as well as that Juſtice which required it, is concerned in righting the Law, which was enacted by it. The Wiſdom of a Sovereign Law-giver is engag'd not to ſee his Law vilified vilified and trampled on, and expoſed to the Luſts and Affronts of Men, without being concerned in vindicating the Honour of it. It would appear a a Folly to enact and publiſh it, if there were not a Reſolution to right and execute it.

The Wiſdom of God can no more aſſociate Iniquity and Happineſs together, than the Juſtice of God can ſeparate Iniquity from Puniſhment. It would be defective, if it did always tamely bear the Inſolencies of Offenders, without a time of remark of their Crimes, and a Juſtification of the Precept rebelliouſly ſpurn'd at. He would be Unwiſe, if he were Unjuſt; Unrighteouſneſs hath no better a Title in Scripture, than that of Folly. 'Tis no part of Wiſdom, to give birth to thoſe Laws which he will always behold ineffectual, and neither vindicate his Law by a due Execution of the Penalty, nor right his own Authority, contemn'd in the Violation of his Law, by a juſt Revenge. Beſides, What Wiſdom would it be for the Sovereign Judge, to lodge ſuch a Spokeſman for himſelf, as Conſcience in the Soul of Man, if it ſhould be alway found ſpeaking, and at length be found falſe in all that it ſpeaks? There is therefore an apparent Proſpect of the Day of Account, from the Conſideration of this Perfection of the Divine Nature.

7. Hence we have a ground for a mighty Reverence and Veneration of the Divine Majeſty. Who can contemplate the Sparklings of this Perfection in the variety of the Works of his Hands, and the exact Government of all his Creatures, without a raiſed Admiration of the Excellency of his Being, and a falling flat before him, in a Poſture of Reverence to ſo great a Being? Can we behold ſo great a Maſs of Matter, digeſted into ſeveral Forms, ſo exact a Harmony and Temperament in all the Creatures, the Proportions of Numbers and Meaſures, and one Creature anſwering the Ends and Deſigns of another, the diſtinct Beauties of all, the perpetual Motion of all things, without checking one another; the variety of the Nature of things, and all acting according to their Nature with an admirable Agreement; and all together, like differing Strings upon an Inſtrument, emitting divers Sounds, but all reduc'd to order in one delightful Leſſon. I ſay, Can we behold all this without Admiring and Adoring the Divine Wiſdom, which appears in all?

And from the Conſideration of this, let us paſs to the Conſideration of his Wiſdom in Redemption; in reconciling divided Intereſts, untying hard Knots, drawing one contrary out of another; and we muſt needs acknowledge, that the Wiſdom of all the Men on Earth, and Angels in Heaven, is worſe than nothing, and Vanity in Compariſon of this vaſt Ocean. And as we have a greater eſteem for thoſe that invent ſome excellent Artificial Engines; what Reverence ought we to have for him that hath ſtampt an unimitable Wiſdom upon all his Works? Nature orders us to give Honour to our Superiours in Knowledge, and confide in their Counſels; but none ought to be reverenc'd as much as God, ſince none equals him in Wiſdom.

8. If God be infinitely Wiſe, it ſhews us the neceſſity of our Addreſs to him, and Invocation of his Name. We are ſubject to Miſtakes, and often overſeen; we are not able rightly to Counſel our ſelves. In ſome Caſes all Creatures are too ſhort-ſighted to apprehend them, and too ignorant to give Advice proper for them, and to contrive Remedies for their Eaſe; but with the Lord there is Counſel, Jer. 32. 19. He is great in counſel, and mighty in working; great in Counſel to adviſe us, mighty in Working to aſſiſt us. We know not how to effect a Deſign, or prevent an expected Evil. We have an infinite Wiſdom to go to, that is every way skilful to manage any Buſineſs we deſire, to avert any Evil we fear, to accompliſh any thing we commit into his Hands. When we know not what to reſolve, he hath a Counſel to guide us, Pſal. 73. 24. He is not more Powerful to effect what is needful, than Wiſe to direct what is fitting All Men ſtand in need of the help of God, as one Man ſtands in need of the Aſſiſtance of other Men, and will not do any thing without Advice; and he that takes Advice, deſerves the Title of a Wiſe Man, as well as he that gives Advice. But no Man needs ſo much the Advice of another Man, as all Men need the Counſel and Aſſiſtance of God: Neither is any Man's Wit and Wiſdom ſo far inferiour to the Prudence and Ability of an Angel, as the Wiſdom of the wiſeſt Man, and the moſt ſharp-ſighted Angel, is inferior to the infinite Wiſdom of God. We ſee therefore, that it is beſt for us to go to the Fountain, and not content our ſelves with the Streams; to beg Advice from a Wiſdom that is Infinite and Infallible, rather than from that which is Finite and Fallible.

Uſe I. If Wiſdom be the Perfection of the Divine Majeſty, How prodigious is the Contempt of it in the World?

In General.

All Sin ſtrikes at this Attribute, and is in one part or other a degrading of it: The firſt Sin directed its Venom againſt this. As the Devils endeavoured to equal their Creator in Power; ſo Man endeavoured to equal him in Wiſdom: Both indeed ſcorn'd to be ruled by his Order; but Man evidently exalted himſelf againſt the Wiſdom of God, and aſpired to be a ſharer with him in his infinite Knowledge: Would not let him be the only wiſe God, but cheriſhed an Ambition to be his Partner. Juſt as if a Beam were able to imagine, it might be as bright as the Sun; or a Spark Fancy, it could be as full fraught with Heat, as the whole Element of Fire. Man would not ſubmit to the infinite Wiſdom of God in the Prohibition of one ſingle Fruit in the Garden, when by the right of his Sovereign Authority, he might have granted him only the uſe of one. All preſumptuous Sins are of this Nature, they are therefore called Reproaches of God, Numb. 15. 30. the Soul that doth ought preſumptuouſly, reproacheth the Lord. All Reproaches are either for Natural, Moral, or Intellectual Defects. All Reproaches of God, muſt imply either a Weakneſs or Unrighteouſneſs in God. If Unrighteouſneſs, his Holineſs is denied; if Weakneſs, his Wiſdom is blemiſhed.

In General, All Sin ſtrikes at this Perfection Two Ways.

1. As it defaceth the wiſe Workmanſhip of God. Every Sin is a deforming and blemiſhing our own Souls, which, as they are the prime Creatures in the lower World, ſo they have greater Characters of Divine Wiſdom in the Fabrick of them: But this Image of God is ruin'd and broken by Sin. Though the ſpoiling of it be a ſcorn to his Holineſs, 'tis alſo an affront to his Wiſdom; for though his Power was the cauſe of the Production of ſo fair a Piece, yet his Wiſdom was the guide of his Power, and his Holineſs the Pattern whereby he wrought it: His Power effected it, and his Holineſs was exemplified in it, but his Wiſdom contrived it.

If a Man had a curious Clock or Watch, which had coſt him many Years Pains, and the Strength of his Skill to frame it; for another, after he had ſeen and conſidered it, to trample upon it, and cruſh it in Pieces, would argue a Contempt of the Artificer's Skill. God hath ſhewn infinite Art in the Creation of Man; but Sin unbeautifies Man, and raviſheth his Excellency. It cuts and ſlaſheth the Image of God ſtampt by Divine Wiſdom, as though it were an Object only of Scorn and Contempt. The Sinner in every Sin acts, as if he intended to put himſelf in a better Poſture, and in a fairer Dreſs, than the Wiſdom of God hath put him in by Creation.

Sinner

2. In the ſlighting his Laws. The Laws of God are highly Rational; they are drawn from the Depths of the Divine Underſtanding, wherein there is no Unclearneſs, and no Defect. As his Underſtanding apprehends all things in their true Reaſon; ſo his Will enjoins all things for worthy and wiſe Ends: His Laws are contrived by his Wiſdom for the Happineſs of Man, whoſe Happineſs, and the Methods to it, he underſtands better than Men or Angels can do. His Laws being the Orders of the wiſeſt Underſtanding, every breach of his Law is a flying in the Face of his Wiſdom. All human Laws, though they are enforced by Sovereign Authority; yet they are, or ought to be in the compoſing of them, founded upon Reaſon, and ſhould be particular Applications of the Law of Nature, to this or that particular Emergency. The Laws of God then, who is ſumma ratio, are the Birth of the trueſt Reaſon; though the Reaſon of every one of them may not be ſo clear to us.

Every Law, though it conſiſts in an Act of the Will, yet doth preſuppoſe an Act of the Underſtanding. The Act of the Divine Underſtanding in framing the Law, muſt be ſuppoſed to precede the Act of his Will, in commanding the obſervance of that Law. So every Sin againſt the Law, is not only againſt the Will of God commanding, but the Reaſon of God contriving; and a cleaving to our own Reaſon, rather than the Underſtanding or Mind of God: As if God had miſtaken in making his Law, and we had more Underſtanding to frame a better, and more conducing to our Happineſs: As if God were not Wiſe enough to govern us, and preſcribe what we ſhould do, and what we ſhould avoid; as if he deſigned not our Welfare, but our Misfortune.

Whereas the Precepts of God are not tyrannical Edicts, or Acts of meer Will, but the Fruits of Counſel; and therefore every Breach of them is a real Declamation againſt his Diſcretion and Judgment, and preferring our own Imaginations, or the Suggeſtions of the Devil, as our Rule, before the Reſults of Divine Counſel: While we acknowledge him Wiſe in our Opinion, we ſpeak him fooliſh by our Practice; when inſtead of being guided by him, we will guide our ſelves. No Man will queſtion, but it is a controuling Divine Wiſdom, to make Alterations in his Precepts; dogmatically, either to add ſome of their own, or expunge any of his: And is it not a Crime of the like Reflection to alter them Practically? When we will obſerve one part of the Law, and not another part; but pick and chooſe where we pleaſe our ſelves, as our Humours and Carnal Intereſt prompt us. It is to charge that part of the Law with Folly, which we refuſe to conform unto.

The more cunning any Man is in Sin, the more his Sin is againſt Divine Wiſdom, as if he thought to out-wit God. He that receives the Promiſes of God, and the Teſtimony of Chriſt, ſets to his Seal, that God is true, John 3. 33. By the like Strength of Argument it will undeniably follow, That he that refuſeth Obedience to his Precept, ſets to his Seal, that God is fooliſh. Were they not Rational, God would not enjoin them; and if they are Rational, we are Enemies to infinite Wiſdom, by not complying with them. If infinite Prudence hath made the Law, why is not every part of it obſerved? If it were not made with the beſt Wiſdom, why is any part of it obſerved? If the defacing his Image be any Sin, as being a defaming his Wiſdom in Creation; the breaking his Law is no leſs a Sin, as being a diſgracing his Wiſdom in his Adminiſtration. 'Tis upon this account, likely, that the Scripture ſo often counts Sinners Fools, ſince it is certainly inexcuſable Folly, to contradict undeniable and infallible Wiſdom; yet this is done in the leaſt Sin: And as he that breaks one tittle of the Law, is deſervedly accounted guilty of the breach of the whole, James 2. 10. ſo he that deſpiſeth the leaſt Stamp of Wiſdom in the minuteſt part of the Law, is deſervedly counted as a Contemner of it, in the frame of the whole Statute-Book.

But in Particular, the Wiſdom of God is affronted and invaded.

1. By introducing new Rules and Modes of Worſhip, different from Divine Inſtitutions. Is not this a manifeſt Reflection on this Perfection of God, as though he had not been Wiſe enough to provide for his own Honour, and model his own Service; but ſtood in need of our Directions, and the Caprichio's of our Brains? Some have obſerved, that it is a greater Sin in Worſhip to do what we ſhould not, than to omit what we ſhould perform*. The one ſeems to be out of Weakneſs, becauſe of the high Exactneſs of the Law; and the other out of Impudence, accuſing the Wiſdom of God of Imperfection, and controuling it in its Inſtitutions. At beſt, it ſeems to be an Imputation of human Baſhfulneſs to the Supream Sovereign; as if he had been aſhamed to preſcribe all that was neceſſary to his own Honour, but had left ſomething to the Ingenuity and Gratitude of Men.

* Strong of the Will.

Man has ever ſince the fooliſh Conceit of his old Anceſtor Adam, preſumed he could be as Wiſe as God; and if he who was created upright entertain'd ſuch Conceits, much more doth Man now, under a maſs of Corruption, ſo capable to foment them. This hath been the continual practice of Men; not ſo much to reject what once they had received as Divine, but to add ſomething of their own Inventions to it.

The Heathens renounced not the Sacrificing of Beaſts for the Expiation of their Offences (which the Old World had received by Tradition from Adam, and the New World, after the Deluge, from Noah.) But they had blended that Tradition with Rites of their own, and offered Creatures unclean in themſelves, and not fit to be offered to an infinitely pure being; for the Diſtinction of Clean and Unclean, was as Ancient as Noah, Gen. 8. 20. yea before, Gen. 7. 2.

So the Jews did not diſcard what they had received from God, as Circumciſion, the Paſſover, and Sacrifices; but they would mix a Heap of Heathenish Rites with the Ceremonies of Divine Ordination, and practiſe things which he had not commanded, as well as things which he had enjoined them. And therefore 'tis obſervable, that when God taxeth them with this Sin; he doth not ſay, They brought in thoſe things which he had forbidden into his Worſhip; but thoſe things which he had not commanded, and had given no order for, to intimate, that they were not to move a Step without his Rule; (Jer. 7. 31. They have built the high places of Tophet, which I commanded them not, nor came it into my Heart; and Lev. 10. 1. Nadab's and Abihu's ſtrange Fire was not commanded;) ſo charging them with Impudence and Raſhneſs in adding ſomething of their own, after he had revealed to them the manner of his Service, as if they were as Wiſe as God. So loth is Man to acknowledge the Supremacy of Divine Underſtanding, and be ſenſible of his own Ignorance.

So after the divulging of the Goſpel, the Corrupters of Religion did not fling off, but preſerved the Inſtitutions of God, but painted and patch'd them up

up with Pagan Ceremonies; impoſed their own Dreams with as much Force, as the Revelations of God. Thus hath the Papacy turn'd the Simplicity of the Goſpel into Pagan Pomp, and Religion into Politie' and revived the Ceremonial Law, and raked ſ.me Limbs of it out of the Grave, after the Wiſdom of God had rung her Knell, and honourably Interr'd her; and ſhelter'd the Heatheniſh Superſtitions in Chriſtian Temples, after the Power of the Goſpel had chas'd the Devils, with all their Trumpery, from their ancient Habitations.

Whence ſhould this proceed, but from a partial Atheiſm, and a mean Conceit of the Divine Wiſdom? As though God had not Underſtanding enough to preſcribe the Form of his own Worſhip; and not Wiſdom enough to ſupport it, without the Crutches of Human Prudence.

Human Prudence is too low to parallel Divine Widſom; 'tis an incompetent Judge of what is fit for an infinite Majeſty. 'Tis ſufficiently ſeen in the ridiculous and ſenſeleſs Rites among the Heathens; and the Cruel and Deviliſh ones, fetch'd from them by the Jews. What Work will Human Wiſdom make with Divine Worſhip, when it will preſume to be the Director of it, as a Mate with the Wiſdom of God? Whence will it take its Meaſures, but from Senſe, Humour, and Fancy? As though what is grateful aud comely to a depraved Reaſon, were as beautiful to an unſpotted, and infinite Mind. Do not ſuch tell the World, that they were of God's Cabinet Counſel, ſince they will take upon them to judge, as well as God, what is well-pleaſing to him? Where will it have the Humility to ſtop, if it hath the Preſumption to add any one thing to Revealed Modes of Worſhip? How did God tax the Iſraelites with making Idols according to their own Underſtanding? Hoſ. 13. 2. imagining their own Underſtandings to be of a finer make, and a perfecter Mould than their Creators; and that they had fetched more Light from the Chaos of their own Brains, than God had from Eternity in his own Nature? How ſlight will the Excuſe be, God hath not forbidden this, or that, when God ſhall ſilence Men with the Queſtion, Where, or when did I command this, or that? There was no Addition to be made under the Law to the meaneſt Inſtrument God had appointed in his Service. The Sacred Perfume was not to have one Ingredient more put into it, than what God had preſcribed in the Compoſition; nor was any Man upon pain of Death to imitate it; nor would God endure, that Sacrifices ſhould be conſumed with any other Fire, than that which came down from Heaven. So tender is God of any Invaſions of his Wiſdom and Authority. In all things of this Nature, whatſoever voluntary humility and reſpect to God they may be diſguiſed with, there is a ſwelling of the fleſhly mind againſt Infinite Underſtanding, which the Apoſtle nauſeates.

Such Mixtures have not been bleſt by God: As God never proſper'd the Mixtures of ſeveral kinds of Creatures, to form and multiply a new Species, as being a Diſſatisfaction with his Wiſdom, as Creator; ſo he doth not proſper Mixtures in Worſhip, as being a Conſpiracy againſt his Wiſdom, as a Lawgiver. * The Deſtruction of the Jews, was judged by ſome of their Doctors to be, for preferring Human Traditions before the written Word; which they ground on Iſa. 29. 33. Their Fear of me was taught by the Precepts of Men. The Injunctions of Men were the Rule of their Worſhip, and not the Preſcripts of my Law.

To conclude: Such as make Alterations in Religion, different from the firſt Inſtitution, are intollerable Buſie Bodies, that will not let God alone with his own Affairs. Vain Man would be wiſer than his Maker, and be dabbling in that which is his ſole Prerogative.

2. In neglecting Means Inſtituted by God. When Men have riſings of Heart againſt God's Ordinances. They reject the Counſel of the Lord againſt themſelves, or in themſelves, Luke 7. 30. εἰς ἑαυτούς. They diſannull'd the Wiſdom of God, the Spring of his Ordinances: All Neglects are Diſregards of Divine Preſcriptions, as impertinent and unavailable to that End for which they were appointed, as not being ſuted to the common Dictates of Reaſon; ſometimes out of a voluntary Humility, ſuch as Peter's was, when he denied Chriſt's Condeſcenſion to waſh his Feet, John 13. 8. and thereby judged of the Comelineſs of his Maſter's Intention and Action. Such as continually neglect the great Inſtitution of the Lords Supper out of a ſenſe of Unworthineſs, are in the ſame rank with Peter, and do, as well as he, fall under the blame and reproof of Chriſt.

Men would be ſaved, and uſe the Means; but either Means of their own Appointment, or not all the Means of God's ordering*. They would have God's Wiſdom and Will condeſcend to theirs, and not theirs conformed to God. As if our blind Judgments were fitteſt to make the election of the Paths to Happineſs. Like Naaman, who when he was ordered by the Prophet, for the cure of his Leproſie, to waſh ſeven times in Jordan, would be the Prophet's Director, and have him touch him with his Hand: As if a Patient ſick of a deſperate Diſeaſe, ſhould preſcribe to his Skilful Phyſician, what Remedies he ſhould order for his Cure, and make his own infirm Reaſon, or his Guſt and Palate the Rule, rather than the Phyſician's Skill.

* Pont. Medit. part. 3. p. 336.

Mens Inquiries are, Who will ſhew us any good? They rather faſten upon any Means, than what God hath ordained. * We invert the Order Divine Wiſdom hath eſtabliſhed, when we would have God ſave us in our own way, not in his. 'Tis the ſame thing, as if we would have God nouriſh us without Bread, and cure our Diſeaſes without Medicines, and increaſe our Wealth without our Induſtry, and cheriſh our Souls without his Word and Ordinances. 'Tis to demand of him an alteration of his Methods and a ſeparation of that which he hath by his Eternal Judgment joyned together. Therefore for a Man to pray to God to ſave him, when he will not uſe the Means he hath appointed for Salvation, when he ſlights the Word, which is the Inſtrument of Salvation, is a Contempt of the Wiſdom of Divine Inſtitutions.

* Durant. de Tent. p. 403, 404.

Alſo in Omiſſions of Prayer; when we conſult not with God upon emergent Occaſions, we truſt more to our own wiſdom than Gods, and imply, that we ſtand not in need of his Conduct, but have ability to direct our ſelves, and accompliſh our Ends without his guidance. Not ſeeking God, is by the Prophet tax'd to be a reflection upon this Perfection of God, Iſai. 31. 1, 2. They look not to the Holy One of Iſrael, neither ſeek the Lord, &c. And the like Charge he brings againſt them, Hoſ. 8. 9. They are gone up to Aſſyria, a wild Aſs alone by himſelf, not conſulting God.

3. In cenſuring Gods Revelations and Actions, if they be not according to our Schemes. When we will, not ſubmit to his plain Will, without penetrating into the unrevealed Reaſon of it, nor adore his Counſels without controuling them; as if we could correct both Law and Goſpel, and frame a better Method of Redemption than that of Gods contriving. Thus Men ſlighted the Wiſdom of God in the Goſpel, becauſe it did not agree with that Philoſophical Wiſdom and Reaſon they had ſuckt in

* Vaſin. The Talmud takes notice, that the Court of Bethany was waſted three Years before Jeruſalem, becauſe they preferred their own Words before the Words of the Law.

* 1 Cor. 1. 21, 22. by Education from their Masters *, contrary to their Practice in their Superstitious Worship; where the Oracles they thought Divine, were entertained with Reverence, not with Dispute; and though ambiguous, were not counted ridiculous by the Worshippers. How foolish is man in this, wherein he would be accounted wise? Adam in Innocence was unfit to controul the Doctrine of God, when the Eye of his Reason was clear; and much more are we, since the depravation of our Nature.

The Revelations of God tower above Reason in its Purity; much more above Reason in its Mud and Earthiness. The Rays of Divine Wisdom are too bright for our Human Understandings, much more for our Sinful Understandings. 'Tis base to set up Reason, a Finite principle, against an Infinite Wisdom; much baser to set up a depraved and pur-blind Reason, against an All-seeing and holy Wisdom. If we would have a Reason for all that God speaks, and all that God acts; our Wisdom must become Infinite as his, or his Wisdom become Finite as ours.

All the Censures of God's Revelations arise from some prejudicate Opinions, or Traditional Maxims, that have enthroned themselves in our Minds, which are made the Standard whereby to judge of the things of God, and receive or reject them, as they agree with, or dissent from, those Prin-
*Coloss. 2. 8. ciples *. Hence it was that the Philosophers in the Primitive Times were the greatest Enemies to the Gospel: And the Contempt of Divine Wisdom, in making Reason the Supream Judge of Divine Revelation, was the fruitful Mother of the Heresies in all Ages springing up in the Church, and especially of that Socinianism, that daily insinuates it self into the minds of Men.

This is a wrong to the Wisdom of God. He that censures the Words or Actions of another, implies, that he is in his Censure wiser than the Person censured by him. 'Tis as insupportable to determine the Truth of God's plain Dictates by our Reason, as it is to measure the suitableness or unsuitableness of his Actions by the humour of our Will. We may sooner think to span the Sun, or grasp a Star, or see a Gnat swallow a Leviathan, than fully understand the Debates of Eternity.

To this we may refer too curious Enquiries into Divine Methods, and intruding into those things which are not revealed, Coloss. 2. 18. It is to affect a Wisdom equal with God, and an Ambition to be of his Cabinet-Counsel. We are not content to be Creatures, that is, to be every way below God, below him in Wisdom, as well as Power.

4. In prescribing God methods of Acting. When we pray for a thing without a due submission to God's Will; as if we were his Counsellors, yea his Tutors, and not his Subjects, and God were bound to follow our humours, and be swayed according to the Judgment of our Ignorance; when we would have such a mercy which God thinks not fit to give, or have it in this method, which God designs to convey through another Chanel. Thus we would have the only wise God take his measures from our Passions: Such a controuling of God was Jonah's Anger about a Gourd, Jonah 3. 10. It displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry.

We would direct him how to dispose of us; as though he that had Infinite Wisdom to contrive, and rear the Excellent Fabrick of the World, had not Wisdom enough, without our Discretion, to place us in a sphere proper for his own Ends, and the use he intends us in the Universe. All the Speeches of Men, (Would I had been in such an Office, had such a Charge: Would I had such a Mercy, in such a method, or by such instruments) are Intrenchments upon God's wise disposal of Affairs.

This imposing upon God is a Hellish disposition, and in Hell we find it. The Rich man in Hell, that pretends some Charity for his Brethren on Earth, would direct God a way to prevent their ruin, by sending one from the dead to school them, as a more effectual Means than Moses and the Prophets, Luke 16. 29, 30. 'Tis a Temper also to be found on Earth; what else was the language of Saul's saving the Amalekites Cattle against the plain Command of God, 1 Sam. 15. 15. As if God in his Fury had overshot himself, and overlooked his Altar, in depriving it of so great a Booty for its Service: As if it were an unwise thing in God, to lose the Prey of so many stately Cattle, that might make the Altar smoke with their Entrals, and serve to expiate the Sins of the People; and therefore he would rectifie that which he thought to be an oversight in God, and so magnifies his own Prudence and Discretion above the Divine.

We will not let God act as he thinks fit, but will be directing him, and teaching him knowledge, Job 21. 22. As if God were a Statue, an Idol, that had Eyes and saw not, Hands, but acted not; and could be turned as an Image may be, to what quarter of the Heaven we please our selves. The Wisdom of God is unbyast; he orders nothing but what is fittest for his End, and we would have our shallow Brains the byas of God's acting. And will not God resent such an Indignity, as a reflection upon his Wisdom as well as Authority, when we intimate that we have better Heads than he, and that he comes short of us in Understanding?

5. In Murmuring and Impatience. One demands a Reason, why he hath this or that Cross? Why he hath been deprived of such a Comfort, lost such a Venture, languisheth under such a Sickness, is tormented with such Pains, oppress by Tyrannical Neighbours, is unsuccessful in such Designs? In these, and such like the Wisdom of God is questioned and defam'd. All Impatience, is a suspicion, if not a condemnation of the Prudence of God's Methods, and would make Human Feebleness and Folly the Rule of God's dealing with his Creatures. This is a presuming to instruct God, and a reproving him for Unreasonableness in his Proceedings, when his dealings with us do not exactly answer our Fancies and Wishes; as if God, who made the World in Wisdom, wanted Skill for the management of his Creatures in it, Job 40. 2. Shall he that contends with the Almighty instruct him? he that reproveth God, let him answer it. We that are not wise enough to know our selves, and what is needful for us; presume to have Wit enough to guide God in his dealing with us. The Wisdom of God rendred Job more useful to the World by his Afflictions, in making him a Pattern of Patience, than if he had continued him in a confluence of all Worldly Comforts, wherein he had been beneficial only in communicating his Morsels to his Poor Neighbours. All Murmuring is a fastening Error upon unerring Wisdom.

6. In Pride and Haughtiness of Spirit. No Proud man, but sets his Heart as the heart of God, Ezek. 28. 2, 3. The Wisdom of God hath given to Men divers Offices, set them in divers places; some have more honourable Charges, some meaner. Not to give that respect their Offices and Places call for, is to quarrel with the Wisdom of God, and overturn the Rank and Order wherein he hath placed things.

'Tis unfit we should affront God in the disposal of his Creatures, and intimate to him by our Carriage, that he had done more wisely in placing another, and that he hath done fooliſhly in placing this or that Man in ſuch a Charge. Sometimes Men are unworthy the Place they fill; they may be ſet there in Judgment to themſelves and others: But the Wiſdom of God in his management of things, is to be honoured and regarded.

'Tis an infringing the Wiſdom of God, when we have a vain Opinion of our ſelves, and are blind to others. When we think our ſelves Monarchs, and treat others as Worms or Flies in compariſon of us. He who would reduce all things to his own honour, perverts the Order of the World, and would conſtitute another Order than what the Wiſdom of God hath eſtabliſhed; and move them to an End contrary to the intention of God, and charges God with want of Diſcretion and Skill.

9. Diſtruſt of God's Promiſe is an impeachment of his Wiſdom. A ſecret Reviling of it, as if he had not taken due conſideration before he paſt his Word; or a ſuſpicion of his Power, as if he could not accompliſh his Word. We truſt the Phyſician's Skill with our Bodies, and the Lawyer's Counſel with our Eſtates; but are loath to rely upon God for the concerns of our Lives. If he be Wiſe to diſpoſe of us, why do we diſtruſt him? If we diſtruſt him, why do we embrace an opinion of his Wiſdom.

Unbelief alſo is a contradiction to the Wiſdom of God in the Goſpel, &c. but that I have already handled in a Diſcourſe of the Nature of Unbelief.

III. Uſe of Comfort. God hath an Infinite Wiſdom, to conduct us in our Affairs, rectifie us in our Miſtakes, and aſſiſt us in our Straits. 'Tis an ineſtimable privilege to have a God in Covenant with us; ſo Wiſe, to communicate all Good, to prevent all Evil; who hath Infinite ways to bring to paſs his gracious Intentions towards us. How unſearchable are his Judgments, and his ways paſt finding out? Rom. 11. 33. His Judgment or Decrees are incomprehenſibly Wiſe, and the ways of effecting them, are as wiſe as his Reſolves effected by them. We can as little ſearch into his Methods of Acting, as we can into his Wiſdom of Reſolving; both his Judgments and Ways are unſearchable.

1. Comfort in all Straits and Afflictions. There is a Wiſdom in inflicting them, and a Wiſdom in removing them. He is wiſe to ſute his Medicines to the humor of our Diſeaſe, though he doth not to the humour of our Wills: He cannot miſtake the nature of our Diſtemper, or the vertue of his own Phyſick. Like a skillful Phyſician, he ſometimes preſcribes bitter Potions, and ſometimes cheering Cordials, according to the ſtrength of the Malady, and neceſſity of the Patient to reduce him to health. As nothing comes from him, but what is for our good; ſo nothing is acted by him in a raſh and temerarious way. His Wiſdom is as Infinite as his Goodneſs; and as exact in managing as his Goodneſs is plentiful in ſtreaming out to us. He underſtands our Griefs, weighs our Neceſſities and no Remedies are beyond the reach of his Contrivance. When our feeble Wits are bewildred in a maze, and at the end of their Line for a reſcue; the Remedies unknown to us, are not unknown to God. When we know not how to prevent a Danger, the Wiſe God hath a Thouſand Blocks to lay in the way: When we know not how to free our ſelves from an oppreſſive Evil, he hath a Thouſand ways of Relief.

He knows how to Time our Croſſes, and his own Bleſſings. The heart of a Wiſe God, as well as the heart of a wiſe Man, diſcerns both time and judgment, Eccleſ. 8. 5. There is as much Judgment in ſending them, as Judgment in removing them. How comfortable is it to think, that our Diſtreſſes, as well as our Deliverances, are the fruits of Infinite Wiſdom? Nothing is done by him too ſoon or too ſlow; but in the true point of Time, with all its due circumſtances, moſt conveniently for his glory and our good. How Wiſe is God to bring the glory of our Salvation out of the depths of a ſeeming Ruin, and make the Evils of Affliction ſubſervient to the good of the Afflicted?

2. In Temptations, his Wiſdom is no leſs employed in permitting them, than in bringing them to a good iſſue. His Wiſdom in leading our Saviour to be Tempted of the Devil, was to fit him for our ſuccour; and his Wiſdom in ſuffering us to be Tempted, is to fit us for his own Service, and our Salvation. He makes a Thorn in the fleſh to be an occaſion of a refreſhing Grace to the Spirit, and brings forth cordial Grapes from thoſe pricking Brambles, and magnifies his Grace by his Wiſdom, from the deepeſt ſubtilties of Hell. Let Satan's Intentions be what they will, he can be for him at every turn, to outwit him in his Stratagems, to baffle him in his Enterprizes; to make him inſtrumental for our good, where he deſigns nothing but our hurt. The Lord hath his methods of Deliverance from him, 2 Pet. 2. 9. The Lord knows how to deliver the godly out of Temptation.

3. In Denials, or delays of Anſwers of Prayer. He is gracious to Hear; but he is wiſe to Anſwer in an acceptable time, and ſuccour us in a day proper for our ſalvation, 2 Cor. 6. 2. We have partial Affections to our ſelves, Ignorance is natural to us, Rom. 8. 26. We ask we know not what, becauſe we ask out of Ignorance. God grants what he knows, what is fit for him to do, and fit for us to receive; and the exact ſeaſon wherein it is fitteſt for him to beſtow a Mercy. As God would have us bring forth our Fruit in ſeaſon, ſo he will ſend forth his Mercies in ſeaſon.

He is wiſe to ſute his Remedy to our Condition, to Time it ſo, as that we ſhall have an evident proſpect of his Wiſdom in it; that more of Divine Skill, and leſs of Human, may appear in the Iſſue. He is ready at our Call; but he will not Anſwer, till he ſee the Seaſon fit to reach out his hand He is wiſe to prove our Faith, to humble us under the ſenſe of our own Unworthyneſs, to whet our Affections, to ſet a better eſtimate on the Bleſſings prayed for, and that he may double the Bleſſing, as we do our Devotion: But when his Wiſdom ſees us fit to receive his Goodneſs, he grants what we ſtand in need of. He is Wiſe to chuſe the fitteſt Time, and Faithful to give the beſt Covenant, Mercy.

4. In all Evils threatned to the Church by her Enemies. He hath Knowledge to fore-ſee them, and Wiſdom to diſappoint them; Job 5. 13. He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs, and the counſel of the froward is carried headlong.

The Church hath the Wiſdom of God, to enter the Liſts with the Policy of Hell. He defeated the Serpent in the firſt Net he laid, and brought a glorious Salvation out of Hells Rubbiſh; and is yet as Skilful to diſappoint the After-game of the Serpentine-brood. The Policy of Hell, and the Subtilty of the World, are no better than Folly with God, 1 Cor. 3. 19. All Creatures are Fools, as Creatures, in compariſon with the Creator. The Angels he chargeth with Folly, much more us Sinners.

Depraved Underſtands are not fit Mates for a pure and unblemiſh'd Mind. Pharaoh, with his wiſdom, finds a Grave in the Sea; and Achitophel's Plots are finiſhed in his own murder: He breaks the the Enemies by his Power, and orders them by his Skill to be a feaſt to his People. Pſal. 74. 14. Thou brakeſt the Head of the Leviathan, and gaveſt him to be meat to the people in the Wilderneſs. The Spoils of the Egyptians Carkaſſes caſt upon the ſhore ſerved the Iſraelites Neceſſities (or were as Meat to them;) as being a Deliverance the Church might feed upon in all Ages, in a Wilderneſs Condition, to maintain their Faith, the vital Principle of the Soul.

There is a Wiſdom ſuperiour to the ſubtilties of Men, which laughs at their Follies, and hath them in deriſion, Pſal. 2. 4. There is no wiſdom or counſel againſt the Lord, Prov. 21. 30. You never queſtion the wiſdom of an Artiſt, to uſe his File, when he takes it into his hand: Wicked Inſtruments are God's Axes and Files; let him alone, he hath Skill enough to manage them: God hath too much Affection to deſtroy his People, and Wiſdom enough to beautifie them by the worſt Tools he uſes. He can make all things conſpire in a perfect harmony for his own Ends, and his Peoples good, when they ſee no way to eſcape a Danger feared, or attain a Bleſſing wanted.

Uſe IV.

I. For Exhortation

1. Meditate on the Wiſdom of God in Creation and Government. How little do we think of God when we behold his Works? Our Senſe dwells upon the ſurface of Plants and Animals, beholds the variety of their Colours, and the progreſs in their Motion: Our Reaſon ſtudies the qualities of them; our Spirits ſeldom take a flight to the Divine Wiſdom which framed them. Our Senſes engroſs our Minds from God, that we ſcarce have a Thought free to beſtow upon the Maker of them, but only on the bye. The conſtancy of ſeeing things that are common, ſtifles our admiration of God, due upon the ſight of them. How ſeldom do we raiſe our Souls as far as Heaven in our views of the Order of the World, the Revolutions of the Seaſons, the Natures, of the Creatures that are common among us, and the mutual Aſſiſtances they give to each other? Since God hath manifeſted himſelf in them, to neglect the Conſideration of them, is to neglect the Manifeſtation of God, and the way whereby he hath tranſmitted ſomething of his Perfections to our Underſtanding. It renders Men inexcuſably guilty of not glorifying of God, Rom. 1. 19, 20. We can never neglect the meditation of the Creatures, without a blemiſh caſt upon the Creators Wiſdom. As every River can conduct us to the Sea; ſo every Creature points us to an Ocean of Infinite Wiſdom. Not the minuteſt of them, but rich tracts of this may be obſerved in them, and a due ſenſe of God reſult from them. They are expoſed to our view, that ſomething of God may be lodged in our Minds; that as our Bodies extract their quinteſſence for our Nouriſhment, ſo our Minds may extract a quinteſſence for the Makers Praiſe.

Though God is principally to be praiſed in and for Chriſt; yet as Grace doth not raze out the Law of Nature, ſo the operations of Grace put not the dictates of Nature to ſilence, nor ſuſpend the Homage due to God upon our inſpection of his Works. God hath given full Teſtimonies of this Perfection in the Heavenly Bodies, diſperſing their Light, and diſtributing their Influences to every part of the World: In framing Men into Societies, giving them various Diſpoſitions, for the preſervation of Governments; making ſome Wiſe for Counſel, others Martial for Action; changing Old Empires, and raiſing New. Which way ſoever we caſt our Eyes, we ſhall find frequent occaſions to cry out, Oh the depth of the Riches, both of the Wiſdom and Knowledge of God, Rom. 11. 33.

To this purpoſe, we muſt not only look upon the bulk and outſide of his Works, but conſider from what Principles they were raiſed, in what order diſpoſed, and the exact ſymmetry and proportion of their parts. When a Man comes into a City or Temple, and only conſiders the ſurface of the Buildings, they will amaze his Senſe, but not better his Underſtanding; unleſs he conſiders the Methods of the Work and the Art whereby it was erected.

1. This was an End for which they were created. God did not make the World for Mans uſe only, but chiefly for his own Glory; for Mans uſe to enjoy his Creatures, and for his own Glory to be acknowledged in his Creatures, that we may conſider his Art in framing them, and his Skill in diſpoſing them; and not only gaze upon the Glaſs without conſidering the Image it repreſents, and acquainting our ſelves whoſe Image it is. The Creatures were not made for themſelves, but for the ſervice of the Creator, and the ſervice of Man. Man was not made for himſelf, but for the Service of the Lord that created him. He is to conſider the beauty of the Creation, that he may thereby glorifie the Creator. He knows in part their excellency; the Creatures themſelves do not. If therefore Man be idle and unobſervant of them, he deprives God of the glory of his Wiſdom, which he ſhould have by his Creatures.

The Inferiour Creatures themſelves cannot obſerve it. If Man regard it not, what becomes of it; his Glory can only be handed to him by Man. The other Creatures cannot be active Inſtruments of his Glory, becauſe they know not themſelves and therefore cannot render him an active Praiſe. Man is therefore bound to praiſe God for himſelf, and for all his Creatures; becauſe he only knows himſelf, and the Perfections of the Creatures, and the Author both of himſelf and them.

God Created ſuch Variety, to make a Report of himſelf, to us; we are to receive the Report, and to reflect it back to him. To what purpoſe did he make ſo many things, not neceſſary, for the ſupport and pleaſure of our Lives, but that we ſhould behold him in them, as well as in the other?

We cannot behold the Wiſdom of God in his own Eſſence and Eternal Idea's, but by the reflection of it in the Creatures: As we cannot ſteadily behold the Sun with our Eye, but either through a Glaſs, or by reflection of the Image of it in the Water. God would have us meditate on his Perfections; he therefore choſe the ſame Day wherein he reviewed his Work, and reſted from it, to be celebrated by Man for the contemplation of him, Gen. 2. 2, 3. that we ſhould follow his Example, and rejoyce as himſelf did, in the frequent reviews of his Wiſdom and Goodneſs in them. In vain would the Creatures afford Matter for this ſtudy, if they were wholly neglected.

God offers ſomething to our Conſideration in every Creature: Shall the Beams of God ſhine round about us, and ſtrike our Eyes and not affect our Minds? Shall we be like Ignorant Children, that view the Pictures, or point to the Letters in a Book without any ſenſe and meaning? How ſhall God have the homage due to him from his Works, if Man hath no care to obſerve them? The 148. Pſalm is an Exhortation to this, The view of them ſhould often extract from us, a wonder of the like nature of that of David's, Pſal. 104. 24. Oh Lord, how wonderful are thy Works, in wiſdom haſt thou made them all. The World was not Created to be forgotten, nor Man created to be unobſervant of it.

2. If we obſerve not the Wiſdom of God in the views of the Creatures, we do no more than Brutes. To look upon the Works of God in the World, is no higher an act than meer Animals perform. The Glories of Heaven, and Beauties of the Earth, are viſible to the ſenſe of Beaſts and Birds. A Brute beholds the motion of a Man, as it may ſee the Wheels of a Clock, but underſtands not the inward Springs of Motion; the End for which we move, or the Soul that acts us in our motion; much leſs that Inviſible Power which preſides over the Creatures, and conducts their motion. If a Man do no more than this, he goes not a ſtep beyond a Brutiſh Nature, and may very well acknowledge himſelf with Aſaph, a fooliſh and ignorant Beaſt before God, Pſal. 73. 22. The World is viewed by Beaſts, but the Author of it to be contemplated by Man. Since we are in a higher rank than Beaſts, we owe a greater Debt than Beaſts; not only to enjoy the Creatures, as they do, but behold God in the Creatures, which they cannot do.

The Contemplation of the Reaſon of God in his Works, is a noble and ſutable employment for a Rational Creature: We have not only Senſe to perceive them, but Souls to mind them. The Soul is not to be without its operation: Where the operation of ſenſe ends, the work of the Soul ought to begin. We travel over them by our Senſes, as Brutes; but we muſt pierce further by our Underſtandings, as men, and perceive and praiſe him that lies Inviſible, in his viſible Manufactures. Our Senſes, are given us as Servants to the Soul, and our Souls, beſtowed upon us for the knowledge and praiſe of their and our Common Creator.

3. This would be a means to increaſe our Humility. We ſhould then flag our Wings, and veil our Sails, and acknowledge our own wiſdom to be as a drop to the Ocean, and a Shadow to the Sun. We ſhould have mean thoughts of the Nothingneſs of our Reaſon, when we conſider the ſublimity of the Divine Wiſdom. Who can ſeriouſly conſider the Sparks of infinite Skill in the Creature, without falling down at the feet of the Divine Majeſty, and acknowledging himſelf a dark and fooliſh Creature, Pſal. 8. 4, 5. When the Pſalmiſt conſidered the Heavens, the Moon and Stars, and God's ordination and diſpoſal of them, the uſe that reſults from it, is, What is Man, that thou art mindful of him? We ſhould no more think to mate him in Prudence, or ſet up the ſpark of our Reaſon to vie with the Sun. Our Reaſon would more willingly ſubmit to the Revelation, when the Characters of Divine Wiſdom are ſtampt upon it, when we find his Wiſdom in Creation incomprehenſible to us.

4 It would help us in our acknowledgments of God, for his Goodneſs to us. When we behold the Wiſdom of God in Creatures below us, and how ignorant they are of what they poſſeſs. It will cauſe us to reflect upon the deeper Impreſſions of Wiſdom in the frame of our own Bodies and Souls, an excellency far ſuperiour to theirs; this would make us admire the magnificence of his Wiſdom and Goodneſs, and ſound forth his Praiſe for advancing us in dignity above other Works of his hands, and ſtamping on us by Infinite Art, a Nobler Image of himſelf.

And by ſuch a Compariſon of our ſelves with the Creatures below us, we ſhould be induced to act excellently, according to the nature of our Souls; not brutiſhly, according to the nature of the Creatures God hath put under our feet.

5. By the Contemplation of the Creatures, we may receive ſome aſſiſtance in clearing our knowledge in the Wiſdom of Redemption. Though they cannot of themſelves inform us of it; yet ſince God hath revealed his Redeeming Grace, they can illuſtrate ſome particulars of it to us. Hence the Scripture makes uſe of the Creatures, to ſet forth things of a higher orb to us: Our Saviour is called a Sun, a Vine, and a Lion; the Spirit likened to a Dove, Fire, and Water. The Union of Chriſt and his Church, is ſet forth by the Marriage Union of Adam and Eve.

God hath placed in Corporeal things the Images of Spiritual, and wrapped up in his Creating Wiſdom the repreſentations of his Redeeming Grace: Whence ſome call the Creatures, Natural Types of what was to be tranſacted in a new formation of the World, and Alluſions to what God intended in and by Chriſt.

6. The Meditation of God's Wiſdom in the Creatures, is in part a beginning of Heaven upon Earth. No doubt but there will be a perfect opening of the Model of Divine Wiſdom. Heaven is for clearing what is now obſcure, and a full diſcovering of what ſeems at preſent intricate. Pſal. 36. 9. In his light ſhall we ſee light: All the Light in Creation, Government, and Redemption. The Wiſdom of God in the New Heavens, and the New Earth, would be to little purpoſe if that alſo were not to be regarded by the Inhabitants of them. As the Saints are to be reſtored to the ſtate of Adam and higher; ſo they are to be reſtored to the employment of Adam, and higher: But his employment, was to behold God in the Creatures. The World was ſo ſoon depraved, that God had but little joy in, and Man but little knowledge of his Works.

And ſince the Wiſdom of God in Creation is ſo little ſeen by our Ignorance here, would not God loſe much of the glory of it, if the glorified Souls ſhould loſe the underſtanding of it above; When their Darkneſs ſhall be expelled, and their Advantages improved; when the Eye that Adam loſt, ſhall be fully reſtored and with a greater clearneſs; when the Creature ſhall be reſtored to its true End, and Reaſon to its true Perfection *; when the Fountains of the depths of Nature and Government ſhall be opened, Knowledge ſhall increaſe, and according to the increaſe of our Knowledge, ſhall the admiration of Divine Wiſdom increaſe alſo. * Rom. 8. 21. 22.

The Wiſdom of God in Creation, was not ſurely intended to lie wholly unobſerved in the greateſt part of it; but ſince there was ſo little time for the full obſervation of it, there will be a time wherein the Wiſdom of God ſhall enjoy a reſurrection, and be fully contemplated by his underſtanding and glorified Creature.

II. Exhortation. Study and admire the Wiſdom of God in Redemption. This is the Duty of all Chriſtians. We are not called to underſtand the great depth of Philoſophy; we are not called to a skill in the Intricacies of Civil Government, or underſtand all the Methods of Phyſick: But we are called to be Chriſtians, that is Studiers of Divine Evangelical Wiſdom. There are firſt Principles to be learned; but not thoſe Principles to be reſted in, without a further progreſs. Heb. 6. 1. Therefore leaving the principles of the Doctrine of Chriſt, let us go on to perfection. Duties muſt be practiſed, but Knowledge is not to be neglected. The ſtudy of Goſpel Myſteries, the harmony of Divine Truths, the ſparkling of Divine Wiſdom, in there mutual combination to the great ends of God's Glory and Man's Salvation, is an Incentive to Duty, a Spur to Worſhip, and particularly to the greateſt and higheſt part of Worſhip, that part which ſhall remain in Heaven; the Admiration and Praiſe of God, and Delight in him. If we acquaint not our ſelves with the Impreſſions of the Glory of Divine Wiſdom in it, we ſhall not much regard it as worthy our obſervance in regard of that Duty.

The Goſpel is a Myſtery; and as a Myſtery hath ſomething Great and Magnificent in it, worthy of our daily inſpection; we ſhall find freſh Springs of New wonders, which we ſhall be invited to adore with a Religious Aſtoniſhment. It will both raiſe and ſatisfie our Longings. Who can come to the depths of God manifeſted in the fleſh? How amazing is it, and unworthy of a ſlight thought that the Death of the Son of God ſhould purchaſe the happy Immortality of a Sinful Creature, and the glory of a Rebel be wrought by the Ignominy of ſo great a Perſon? That our Mediator, ſhould have a Nature whereby to Covenant with his Father, and a Nature whereby to be a Surety for the Creature? How admirable is it, that the Fallen Creature ſhould receive an advantage by the Forfeiture of his Happineſs? How Myſterious is it, that the Son of God ſhould bow down to Death upon a Croſs, for the ſatisfaction of Juſtice; and riſe Triumphantly out of the Grave, as a declaration, that Juſtice was contented and ſatisfied? That he ſhould be exalted to Heaven, to Intercede for us; and at laſt return into the World, to receive us, and inveſt us with a Glory for ever with himſelf?

Are theſe things worthy of a Careleſs regard, or a Blockiſh amazement? What Underſtanding can pierce into the depths of the Divine Doctrine of the Incarnation and Birth of Chriſt; the indiſſoluble Union of the two Natures? What Capacity is able to meaſure the miracles of that Wiſdom, found in the whole Draught and Scheme of the Goſpel? Doth it not merit then to be the Object of our daily Meditation? How comes it to paſs then, that we are ſo little curious to concern our thoughts in thoſe wonders, that we ſcarce taſte, or ſip of theſe Delicacies? That we buſie our ſelves in Trifles, and conſider what we ſhall eat, and in what faſhion we ſhall be dreſt; pleaſe our ſelves with the ingeniouſneſs of a Lace or Feather; admire a Moth-eaten Manuſcript, or ſome Half-worn piece of Antiquity, and think our time Ill-ſpent in the contemplating and celebrating that wherein God hath buſied himſelf, and Eternity is deſign'd for the perpetual expreſſions of?

How Inquiſitive are the Bleſſed Angels? with what vigour do they renew their daily Contemplations of it, and receive a freſh Contentment from it; ſtill learning, and ſtill enquiring? 1 Pet. 1. 12. there Eye is never off the Mercy Seat; they ſtrive to ſee the bottom of it, and employ all the Underſtanding they have to conceive the Wonders of it. Shall the Angels be raviſht with it, and bend, themſelves down to ſtudy it, who have but little intereſt in it in compariſon of us, for whom it was both contrived and diſpenſed? And ſhall not our Pains be greater for this hidden Treaſure? Is not that worthy the ſtudy of a Rational Creature, that is worthy the ſtudy of the Angelical? There muſt indeed be pains, 'tis expreſt by Digging, Prov. 2. 4, A lazy Arm will not ſink to the depth of a Mine The neglect of meditating on it is inexcuſable, ſince it hath the Title and Character of the Wiſdom of God.

The Ancient Prophets ſearched into it, when it was folded up in Shadows, when they ſaw only the fringes of Wiſdoms Garment*; and ſhall not we, ſince the Sun hath mounted up in our Horizon, and ſenſibly ſcattered the light of the knowledge of this and the other Perfections of God? As the Jewiſh Sabbath was appointed to celebrate the Perfections of God, diſcovered in Creation; ſo is the Chriſtian Sabbath appointed to meditate on, and bleſs God for the diſcovery of his Perfections in Redemption. Let us therefore receive it according to its worth; let it be our only Rule to walk by. 'Tis worthy to be valued above all other Counſels; and we ſhould never think of it without the Doxology of the Apoſtle, to the only wiſe God be glory through Jeſus Chriſt, for ever; that our Speculations may end in affectionate Admirations, and Thankſgivings, for that which is ſo full of Wonders! What a little proſpect ſhould we have had of God, and the Happineſs of Man had not his Wiſdom and Goodneſs revealed things to us? The Goſpel is a marvellous Light, and ſhould not be regarded with a ſtupid Ignorance, and purſued with a duller Practice.

* Pet. 1. 10.

III. Exhortation, Let none of us be proud of, or truſt in our own wiſdom. Man by affecting Wiſdom out of the way of God, got a crack in his Head, which hath continued Five thouſand years and upwards; and ever ſince our own Wiſdom and knowledge hath perverted us, Iſai. 47. 10. To be guided by this, is to be under the conduct of a blind Leader, and follow a Traytor and Enemy to God and our Selves. Mans Prudence often proves hurtful to him: He often accompliſheth his ruine, while he deſigns his eſtabliſhment; and finds his Fall, where he thought to ſettle his Fortune: Such bad Eyes hath human Wiſdom often in its own Affairs. Thoſe that have been heightned with a conceit of their own Cunning, have at laſt proved the greateſt Fools. God delights to make fooliſh the Wiſdom of this World, 1 Cor. 1. 20.

Thus God writ Folly upon the crafty Brains of Achitophel, and Simplicity upon the ſubtil Projects of Herod againſt our Saviour; and the Devil, the Prince of Carnal Wiſdom, was beſool'd into a furthering our Redemption by his own Projects to hinder it. Carnal Policy, againſt the Preſcripts of Divine Wiſdom, never proſpers: 'Tis like an Ignis fatuus, which leads Men out of the way of Duty, and out of the way of Security, and perverts them into the Mire, and dangerous Precipices.

When Jeroboam would coyn a religion to ſerve his intereſt of State, he tore up the Foundations both of his Kingdom and Family. The way the Jews took to prevent a freſh Invaſion of the Romans, by the Crucifying Chriſt, brought the Judgment more ſwift upon them*. There is no Man ruin'd here, or damn'd hereafter, but by his own wiſdom and will. Prov. 3. 5, 7. The fear of the Lord and departure from evil, are inconſiſtent with an overweening Conceit of our own Wiſdom; and leaning to our own underſtanding, is inconſiſtent with a truſting in the Lord with all our hearts. 'Tis as much a Deifying our ſelves, to truſt to our own wit, as it is a Deifying the Creature to affect or confide in it, ſuperior to God, or equally with him.

* Joh. 11. 48.

The true way to Wiſdom is to be ſenſible of our own folly, 1 Cor. 3. 18. If any man be wiſe, let him become a fool. He that diſtruſts his own guidance, will more ſecurely and ſucceſsfully follow the Counſel of another in whom he confides. The more water, or any other Liquor, is poured out of a Veſſel, the more Air enters. The more we diſtruſt our own Wiſdom, the more capable we are of the conduct of Gods.

Had Jehoſophat relied upon his own policy, he might have found a Defeat when he met with a Deliverance; but he diſowned his own skill and ſtrength, in telling God, We know not what to do, but our eyes are towards thee, 2 Chron. 20. 12. Let us therefore with Agur, diſeſteem our own Underſtanding to eſteem Divine. Human Prudence is like a Spiders web, eaſily blown away, and ſwept down by the Beſom of ſome unexpected Revolution. God by his infinite wiſdom can croſs the wiſdom of Man, and make a Mans own prudence hang in his own light. Iſaiah 29 14. The underſtanding of their Prudent Men ſhall be hid.

IV. Exhortation. Seek to God for Wiſdom. The Wiſdom we have by Nature is like the weeds the Earth brings forth without Tillage. Our Wiſdom ſince the Fall, is the Wiſdom of the Serpent, without the Innocency of the Dove: It flows from ſelf-love, runs into Self-intereſt. 'Tis the wiſdom of the Fleſh, and a prudence to manage means for the contenting our Luſts. Our beſt Wiſdom is imperfect, a meer nothing and Vanity, in compariſon of the Divine, as our Beings are in compariſon of his Eſſence. We muſt go to God for a Holy and Innocent Wiſdom, and fill our Ciſterns from a pure Fountain. The Wiſdom that was the glory of Solomon, was the Donation of the moſt High. James 1 5. If any man want Wiſdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it ſhall be given him. The faculty of Underſtanding is from God by Nature; but a heavenly light to direct the Underſtanding is from God by Grace. Children have an Underſtanding, but ſtand in need of wiſe Maſters to rectifie it, and form Judicious Notions in it.

There is a Spirit in man, but the inſpiration of the Almighty gives him underſtanding, Job 32. 8. We muſt beg of God, Wiſdom. The Goſpel is the Wiſdom of God; the concerns of it great and Myſterious, not to be known without a New underſtanding, 1 John 5. 20. A new Underſtanding is not to be had but from the Creator of the firſt. The Spirit of God is the Searcher of the deep things of God; the Revealer of them to us, and the enlightner of our Minds to apprehend them; and therefore called, a Spirit of Wiſdom and revelation, Eph. 1. 17. Chriſt is made Wiſdom to us, as well as Righteouſneſs; not only by Imputation, but Effuſion *. Seek to God therefore for that wiſdom which is like the Sun, and not that worldly wiſdom which is like a Shadow: For that wiſdom whoſe effects are not ſo outwardly glorious, but inwardly ſweet, ſeek it from him, and ſeek it in his Word, that is the Tranſcript of Divine Wiſdom; through his Precepts underſtanding is to be had *. As the wiſdom of Men appears in their Laws; ſo doth the Wiſdom of God in his Statutes.

* Seamans Sermon before the Parliament.

By this means we arrive to a heavenly ſagacity If theſe be rejected, what wiſdom can be in us? A dream and conceit only; Jer. 8. They have rejected the word of the Lord, and what Wiſdom is in them? Who knows how to order any concerns as he ought, or any one faculty of his Soul? Therefore deſire Gods direction in outward concerns, in perſonal, family, in Private and Publick: He hath not only a wiſdom for our Salvation, but for our outward Direction. He doth not only guide us in the one, and leave Satan to manage us in the other. Thoſe that go with Saul to a Witch of Endor, go to Hell for craft, and prefer the Wiſdom of the hoſtile Serpent, before the holy Counſel of a Faithful Creator. If you want health in your Body, you adviſe with a Phyſician; if directions for your Eſtate, you reſort to a Lawyer; If paſſage for a voyage, you addreſs to a Pilot; why not much more your ſelves, your all, to a wiſe God. As Pliny ſaid concerning a wiſe man, Oh, ſir, how many Cato's are there in that wiſe perſon? how much more Wiſdom than men or Angels poſſeſs, is infinitely centred in the Wiſe God?

V. Submit to the Wiſdom of God in all Caſes. What elſe was inculcated in the firſt Precept forbiding man to eat of the Fruit of the tree of Knowledge of good and evil; but that he ſhould take heed of the ſwelling of his mind againſt the Wiſdom of God? Tis a Wiſdom Incomprehenſible to fleſh and blood: We ſhould adore it in our minds, and reſign up our ſelves to it in our practice: How unreaſonable are repinings againſt God, whereby a Creatures Ignorance endites and judges a Creators Prudence? Were God weak in Wiſdom, and only mighty in Power, we might ſuſpect his Conduct. Power without Wiſdom and Goodneſs is an unruly and ruinous thing in the World. But God being infinite in one, as well as the other, we have no reaſon to be jealous of him, and repine againſt his methods; why ſhould we quarrel with him that we are not as high, or as wealthy as others; that we have not preſently the Mercy we want? If he be wiſe, we ought to ſtay his time, and wait his leiſure, becauſe he is a God of Judgment, Eſa. 30. 18. Preſume not to ſhorten the time which his diſcretion hath fixed, 'tis a folly to think to do it. By impatience we cannot haſten relief; we alienate him from us, by debaſing him to ſtand at our bar, diſturb our ſelves, loſe the comfort of our lives, and the ſweetneſs of his mercy. Submiſſion to God we are in no caſe exempted from, becauſe there is no caſe wherein God doth not direct all the acts of his Will by Counſel. Whatſoever is drawn by a ſtrait rule muſt be right and ſtrait; the rule that is right in it ſelf, is the meaſure of the ſtraitneſs of every thing elſe: Whatſoever is wrought in the World by God, muſt be Wiſe, Good, Righteous; becauſe God is eſſentially Wiſdom, Goodneſs, and Righteouſneſs.

Submit to God, (1.) in his Revelations.

1. Meaſure them not by Reaſon: The truths of the Goſpel muſt be received with a ſelf emptineſs and annihilation of the Creature. If our Reaſon ſeems to lift up it ſelf againſt Revelation, becauſe it finds no teſtimony for it in its own light: Conſider how crazy it is in natural and obvious things, and therefore ſure it is not ſtrong enough to enter into the depths of Divine Wiſdom: The Wiſdom of God in the Goſpel is too great an Ocean to be contained or laved out by a Cockleſhell. It were not infinite, if it were not beyond our finite reach; our Reaſon muſt as well ſtoop to his Wiſdom, as our Wills to his Sovereignty. How great a vanity is it for a Glow-worm to boaſt, that it is as full of light as the Sun in the firmament? For reaſon to leave its proper ſphere, is to fall into confuſion, and thicken its own darkneſs. We ſhould ſettle our ſelves in the belief of the Scripture, and confirm our ſelves by a meditation on thoſe many undeniable arguments, for its divine Authority. The fulfilling of its Predictions, the antiquity of the writing, the holineſs of the precepts, the heavenlineſs of the Doctrine, the glorious effects it hath produced, and doth yet produce, different from human methods of ſucceſs; and ſubmit our reaſon to the voice of ſo high a Majeſty.

2. Not to be too curiouſly inquiſitive into what is not Revealed. There is ſomething hid in whatſoever is revealed. We know the Son of God was begotten from Eternity, but how he was begotten, we are ignorant. We know there is a Union of the Divine Nature with the Human, and that the Fulneſs of the Godhead dwells in him bodily; but the manner of its inhabitation we are in a great part ignorant of. We know God hath choſen ſome, and refuſed others, and that he did it with Counſel; but the reaſon why he choſe this man and not that, we know not; we can refer it to nothing but God's Sovereign Pleaſure. 'Tis revealed, that there will be a day wherein God ſhall Judge the World; but the particular time is not revealed. We know that God created the World in Time; but why he did not create the World millions of years before, we are ignorant ignorant of, and our Reaſons would be bewildred in their too much Curioſity. If we ask why he did not create it before, we may as well ask why he did create it then? And may not the ſame Queſtion be ask'd, if the World had been created Millions of Years before it was. That he created it in ſix days, and not in an inſtant, is revealed; but why he did not do it in a moment, ſince we are ſure he was able to do it, is not revealed. Are the Reaſons of a wiſe Man's Proceedings hid from us, and ſhall we preſume to dive into the Reaſon of the Proceedings of an only wiſe God, which he hath judged not expedient to diſcover to us? Some Sparks of his Wiſdom he hath cauſed to iſſue out, to exerciſe and delight our Minds; others he keeps within the Centre of his own Breaſt: We muſt not go about to unlock his Cabinet. As we cannot reach to the utmoſt Lines of his Power; ſo we cannot graſp the intimate Reaſons of his Wiſdom. We muſt ſtill remember, that which is finite can never be able to comprehend the Reaſons, Motives, and Methods of that which is infinite. It doth not become us to be reſty, becauſe God hath not admitted us into the Debates of Eternity. We are as little to be curious at what God hath hid, as to be careleſs of what God hath manifeſted. Too great an Inquiſitiveneſs beyond our Line, is as much a provoking Arrogance, as a blockiſh Negligence of what is revealed, is a ſlighting Ingratitude.

2. Submit to God in his Precepts and Methods. Since they are the Reſults of infinite Wiſdom, diſputes againſt them are not tolerable: What Orders are given out by infallible Wiſdom, are to be entertained with Reſpect and Reverence, though the Reaſon of them be not viſible to our pur blind Minds. Shall God have leſs Reſpect from us than earthly Princes, whoſe Laws we obſerve, without being able to pierce into the exact Reaſon of them all? Since we know he hath not a Will without an Underſtanding, our Obſervance of him muſt be without Repining; we muſt not think to mend our Creator's Laws, and preſume to judge and condemn his Righteous Statutes: If the Fleſh riſe up in Oppoſition, we muſt croſs its Motions, and ſilence its Murmurings; his Will ſhould be an acceptable Will to us, becauſe it is a wiſe Will in itſelf. God hath no need to impoſe upon us and deceive us; he hath juſt and righteous Ways to attain his Glory, and his Creatures Good. To deceive us, would be to diſhonour himſelf, and contradict his own Nature. He cannot impoſe falſe injurious Precepts or unavailable to his Subjects Happineſs; not falſe, becauſe of his Truth; not injurious, becauſe of his Goodneſs; not vain, becauſe of his Wiſdom. Submit therefore to him in his Precepts, and in his Methods too. The Honour of his Wiſdom, and the Intereſt of our Happineſs calls for it. Had Noah diſputed with God about building an Ark, and liſtened to the Scoffs of the ſenſeleſs World, he had periſhed under the ſame Fate, and loſt the Honour of a Preacher and worker of Righteouſneſs. Had not the Iſraelites been their own Enemies, if they had been permitted to be their own Guides, and returned to the Egyptian Bondage and Furnaces, inſtead of a Liberty and earthly Felicity in Canaan? Had our Saviour gratified the Jews by deſcending from the Croſs, and freeing himſelf from the Power of his Adverſaries, he might have had that Faith from them which they promiſed him, but it had been a Faith to no purpoſe, becauſe without ground; they might have believed him to be the Son of God, but he could not have been the Saviour of the World: His Death, the great ground and object of Faith had been unaccompliſhed, they had believed a God pardoning without a content to his Juſtice, and ſuch a Faith could not have reſcued them from falling into eternal Miſery. The Precepts and Methods of divine Wiſdom muſt be ſubmitted to.

3. Submit to God in all Croſſes and Revolutions. Infinite Wiſdom cannot err in any of his Paths, or ſtep the leaſt Hairs breadth from the way of Righteouſneſs: There is the Underſtanding of God in every Motion; an Eye in every Wheel, the Wheel that goes over us and cruſheth us. We are led by Fancy more than Reaſon: We know no more what we ask, or what is fit for us, than the Mother of Zebedee's Children did, when ſhe petitioned Chriſt for her Sons Advancement, when he came into his temporal Kingdom *: The things we deſire might pleaſure our Fancy or Appetite, but impair our Health: One Man complains for want of Children, but knows not whether they may prove Comforts or Croſſes: Another for want of Health, but knows not whether the Health of his Body may not prove the Diſeaſe of his Soul. We might loſe in heavenly things, if we poſſeſs in earthly things what we long for. God, in regard of his infinite Wiſdom, is fitter to carve out a Condition than we our ſelves; our ſhallow Reaſon, and Self-love, would wiſh for thoſe things, that are injurious to God, to our ſelves, to the World; but God always chooſes what is beſt for his Glory, and what is beſt for his Creatures, either in regard of themſelves, or as they ſtand in relation to him, or to others, as parts of the World. * Matt. 20. 22.

We are in danger from our Self-love, in no danger in complying with God's Wiſdom: When Rachel would die, if ſhe had no Children, ſhe had Children, but Death with one of them *. Good Men may conclude, that whatſoever is done by God in them or with them, is beſt and fitteſt for them; becauſe by the Covenant which makes over God to them, as their God, the conduct of his Wiſdom is aſſured to them as well as any other Attribute: And therefore, as God in every Tranſaction appears as their God, ſo he appears as their wiſe Director, and by this Wiſdom he extracts Good out of Evil, makes the Affliction which deſtroys our outward Comforts, conſume our inward Defilements: And the Waves which threatned to ſwallow up the Veſſel, to caſt it upon the Shoar: And when he hath occaſion to manifeſt his Anger againſt his People, his Wiſdom directs his Wrath. In Judgment he hath a Work to do upon Zion, and when that Work is done, he puniſhes the fruit of the ſtout Heart of the King of Aſſyria *: As in the Anſwers of Prayer he doth give oftentimes above what we ask, or think, Eph. 3. 20. ſo in outward Concerns he doth above what we can expect, or by our ſhort-ſightedneſs conclude will be done: Let us therefore in all things frame our Minds to the divine Wiſdom, and ſay with the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 47. 4. The Lord ſhall chuſe our Inheritance and condition for us. * Gen. 30. 1. * Iſai. 10. 12.

VI. Exhortation. Cenſure not God in any of his Ways. Can we underſtand the full ſcope of divine Wiſdom in Creation, which is perfected before our Eyes? Can we, by a rational Knowledge, walk over the whole Surface of the Earth, and wade through the Sea? Can we underſtand the Nature of the Heavens? Are all, or moſt, or the thouſandth part of the Particles of Divine Skill known by us, yea or any of them throughly known? How can we then underſtand his deeper Methods in things, that are but of Yeſterday, that we have not had a time to View? We ſhould not be too quick or too raſh in our Judgments of him: The beſt that we attain to, is but feeble Conjectures at the Deſigns of God.

As there is ſomething hid in whatſoever is revealed in his Word, ſo there is ſomething inacceſſible to us in his Works, as well as in his Nature and Majeſty.

jeſty. In our Saviour's act in waſhing his Diſciples feet, he checkt Peter's contradiction, John 13. 7. What I do, thou knoweſt not now, but thou ſhalt know hereafter. God were not infinitely wiſe if the reaſon of all his acts were obvious to our Shallowneſs. He is no profound States-man, whoſe inward intention can be founded by vulgar Heads at the firſt act he ſtarts in his deſigned method. The wiſe God is in this like wiſe men, that have not breaſts like glaſſes of Chryſtal, to diſcover all that they intend. There are ſecrets of Wiſdom above our reach *; nay when we ſee all his acts, we cannot ſee all the draughts of his skill in them. An unskillful hearer of a muſical leſſon may receive the melody with his Ear, and underſtand not the rarities of the compoſition as it was wrought by the Muſician's mind. Under the old Teſtament there was more of Divine Power, and leſs of his wiſdom apparent in his acts: As his Laws, ſo his acts were more fitted to their Senſe. Under the new Teſtament there is more of wiſdom and leſs of power; as his Laws ſo his acts are more fitted to a ſpiritual mind; wiſdom is leſs diſcernable than power. Our wiſdom therefore in this caſe, as it doth in other things, conſiſts in ſilence and expectation of the end and event of a work. We owe that honour to God that we do to men wiſer than our ſelves, to imagin he hath reaſon to do what he doth, though our ſhallowneſs cannot comprehend it. We muſt ſuffer God to be wiſer than our ſelves, and acknowledge that there is ſomething ſoveraign in his ways not to be meaſured by the feeble reed of our weak underſtandings; and therefore we ſhould acquieſce in his proceedings; take heed we be not found ſlanderers of God, but be adorers inſtead of Cenſurers; and lift up our hands in admiration of him and his ways, inſtead of citing him to anſwer it at our Bar. Many things in the firſt appearance may ſeem to be raſh and unjuſt, which in the iſſue appear comely and regular. If it had been plainly ſpoke before that the Son of God ſhould die, that a moſt holy perſon ſhould be crucified; it would have ſeemed cruel to expoſe a Son to miſery; unjuſt to inflict puniſhment upon one that that was no Criminal; to joyn together exact goodneſs and Phyſical evil; that the Soveraign ſhould die for the Malefactor, and the Obſerver of the Law for the Violaters of it. But when the whole deſign is unravelled, what an admirable conjunction is there of Juſtice and Mercy, Love and Wiſdom, which before would have appeared abſurd to the muddied reaſon of man?

* Job 11. 6.

We ſee the Gardiner pulling up ſome delightful Flowers by the roots, digging up the Earth, overwhelming it with Dung; an ignorant perſon would imagine him wild, out of his wits, and charge him with ſpoiling his Garden: But when the Spring is arrived, the ſpectator will acknowledge his skill in his former Operations.

The truth is, the whole deſign and methods of God are not to be judged by us in this world; the full declaration of the whole contexture is reſerved for the other world, to make up a part of good mens happineſs in the amazing views of divine Wiſdom, as well as the other perfections of his nature. We can no more perfectly underſtand his Wiſdom, than we can his Mercy and Juſtice, till we ſee the laſt lines of all drawn, and the full expreſſions of them: We ſhould therefore be ſober and modeſt in the conſideration of God's ways; his Judgments are unſearchable, and his ways paſt finding out. The riches of his wiſdom are paſt our counting, his depths not to be fathomed, yet they are depths of righteouſneſs and equity: Though the full manifeſtation of that equity, the grounds and methods of his proceedings are unknown to us. As we are too ſhort, fully to know God, ſo we are too ignorant fully to comprehend the acts of God: Since he is a God of Judgment, we ſhould wait till we ſee the iſſue of his works, Eſa. 30. 18. And in the mean time, with the Apoſtle in the Text, give him the Glory of all, in the ſame expreſſions; To the only wiſe God be glory, through Jeſus Chriſt for ever. Amen.

A DISCOURSE UPON THE Power of GOD.

Job XXVI. xiv.

Loe, these are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him? [but the thunder of his power who can understand?]

BILDAD had in the foregoing Chapter entertain'd Job with a Discourse of the Dominion and Power of God, and the Purity of his Righteousness, whence he argues an impossibility of the justification of man in his presence, who is no better than a worm. Job in this Chapter acknowledges the greatness of God's power, and descants more largely upon it than Bildad had done; but doth Preface it with a kind of Ironical Speech, as if he had not acted a friendly part, or spake little to the purpose, or the matter in hand. The subject of Job's Discourse was the Worldly Happiness of the Wicked, and the Calamities of the Godly: And Bildad reads him a Lecture of the Extent of God's Dominion, the Number of his Armies, and the unspotted Rectitude of his Nature, in comparison of which the purest Creatures are foul and crooked. Job therefore from verse 1. to verse 4. taxeth him, in a kind of scoffing manner, that he had not touched the point, but rambled from the subject in hand, and had not applied a Salve proper to his Sore: Verse 2. How hast thou helped him that is without power? How savest thou the arm of him that hath no strength? &c. your Discourse is so impertinent, that it will neither strengthen a weak person, nor instruct a simple one*. But since Bildad would take up an Argument of God's Power, and discourse so short of it, Job would shew that he wanted not his Instructions in that kind, and that he had more distinct Conceptions of it than his Antagonist had uttered: And therefore, from verse 5. to the end of the Chapter, he doth magnificently treat of the Power of God, in several Branches. And verse 5. he begins with the lowest.

*Munster.

Dead things are formed from under the waters, and the inhabitants thereof. You read me a Lecture of the Power of God in the Heavenly Host: Indeed it is visible there, yet of a larger extent; and Monuments of it are found in the lower parts. What do you think of those dead things under the Earth and Waters; of the Corn that dies, and by the moistning Influences of the Clouds springs up again with a numerous progeny and increase for the nourishment of man? What do you think of those varieties of Metals and Minerals conceived in the bowels of the Earth; those Pearls and Riches in the Depths of the Waters, midwifed by this Power of God? Add to these those more prodigious Creatures in the Sea, the Inhabitants of the Waters, with their vastness and variety, which are all the Births of God's Power; both in their first Creation by his mighty Voice, and their Propagation by his cherishing Providence.

Stop not here, but consider also that his Power extends to Hell; either the Graves, the Repositories of all the crumbled dust that hath yet been in the World; (for so Hell is sometimes taken in Scripture: Verse 6. Hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering.) The several lodgings of deceased men are known to him: No skreen can obscure them from his sight, nor their dissolution be any bar to his power, when the time is come to compact those mouldred Bodies to entertain again their departed Souls, either for weal or woe. The Grave, or Hell, the place of punishment, is naked before him; as distinctly discern'd by him, as a naked body in all its lineaments by us, or a dissected Body is in all its parts by a skilful eye. Destruction hath no covering; none can free himself from the power of his hand. Every person in the bowels of Hell, every person punished there, is known to him, and feels the power of his wrath.

From the lower parts of the World he ascends to the consideration of the power of God in the creation of Heaven and Earth: *He stretches out the North over the empty places. The North or the North-pole over the Air, which by the Greeks was called void or empty, because of the tenuity and thinness of that Element; and he mentions here the North, or North-pole, for the whole Heaven, because it is more known and apparent than the Southern-pole. And hangs the Earth upon nothing: The massie and weighty Earth hangs like a thick Globe in the midst of a thin Air, that there is as much Air on the one side of it, as on the other. The Heavens have no prop to sustain them in their height, and the Earth hath no basis to support it in its place. The Heavens are as if you saw a curtain stretched smooth in the Air without any hand to hold it; and the Earth is as if you ſaw a ball hanging in the Air without any ſolid Body to underprop it, or any Line to hinder it from falling; both ſtanding Monuments of the Omnipotence of God.

He then takes notice of his daily Power in the Clouds. He binds up the waters in his thick Clouds, * Verſe 8. *and the Cloud is not rent under them. He compacts the Waters together in Clouds, and keeps them by his Power in the Air againſt the force of their natural gravity and heavineſs, till they are fit to flow down upon the Earth, and perform his pleaſure in the places for which he deſigns them. The Clouds is not rent under them; the thin Air is not ſplit aſunder by the weight of the Waters contain'd in the Cloud above it. He cauſes them to diſtil by drops, and ſtrains them as it were through a thin Lawn, for the refreſhment of the Earth; and ſuffers them not to fall in the whole lump, with a violent torrent, to waſte the induſtry of man, and bring famine upon the World, by deſtroying the Fruits of the Earth. What a wonder would it be to ſee but one intire drop of water hang it ſelf but one inch above the ground, unleſs it be a bubble which is preſerved by the air incloſ'd within it? What a wonder would it be to ſee a gallon of water contain'd in a thin cobweb as ſtrongly as in a veſſel of braſs? Greater is the wonder of Divine Power in thoſe thin Bottles of Heaven, as they are called*; and therefore called his Clouds here, as being daily In- * Job 38. 37. ſtances of his Omnipotence: That the air ſhould ſuſtain thoſe rouling veſſels, as it ſhould ſeem, weighter than it ſelf! That the force of this maſs of waters ſhould not break ſo thin a priſon, and haſten to its proper place which is below the air! That they ſhould be daily confin'd againſt their natural inclination, and held by ſo ſlight a chain! That there ſhould be ſuch a gradual and ſucceſſive falling of them, as if the air were pierced with holes like a Gardiner's watering-pot, and not fall in one intire body to drown or drench ſome parts of the Earth! Theſe are hourly miracles of Divine Power, as little regarded as clearly viſible.

He proceeds, Verſe 9. He holds back the face of his Throne, and ſpreads the Cloud upon it. The Clouds are deſign'd as Curtains to cover the Heavens, * Pſal. 147. 8. as well as Veſſels to *water the Earth. As a Tapeſtry Curtain between the Heavens, the Throne of God; Iſa. 66. 1. and the Earth his Footſtool: The Heavens are called his Throne, becauſe his Power doth moſt ſhine forth there, and magnificently declare the Glory of God; and the Clouds are as a skreen between the ſcorching heat of the Sun, and the tender plants of the Earth, and the weak bodies of Men.

From hence he deſcends to the Sea, and conſiders the Divine Power apparent in the bounding of it: Verſe 10. He hath compaſſed the Waters with bounds, till the day and night come to an end. This is ſeveral times mention'd in Scripture, as a ſignal mark of * Job 38. 8. Prov. 8. 27. Divine ſtrength. He hath meaſured a place for the Sea, and ſtruck the Limits of it as with a Compaſs, that it might not mount above the ſurface of the Land, and ruine the ends of the Earths Creation; and this while day and night have their mutual turns, till he ſhall make an end of Time by removing the meaſures of it. The bounds of the tumultuous Sea are in many places as weak as the bottles of the upper Waters; the one is contain'd in thin Air, and the other reſtrain'd by weak Sands in many places, as well as by ſtubborn Rocks in others; that though it ſwells, foams, roars, and the Waves, encourag'd and egg'd on by ſtrong Winds, come like Mountains againſt the Shoar, they overflow it not, but humble themſelves when they come near to thoſe Sands which are ſet as their liſts and limits, and retire back to the womb that brought them forth, as if they were aſhamed, and repented of their proud Invaſion: Or elſe it may be meant of the Tides of the Sea, and the ſtated Time God hath ſet it for its ebbing and flowing, till night and day come to an end; both that the fluid Waters ſhould * Coccei in loc. contain themſelves within due bounds, and keep their perpetual orderly motion, are amazing Arguments of Divine Power.

He paſſes on to the Conſideration of the Commotions in the Air and Earth, raiſed and ſtill'd by the Power of God; The Pillars of Heaven tremble, and are aſtoniſhed at his reproof. By Pillars of Heaven are not meant Angels, as ſome think; but either the Air, called the Pillars of Heaven in regard of place, as it continues and knits together the parts of the World, as Pillars do the upper and nether parts of a Building. As the loweſt parts of the Earth are called the Foundations of the Earth; ſo the loweſt parts of the Heaven may be called the Pillars of Heaven *. Or elſe by that Phraſe may * Coccei. be meant Mountains, which ſeem at a diſtance to touch the Sky, as Pillars do the top of a Structure; and ſo it may be ſpoken according to vulgar Capacity, which imagines the Heavens to be ſuſtained by the two extream Parts of the Earth, as a Convex Body, or to be arch'd by Pillars; whence the Scripture, according to common apprehenſions, mentions the Ends of the Earth, and the utmoſt parts of the Heavens, tho' they have properly no end, as being round. The Power of God is ſeen in thoſe Commotions in the Air and Earth, by Thunders, Lightnings, Storms, Earthquakes, which rack the Air, and make the Mountains and Hills tremble as Servants before a frowning and rebuking Maſter.

And as he makes motions in the Earth and Air, ſo is his Power ſeen in their Influences upon the Sea; *He judges the Sea with his power, and by his underſtanding he ſmites through the proud. At the * Verſe 12. Creation he put the waters into ſeveral Channels, and cauſed the dry Land to appear bare-fac'd for a Habitation for Man and Beaſts; or rather he ſplits the Sea by Storms, as though he would make the bottom of the deep viſible, and rakes up the Sands to the Surface of the waters, and marſhals the waves into Mountains and Valleys. After that, he ſmites through the proud, that is, humbles the proud waves, and by allaying the Storm, reduceth them to their former Level: The Power of God is viſible, as well in rebuking, as in awakening the winds; he makes them ſenſible of his Voice, and according to his Pleaſure exaſperates or calms them. The ſtriking through the proud here, is not probably meant of the deſtruction of the Egyptian Army; for ſome gueſs that Job died that Year *, or about * Druſius the time of the Iſraelites coming out of Egypt: So in loc. that this Diſcourſe here being in the time of his Affliction, could not point at that which was done after his Reſtoration to his Temporal Proſperity.

And now at laſt he ſums up the Power of God in the chiefeſt of his works above, and the greateſt wonder of his works below: Verſe 13. By his Spirit he hath garniſh'd the Heavens; his hand hath formed the crooked Serpent, &c. The greater and leſſer Lights, Sun, Moon, and Stars, the Ornaments and Furniture of Heaven; and the Whale, a Prodigious Monument of God's Power, often mentioned in Scripture to this purpoſe, and in particular in this Book of Job *, and called by the ſame name of Crooked * Job 41. Serpent, Iſa. 27. 1. where it is applied by way of Metaphor to the King of Aſſyria or Egypt, or all Oppreſſors of the Church. Various Interpretations there are of this crooked Serpent: Some underſtanding that Conſtellation in Heaven, which Aſtronomers call call the Dragon; ſome that Combination of weaker Stars, which they call the Galaxia, which winds about the Heavens: But it is moſt probable that Job, drawing near to a Concluſion of his Diſcourſe, joyns the two greateſt Teſtimonies of God's Power in the world, the higheſt Heavens, and the loweſt Leviathan, which is here called a bar Serpent * in regard of his ſtrength and hardneſs, as mighty Men are called bars in Scripture, Jer. 51. 30. Her bars are broken things. And in regard of this Power of God in the Creation of this Creature, 'tis particularly mention'd in the Catalogue of God's works, Gen. 1. 21. And God created great Whales; all the other Creatures being put into one ſumm, and not particularly expreſt.

* As the word ſignifies in the Hebrew.

And now he makes the uſe of this Lecture in the Text, Loe, theſe are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can underſtand? This is but a ſmall Landskip of ſome of his works of Power, the outſides and extremities of it; more glorious things are within his Palaces. Though thoſe things argue a ſtupendous Power of the Creator in his works of Creation and Providence, yet they are nothing to what may be declared of his Power. And what may be declared, is nothing to what may be conceived; and what may be conceived, is nothing to what is above the conceptions of any Creature. Theſe are but little crumbs and fragments of that infinite Power which is in his Nature, like a drop in compariſon of the mighty Ocean; a hiſs or whiſper, in compariſon of a mighty voice of Thunder *. This which I have ſpoken is but like a ſpark to the fiery Region, a few lines by the by, a drop of ſpeech.

* Oecolamp.

The thunder of his Power: Some underſtand it of Thunder literally, for material Thunder in the Air: The thunder of his Power, that is, according to the Hebrew Dialect, his powerful Thunder. This is not the ſenſe; the nature of Thunder in the Air doth not ſo much exceed the capacity of human underſtanding; 'tis therefore rather to be underſtood metaphorically, The thunder of his Power, that is, the greatneſs and immenſity of his Power manifeſted in the magnificent miracles of Nature, in the conſideration whereof Men are aſtoniſhed, as if they had heard an unuſual clap of Thunder. So Thunder is uſed, Job 39. 25. The Thunder of the Captains; that is, ſtrength and force of the Captains of an Army. And, verſe 1. 9. God ſpeaking to Job of a Horſe, ſaith, Haſt thou cloathed his neck with Thunder? that is, ſtrength. And Thunder being a mark of the Power of God, ſome of the Heathen have called God by the name of a Thunderer *. As Thunder pierceth the loweſt places, and alters the ſtate of things; ſo doth the Power of God penetrate into all things whatſoever; the Thunder of his Power; that is, the Greatneſs of his Power: As the ſtrength of Salvation, Pſal. 20. 6. that is, a mighty Salvation.

* The ancient Gauls worſhiped him under the name of Turanis. The Greeks called Jupiter Βρον-τᾶν & Thor; whence our Thurſday is derived, ſignifieth Thunderer, a Title the Germans gave their god. And Toran in the Britiſh Language ſignifies Thunder. Voſſ. Idolo. lib. 2. cap. 33. Camb. Britan. p. 17.

Who can underſtand? Who is able to count all the Monuments of his Power? How doth this little, which I have ſpoken of, exceed the capacity of our underſtanding, and is rather the matter of our aſtoniſhment, than the object of our comprehenſive knowledge? The Power of the greateſt Potentate, or the mightieſt Creature, is but of ſmall extent: None but have their limits; it may be underſtood how far they can act, in what ſphere their activity is bounded: But when I have ſpoken all of Divine Power that I can; when you have thought all that you can think of it, your Souls will prompt you to conceive ſomething more beyond what I have ſpoken, and what you have thought. His Power ſhines in every thing, and is beyond every thing. There is infinitely more Power lodged in his Nature, not expreſt to the World. The underſtanding of Men and Angels centred in one Creature, would fall ſhort of the perception of the Infiniteneſs of it. All that can be comprehended of it, are but little Fringes of it, a ſmall portion. No Man ever diſcours'd, or can, of God's Power, according to the magnificence of it. No Creature can conceive it; God himſelf only comprehends it; God himſelf is only able to expreſs it. Man's Power being limited, his Line is too ſhort to meaſure the incomprehenſible Omnipotence of God. The Thunder of his Power who can underſtand? that is, none can.

The Text is a lofty Declaration of the Divine Power, with a particular note of Attention, Loe.

1. In the Expreſſions of it, in the Works of Creation and Providence; [Loe, theſe are his ways; Ways and Works excelling any created ſtrength, referring to the little ſummary of them he had made before. 1.
2. In the Inſufficiency of theſe Ways to meaſure his Power; [But how little a portion is heard of him? 2.
3. In the Incomprehenſibleneſs of it; [The Thunder of his Power who can underſtand? 3.

Infinite and Incomprehenſible Power pertains to the Nature of God, and is expreſt in part in his Works: Or, Though there be a mighty Expreſſion of Divine Power in his Works, yet an Incomprehenſible Power pertains to his Nature. Doct.

The Thunder of his Power, who can underſtand?

His Power glitters in all his Works, as well as his Wiſdom: Pſal. 62. 11. Twice have I heard this, that Power belongs unto God. In the Law and in the Prophets, ſay ſome: But why Power twice, and not Mercy, which he ſpeaks of in the following Verſe? He had heard of Power twice, from the voice of Creation, and from the voice of Government. Mercy was heard in Government after Man's Fall, not in Creation; Innocent Man was an object of God's Goodneſs, not of his Mercy till he made himſelf miſerable: Power was expreſt in both; or Twice have I heard that Power belongs to God, that is, it is a certain and undoubted Truth, that Power is eſſential to the Divine Nature. 'Tis true, Mercy is eſſential, Juſtice is eſſential; but Power more apparently eſſential, becauſe no acts of Mercy, or Juſtice, or Wiſdom, can be exerciſed by him without Power. The Repetition of a thing confirms the Certainty of it. Some obſerve that God is called Almighty Seventy times in Scripture *. Tho' his Power be evident in all his Works, yet he hath a Power beyond the expreſſion of it in his Works, which, as it is the glory of his Nature, ſo it is the comfort of a Believer. To which purpoſe the Apoſtle expreſſeth it by an excellent Periphraſis for the honour of the Divine Nature, Eph. 3. 20. Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think, unto him be glory in the Churches. We have reaſon to acknowledge him Almighty, who hath a Power of acting above our power of underſtanding. Who could have imagin'd ſuch a powerful operation in the propagation of the Goſpel, and the Converſion of the Gentiles, which the Apoſtle ſeems to hint at in that place? His Power is expreſs'd by Horns in his hands, Hab. 3. 4. becauſe all the Works of his hands are wrought with Almighty ſtrength. Power is alſo uſed as a Name of God, Mark 14. 62. The Son of Man ſitting on the right hand of Power, that is, at the right hand of God: God and Power are ſo inſeparable, that they are reciprocated. As his Eſſence is Immenſe not to be confin'd in place; as it is Eternal, not to be meaſured by time; ſo it is Almighty, not to be limited in regard of action.

* Leſſius de perfect Divin. lib. 5. cap. 1.

1. 1. 'Tis Ingeniouſly illuſtrated by ſome by an Unit†; all Numbers depend upon it, it makes Numbers by Addition, Multiplies them unexpreſſibly, when one Unit is removed from a Number, how vaſtly doth it diminiſh it? It gives perfection to all other Numbers, it receives perfection from none. If you add a Unit before 100, how doth it multiply it to 1100? If you ſet a Unite before Twenty Millions, it preſently makes the Number ſwell up to an hundred and twenty Millions: and ſo powerful is a Unit by adding it to Numbers, that it will infinitely inlarge them to ſuch a vaſtneſs, that ſhall tranſcend the capacity of the beſt Arithmetician to count them. By ſuch a Meditation as this, you may have ſome proſpect of the Power of that God who is only Unity; the Beginning of all things, as a Unit is the beginning of all Numbers; and can perform as many things really, as a Unit can numerically, that is, can do as much in the making of Creatures, as a Unit can do in the multiplying of Numbers. The Omnipotence of God was ſcarce denied by any Heathen, that did not deny the Being of a God, and that was Pliny, and that upon weak Arguments.

* Fotherby. Atheomaſtix. p. 305, 307.

2. 2. Indeed we cannot have a conception of God, if we conceive him not moſt Powerful, as well as moſt Wiſe: He is not a God, that cannot do what he will, and perform all his pleaſure. If we imagine him reſtrain'd in his Power, we imagine him limited in his Eſſence. As he hath an infinite Knowledge to know what is poſſible, he cannot be without an infinite Power to do what is poſſible. As he hath a Will to reſolve what he ſees good, ſo he cannot want a Power to effect what he ſees good to decree. As the Eſſence of a Creature cannot be conceiv'd without that activity that belongs to his nature; as when you conceive Fire, you cannot conceive it without a power of burning and warming; and when you conceive Water, you cannot conceive it without a power of moiſtning and cleanſing: So you cannot conceive an infinite Eſſence without an Infinite Power of activity. And therefore a Heathen could ſay, If you know God, you know he can do all things; and therefore ſaith Auſtin, Give me not only a Chriſtian but a Jew, not only a Jew but a Heathen, that will deny God to be Almighty. A Jew, a Heathen may deny Chriſt to be Omnipotent, but no Heathen will deny God to be Omnipotent, and no Devil will deny either to be ſo: God cannot be conceiv'd without ſome Power, for then he muſt be conceiv'd without Action: Whoſe then are thoſe Products and effects of Power which are viſible to us in the world? to whom do they belong? who is the Father of them? God cannot be conceiv'd without a Power ſuitable to his Nature and Eſſence; if we imagine him to be of an Infinite Eſſence, we muſt imagine him to be of an Infinite Power and Strength.

In particular, I ſhall ſhew,

1. The Nature of God's Power.
2. Reaſons to prove that God muſt needs be Powerful.
3. How his Power appears; in Creation, in Government, in Redemption.
4. The Uſe.

1. What this Power is; or the Nature of it.

1. 1. Power ſome times ſignifies Authority: And a Man is ſaid to be Mighty and Powerful in regard of his Dominion, and the right he hath to Command multitudes of other perſons to take his part; but Power taken for Strength, and Power taken for Authority, are diſtinct things, and may be ſeparated from one another: Power may be without Authority, as in ſucceſsful Invaſions that have no juſt foundation: Authority may be without Power; as in a juſt Prince, expell'd by an unjuſt Rebellion, the Authority reſides in him, though he be over-power'd, and is deſtitute of Strength to ſupport and exerciſe that Authority. The Power of God is not to be underſtood of his Authority and Dominion, but his Strength to act, and the word in the Text properly ſignifies Strength. גבורתי Sept. δύναμις. vulg. I.

2. This Power is divided ordinarily into Abſolute and Ordinate. Abſolute, is that Power whereby God is able to do that which he will not do, but is poſſible to be done: Ordinate, is that Power whereby God doth that which he hath decreed to do, that is, which he hath ordained or appointed to be exerciſed *. Which are not diſtinct Powers, but one and the ſame Power; his Ordinate Power is a part of his Abſolute; for if he had not a Power to do every thing that he could will, he might not have a Power to do every thing that he doth will.

* Scaliger. Publ. exercit. 365. §. 8.

The Object of his Abſolute Power is all things poſſible; ſuch things that imply not a contradiction, ſuch that are not repugnant in their own nature to be done: And ſuch as are not contrary to the Nature and Perfections of God to be done: Thoſe things that are repugnant in their own nature to be done: are ſeveral, as to make a thing which is paſt not to be paſt. As for example, The World is created; God could have choſe whether he would create the World, and after it is created he hath Power to diſſolve it; but after it was created, and when it is diſſolved, it will be eternally true, that the World was created, and that it was diſſolved; for it is impoſſible, that that which was once true, ſhould ever be falſe: If it be true that the World was created, it will for ever be true that it was created, and cannot be otherwiſe. And alſo, if it be once true that God hath decreed, 'tis impoſſible in its own nature to be true that God hath not decreed. Some things are repugnant to the Nature and Perfections of God: As it is impoſſible for his Nature to die and periſh; impoſſible for him in regard of Truth to lye and deceive. But of this hereafter; only at preſent to underſtand the Object of God's Abſolute Power to be things poſſible, that is, poſſible in Nature; not by any ſtrength in themſelves, or of themſelves; for nothing hath no ſtrength, and every thing is nothing before it comes into being†: So God by his Abſolute Power might have prevented the Sin of the fallen Angels, and ſo have preſerved them in their firſt habitation. He might by his Abſolute Power have reſtrained the Devil from tempting of Eve, or reſtrained Her and Adam from ſwallowing the Bait, and joyning hands with the Temptation. By his Abſolute Power, God might have given the reins to Peter to betray his Maſter, as well as to deny him; and employed Judas in the ſame glorious and ſucceſsful Service, wherein he employed Paul. By his Abſolute Power he might have created the World Millions of years before he did create it, and can reduce it into its empty Nothing this moment. This the Baptiſt affirms, when he tells us, That God is able of theſe Stones (meaning the Stones in the Wilderneſs, and not the People which came out to him out of Judea, which were Children of Abraham) to raiſe up Children to Abraham, Mat. 3. 9. that is, there is a Poſſibility of ſuch a thing, there is no Contradiction in it, but that God is able to do it if he pleaſe.

† Eſtius, in Sent. lib. 1. diſt. 43. §. 2.

But now the Object of his Ordinate Power, is all things ordained by him to be done, all things decreed by him; and becauſe of the Divine Ordination of things this Power is called Ordinate; and what is thus ordained by him he cannot but do, becauſe of his Unchangeableneſs. Both thoſe Powers are expreſt, Mat. 26. 53, 54. My Father can ſend twelve legions of Angels, there is his Abſolute Power; but but how then ſhall the Scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it muſt be? There is his Ordinate Power. As his Power is free from any Act of his Will, 'tis called Abſolute; as it is joined with an Act of his Will, it is called Ordinate. His Abſolute Power is neceſſary, and belongs to his Nature; his Ordinate Power is free, and belongs to his Will; a Power guided by his Will; not, as I ſaid before, that they are two diſtinct Powers, both belonging to his Nature, but the latter is the ſame with the former, only it is guided by his Will and Wiſdom.

3. 3. It follows then, That the Power of God is that Ability and Strength, whereby he can bring to paſs whatſoever he pleaſe. Whatſoever his infinite Wiſdom can direct, and whatſoever the infinite Purity of his Will can reſolve. Power, in the primary Notion of it, doth not ſignifie an Act, but an Ability to bring a thing into Act; 'tis Power, as able to act before it doth actually produce a thing: As God had an Ability to create before he did create, he had Power before he acted that Power without. Power notes the principle of the Action, and therefore is greater than the Act it ſelf. Power exercis'd and diffus'd, in bringing forth and nurſing up its particular Objects without, is unconceivably leſs than that Strength which is infinite in himſelf, the ſame with his Eſſence, and is indeed himſelf: By his Power exercis'd he doth whatſoever he actually Wills; but by the Power in his Nature, he is able to do whatſoever he is able to Will. The Will of Creatures may be, and is more extenſive than their Power; and their Power more contracted and ſhortned, than their Will: But, as the Prophet ſaith, His Counſel ſhall ſtand, and he will do all his Pleaſure, Iſai. 46. 10. His Power is as great as his Will, that is, whatſoever can fall within the verge of his Will, falls within the compaſs of his Power. Though he will never actually Will this or that, yet ſuppoſing he ſhould Will it, he is able to perform it: So that you muſt in your Notion of divine Power, enlarge it further than to think, God can only do what he hath reſolved to do; but that he hath as infinite a Capacity of Power to act, as he hath an infinite Capacity of Will to reſolve.

Beſides, this Power is of that nature, that he can do whatſoever he pleaſes without Difficulty, without Reſiſtance; it cannot be checked, reſtrained, fruſtrated *. As he can do all things poſſible in regard of the Object, he can do all things eaſily in regard of the manner of acting: What in human Artificers is Knowledge, Labour, Induſtry, that in God is his will; his will works without Labour, his works ſtand forth as he wills them. Hands and Arms are aſcribed to him for our Conceptions, becauſe our power of acting is diſtinct from our will; but God's Power of acting is not really diſtinct from his will; 'tis ſufficient to the Exiſtence of a thing, that God wills it to exiſt; he can act what he will only by his will, without any Inſtruments. He needs no Matter to work upon, becauſe he can make ſomething from nothing; all Matter owes it ſelf to his Creative Power: He needs no time to work in, for he can make time, when he pleaſes to begin to work: He needs no Copy to work by, himſelf is his own Pattern and Copy in his Works. All created Agents want Matter to work upon, Inſtruments to work with, Copies to work by; Time to bring either the Births of their Minds, or the Works of their Hands to Perfection: But the Power of God needs none of theſe things, but is of a vaſt and incomprehenſible Nature, beyond all theſe. As nothing can be done without the compaſs of it, ſo it ſelf is without the compaſs of every created Underſtanding.

* Cra. Syn. tag. 1. 3. cap. 17. p. 611.

4. 4. This Power is of a diſtinct Conception from the Wiſdom and Will of God. They are not really diſtinct, but according to our Conceptions. We cannot diſcourſe of divine Things, without obſerving ſome Proportion of them with human, aſcribing unto God the Perfections, ſifted from the Imperfections of our Nature. In us there are three Orders, of Underſtanding, Will, Power; and accordingly three Acts, Counſel, Reſolution, Execution; which though they are diſtinct in us, are not really diſtinct in God. In our Conceptions, the Apprehenſion of a thing belongs to the Underſtanding of God; Determination to the Will of God; Direction, to the Wiſdom of God; Execution, to the Power of God. The Knowledge of God regards a thing as poſſible, and as it may be done; the Wiſdom of God regards a thing as fit and convenient to be done; the Will of God reſolves that it ſhall be done; the Power of God is the Application of his Will, to effect what it hath reſolved. Wiſdom is a fixing the Being of things, the Meaſures and Perfections of their ſeveral Beings; Power is a conferring thoſe Perfections and Beings upon them. His Power is his Ability to act, and his Wiſdom is the Director of his Action: His Will orders, his Wiſdom guides, and his Power effects. His Will as the ſpring, and his Power as the worker, are expreſt, Pſal. 115. 3. He hath done whatſoever he pleaſed. He commanded, and they were created, Pſal. 140. 5. and all three expreſt, Eph. 1. 11. Who works all things according to the counſel of his own will: So that the Power of God is a Perfection (as it were) ſubordinate to his Underſtanding and Will, to execute the Reſults of his Wiſdom, and the Orders of his Will; to his Wiſdom, as directing, becauſe he works skilfully, to his Will as moving and applying, becauſe he works voluntarily and freely. The exerciſe of his Power depends upon his Will: His Will is the ſupream cauſe of every thing that ſtands up in Time, and all things receive a Being as he wills them. His Power is but Will perpetually working, and diffuſing it ſelf in the ſeaſon his will hath fixed from Eternity; 'tis his eternal will in perpetual and ſucceſſive ſprings and ſtreams in the Creatures; 'tis nothing elſe but the conſtant efficacy of his omnipotent will. This muſt be underſtood of his ordinate power; But his abſolute power is larger than his reſolving will: for though the Scripture tells us, He hath done whatſoever he will; yet it tells us not, that he hath done whatſoever he could: He can do things that he will never do.

Again, his Power is diſtinguiſht from his will, in regard of the exerciſe of it, which is after the act of his will: His will was converſant about Objects, when his Power was not exercis'd about them. Creatures were the Objects of his will from Eternity, but they were not from Eternity the Effects of his Power. His purpoſe to create was from Eternity, but the execution of his purpoſe was in Time. Now this execution of his will we call his ordinate power: His wiſdom and his will are ſuppoſed antecedent to his Power, as the Counſel and Reſolve, as the Cauſe precedes the Performance of the Purpoſe, as the Effect. * Some diſtinguiſh his power from his underſtanding and will, in regard that his underſtanding and will are larger than his abſolute power; for God underſtands Sins, and wills to permit them, but he cannot himſelf do any evil or unjuſt action, nor have a power of doing it. But this is not to diſtinguiſh that divine Power, but Impotence; for to be unable to do Evil is the Perfection of Power; and to be able to do things unjuſt and evil, is a Weakneſs, Imperfection, and Inability. Man indeed wills many things that he is not able to perform, and underſtands many things that he is not able to effect; he underſtands much of the Creatures, ſomething of

* Gamache ut.

Sun,

Sun, Moon, and Stars; he can conceive many Suns, many Moons, yet is not able to create the leaſt Atom: But there is nothing that belongs to power but God underſtands, and is able to effect. To ſum this up, the will of God is the root of all, the wiſdom of God is the copy of all, and the power of God is the framer of all.

5. 5. The Power of God gives activity to all the other perfections of his Nature, and is of a larger extent and efficacy, in regard of its Objects, than ſome Perfections of his Nature. I put them both together.

1. 1. It contributes Life and Activity to all the other perfections of his Nature. How vain would be his Eternal Counſels, if Power did not ſtep in to execute them? His Mercy would be a feeble pity, if he were deſtitute of Power to relieve; and his Juſtice a ſlighted Scarecrow, without Power to puniſh; his promiſes an empty ſound, without Power to accompliſh them. As Holineſs is the Beauty, ſo Power is the Life of all his Attributes in their exerciſe: and as Holineſs, ſo Power is an Adjunct belonging to All, a Term that may be given to All. God hath a powerful Wiſdom to attain his Ends, without interruption: He hath a powerful Mercy to remove our Miſery; a powerful Juſtice to lay all Miſery upon Offenders: He hath a powerful Truth to perform his Promiſes; an Infinite Power to beſtow Rewards and inflict Penalties. 'Tis to this purpoſe Power is firſt put in the two things which the Pſalmiſt had heard, Pſal. 62. 11, 12. Twice have I heard, or Two things have I heard; firſt Power, then Mercy and Juſtice included in that expreſſion, Thou rendreſt to every man according to his work: In every perfection of God he heard of Power. This is the Arm, the Hand of the Deity, which all his other Attributes lay hold on, when they would appear in their Glory; this hands them to the world; by this they act, in this they triumph. Power framed every ſtage for their appearance in Creation, Providence, Redemption.

2. 2. 'Tis of a larger extent in regard of its Objects, than ſome other Attributes. Power doth not alway ſuppoſe an Object, but conſtitutes an Object. It ſuppoſeth an Object in the act of Preſervation, but it makes an Object in the act of Creation; but Mercy ſuppoſeth an Object miſerable, yet doth not make it ſo. Juſtice ſuppoſeth an Object Criminal, but doth not conſtitute it ſo: Mercy ſuppoſeth him Miſerable, to relieve him; Juſtice ſuppoſeth him Criminal, to puniſh him: but Power ſuppoſeth not a thing in real exiſtence, but as poſſible; or rather, it is from Power that any thing hath a poſſibility, if there be no repugnancy in the nature of the thing.

Again, Power extends further than either Mercy or Juſtice. Mercy hath particular Objects, which Juſtice ſhall not at laſt be willing to puniſh; and Juſtice hath particular Objects, which Mercy at laſt ſhall not be willing to refreſh: But Power doth, and alway will extend to the Objects of both Mercy and Juſtice. A Creature, as a Creature, is neither the Object of Mercy nor Juſtice, nor of Rewarding Goodneſs: A Creature, as Innocent, is the Object of Rewarding Goodneſs; a Creature, as Miſerable, is the Object of Compaſſionate Mercy; a Creature, as Criminal, is the Object of Revenging Juſtice: But all of them the Objects of Power, in conjunction with thoſe Attributes of Goodneſs, Mercy, and Juſtice, to which they belong. All the Objects that Mercy, and Juſtice, and Truth, and Wiſdom, exerciſe themſelves about, have a poſſibility and an actual Being from this perfection of Divine Power. 'Tis Power firſt frames a Creature in a Capacity of Nature for Mercy or Juſtice, though it doth not give an immediate qualification for the exerciſe of either. Power makes Man a rational Creature, and ſo confers upon him a Nature mutable, which may be Miſerable by its own fault, and puniſhable by God's Juſtice; or pityable by God's Compaſſion, and relievable by God's Mercy: But it doth not make him Sinful, whereby he becomes miſerable and puniſhable.

Again, Power runs through all the degrees of the ſtates of a Creature. As a thing is poſſible, or may be made, 'tis the Object of Abſolute Power; as it is factible, or ordered to be made, 'tis the Object of Ordinate Power; as a thing is actually made, and brought into Being, it is the Object of Preſerving Power. So that Power doth ſtretch out its Arms to all the Works of God, in all their circumſtances, and at all times. When Mercy ceaſeth to relieve a Creature, when Juſtice ceaſeth to puniſh a Creature, Power ceaſeth not to preſerve a Creature. The Bleſſed in Heaven, that are out of the reach of puniſhing Juſtice, are for ever maintained by Power in that Bleſſed Condition; the Damned in Hell, that are caſt out of the Boſom of Intreating Mercy, are for ever ſuſtain'd in thoſe remedileſs Torments by the Arm of Power.

6. 6. This Power is Originally and Eſſentially in the Nature of God, and not diſtinct from his Eſſence. 'Tis Originally and Eſſentially in God. The ſtrength and power of Great Kings is originally in their People, and managed and ordered by the Authority of the Prince for the common good. Though a Prince hath authority in his perſon to command, yet he hath not ſufficient ſtrength in his perſon, without the aſſiſtance of others, to make his commands to be obeyed. He hath not a ſingle ſtrength in his own perſon to conquer Countries and Kingdoms, and encreaſe the Number of his Subjects: He muſt make uſe of the Arms of his own Subjects to overrun other places, and yoke them under his dominion: But the power of all things that ever were, are, or ſhall be, is originally and eſſentially in God. 'Tis not deriv'd from any thing without him, as the Power of the greateſt Potentates in the World is. Therefore, Pſal. 62. 11. it is ſaid, Power belongs unto God, that is, ſolely, and to none elſe. He hath a power to make his Subjects, and as many as he pleaſes; to create Worlds, to enjoin Precepts, to execute Penalties, without calling in the ſtrength of his Creatures to his Aid. The ſtrength that the Subjects of a mortal Prince have, is not deriv'd to them from the Prince, though the exerciſe of it for this or that end, is ordered and directed by the Authority of the Prince: But what ſtrength ſoever any thing hath to act as a Means, it hath from the power of God as Creator, as well as whatſoever Authority it hath to act is from God, as a Rector and Governour of the World. God hath a ſtrength to act without means, and no means can act any thing without his power and ſtrength communicated to them. As the Clouds in the 8th. Verſe before the Text, are called God's Clouds, his Clouds: So all the ſtrength of Creatures may be called, and truly is, God's ſtrength and power in them; a drop of power ſhot down from Heaven, originally only in God. Creatures have but a little mite of power; ſomewhat communicated to them, ſomewhat kept and reſerved from them, of what they are capable to poſſeſs. They have limited Natures, and therefore a limited Sphere of Activity. Cloaths can warm us, but not feed us; Bread can nouriſh us, but not cloath us. One Plant hath a medicinal quality againſt one Diſeaſe, another againſt another; but God is the poſſeſſor of Univerſal Power, the common Exchequer of this Mighty Treaſure. He acts by Creatures, as not needing their power, but deriving power to them: What he acts by them, he could act act himself without them: And what they act as from themselves, is derived to them from him through invisible Chanels. And hence it will follow, that because power is essentially in God, more operations of God are possible than are exerted.

And as Power is essentially in God, so it is not distinct from his Essence. It belongs to God in regard of the unconceivable excellency and activity of his Essence*. And Omnipotence is nothing but the Divine Essence efficacious ad extra. 'Tis his Essence as operative, and the immediate principle of Operation: As the power of Enlightning in the Sun, and the power of Heating in the Fire, are not things distinct from the nature of them; but the nature of the Sun bringing forth Light, and the nature of the Fire bringing forth Heat. The power of acting is the same with the Substance of God, though the action from that power be terminated in the Creature. If the power of God were distinct from his Essence, he were then compounded of Substance and Power, and would not be the most Simple Being. As when the Understanding is inform'd in several parts of Knowledge, it is skill'd in the Government of Cities and Countries; it knows this or that Art: It learns Mathematicks, Philosophy; this or that Science. The Understanding hath a power to do this; but this power, whereby it learns those excellent things, and brings forth excellent Births, is not a thing distinct from the Understanding it self; we may rather call it Understanding powerful, than the Power of the Understanding; and so we may rather say, God powerful, than say the Power of God, because his Power is not distinct from his Essence.

* Ratione summæ actualitatis essentiæ. Suarez, vol. 1. p. 150, & 151.

From both these it will follow, That this Omnipotence is incommunicable to any Creature; no Creature can inherit it, because it is a Contradiction for any Creature to have the Essence of God. This Omnipotence is a peculiar Right of God, wherein no Creature can share with him. To be Omnipotent is to be Essentially God: And for a Creature to be Omnipotent, is for a Creature to be its own Creator. It being therefore the same with the Essence of the Godhead, it cannot be communicated to the Humanity of Christ, as the Lutherans say it is, without the Communication of the Essence of the Godhead; for then the Humanity of Christ would not be Humanity, but Deity. If Omnipotence were communicated to the Humanity of Christ, the Essence of God were also communicated to his Humanity, and then Eternity would be communicated. His Humanity then was not given him in Time, his Humanity would be uncompounded, that is, his Body would be no Body, his Soul no Soul. Omnipotence is essentially in God; 'tis not distinct from the Essence of God, 'tis his Essence, Omnipotent, able to do all things.
